The TRIAL of Joseph Dawson, Edward Forfeith, William May, William Bishop, James Lewis, and John Sparkes, at the Old Bailey, for Felony and Piracy, Octob. 19. 1696. 8 Will. III.

Admir. Angl. ff.

The Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-Delivery, held for our Sovereign Lord the King, for the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, at Justice-Hall in the Old Bailey, in the Suburbs of the City of London, on Monday the 19th Day of October, in the Eighth Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord King William the Third, over England, &c. before the Right Honourable Edward Russel, Esq; Henry Priestman, Esq; Sir Robert Rich, Knight and Baronet; Sir George Rooke, Knight; Sir John Houblon, Knight; and James Kendal, Esq; Commissioners for Executing and Exercising the Office and Place of Lord High Admiral of England, respectively assigned and deputed; the Right Worshipful Sir Charles Hedges, Kt. Doctor of Law, Lieutenant in the High Court of Admiralty of England, Commissary-General of our Sovereign Lord the King, and President and Judge of the said Court; the Right Honourable Sir John Holt, Kt. Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench; Sir George Treby, Kt. Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas; Sir Edward Ward, Kt. Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer; Sir Tho. Rokeby, Kt. and one of the Justices of the King's Bench; Sir Samuel Eyre, Kt. another of the Justices of the King's Bench; Sir John Turton, Kt. another of the Justices of the King's Bench; Sir John Powell, Kt. one of the Justices of the
VOL. V.

Common Pleas; Sir Littleton Powis, Kt. one of the Barons of the Exchequer; William Bridgeman and Josias Burchet, Esqrs; Secretaries of the Admiralty of England; Thomas Lane, William King, and John Cooke, respectively Doctors of Laws; and others his Majesty's Justices named in the said Commission.

IS Majesty's Commissioners being then and there met, the Commission was read, and Proclamation made for Attendance: After which, the Gentlemen of the Grand Jury were called and sworn, and received their Charge from Sir Charles Hedges, Kt. Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, who set forth unto them the Nature of the Commission, the Extent of the Jurisdiction of the Court, and the subject Matter of their Enquiries.

Then the Witnesses for the King being sworn, the Grand Jury withdrew, and after a little Time returned, finding Billa vera against Henry Every, not yet taken, Joseph Dawson, Edward Forfeith, William May, William Bishop, James Lewis, and John Sparkes, Prisoners, for feloniously and piratically taking and carrying away, from Persons unknown, a certain Ship called the Gunsway, with her Tackle, Apparel, and Furniture, to the Value of 1000 l. and Goods to the Value of 110 l. together with 100000 Pieces of Eight, and 100000 Chequins, upon the High Seas, ten
B Leagues

Leagues from the Cape St. John's, near Surat in the East-Indies. Then Dawson, Forseith, May, Bishop, Lewis, and Sparkes, were brought to the Bar, and their Indictment was read.

Joseph Dawson confessed that he was Guilty, but the rest pleaded Not Guilty, and put themselves upon their Trials; and thereupon the Petty Jury was called, and the Persons, whose Names follow, were sworn.

William Walker,	}	Benjamin Dry,
John Child,		John Sherbrooke,
Edward Leeds,		Samuel Jackson,
Thomas Clarke,		Thomas Emms,
Nathan Green,		Henry Hunter,
Henry Sherbrooke,		John Hall.

Then the King's learned Council opened the Indictment, &c. and Dr. Newton made a Speech; which is as follows.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury,

THE Prisoners are indicted for Piracy, in Robbing and Plundering the Ship Gunsway, belonging to the Great Mogul and his Subjects, in the Indian Seas, to a very great Value.

And the End was suitable to their Beginning; they first practised these Crimes upon their own Countrymen, the English, and then continued them on to Strangers and Foreigners: For the Ship in which this Piracy was committed, was an English Vessel, called the Charles the Second, belonging to several Merchants of this City, designed for others Ends, and a far different Voyage, which by these Criminals, with the Assistance of one Every, their Captain, in all these Villanies, was seized near the Groyn in Spain, in May 1694. from which Place, having first, by Force, set Captain Gibson the Commander on Shore, they carried off the Ship, and with it committed many and great Piracies, for several Years (as will appear in the Course of the Evidence) in most of the Parts of the known World, without Distinction, upon all Nations, and Persons of all Religions.

Their last Piracy was this in the Indies, the greatest in itself, and like to be the most pernicious in its Consequences, especially as to Trade, considering the Power of the Great Mogul, and the natural Inclination of the Indians to Revenge: But they are now brought hither on their Trial, and, if the Matters they are charged with, shall be proved, to receive that Judgment from you, their Crime deserves; and that is Piracy, which by so much exceeds Theft or Robbery at Land, as the Interest and Concerns of Kingdoms and Nations, are above those of private Families, or particular Persons: For suffer Pirates, and the Commerce of the World must cease, which this Nation has deservedly so great a Share in, and reaps such mighty Advantage by: And if they shall go away unpunished, when it is known whose Subjects they are, the Consequence may be, to involve the Nations concerned in War and Blood, to the Destruction of the innocent English in those Countries, the total Loss of the Indian Trade, and thereby the Impoverishment of this Kingdom.

The Witnesses for the King, viz. John Dan, and Philip Middleton, were then called and sworn, and in the Opinion of the Court gave a full Evidence against the Prisoners, which was very clearly summ'd up by the Lord Chief Justice Holt; the Tenour whereof is particularly set forth in the following Trials: But the Jury, contrary to the Expectation of the Court, brought in all the Prisoners Not Guilty; whereupon the Sessions was adjourned to Saturday the 31st of October following, and the Prisoners were committed upon a new Warrant for several other Piracies.

Die Sabbati, tricesimo primo Octobris, Annoq; Regni Regis Willielmi Tertii Octavo, Annoq; Domini 1696.

THE Court being sat (at which were present Sir Charles Hedges Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, the Lord Chief Justice Holt, the Lord Chief Justice Treby, the Lord Chief Baron Ward, Mr. Justice Rookby, Mr. Justice Turton, Mr. Justice Eyre, Mr. Baron Powis, Dr. Lane, Dr. King, and Dr. Cook) the Court proceeded in this Manner.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, O yes, O yes. All Manner of Persons that have any thing more to do at this Sessions, draw near and give your Attendance: And you Sheriffs of the City of London, return the several Precepts directed to you, and returnable here this Day, upon Pain and Peril that shall follow thereon.

[Then the Grand Jury were called over, and the Appearances mark'd.]

Cl. of Arr. Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, &c. The Lords the King's Justices charge and command all Persons to keep Silence while the Charge is giving.

The Judge of the Admiralty's Charge to the Grand Jury upon this Occasion.

Sir Charles Hedges. Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, THE Opinion which this Court had of the good Intentions, Abilities, and Integrity of the last Grand Jury, was so fully answered at our late Meeting in this Place, that I am confident all good Englishmen, who were Witnesses of their Proceedings, will concur in giving them publick Thanks for the good Services which they then performed: I wish that all others, who were concerned in the Dispatch of that Day's Business, had the like Pretence to have the same; the publick Justice of the Nation would not then have lain under any Manner of Reproach, neither would you have had this farther Trouble. But seeing that it hath so happen'd, it is become absolutely necessary that a farther and a strict Enquiry should be made after those Crimes which threaten, and tend to the Destruction of our Navigation and Trade; and therefore I am assured of your Patience, whilst I shew you briefly,

1. What the Crimes are, which you are to enquire after.
2. How far the Jurisdiction and your Power in making these Enquiries doth extend.
3. What is the Duty incumbent on you in this behalf.

1. As to the Crimes, I shall not repeat what was mention'd touching all the Particulars thereof, at the Opening of this Sessions; but confine my

my Discourse to those, which I find by the Calendar will, at this Time, necessarily fall under your Examination; and those are Piracies.

Now Piracy is only a Sea-Term for Robbery, Piracy being a Robbery committed within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty. If any Man be assaulted within that Jurisdiction, and his Ship or Goods violently taken away without a legal Authority, this is Robbery and Piracy. If the Mariners of any Ship shall violently dispossess the Master, and afterwards carry away the Ship it self, or any of the Goods, or Tackle, Apparel, or Furniture, with a felonious Intention, in any Place where the Lord Admiral hath, or pretends to have Jurisdiction, this is also Robbery and Piracy. The Intention will, in these Cases, appear, by considering the End for which the Fact was committed; and the End will be known, if the Evidence shall shew you what hath been done.

2. Now the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty is declared, and described in the Statute, and Commission, by Virtue of which we here meet, and is extended throughout all Seas, and the Ports, Havens, Creeks, and Rivers beneath the first Bridges next the Sea, even unto the higher Water-mark.

The King of England hath not only an Empire and Sovereignty over the British Seas, but also an undoubted Jurisdiction, and Power, in Concurrency with other Princes and States, for the Punishment of all Piracies and Robberies at Sea, in the most remote Parts of the World; so that if any Person whatsoever, Native or Foreigner, Christian or Infidel, Turk or Pagan, with whose Country we have no War, with whom we hold Trade and Correspondence, and are in Amity, shall be robbed or spoiled, in the Narrow Seas, the Mediterranean, Atlantick, Southern, or any other Seas, or the Branches thereof, either on this or the other Side of the Line, it is Piracy within the Limits of your Enquiry, and the Cognizance of this Court.

3. Concerning the Duty incumbent upon you in making your Enquiries, and Presentments, you may consider that there is a great Trust and Authority committed to you; and therefore it will be expected that a suitable Care should be had, and your Power executed according to a well-regulated Discretion: As you are, on the one hand, to take Care that the Court be not troubled, nor any Man put in Hazard of his Life, through any frivolous, or malicious Prosecution; so, on the other Side, and more especially in the Cases of great and publick Offences, you are to use your utmost Endeavours, that Justice, the Support of Government, be not obstructed by any Partial Proceedings.

You are not obliged in all Cases to require a clear and full Evidence, but only to examine till you find, and are satisfied in your Consciences, that there is sufficient and just Cause to put the Party accused upon his Trial. You cannot convict, but may in Effect acquit the greatest Criminals; and therefore, if you do but find Proofs enough to create a Presumption against the Party accused, when the Case seems odious, and is of great Consequence and Importance, your safest Way is to put it in a proper Method for the Petty Jury, who are to receive full Satisfaction from the Evidence that shall be given in the Presence of the Party; and according to that Evidence, have Power to determine whether guilty, or not guilty, condemn, as well as acquit.

And upon this Occasion, seeing many who are upon that Service are present, it seems fit that they should also know that they have no Power to do more or less than what is agreeable to the Evidence: They are not to interpose in Points of Law, or to be swayed by any Consideration whatsoever, but what shall arise from the Proofs judicially made; they are indeed Judges of the Fact, but they are not arbitrary; they are as much restrained by the Dictates of Conscience, informed and convinced by reasonable Proofs, as the Judges on the Bench are by the Rules of Law.

No Man can believe just as he lists; and therefore a Determination, or Judgment at Will and Pleasure, will never be thought to deserve the Name of a Verdict: For whatever may be pretended, the World will not be persuaded that a Jury hath pursued the Dictates of Conscience, unless some reasonable Grounds for its Proceedings shall appear; and therefore, whenever it shall happen that notorious Malefactors escape unpunished, notwithstanding that in the Opinion of most good Men there was a full and sufficient Evidence for their Conviction, it is to be wished, and indeed it seems to me to be necessary, in Cases that relate to the Laws of Nations, that the Reasons which induced such a Determination, should be given for the publick Satisfaction; otherwise, since Foreigners look upon the Decrees of our Courts of Justice as the Sense and Judgment of the whole Nation, our Enemies will be glad to find an Occasion to say, that such Miscreants as are out of the Protection of all Laws, and Civil Government, are abetted by those who contend for the Sovereignty of the Seas. The barbarous Nations will reproach us as being a Harbour, Receptacle, and a Nest of Pirates; and our Friends will wonder to hear that the Enemies of Merchants and of Mankind, should find a Sanctuary in this ancient Place of Trade. Nay, we our selves cannot but confess, that all Kingdoms and Countries who have suffered by English Pirates, may, for Want of Redress in the ordinary Course, have the Pretence of Justice, and the Colour of the Laws of Nations to justify their making Reprizals upon our Merchants, wherefore they shall meet them upon the Seas. If a Jury happens in these Cases to be too severe, there is room for Mercy, and I am confident, that upon a just Representation, the Innocent never failed of obtaining it; but for a Fault, Neglect, or Error on the other hand, there is no Relief for injured Foreigners, but by their carving out, as we may be sure they will, for themselves, such a Satisfaction, upon our Merchants, as they shall think fit, whenever they shall have an Opportunity; and so our whole Nation must unavoidably suffer both in Reputation and Interest, and all as it were through our own Default.

I hope what hath been said upon this unexpected Occasion, will not be looked upon as intended to influence any Jury; I am sure it is far from being so designed: Religion, Conscience, Honour, common Honesty, Humanity, and all Laws, forbid such Methods: There is no Doubt but the Judge as well as the Jurymen then best discharge his Duty, when he proceeds without Favour or Affection, Hatred or Ill-will, or any partial Respect whatsoever.

Every Man ought to be extremely tender of such a Person as he has Reason to believe is innocent; but it should be considered likewise on the other Side, that he who brings a notorious Pirate, or common Malefactor, to Justice, contributes to the Safety and Preservation of the Lives of many, both bad and good; of the Good, by Means of the Assurance of Protection, and of the Bad too, by the Terror of Justice. It was upon this Consideration that the Roman Emperors in their Edicts made this Piece of Service for the publick Good, as meritorious as any Act of Piety, or religious Worship.

Our own Laws demonstrate how much our Legislators, and particularly how highly that great Prince King Henry the 5th, and his Parliament, thought this Nation concerned in providing for the Security of Traders, and scouring the Seas of Rovers and Free-booters. Certainly there never was any Age wherein our Ancestors were not extraordinary zealous in that Affair, looking upon it, as it is, and ever will be, the chief Support of the Navigation, Trade, Wealth, Strength, Reputation and Glory of this Nation.

Gentlemen, our Concern, as our Trade is, ought in Reason to be rather greater than that of our Fore-fathers; we want no manner of Inducements, no Motives to stir us up, whether we consider our Interest or Honour; we have not only the sacred Word, but also the glorious Acts of the best of Kings, which sufficiently manifest to us, that the Good and Safety of this Nation is the greatest Care of his Life. Let every Man therefore, who pretends to any thing of a true English Spirit, readily, cheerfully follow so good, so great, so excellent an Example, by assisting and contributing to the utmost of his Power and Capacity at all Times towards the carrying on his noble and generous Designs for the common Good, and particularly at this Time, by doing all that he can, to the End that by the Administration of equal Justice, the Discipline of the Seas, on which the Good and Safety of this Nation entirely depends, may be supported and maintained.

Then the Witnesses being sworn in Court, the Grand Jury withdrew to bear their Evidence; and in the mean Time T. Vaughan, J. Murphey, and Tim. Brenain, were arraigned, whom the Keeper of Newgate, by Order, brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Arr. T. Vaughan, Hold up thy Hand; (which he did.) Thou standest indicted, &c.

Art thou Guilty of this High Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or Not guilty?

T. Vaughan. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

T. Vaughan. By God and this Country.

Cl. of Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Cl. of Arr. J. Murphey, Hold up thy Hand; (which he did.) Thou standest indicted, &c.

How sayest thou, J. Murphey, Art thou Guilty of the High Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or Not guilty?

J. Murphey, Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be tried?

J. Murphey. By God and the King.

Officer. You must say, by God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Cl. of Arr. Bring Tim. Benain to the Bar, (who was brought accordingly.)

Cl. of Arr. Tim. Brenain, Have you any Copy of your Indictment?

Tim. Brenain. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. When had you it?

Tim. Brenain. This Day Se'ennight.

Cl. of Arr. Tim. Brenain, Hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Thou standest indicted, &c.

How sayest thou, Art thou Guilty of the High Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or Not guilty?

Tim. Brenain. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be tried?

T. Brenain. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Mr. Mompesson. Will your Lordships please that he may be tried now?

L. C. J. Treby. Does he desire to be tried now?

Mr. Mompesson. Yes, my Lord, there is no Evidence against him, and he is sick.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are not now prepared for the Trial.

L. C. J. Treby. If the King's Council and the Prisoner be agreed, with all my Heart.

L. C. J. Holt. He may be tried with the rest.

Then T. Vaughan, J. Murphey, and T. Brenain had Notice to prepare for their Trials on Friday next, at Two of the Clock in the Afternoon.

Then the Grand Jury came into Court.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, are you agreed in your Bills?

Grand Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Billa vera against Joseph Dawson, Ed. Forfeith, W. May, W. Bishop, James Lewis, and J. Sparkes, for Piracy and Robbery.

Cl. of Arr. Keeper of Newgate, set Joseph Dawson, Ed. Forfeith, Will. May, Will. Bishop, Will. Lewis, and J. Sparkes to the Bar. (Which was done accordingly.)

Cl. of Arr. Joseph Dawson, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Ed. Forfeith, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

W. May, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

W. Bishop, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

James Lewis, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Jo. Sparkes, hold up thy Hand, (Which he did.)

Then the Indictment was read, and set forth,

That Henry Every, alias Bridgman, Joseph Dawson, Edward Forfeith, William May, William Bishop, James Lewis, and John Sparkes, late of London, Mariners, on the 30th of May, in the 6th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King William, and the late Queen, did, against the Peace of God, and our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and the late Queen, by Force of Arme, upon the high and open Seas, in a certain Place, about three Leagues from the Groyne, and within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, piratically and feloniously set upon one Charles Gibson, a Subject of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and of the late Queen, being then and there Commander of a certain Merchant-Ship, called the Charles the Second, carrying 40 Pieces of Ordnance, belonging to certain Subjects of the said King, and the late Queen, (to the Jurors as yet unknown); and then and there put the said Charles Gibson in bodily Fear of his Life; and then and there, within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, feloniously and piratically did steal, take and carry away from the said Charles Gibson, the said Ship, called the Charles the Second, her Tackle, Apparel, and Furniture, of the Value of One Thousand Pounds; Forty Pieces of Ordnance, of the Value of Five Hundred Pounds; One Hundred Fuses, of the Value of One Hundred Pounds; Fifteen Ton of Bread, of the Value of One Hundred and Fifty Pounds; and Two Hundred Pair of Woollen Stockings, of the Value of Ten Pounds, in the Possession of the said Charles Gibson then being; the Ship, Goods, and Chattels of the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, and the late Queen, (to the Jurors unknown) against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King, and the late Queen, their Crown, and Dignities, &c.

How say'st thou, Joseph Dawson, art thou Guilty of this Piracy and Robbery, or Not guilty?

Jos. Dawson. I am ignorant of the Proceedings. Officer. He pleads Ignorance.

Cl. of Arr. You must plead Guilty, or Not guilty.

Jos. Dawson. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How say'st thou, Ed. Forseith, art thou Guilty, or Not guilty?

Ed. Forseith. Not guilty?

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be try'd?

Ed. Forseith. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. How say'st thou, Will. May, art thou Guilty, or Not guilty?

W. May. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How say'st thou, W. Bishop, art thou Guilty, or Not guilty?

W. Bishop. I desire to hear the whole Indictment read again.

L. C. J. Holt. You have heard it just now, and may hear it again if you desire it.

W. Bishop. The former Indictment.

L. C. J. Holt. No, there is no Occasion for that, this is an Indictment for a Fact distinct from that.

Cl. of Arr. This is a new Indictment, not the old one. Art thou Guilty of this Piracy and Robbery, or Not guilty?

W. Bishop. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How say'st thou, James Lewis, art thou Guilty, or Not guilty?

J. Lewis. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How say'st thou, J. Sparkes, art thou Guilty, or Not guilty?

J. Sparkes. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be try'd? (As of the rest.)

J. Sparkes. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God fend thee a good Deliverance.

Cryer. O Yes, &c. You good Men of the City of London summoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Prisoners at the Bar, answer to your Names as you are called, and save your Issues.

Cl. of Arr. Jo. Degrave, Benjamin Hatley, Jo. Ayres, &c.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any of the former Jury in this Pannel?

Cl. of Arr. Yes, my Lord.

Counsellor Conyers. We shall except against them for the King.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have returned any of the former Jury, you have not done well; for that Verdict was a Dishonour to the Justice of the Nation.

Cler. of Arr. You, the Prisoners at the Bar, these Men you hear called, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King, and you; if therefore you will challenge any of them, you are to challenge them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they are sworn.

Then they were called over, and some being challenged for the King, and some by the Prisoners, the Persons sworn in this Jury were these:

J. Degrave,	}	Alex. Pollinton,
J. Ayres,		J. Glover,
G. Broom,		Nath. Carpenter,
T. Hicks,		Jo. Bickley,
R. Meakins,		Nath. Troughton,
J. Shelswell,	}	Hum. South.

Cler. of Arr. Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, If any one can inform my Lords, the King's Justices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, or his Majesty's Advocate in his High Court of Admiralty, before this Inquest be taken, of the Piracy and Robbery whereof the Prisoners at the Bar stand indicted, let them come forth and they shall be heard, for the Prisoners stand at the Bar upon their Deliverance; and all others may depart.

Then the Grand Jury came into Court again, having found two other Bills against the Prisoners at the Bar, one for piratically taking away a Moorish Ship, and another for committing Piracy on two Ships belonging to Denmark.

And then the Grand Jury was adjourned to Friday next, at two a Clock in the Afternoon.

Cler. of Arr. Ed. Forseith, hold up thy Hand, (and so of the rest): You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoners, and hearken to their Cause; they stand indicted, &c.

Mr. Whitaker. May it please your Lordships, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoners at the Bar stand indicted for Felony and Piracy, for that they, about the 30th of May, in the 6th Year of the Reign of his present Majesty King William, did make an Assault on Captain Gibson, Commander of the Ship Charles the Second, and put him in Fear of his Life, and piratically stole away the Ship and all the Furniture; and this is laid to be against their Duty and Allegiance, and against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity; to which Indictment they have pleaded Not guilty. We shall go on to call our Witnesses, and prove the Charge against the Prisoners at the Bar, and doubt not but you will do your Duty.

Then Dr. Littleton, Advocate-General to his Majesty, in his High Court of Admiralty, spake as follows.

Gentlemen of the Jury,

YOU have heard the Indictment opened, and we shall now call our Witnesses, who will relate to you what enormous and horrid Crimes the Prisoners at the Bar have committed in the Prosecution of the Fact laid laid in the Indictment: Crimes, that the bare Intention, had they not taken Effect, would have merited the highest Punishment: But this is not their Case, for they were not disappointed of their wicked Lusts and Desires; for as their Crimes are great, so have they been consummate as well as voluntary and malicious. I may well say, that their Wickedness has been as boundless and as merciless as the Element upon which their Crimes have been committed; nor is there any Part of the World that hath not been sensible of their Rage and Barbarity.

Therefore, Gentlemen, as you are Lovers of Christianity, as you are Lovers of Honesty, nay, as you are Lovers of your selves, who bear the Character of honest Men, if we prove this Charge against the Prisoners, you must and ought to find them Guilty, remembering that the doing Justice upon wicked and profligate Men, is the greatest Mercy and Protection to the Good and Honest. We shall therefore proceed to call our Witnesses, not doubting but that you will act like honest Men, for the Honour and Welfare of your Country, without having any Respect to the dishonourable Proceedings of the former Jury.

Mr. Whitaker. Call Jo. Gravet. (He appeared and was sworn.) Let him stand up.

* Sir John Hawkes. Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Gravet, pray will you give my Lords and the Jury an Account of what you know of the Prisoners running away with the Ship Charles the Second.

J. Gravet. I was Second Mate in the Ship at that Time. There was violent Hands laid on me, I was seized, and a Pistol clapp'd to my Breaſt, and carry'd away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did it? Begin before.

J. Gravet. I was seiz'd by the Carpenter of the Ship; he took me by the Throat, and clapp'd a Pistol to my Breaſt.

L. C. J. Treby. Begin where the Ship was lying.

L. C. J. Holt. You was a Mate in this Ship: Now pray give an Account of the whole Matter.

J. Gravet. I was upon my Watch upon the Deck.

Prisoners. Pray speak up.

J. Gravet. And there was a Boat came from the James Galley, with People in her: And as soon as the Boat came, the Carpenter seiz'd me, and took me by the Throat, and clapp'd a Pistol to me, and said, if I resisted I was a dead Man. They took me, one by one Arm, and another by the other, and led me to my Cabin, and one with a Pistol stood at my Cabin-door, till they were got two Leagues without the Groyne. Then Every came to speak to Captain Gibson, who was then sick, and was guarded on both Sides; and when he had done speaking with him, and was return'd from Capt. Gibson, he came to me again, and said, I suppose you do not intend to go with us: I said, I would not. Then I, and the rest that would not go with them, had Liberty to go ashore; and I would have gone to my Coffer, and taken my Clothes, but they would not let me; and told me I should carry no more than the Clothes on my Back.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did any of the Prisoners at the Bar say so?

J. Gravet. That I cannot tell.

Mr. Conyers. Then go on.

J. Gravet. Then I went to Every, and I had some of my Clothes, he was so kind to give me them; he gave me a Coat and Waistcoat, and his Commission that he left behind him; and W. May took me by the Hand and wished me well home, and bid me remember him to his Wife.

Mr. Conyers. Was there Liberty for any of them that would, to go ashore?

J. Gravet. Captain Gibson told me so, and there were about seventeen went off.

Mr. Conyers. No Matter what Captain Gibson told you, you say you went off: Might any one that would, go?

J. Gravet. That I cannot tell.

Mr. Conyers. You say there was about seventeen went off; would the Boat hold more?

J. Gravet. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Cowper. Did you see any hindered that would have gone off? Were any of the Prisoners at the Bar there?

J. Gravet. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know Ed. Forſeith, &c.?

J. Gravet. I know some of them.

Mr. Conyers. Name the Men that you say you know.

J. Gravet. Joseph Dawson, W. May, J. Sparkes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They belonged to what Ship?

J. Gravet. To the Charles.

Mr. Conyers. Was there not a Boat came from the Ship James, before you went away? Was there any of the Prisoners at the Bar that came in that Boat?

J. Gravet. There were about twenty-six that we had Account of.

Mr. Conyers. From what Ship did they come?

J. Gravet. From the James.

Mr. Conyers. Were any of the Prisoners at the Bar any of them?

J. Gravet. Indeed, Sir, I cannot tell.

Cler. of Arr. Call T. Druit. (Who appeared, and was sworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Druit, was you aboard the Ship called the Charles the Second, when she was carried away?

T. Druit. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any thing of the carrying of that Ship away?

T. Druit. I was not in that Ship; I was Mate of the James; and about Nine came one from aboard the Charles the Second, and ask'd me for the drunken Boatswain? And I reply'd short; and he went away again, and said the Ship was going to be run away withal. Whereupon I went with ten Men to recover the Ship; and after I had advised with the Commander, I ordered the Pinnacle to be mann'd; and when I came, the last that went into the Boat was one Pike; and I bid them put back, and they would not, but went away to the Ship Charles.

Mr. Conyers. How many were there that went away in that Boat?

T. Druit. About Five and Twenty.

Mr. Conyers. Did you know all the Men? Were any of the Prisoners at the Bar there? Look on them.

T. Druit. Yes, my Lord, there was Ed. Forſeith, W. Bishop, and Ja. Lewis.

L. C. J. Holt. What Boat did they go away with, the James Boat?

T. Druit. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then they came from the James to the Charles the Second. Name their Names again.

T. Druit. Ed. Forfeith, Ja. Lewis, and W. Bishop.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You saw them go off, did you not?

T. Druit. It was so dark that we could not see them.

Mr. Cowper. Were these three Men sent?

T. Druit. They were sent.

Mr. Cowper. Or did they go of their own Head?

T. Druit. No, I do not say so; but I went to command them back again, and they refus'd.

Mr. Cowper. Did they make any Answer?

T. Druit. No, they only went away damning and sinking.

Mr. Conyers. Were there any Guns sent after them?

T. Druit. Yes.

Mr. Conyers. What was it for?

T. Druit. It was to bring them back again.

Mr. Cowper. And they would not come back?

T. Druit. They did not come.

Mr. Cowper. Then they would not come.

Cler. of Arr. Call David Creagh. (Who was sworn.)

Prisoner. This Man is a Prisoner for Piracy, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What if he be?

Prisoner. I do not understand Law; I hope your Lordship will advise us.

L. C. J. Holt. I will do you all Right. If he be so, that is no Objection against him; he may be a good Witness for all that.

Cler. of Arr. He is not a Prisoner for Piracy, but for Treason.

L. C. J. Holt. Tho' he be a Prisoner for Treason, he is not attainted. What is his Name?

Cler. of Arr. David Creagh.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you know about the Prisoners running away with the Ship Charles?

D. Creagh. Upon the 7th of May, 1694. I came to the Groyne, in Company with the Boat-swain and several others, on board the Charles; and when I was going in to the Captain of the Charles, Captain Gibson, I found Mr. Every, the Carpenter, and some others, drinking a Bowl of Punch: And after I was come from the Captain, I came and sat down with them, and Mr. May drank a Health to the Captain, and Prosperity to their Voyage: And we not knowing their Design then, thought it was to our lawful Captain, and Prosperity to the Voyage he was design'd for.

L. C. J. Holt. What was your Voyage?

D. Creagh. It was to the Spanish Indies. And afterwards the Company broke up, and retired, and went to their Cabins. And when we were in our Cabins, we heard a great Noise above Deck; and Captain Humphreys, that commanded the Gally, called to us, to tell us his Men were run away with the Boat, and were gone to Captain Gibson. To which Every answered, that he knew that well enough: So the Men came aboard; and as I was coming out of my Cabin to see what the Matter was, I was met by Every, the Carpenter, and two Dutchmen; and they obliged me to retire again to my Cabin. And Captain Humphreys fired two Guns at us. But we presently got out of Reach of the Guns, and proceeded on the Design. And I came out of my Cabin, and went on the Quarter-deck, where I met Every and the Carpenter together; Every was conning the Ship.

L. C. J. Holt. What is the Meaning of that?

D. Creagh. That is, to direct in the steering of her. So Every took me by the Hand, and ask'd me if I would go with him? And I answer'd, I did not know his Design. He said, there were but few that knew it. Says I, Tell me who do know it, that if you will not tell me your self, I may ask them that can tell me. But he said, we should all know by To-morrow Morning Eight a Clock. I told him, that would be too late to repent of the Design? The Carpenter stood by him, and said, Do you not see this Cock? Yes, says I, I do. Says he, This Man, and old May, and Knight, I can trust with any thing; they are true Cocks of the Game, and old Sportsmen. Then, said I, I suppose they know your Design. Yes, says he, they do; and if it were a Thing of ten times the Consequence, they should know it. Upon this, the Carpenter came to me, and said, If you do not go down, I will knock you on the Head. And as I was going down, I met with W. May, the Prisoner at the Bar. What do you do here? says he. I made him no Answer, but went down to my Cabin; and he said, God damn you, you deserve to be shot through the Head, and he then held a Pistol to my Head. Then I went to my Cabin, and presently came Orders from Every, that those that would go ashore, should prepare to be gone. And when the Captain was got out of Bed, who was then very ill of a Fever, Every came and said, I am a Man of Fortune, and must seek my Fortune. Says Capt. Gibson, I am sorry this happens at this Time. Says he, If you will go in the Ship, you shall still command her. No, says Captain Gibson, I never thought you would have served me so, who have been kind to all of you; and to go on a Design against my Owners Orders, I will not do it. Then, says Every, prepare to go ashore. Upon which, the Captain, and several others of us, went into the Boat. When we were by the Ship's Side, I heard them order the Doctor to be secured; but if there was any more would go into the Boat, they might: And we came into the Boat, to the Number of Sixteen; and they gave us four Oars in the Pinnace, and set us adrift.

L. C. J. Holt. Where did he set you?

D. Creagh. He set us aboard the James, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. That is, you were turned off from this Expedition.

D. Creagh. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Conyers. Was there any Room for more in the Boat?

D. Creagh. Yes there was.

L. C. J. Holt. Was there Liberty for any more to go?

D. Creagh. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you know of the Prisoners at the Bar?

D. Creagh. I know only W. May.

Mr. Cowper. What Time past from the coming of the Boat, to the Time of your going off?

D. Creagh. About two Hours, Sir.

Mr. Cowper. Was there any Guns fired in that Time?

D. Creagh. Yes, Sir, one or two from the James, by Capt. Humphreys.

Mr. Cowper. Was this done in the Ship with Silence? Or was there any Uproar, or Opposition?

D. Creagh. No: There could be no Opposition; for the Men came from the whole Squadron, and came upon us, and surprized us, being assisted by those that belonged to the Charles.

Mr. Cowper. But did No-body make Opposition to their going? Did not Captain Gibson?

D. Creagh. No, Captain Gibson could not, being sick.

L. C. J. Holt. But he went ashore?

D. Creagh. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Was any Body stopp'd that would go?

D. Creagh. No, my Lord, none but the Doctor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now call Jo. Dan. (Who appeared and was sworn.)

Mr. Conyers. What Ship were you aboard of at the Groyne?

Jo. Dan. The Charles the Second?

Mr. Conyers. Now, pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know of the taking away of the Ship Charles the Second, and what pass'd there?

Jo. Dan. Yes, Sir: We came to the Groyne, and had been there about three or four Months, and we had been about eight Months out of England, and we lay for our Wages, and there was no Wages to be got. But inasmuch as we wanted Wages, Every, and several others, contriv'd to carry this Ship away. So that Night, which was Sunday, they went ashore; and when they came aboard again, made some Men privy to it, whom I know not. And the Monday following, I think, the Packet went out in the Morning, and the Night being fair, was ordered to give Notice; and they came to the Dove, and about Nine or Ten her Boat broke off, and she haled us; for they told Captain Humphreys they were coming to run away with our Ship. So he hales the James; and presently some of the Officers came and order'd their Pinnace to be mann'd, and it was so. And when they gave this Order, there was Every and twenty-five or twenty-six Men. And as they came aboard, our Cables were cut, and ready to go. And coming under the Castle, we cut all the Boats but two, and stood out to Sea about two or three Leagues; and there Every went to Captain Gibson, and, as they said, to ask him if he would go with them, or not. He said, No. Then he said, He must prepare to go ashore; and he did so, and several others with him. And the Word was given about, that they that would go ashore might go; but whether these Men heard it or no, I cannot tell; and no Man's Name was mention'd to be stopp'd, but the Doctor. And when they went away, they cry'd, There was Water in the Boat, and they desired a Bucket of us, to heave it over, and we gave them one; and away they went, I think, about fifteen of them, and no more did offer to go as I saw, nor did I see any hinder any that would go: And afterwards, they that went off went about their Business, and we about our Business. And we came to the Isle of May, and victual'd our selves there; and there we met with three English Ships, out of which we took some Necessaries for our selves, and among the rest several Men; nine Men we took out of them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were the Prisoners at the Bar in the Ship, when they went away?

Jo. Dan. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Name them.

Jo. Dan. Ed. Forfeith, W. May, J. Lewis, Jo. Sparkes, W. Bishop.

Mr. Conyers. Which of them was aboard the Charles, that belong'd to her?

Jo. Dan. W. May and J. Sparkes; and Ed. Forfeith, Ja. Lewis, and W. Bishop, came from the James.

Mr. Cowper. Was it not generally understood, that they were going to run away with the Ship, when they came to Capt. Gibson?

Jo. Dan. Yes, Sir, they knew to be sure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know that they assented to it?

Jo. Dan. No, Sir, I did not hear them say so.

Mr. J. Eyre. Did they desire to go ashore with the rest?

Jo. Dan. I saw none hindered.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Ed. Forfeith in the Ship then?

Jo. Dan. Ed. Forfeith was in the Ship then.

L. C. J. Holt. Was he at the Isle of May, taking in Necessaries with you?

Jo. Dan. Yes, Sir,

L. C. J. Holt. What did he do in the Company?

Jo. Dan. He was in the Ship, and came from the James.

L. C. J. Holt. And so did Bishop, and so did Lewis?

Jo. Dan. Yes, my Lord, these three; and the other two belong'd to the Charles.

Mr. Whitaker. Did any of the Ship's Crew go ashore at the Isle of May?

Jo. Dan. Yes, Sir, I think so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I think, you say, that the Word was given about, that any might go that would.

Mr. Conyers. Go on with the Proceedings after you were at the Isle of May.

Jo. Dan. After we had victual'd, we took in some Men.

Prisoners. We have been try'd for that already, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Go on.

Jo. Dan. After we had been there, and took in what we had Occasion for, our Quarter-master said, he would give them Bills for what he took of them. Then we went to the Coast of Guinea, and took several Negroes, and carried them away with us. And afterward we went to the Island of Princes, where lay two Danes, and we fought them, and took them; and after we had taken them, some of the Men went ashore at the Island of Princes, and others went along with us; and we brought the Ships to Vandepo, and burnt one, and carried one with us. Then we came to Cape Lopes.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is that?

Jo. Dan. Under the Equinoctial-Line; and there we fired a Shot through the little one to sink her, for the Men could not agree, and so we could not carry her with us. We went about the Cape, and touch'd at Madagascar.

Dr. Littleton. Had not these Men their Part and Share of the Plunder?

L. C. J. Holt. You go too fast, Sir.

Mr. Conyers. What was the next Ship you met with, after you had rounded the Cape?

Jo. Dan. The next was a small Vessel, about 30 or 40 Ton, and we put her ashore, and took a small Matter out of her, and let her lie; and there there we put this Gentleman, Mr. May ashore. And we seeing three English Ships a coming, we left him there, and went to the Equinoctial Line: And afterwards, for want of Bread and Water, we came again, and took another small Vessel, and some Rice and Pody out of her, and sunk her, and then went to the Cape again, and took in W. May again, and met another Vessel, and took Rice and Meal out of her, and sunk her too. And then we went to the Red Sea to a Town called Meat; and the People would not trade with us, and we burnt it. And thence we went up to the Red Sea, as far as we could: And going up to the Cape Adin, we met with two English Privateers more, and they came and joined with us.

L. C. J. Holt. You call them Privateers; but were they such Privateers as you were?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord. I suppose they had Commissions at first, but I suppose they did not run so far as that.

Mr. Conyers. Did you go all on the same Design?

J. Dan. Yes, they sailed on with us, and we made the best of our Way, and came up into the Red Sea in a little Time, and came to an Anchor at Bobs Key, and had lain there but a Night and a Day, and there came up three Englishmen more from America, and they likewise conformed with us; and we lay there about five Weeks; and in that Time we expected the Fleet to come down.

Mr. Conyers. What Fleet?

J. Dan. The Moorish Fleet, that came from Mocha. They pass'd us on Saturday Night unseen, and we took a Vessel, which gave us an Account that they were gone. And then we followed them; and about three Days after we made Land, we came up with one of them of about 2 or 300 Tons, and we fired a Broadside at her, and Small Shot, and took her, which, after we had taken her, we plundered, and took out some Gold and Silver.

Mr. Conyers. And what did you do with it?

J. Dan. We brought it aboard our Ship.

Mr. Conyers. Did you share it?

J. Dan. Not then, but after we took the other Ship.

Mr. Conyers. What was that other Ship?

J. Dan. After we had taken her, we put some Men aboard to keep her with us; and about two Days after we were lying at Anchor at St. John's, and there was a great Ship called the Gunsway; and we weigh'd Anchor, and fought her about two Hours, and took her, and put some Men aboard her, and plunder'd her. And after we had done as much as we thought convenient, we sent her to Surat with the People in her. And then we stood farther to the Indian Coast, and shared our Money about a Week after.

L. C. J. Holt. That was a brave Prize, was it not, the best you had all the Voyage?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you all share?

J. Dan. Yes, all that were in the Ship.

L. C. J. Holt. You have given a good Account of this Matter. Was Ed. Forfeitb there?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What did he do? Was he active?

J. Dan. I did not see him act.

L. C. J. Holt. Had he a Share?

Vol. V.

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord, he had.

L. C. J. Holt. Was W. May there?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What did he do there?

J. Dan. He could do but little then; he had his Share.

L. C. J. Holt. And when you took him in again, what did he do? Did he do his Business as a Seaman?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord, till he was sick.

L. C. J. Holt. Was W. Bishop there?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord, he was among the rest.

L. C. J. Holt. What did he do? Did he consent and agree to what was done?

J. Dan. He had Share of the Money.

L. C. J. Holt. Did Ja. Lewis share too?

J. Dan. He had a Share, as far as was allowed by the Company.

L. C. J. Holt. Did J. Sparkes share with you too?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord, as far as the Company thought fit to give him.

Mr. Cowper. When you say as the Company thought fit, what do you mean? How did they share it?

J. Dan. Some had 1000*l.* some 500, others 300.

Mr. Cowper. Had all the Prisoners some Share?

J. Dan. Yes, Sir, all had some Share.

Mr. Whitaker. What did you do with the Charles the Second, after the Voyage?

J. Dan. We left her at Providence.

L. C. J. Holt. If any of you Prisoners at the Bar will ask him any Questions, you may.

Mr. Justice Turton. What Provisions were aboard the Charles when she was taken away?

J. Dan. I cannot tell.

Mr. Justice Turton. What Quantity of Bread was there?

J. Dan. A pretty deal, I cannot tell the Quantity.

Mr. Justice Turton. And were there any Guns aboard her and small Arms?

J. Dan. Yes, my Lord, there were.

W. May. My Lord, may I speak for my self?

L. C. J. Holt. If you will ask him any Questions you may; you shall be heard again to speak for your self by and by.

W. May. I desire he may be ask'd where I was taken sick?

L. C. J. Holt. He asks you, where he was taken sick?

J. Dan. I cannot justly tell that, I think it was at Allibore, at the Coast of Guinea.

W. May. I did not lie down with it?

J. Dan. No you did not; but your first being taken sick was at Allibore.

W. May. My Lord, I desire you will ask him, whether he thinks I had any Knowledge of the going away of the Ship?

L. C. J. Holt. You hear what he says; what do you say?

J. Dan. I know nothing of that.

L. C. J. Holt. You were there, and you had a Share of the Prize; you drank an Health to the Success of your Voyage?

W. May. I hope, my Lord, you will not be angry for asking Questions.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no-body is angry, you may ask what Questions you will.

Then Philip Middleton was called and sworn.

Mr. Conyers. Pray tell what you know of taking away the Ship Charles the Second?

P. Middleton. I cannot say any thing of running away with the Ship, for I was asleep then; but afterwards, in the Morning, they called up all Hands; and the Captain said, Every Man should share alike, only he would have two Shares.

L. C. J. Holt. Who said so?

P. Middleton. Capt. Every. From thence they went to Bonyvis, and took in some Salt; and from Bonyvis they went to the Isle of May, and there they took three English Ships, and plundered them; and they took the Governor aboard their own Ship till they had done, (for then they could demand what Victuals they had a mind to) and then they sent him away again: And from the Isle of May they went to the Coast of Guinea, where they put out English Colours, to make the Natives come aboard to trade; and when they came aboard, they surprized them, and took their Gold from them, and tied them with Chains, and put them into the Hold; and when they came to a Place called the Island of Princes, they gave seven of them away for Slaves: And then they went to Vandepoe, where they clean'd their Ship; and from Vandepoe they went to Cape Lopes, and from Cape Lopes to Annibo, and from Annibo about the Cape; and at Madagascar they watered their Ship, and got Provisions, and Cows to salt up; and from thence they went to Joanna, and from Joanna they went to take a Junk, and took Rice out of her, and sunk her: and from thence they went to the Equinoctial Line, and because they were short of Water and Rice, they went back again to Joanna; and the Wind being contrary, they went to Commeroe; and there they met a small French Vessel, and they took her, and sunk her; and then went to Joanna again, and there took in Mr. May again: And then went to Meat; and because the Natives would not trade with them, they burnt their Town: And then they went to Bobs Key, by the Mouth of the Red Sea: But before that, they met with an English Vessel, that was on the same Account that we were; and we rode there a Night or two; and they saw there another Sail a coming, which proved to be another English Vessel: And in the Morning they saw two more; May, Farrel, and Wake, were the Captains: And on Saturday Night all the Mocha Fleet passed by: And on Sunday Morning they took another Vessel, that told them the said Fleet was gone by; and so they consulted whether they should follow them, or stay there. And then they went after them and overtook them, and took one that was about three or four hundred Ton, and took Gold and Silver out of her; and sent Men aboard her to plunder and keep her. And next Day they spied another Sail, and got up their Anchor, and stood to her, and took her; she was called the Gunsway: they killed several Men aboard, and when they had taken and plundered the Ship, they left the Men aboard to go to Surat again. And then they went to Rachipool in the East-Indies, and got Water and Necessaries; and from thence to Degorees, and watered again; and then to Dascaran, where they set about twenty-five Frenchmen ashore, and fourteen Danes, and some English; for they were afraid, if they came to England, and were caught, they should be hang'd; and they thought themselves there secure. From that Place they went to Ascension, and then to the Island Providence in the West-Indies: And then they wrote a Letter to the Governor, to know if he would let them come in, and said they would present the Governor with twenty Pieces of Eight, and two Pieces of Gold, if he would let them come in; and the Captain, because he had a double Share, he offered forty Pieces of Eight, and four of Gold; and with that they sent some Men down, Adams and others, with the Letter: And they came again, with a Letter, from the Island, that they should be welcome, and come and go again when they pleased.

Mr. Conyers. Look on the Prisoners at the Bar, were they all there?

L. C. J. Holt. Do you know Ed. Forseith? Was he there? Did he belong to the Charles the Second?

P. Middleton. He came from the James.

L. C. J. Holt. Was W. May there?

P. Middleton. He was aboard the Charles.

L. C. J. Holt. Was W. Bishop there?

P. Middleton. W. Bishop came from the James.

L. C. J. Holt. Was J. Lewis there?

P. Middleton. Yes, he came from the James.

L. C. J. Holt. Was J. Sparkes there?

P. Middleton. Yes, he was aboard the Charles.

L. C. J. Holt. Had all the Men their Shares?

P. Middleton. Yes, such as the Company thought fit to allow them, all of them.

L. C. J. Holt. Had these Men their Shares of the several Prizes they took?

P. Middleton. Yes, they had.

L. C. J. Holt. Were they active in the taking of the Prize?

P. Middleton. They were, as far as I saw.

L. C. J. Holt. Were not divers others set ashore besides Capt. Gibson?

P. Middleton. I never heard any repine, or wish they had been ashore, or that they had never come along with the Ship.

L. C. J. Holt. But do you know of any others that were set ashore?

P. Middleton. Yes, a great many, Mr. Gravet and several others.

Mr. Cowper. I think, you said, some French and English were set ashore in the Indies.

P. Middleton. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Cowper. Were they set ashore willingly?

P. Middleton. They desired to be set ashore.

Jury-man. He says, in the Morning Capt. Every called them above Deck, and gave Leave to any to go ashore, that were not willing to go with them; we desire to know whether any of the Prisoners were there at that Time?

P. Middleton. I know not that; all Hands were called up.

Mr. Justice Turton. What Number of Persons were aboard when the Dividend was made?

P. Middleton. About a hundred and sixty.

Mr. Justice Turton. What might the Shares be?

P. Middleton. Some a thousand Pounds, some six hundred, and some five hundred, and some less, according as the Company thought they deserved.

Mr. Justice Turton. Had not you a Share?

P. Middleton. Yes, what the Company thought fit, and they told me that would serve to put me out an Apprentice, and that I should never go near my Friends.

Mr.

Mr. Justice Turton. How much was that you had?

Pb. Middleton. Above an Hundred Pound.

Mr. Conyers. What became of it?

Pb. Middleton. Jo. Sparkes robb'd me of it.

L. C. J. Holt. The King's Counsel have done with the Evidence, and therefore now is your Time for to speak, if you have any thing to say for your selves. Ed. Forfeith, what have you to say?

Ed. Forfeith. My Lord, I desire you would call Mr. Druit, and ask him whether I was one of the Pinnace's Crew?

L. C. J. Holt. You hear what he says.

T. Druit. Yes, you were, and I commanded you to come back, and you refused.

Ed. Forfeith. Did not you command me to go?

T. Druit. Yes, and I afterwards commanded you to come back, and you refused.

Ed. Forfeith. You did not command me back.

T. Druit. Yes, I did, and fired at you, and shot through the Boat.

Ed. Forfeith. I held Water with my Oar, that was all I could do.

L. C. J. Holt. What did you command him to do?

T. Druit. To rescue the Ship.

L. C. J. Holt. Instead of rescuing the Ship, you run away with her. He commanded you back, and you refused to come back.

Ed. Forfeith. I could not bring her back my self, nor come back, unless I should leap over-board.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to say?

Ed. Forfeith. My Lord, when I was in the Boat, I knew not who was in it, nor how many. When I came aboard the Charles, the Sails were loose, and I was in a very sorry Condition; they cut the Boat off, and put her adrift; I could not get into her, she was gone in a Minute's Time, I did not know which Way, or what Men there were in her, nor heard nothing 'till Two o' Clock the next Day. And I hope, my Lord, as we are but poor Sea-faring Men, and do not understand the Law, you will take it into Consideration.

L. C. J. Holt. But all you Seamen understand that Law, that it is not lawful to commit Piracy; and he that doth, deserves to be hang'd.

Ed. Forfeith. My Lord, I never did.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you think it no Piracy to rob?

Ed. Forfeith. I was forc'd to do what I did.

Mr. J. Eyre. You all compell'd one another.

Ed. Forfeith. My Lord, I was sent of an Errand. I hope as we are poor Men in this Condition, you will take into Consideration.

L. C. J. Holt. We shall. Have you any more to say?

Ed. Forfeith. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. W. May, what do you say?

W. May. Here is one of the King's Evidence, that testifies that I knew nothing of the Ship's going away; and I believe very few knew it, I believe not above Nine or Ten.

L. C. J. Holt. None of them say you were at the Consult; but one says that you said, God damn you, you deserve to be shot through the Head; and held a Pistol to him.

W. May. I never was any higher than the Under-deck; I was coming up the Hatch-way, and Captain Every was standing, and commanding the Ship.

VOL. V.

L. C. J. Holt. Every was no Officer, he had nothing to do to command; he was under Captain Gibson, and took the Ship from Gibson.

W. May. My Lord, I know nothing of the Ship's going away.

L. C. J. Holt. You should have stuck to Captain Gibson, and endeavoured to suppress the Insolence of Every. Captain Gibson was the Commander, you ought to have obeyed him; and if any had resisted him, or gone to put a Force upon him, you should have stood by him.

W. May. I was surprized.

L. C. J. Holt. How?

W. May. By Captain Every, and knew nothing of it.

L. C. J. Holt. You were zealous from the Beginning, and said to one, Damn you, you deserve to be shot through the Head.

Mr. J. Turton. And one says you drank a Health to your good Voyage.

W. May. Presently after I heard this Rumour, I came up the Hatch-way, and Capt. Every says, You, May, I believe you do not love this Way, pray get down to your Cabbin. So I went to my Cabbin, which one that is now at Virginia could testify; which I hope will be considered, that I cannot have my Witnesses for me.

L. C. J. Holt. What have you more to say? Have you any Witnesses to call?

W. May. I stay'd in the Cabbin a considerable Time. I was thinking I must leave my old Captain without seeing him; and I begg'd them to give me Leave to come to him; and there was two Men stood with naked Cutlases, and would not let me come to him. We had some Confabulation together, and I begg'd the Favour to come in, and at last they permitted me; and the Doctor was anointing the Commander's Temples. And as I was coming along, I had my Hand cut; and I went to the Doctor, to desire him to bind up my Hand. When I came out again, they began to hurry the Men away. Here was Mr. Gravet, the second Mate, who is now one of the King's Evidence; and I told him he should remember me to my Wife, I am not like to see her; for none could go, but who they pleased: For when those Men were in the Boat, they cry'd to have a Bucket, or else they should sink, they having three Leagues to go: And I do not know how they could go so far with more, when their Boat was like to sink with those that were in her, as some of the King's Evidence have testified.

L. C. J. Holt. Who will you call?

W. May. Mr. Dan. (Who appear'd.)

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Dan, answer the Question, Whether there was calling for a Bucket several Times by the Men that were in the Boat?

J. Dan. They did call, and a Bucket was given them to pump with.

L. C. J. Holt. You were willing to be rid of them.

W. May. I have more to say. Afterwards, if I should have denied to go with them, I might have been kill'd by them; and I knew not whether it be better to be necessary to my own Death, or to suffer by the Law of the Nation.

Sir Cb. Hedges. You seem to say that you were under a Constraint and Terror. Did you make any Complaint or Discovery so soon as you had Liberty, or at your first coming into the King's Dominions?

W. May. Yes, at Virginia.

Sir Ch. Hedges. Where did you first arrive in England?

W. May. At Bristol.

Sir Ch. Hedges. When you came to Bristol, did you discover it to any Magistrate?

W. May. When I came to Bristol, I had a Design to discover it to the Lords of the Admiralty.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you go to a Magistrate?

W. May. I was several Days in the King's Collector's House, and did discover the whole to him; and at Providence.

L. C. J. Holt. You speak now of Providence; but in England who did you discover it to?

W. May. I was taken sick, and could not go abroad.

L. C. J. Holt. You might have sent to the Mayor of Bristol.

W. May. I knew nothing of it, I intended to declare it to none but the Lords of the Admiralty. I knew no Man there, but two Men that were Fellow-Trademen in Virginia. I came from Virginia by the first Ship; and if that Ship had come away before the Fleet, I had been at home long before. I lay sick at Bristol four or five Days, and the fifth Day I got Passage for London in the Coach; and was taken three Miles off Bath by the King's Messenger, by one who betrayed me, and I was carried back to Bath again. And there was the Duke of Devonshire; and there they examined the whole Matter, in every Particular, as I have now declared to the Court. And my Lord desired the Messenger should take me away again, and see me safe to London; which was all he said to me. I have more to say, as to my being put ashore at Joanna. I had no Place to go to, but lay in a lamentable Condition, I could not put Water to my Mouth without Help, and remained useless of Hands or Feet, despairing of my Life. I desired to go ashore, to see if the Air would do me any good; and I went ashore at Joanna, with another Man, Gunning, and others, for Refreshment. So the second Day we went in, there appears three Ships, which were East-India Men. Captain Every being surpriz'd by these Ships, hastened his Men and Water aboard to get out to Sea, that he might not be surprized in the Road without his Men on Board, who were come ashore for the Sick. And I told them, I will not go with you, I will rather trust to the Mercy of my Countrymen, or the Mercy of the Negroes: I should endanger my Life, if I go aboard; if I stay, no question my Countrymen will have Compassion on me; and if I have committed any thing worthy of Death, they have Authority to put me to Death according to the Law of the Nation. And I applied myself to Mr. Edgcomb, when he came ashore, and he gave me scurrilous Language. But I replied, I am a weak Man, for me to stay behind is Death; I had rather suffer Death by the Laws of my Country, than to be left to the Mercy of these Negroes. Mr. Edgcomb says, I will take you down with me, and will hang you there too.

L. C. J. Holt. Where?

W. May. At Bombay, where he said I should be tried. His Mate, and several other Englishmen, came to see me, and brought me one thing or other to refresh me. And at last, at Night, he sent his Doctor and Purser to me, who said, the Captain is just now sending his Boat for you. I replied, I am ready, here is all I have in the World; and he goes away about Two a Clock in the Morning. And I remained seven or eight Weeks at the Mercy of those Negroes, and had perished, but that a Negroe hearing an Englishman was there, came to me; he lived at Bednal-Green, and spoke English very well. He went from England in the Ship Rocheester, taken at Guinea some Time before. The Captain commanded this Negroe to go for the Long-boat, and turn her adrift; which he does, but goes away with her himself; and in the Fight, says, the Ship blew up by an accidental Fire, and several were lost. This Negroe I got to look after me, and he did really feed me, and got me all Necessaries belonging to me: And by that Means I saved my Life. Now when Captain Every came in again, I could not go nor stir.

L. C. J. Holt. Do not call him Captain; he was a Pirate.

W. May. He commanded me, I was forced to obey him.

L. C. J. Holt. For that Matter, call Gravet again, because you and he were very kind together; you shook Hands with him, and bid him farewell, and remember you to your Wife. Mr. Gravet, do you remember when you went into the Boat? Did W. May take his leave of you, or was he unwilling to be left behind?

J. Gravet. When we had Liberty to go out of this Ship, this Man, W. May, took me by the Hand, and wished me well home, and bid me remember him to his Wife, and was very merry and jocund, and knew whither they were going.

Mr. J. Turton. Did he express any Inclination to go with you?

J. Gravet. No, my Lord, not at all.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to say?

W. May. Yes, my Lord, I remained in this Condition till I came to Providence; and the King's Evidence can testify what I say. I only beg Mercy of this honourable Bench, to consider my weak State and Condition that I have been in.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you done?

W. May. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then the next. W. Bishop, what have you to say?

W. Bishop. I belonged to the Ship James; and at the Groyne the Men began to complain about Wages, and that was the first Beginning of the Disturbance about this Plotting. We were shipp'd out of England in Sir James Houblon's Service, to the Spanish West-Indies. Upon this Mutiny among the Men for their Wages, several Men went aboard the King's Ships, and desired to be entertained on Board any of them to go for England; and we all went away again to the Ship, because we could not be entertained. But this Design of Every's I did not know of. On the 17th Day Captain Humpbreys calls, and says, my Men are gone aboard the Charles, I think. And he calls out, says he, Mr. Druit, man the Pinnace. I being then on the Deck, at Night, the Men all quiet, as I thought, I went into the Pinnace, and I was no sooner in, but in comes fifteen or sixteen more that knew of the Design; but I was then sent, and knew it not. And they put off the Boat, and overpower'd us; and several of us would have gone aboard again, again, and they would not suffer us. And when we came aboard the Ship Charles, they had cut the Cables, and the Sails were loose, and several Men went from the Charles to the James in a Boat; and they commanded the Innocent to do what they pleased, with Pistols and Cutlases; and they commanded me to go into the Hold to do what they pleased. And I not knowing of this Matter, the Men that were in the Boat called, Hand the Buckets, or we shall sink. And I heard afterwards, that none went ashore, but whom they pleased, that is, Every and his Crew. And I not knowing of it, could not go; and if I had known it, I had not been admitted to go. Then we were carried two Leagues without the Groyne.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any Witnesses to call?

W. Bishop. The King's Evidence is my Witnesses; he commanded me to go into the Boat.

L. C. J. Holt. Will you ask him any Questions?

W. Bishop. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. James Lewis, what have you to say?

J. Lewis. I had been in France, a little before the Ship came to the Groyne, a Prisoner there; but I knew nothing of Every's Design. By the Command of our Officer I went aboard the Boat, and as soon as we were in her, we were overpower'd, and carried away; they took the Oars out of our Hands, and carried us to the Ship Charles. And when we came aboard, they put the Boat a-drift, and then they commanded me into the Forecastle; they had Arms, but we had none, and so were forced to obey them. When the Boat was going off, I heard a Noise of crying out for a Bucket. And when we were gone from the Groyne, we were forced to do what they would have us; it was against my Consent, and against my Will.

L. C. J. Holt. J. Sparkes, what say you?

J. Sparkes. When Captain Humpbreds called to them that were gone into the Boat, I was asleep; but with the Noise of Gravet's crying out, He is coming, I awaked; and all put the Candles out, for fear I should see them. And when the Men were come aboard, I went on the Deck, and they throw'd the Hammocks, and knock'd me down.

L. C. J. Holt. Who did it?

J. Sparkes. The Hammocks they brought from the other Ships. I durst not do any otherwise than they bid me; I was innocent of the Thing. I ask'd what they were going to do, and they said they were going for England.

L. C. J. Holt. Who told you so?

J. Sparkes. John Dan.

L. C. J. Holt. J. Dan, did you tell J. Sparkes the Ship was going for England?

J. Dan. I do not remember I saw him all the Night.

L. C. J. Holt. I would ask you if you had no Share of the Plunder.

J. Sparkes. I was forced to take it.

L. C. J. Holt. Phil. Middleton, you had some Share, had you not?

Phil. Middleton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What became of it?

Phil. Middleton. They took it away from me.

L. C. J. Holt. Who took it from you?

P. Middleton. J. Sparkes robb'd me of it by Night.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he take all away?

Phil. Middleton. Yes, all that I had there, Two hundred seventy odd Pieces of Gold; it was in a Belt.

J. Sparkes. He took out his Money and shew'd it to the Troopers, and they made him drunk and got it from him; and the next Morning he said they took it from him.

Phil. Middleton. I was forc'd to say so, because if I had said he had it, he would have made no more but to cut my Throat.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to say?

J. Sparkes. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for the King against the Prisoners at the Bar. They are arraign'd for a very high Crime, a Robbery upon the Seas. It was not a less Crime because committed on the Sea, but rather the more. These Men had a Trust reposed in them to assist their Captain in his Voyage; but instead of that, they resist their Captain, turn him out, and run away with the Ship. They could not find Shelter in any other Part of the World, and I hope you will make it appear such Crimes shall not find Shelter here, more than in other Parts of the World. These are Crimes against the Laws of Nations, and worse than Robbery on the Land: For in Case of a Robbery on the Land, we know who is to pay it; but in a Robbery by Sea, it often happens that innocent Persons bear the Loss of what these Men do. It has been very plainly proved against the Prisoners, That the Ship Charles was run away with from the Groyne. And it is as plain by two Witnesses, That all the Prisoners at the Bar were in this Ship; by three, That W. May in particular was one of them; and by one, That W. May was so far concerned, that because J. Gravet seem'd to dislike it, he said he desired to be shot through the Head: So that he that would make himself the most innocent of the five, is most guilty.

Now they have only this to say for themselves, that they were forced to do what they did. But it has been proved to you that they were not forced; it was said, All might go that would. And it is not proved on their Side, that any one of the Prisoners did seem to dissent from their going away. It is proved, that they all made use of this Ship to very bad Purposes; that they took and plundered several Ships, and shared the Booty. We do not produce this to prove them guilty, but to shew that they made use of this Ship to this very Purpose. Now if you allow what they say, that they were forced to go away; then you must never convict, at any time, one or two Highwaymen that rob in the Company of four or five; for they may say too, that they were overpower'd, and forced by their Company. It is so, not only in Case of Robbery, but in all other Crimes also. They have said a great deal indeed, but without any manner of Probability of Truth. They have produced no Witnesses for themselves, to prove any thing they have said. And the Witnesses for the King have given Testimony without any Exception. And, I hope, you will vindicate the Credit of the Nation, and find them Guilty, as the Evidence has proved them.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, These Five Prisoners, E. Forseith, W. May, W. Bishop, Ja. Lewis, and J. Sparkes, are indicted for a Piracy and Robbery committed on the High Seas, some Distance from the Groyne, in taking and carrying away a Ship, and several Goods therein contained. She was called the Charles the Second. This was done in May last was two Years, 1694. You have heard what Evidence has been given on this Indictment against the Prisoners.

It has appear'd that this Ship was bound in a Voyage to the West-Indies. Two of the Prisoners, W. May, and J. Sparkes, were Seamen then on board this Ship, and engaged in the Voyage; the other three were not Mariners in that, but in another Ship, called the James, that lay, at that Time, near the Groyne; but they came aboard the Ship Charles before, and continued on board her when she was carried away.

That there was a Piracy committed on the Ship Charles, is most apparent by the Evidence that hath been given; that is, a Force was put on the Master, and some others of the Seamen on board her, who because they would not agree to go on a piratical Expedition, had Liberty to depart, and be set ashore. But the Ship was taken from the Captain, who was possessed of her for the Use of the Owners, and was carried away by Every, and others of his Crew that remained on board her; and others came from the James: Which Taking was a Piracy that is manifested by the Use they did put her to; for they did afterwards commit several other Piracies with her, and took several English and Danish Ships, and then went to several Islands, Countries and Places, as to the Isles of May and Princes, to Madagascar, and then to Joanna, and afterwards to Meat, and then to the Red Sea; and at the Entrance of the Red Sea committed more Piracies, in the manner as you have heard, and has been very particularly described to you. So that I must tell you, beyond all Contradiction, the Force put on the Captain, and taking away this Ship, called the Charles the Second, was a Piracy; and for that particular Fact these Prisoners are now charged.

The Matter you are now to enquire after, is, Whether all the Prisoners were guilty of this Piracy, or which of them.

As for Ed. Forseith, Bishop, and Lewis, it hath appeared to you, that they, with others, were aboard the Ship James; and that there was a Report spread about of a Plot against the Captain of the Charles the Second, and a Design to carry that Ship away. To prevent which, there were some of these Men sent out in a Boat, by the Captain of the James, to this Ship, to assist Captain Gibson; but instead of preventing this Piracy, they stayed behind, and went along with these Men that carried away the Ship.

As to W. May and J. Sparkes, that were of this Ship's Crew, they continued on Board, and were Parties in all those Piracies.

There was a Consult, it seems, by some particular Persons, of which Every was the Ring-leader, how to effect this Design; Capt. Every, as they call him, though he was no Captain, but was under the Command of Capt. Gibson, that had the Conduct of this Ship.

It's true, it is not proved to you that these Men were at that Consult; for, it seems, they were too many, for they were about 160 that remained on board when the Ship was carried off.

Now for W. May, Jo. Gravet, Second Mate, that was aboard, though he had a Pistol clapp'd to him to prevent any Resistance, yet had Liberty to depart; and upon his going off, discoursed with May, who shook Hands with him and bid him farewell, and remember him to his Wife. And therefore it is evident that W. May was under no Force to stay; he stay'd with his good Will, and did consent to the Piracy. And then another Witness is D. Creagh, who says, that May was so zealous in the Matter, that he said to him, God damn him, he deserves to be shot through the Head.

Sparkes was on Board the Ship, and had a design'd End, and no Compulsion was used towards him, since he had Liberty to depart; but the staying behind by the rest, is a great Evidence to induce you to believe they were Parties in the Design; for why else should not they go ashore as well as others, since there doth not appear any Restraint upon them to stay, especially when a general Word was given, that those who would go on Shore should go on the Deck, and a Boat was ready to carry them off?

They say, they wanted a Bucket in the Boat, and they gave them one to lave out the Water; that is a plain Evidence they were willing to be rid of those that were not willing to engage with them; and if they had not approved of the Design, they were not hindered from going in the Boat. As for those that came from the James, there was no manner of Force on them, but they were sent from the Captain to assist the Captain of the Charles; for those two Ships having lain near together at the Groyne, there was some Intelligence of such a Design in Agitation, and these three forsook their own Ship; Every declared his Design to some: And he told them what Shares they should have; and because he was their Captain and Commander, he thought himself entitled to a double Share.

And then you have heard what was done in the whole Progress of this wicked Design; every one of these Men had their Share; even this W. May, though he was sick for some Time, and was set ashore at Joanna, and at the Ship's Return taken in again, yet he had his Share of all the Prizes. W. Bishop had his Share, James Lewis had his Share, and John Sparkes had his Share; and, says this young Man, Philip Middleton, I had my Share, which was above an hundred Pound, which was thought by them to be a good Share for a Boy; and Sparkes took him at a Disadvantage, and having an Opportunity, took it from him.

Now if there be a Piracy committed, though contrived but by one Man, yet if others do concur in it, they are equally guilty.

Now, though these Prisoners tell you, there was a Force upon them, it is a meer Suggestion, without any manner of Evidence; but there is Evidence of their consenting and confederating in this wicked Enterprize.

Indeed there hath been a Trial before, which you have all heard of; for the City and Nation have discoursed of it; consider therefore the Evidence. You have a great Trust reposed in you, for you are not to act arbitrarily, but you are are accountable to God Almighty, to whom you are sworn, and to the Government for the Verdict you give. If you are not satisfied in your Consciences that the Evidence is sufficient to find these Men guilty, in God's Name, acquit them.

But if you are satisfied in the Sufficiency of the Evidence to convict them, you must find them guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, swear an Officer to keep the Jury; which was done, and the Jury went out to consider of their Verdict. And in the mean time, the six Prisoners were again arraigned upon two several Indictments, the one for piratically taking away a Moorish Ship, and the other for committing Piracy upon two Danish Ships. To both which Indictments Joseph Dawson pleaded Guilty; the other five pleaded Not guilty, and put them upon their Trials.

Then the Jury having been withdrawn a little while, returned into Court.

Foreman. If there be any Evidence to prove that John Sparkes consented to the running away of the Ship, we desire it may be heard again.

L. C. J. Holt. He was with them at the carrying off the Ship, and at the taking of the several Prizes, and had his Share afterwards. What is Consent? Can Man otherwise demonstrate their Consent, than by their Actions?

Juryman. But we understand, my Lord, that he was tried upon his consenting to carry away the Ship.

L. C. J. Holt. What do you mean by consenting? If a Ship be carried away with Force from the Captain, divers Piracies are committed with her, one continues aboard and receives a Share of the Profit of the several Piracies; is not that an Evidence of Consent to the piratical Design? Was it not proved that many went out of the Ship that were not willing to go on that Design? And that was with the Leave of the rest that remain'd.

Mr. J. Eyre. And one stood on the Deck, and said with a loud Voice, that they that will not go, may have Liberty to go ashore.

Mr. Conyers. No Man was hindred but the Doctor, being a useful Man.

L. C. J. Holt. When a Ship is run away with, and People are aboard that Ship so run away with, that proves their Consent, unless they can produce Evidence to the contrary.

Mr. J. Turton. The Captain was in his Bed sick of a Fever at that Time, and was not willing to go with them, and they sent him away from them.

Mr. J. Eyre. And every Man had his Share.

Then the Jury consulting together a very little Time, agreed on their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, answer to your Names. Jo. Degrave.

J. Degrave. Here. (And so of the rest.)

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Set Ed. Forfeith to the Bar. Ed. Forfeith, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner; Is Edward Forfeith Guilty of the Piracy and Robbery whereof he stands indicted, or Not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Look to him, Keeper. What Goods and Chattels, &c.

Foreman. None that we know of.

Cl. of Arr. W. May, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Is W. May Guilty, &c. or Not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Look to him, Keeper, &c. W. Bishop, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Is W. Bishop Guilty, &c. or Not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Look to him Keeper, &c. J. Lewis, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Is J. Lewis Guilty, &c. or Not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Look to him, Keeper, &c. Jo. Sparkes, hold up thy Hand (Which he did.) Is Jo. Sparkes Guilty, &c. or Not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Look to him, Keeper, &c.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen, you have done extremely well, and you have done very much to regain the Honour of the Nation, and the City.

Then the Court adjourned to Friday next the 5th of November, Two of the Clock in the Afternoon, On which Day Ed. Forfeith, &c. were tried upon two other Indictments for several Piracies.

An Abstract of the Trial of Edward Forfeith, James Lewis, William May, William Bishop, John Sparkes, (Joseph Dawson having pleaded Guilty upon his Arraignment) at the Sessions House in the Old Bailey, Friday, November the 6th, 1696. where were present Sir Charles Hedges, Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, the Lord Chief Justice Holt, the Lord Chief Justice Treby, with several others of his Majesty's Judges and Commissioners.

After several Challenges made by the Prisoners, of the Persons returned upon the Jury, these Twelve Gentlemen were sworn, viz.

Roger Mott,	}	John Watson,
John James,		Benjamin Hooper,
Richard Rider,		John Hibbert,
William Hunt,		Richard Chiswell,
John Hammond,		Daniel Ray,
Abraham Hickman,		William Hatch.

THEN the Clerk read the two Indictments upon which they were tried, viz. one for seizing, robbing, and carrying away two Ships belonging to Denmark, on the 30th of August, 1694. The other for that they, on the 28th of September, 1695. in a Place 40 Leagues distant from Surat, did forcibly and piratically set upon a Moorish Ship and take away her Tackle and Goods, to a great Value.

Then Dr. Newton, one of his Majesty's Advocates, spoke to the Jury, as followeth.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury,

The Crime the Prisoners at the Bar stand charged with, and which has been opened to you, upon the Indictments, is Piracy; which is the worst Sort of Robbery, both in its Nature and its Effects, since it disturbs the Commerce and Friendship betwixt different Nations; and if left unpunished, involves them in War and Blood: For sovereign Powers and Nations have no Courts of Justice afterwards to resort to, as the Subjects of Princes have, in their own Countries, for Redress or Punishment; but they can only have recourse to Arms and War, which how expensive, and how dangerous they are, and what Calamities and Ruin they carry along with them, no Person can be a Stranger to. So that those who bring not such Criminals to Judgment, when its lies in their Power, and is their Duty to do so, are answerable, in a great Measure, before God and Man, for all the fatal Consequences of such Acquittals, which bring a Scandal on the publick Justice, and are often attended with publick Calamities.

It is not therefore, Gentlemen, to be supposed, that wise or honest Men, (and there are none who would be thought to be otherwise) who love their Country, and wish its Peace and Prosperity, would be guilty in that kind.

Gentlemen, This Piracy was begun in Europe, carried on through Africa, and ended in the remotest Indies; so that, in a manner, all the World is concerned in this Trial, and expects and demands Justice of them, if they are guilty, at your Hands.

Then the Witnesses were produced to prove the Facts charged upon the Prisoners, viz. Jo. Dean, David Creagh, Phil. Middleton, and others; who fully proved, against them, That the Prisoners, with several other wicked Persons, not yet taken, did forcibly take away the Ship Charles the Second from the lawful Commander, Captain Gibson, with a piratical Design; and in the said Ship did afterwards commit several Piracies. At the Ile of May they took three English Ships. From thence they went to the Coast of Guinea; and when some of the Natives came on board with their Gold, to trade with them, they took away their Gold, and carried them away for Slaves. And then went to the Ile of Princes and took two Danish Ships, and took out what was in them, viz. 40 Pound Weight of Gold Dust, and other Merchandize; and they offered to restore one of the Ships to the Master after they had robbed her, but the Master said she was insured, and he would not take her again. And afterwards they burnt one of the Ships, and carried away the other. Then they went to Bobs Key, at the Mouth of the Red Sea, waiting for the Mocha Fleet, which one Night pass'd by them unseen; but were informed the next Day that they were gone. And then calling a Council, they agreed to follow them; and accordingly went after them, and came up with one of them which was about 250 Ton, and with small Resistance took her, and put some Men on board her, and took Gold and Silver out of her to the Value of 30 or 40000 l. with other Merchandize: And afterwards met with the Ship called the Gunsway, and robbed her likewise of all her Furniture, to a very great Value. And about a Week after, they shared all the Prizes they had taken; and some had a thousand Pound, some had eight hundred, some seven hundred, some five hundred, every Man in the Ship his Share, as they thought they deserved. And it was particularly proved by the Evidence against the Prisoners, that they had their Shares. The more particular Relation of which is already printed at large in the foregoing Trial.

When the King's Evidence had done, the Prisoners were permitted to say what they could in their Defence; but the same appearing to be very weak, the Lord Chief Justice Holt summ'd up the Evidence; and the Jury going out to consider their Verdict, after a short Stay, brought them in all Guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd to the 10th of November following.

After the Trial of John Murphey was over, the Pirates were brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Arr. Joseph Dawson, you by your own Confession are convicted of Piracy and Robbery: What have you to say why Sentence of Death shall not be passed upon you according to Law?

Jos. Dawson. I submit my self to the King and the honourable Bench.

Cl. of Arr. Edward Forseith, what have you to say, &c.?

Forseith. I am an innocent Man; and went on to justify himself, &c.

Judge of the Admiralty. You and the rest of the Prisoners at the Bar have had a very fair Trial, and been fully heard upon your Defence; but the Jury your Countrymen, upon whom you put your selves to be tried, have found you Guilty: So that the insisting upon your Justification cannot now avail you any thing, the Verdict being given; but if you have any thing to offer in Arrest of Judgment, or can shew any Cause why the Court should not proceed to give Judgment according as the Law directs, against Persons convicted of Piracy, you shall have Liberty to speak, and will be heard.

Forseith. I desire to be sent into India to suffer there.

Cl. of Arr. William May, what have you to say, &c.

William May. My Lord, I being a very sickly Man, never acted in all the Voyage. I have served my King and Country this thirty Years, and am very willing to serve the East-India Company where they please to command me; and desire the honourable Bench to consider my Case, and if I must suffer, I desire to be sent into India to suffer there.

Cl. of Arr. William Bishop, What have you to say, &c.

William Bishop. I was forced away; and when I went, was but 18 Years old, and am now but 21, and desire Mercy of the King and the Court.

James Lewis. I am an ignorant Person, and leave my self to the King's Mercy.

John Sparkes. I leave my self to the King's Mercy, and to the honourable Court.

Judge of the Admiralty. Joseph Dawson, You stand convicted upon four Indictments, by your own Confession, for Piracy and Robbery. And you Edward Forseith, William May, William Bishop, James Lewis and John Sparkes, having put your selves upon your Trials according to the Customs and Laws of your own Country, have been found guilty upon three several Indictments, for the same detestable Crimes committed upon the Ships and Goods of Indians, of Danes, and your own Fellow-Subjects. The Law for the Heinousness of your Crime hath appointed a severe Punishment, by an ignominious Death; and the Judgment which the Law awards, is this;

That you and every one of you be taken from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, and that there you, and every one of you, be hanged by the Necks, until you, and every one of you, be dead: And the Lord have Mercy upon you

According to this Sentence, Edward Forseith and the rest were executed on Wednesday, November the 25th, 1696. at Execution-Dock, the usual Place for the Execution of Pirates.

CLXII. The TRIAL of Captain Thomas Vaughan at the Old-Baily, for High-Treason; on the High-Seas, November 6, 1696. 8 Will. III.

The Court being sate, at which were present, Sir Charles Hedges, Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, the Lord Chief Justice Holt, the Lord Chief Justice Treby, the Lord Chief Baron Ward, Mr. Justice Turton, and others of his Majesty's Commissioners; the Court proceeded on this Manner.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer.

draw near, and give your Attendance: God save the King.

A K E Proclamation.
O yes, O yes, O yes.
All Manner of Persons that have anything more to do, &c. and were adjourned to this Hour,

Then the Grand-Jury were called over, and the Appearances marked. And Witnesses being sworn in Court to give Evidence to them, against Thomas Vaughan, they withdrew to hear the same.

Then the Keeper of Newgate was order'd to bring his Prisoner, Thomas Vaughan, to the Bar. (Which he did.)

Cl. of Arr. Tho. Vaughan, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thou standest indicted, &c.

How say'st thou, Tho. Vaughan, Art thou Guilty of the High-Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or Not guilty.

T. Vaughan. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culpit, How wilt thou be try'd?

T. Vaughan. By God and this Country.

Cl. of Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

And then the Court proceeded to the Trial of the Pirates, and gave Notice to Mr. Vaughan to prepare for his Trial on Friday next, the 6th of November, 1696.

Die Veneris, sexto Novembris, Annoque Regni Regis Willhelmi Octavo, Annoque Domini, 1696.

Cl. of Arr. CRYER, make Proclamation.
Cryer. O yes, O yes, O yes, All Manner of Persons that have any Thing more to do at this Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, adjourned over to this Day, draw near and give your Attendance. And you Sheriffs of the City of London, return the Precepts to you directed, upon Pain and Peril which will fall thereupon.

Then the Under-Sheriff returned the Precepts.

Cl. of Arr. Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, You good Men of the City of London, summoned to appear this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoner at the Bar, answer to your Names, as you shall be called, every one at the first Call, and save your Issues.

The whole Pannel was called over, and the Appearances of those that answered, recorded, and the Defaulters were again called over.

Mr. Phipps. Will your Lordship please to order, that two Men may be brought from the Marshalsea, in the Behalf of the Prisoner?

L. C. J. Holt. You shall have an Order.

Then the Court went on the Trial of the Six Pirates; and after the Trial was over, Thomas Vaughan was called to the Bar.

T. Vaughan. My Lord, my Irons are very uneasy to me, I desire they may be taken off.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, ay, take them off.

Mr. Phipps. If your Lordship please, we have some Doubts as to the Indictment.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have any Exceptions, you ought to have made them before the Prisoner pleaded to it.

Mr. Phipps. I thought you had allow'd it, my Lord, in former Cases.

L. C. J. No, we did not allow it as of Right due to the Prisoner; the Exceptions should have been made before the Plea. You were indulg'd in being heard at first in the Cases of Rookwood, Cranburne, and Lowick; but it was not the Intent of the Act, to alter the Method of the Proceeding; and so upon Consideration hath it been determined. The Prisoner hath Time given by the Act to make any Exception to the Indictment before he pleaded; but you may move what you will afterwards in Arrest of Judgment, if it be material.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Vaughan. Those Men that you shall hear called, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King, and you, upon Trial of Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be sworn, before they be sworn.

Mr. Phipps. There was one Man here that desired to be excused, because he was on the Grand-Jury; therefore it seems there are some returned upon this Jury that were on the Grand-Jury, which I think ought not to be.

L. C. J. Challenge them then.

Mr. Phipps. We do not know the Men.

Then the Pannel was called over, and a great many Challenges made, and the Twelve Men that were Sworn, were these;

Edward Leeds	}	Caleb Hook
Nath. Green		Joceline Roberts
Hen. Sberbrook		Tho. Parker
Jo. Sberbrook		Peter Gray
Tho. Enms		Roger Poston
Peter Parker	}	Woolley

Cl. of Arr. Cryer. Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, If any one can inform my Lords the King's Justices, and the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, the King's Advocate in his High Court of Admiralty, before this Inquest be taken of the High-Treason, whereof Thomas Vaughan, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted, let them come forth, and they shall be heard; for now the Prisoner at the Bar stands upon his Deliverance; and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or else they forfeit their Recognizance.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Vaughan. Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of Thomas Vaughan.

Whereas, That before and until the 8th Day of July, in the 7th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King William III. there was open War between our said Lord the King, and Lewis the French King: And that the said War continued on the said 8th Day of July, in the 7th Year aforesaid, and doth still continue. And that for all the Time aforesaid, the said Lewis the French King and his Subjects, were, and at present are Enemies of our said Lord the King that now is: And that at the Time of the said War, and before the said 8th Day of July, in the 7th Year aforesaid, the said Lewis the French King, set out, amongst others, a certain small Ship of War, called the Loyal Clencarty, of which Thomas Vaughan, a Subject of our said Lord the King that now is, was Commander, with several French Subjects, Enemies of our said Lord the King, to the Number of fifteen Persons, in a Warlike Manner, to take and destroy the Ships, Goods, and Monies of our said Lord the King, and his Subjects, and against our said Lord the King, to wage War upon the High-Seas within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England. And that at the Time of the said War between our said Lord the King, and the aforesaid Lewis the French King, Tho. Vaughan, late of Galloway, in the Kingdom of Ireland, Mariner, being a Subject of our said now Lord the King, as a false Rebel against the said King his Supreme Lord, and not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, nor considering the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, and altogether withdrawing the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience which every true and faithful Subject of our said Lord the King, ought by Law, to have towards the said King; and the said War, as much as in him lay, against our said Lord the King, designing and intending to prosecute and assist; the said Tho. Vaughan, on the said 8th Day of July, in the said 7th Year of the King, being a Soldier aboard the Ship of War called the Loyal Clencarty, in the Service of the said Lewis the French King, and being then on the High-Seas, within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, about fourteen Leagues from Deal, did then and there by Force and Arms, falsely, maliciously, wickedly, and traitorously, aid, help, and assist the Enemies of our said Lord the King, in the Ship of War, called the Loyal Clencarty. And afterwards the said Thomas Vaughan, in the Execution and Performance of his said aiding, helping, and assisting, maliciously, falsely, and traitorously sailed a Cruising to several maritime Places within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, by Force and Arms to take the Ships, Goods, and Money of our said Lord the King, and his Subjects; against the Duty of his Allegiance, the Peace of our said Lord the King, and also against a Statute in that Case made and provided.

And the said Jurors for our said Lord the King, upon their said Oaths, farther represent, that the aforesaid Thomas Vaughan, as a false Traytor against our said Lord the King, further designing, practising, and with his whole Strength, intending the common Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disturb; and War and Rebellion against the said King upon the High-Seas within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, to move, stir up, and procure; and the said Lord the King, from the Title, Honour, Royal Name, and Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England, and Dominions upon the High-Seas, to depose and deprive; and miserable Slaughter of the Subjects of the said Lord the King, of this Kingdom of England, upon the High-Seas, and within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, to cause and procure; on the said 8th Day of July, in the said 7th Year of the King, upon the High-Seas, about fourteen Leagues from Deal, and within the Dominion of the Crown of England, and within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and treacherously, by Force and Arms, with divers other false Rebels and Traytors (to the Jurors unknown) War against our said now Lord the King,

King, prepared, prompted, levied, and waged. And that the said Thomas Vaughan in Performance of his said War and Rebellion, then and there, by Force and Arms, maliciously, wickedly, and openly assembled and joined himself with several other false Traytors and Rebels (to the Jurors unknown) to the Number of fifteen Persons, being armed, and provided in a warlike Manner, with Guns and other Arms, as well Offensive as Defensive. And the said Thomas Vaughan, then and there, being aboard the said Ship of War, called the Loyal Clencarty, assembled with the other false Rebels and Traytors as aforesaid, maliciously, wickedly and traiterously sailed a Cruising to several maritime Places, with the aforesaid Ship of War, called the Loyal Clencarty, with an Intent to take, spoil, and carry away the Ships, Goods, and Money, of our said Lord the King, and his Subjects, by Force and Arms, upon the high and open Seas, within the Jurisdiction aforesaid; against the Duty of his Allegiance, the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignities; and likewise against the Form of a Statute in this Case made and provided.

Thomas Noden, } Jurors.
Samuel Oldham, }

Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and upon this Arraignment he hath pleaded not guilty; and for his Trial he hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether he be guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty. If you find him guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since. If you find him guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty. If you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Whitaker. May it please you, my Lord, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar, Thomas Vaughan, stands indicted for High Treason; That whereas on the 9th of July, there was a War between his Majesty the King of England, and Lewis the French King; amongst other Warlike Preparations that the French King did make, he did set forth a Ship called the Loyal Clencarty; That the Prisoner at the Bar, as a false Traitor, did lift himself aboard this Ship; and on the High-Seas, about eleven Leagues from Deal, did traiterously aid the King's Enemies, to take the King's Ships. This is said to be against the Duty of his Allegiance, and the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. He stands further indicted, for that he, the said Thomas Vaughan, with several other false Traytors, did levy War, and arm themselves with Arms, Offensive and Defensive, and was cruising on the High-Seas, off of Deal, with an Intent to take the King's Ships, and to kill and destroy the King's Subjects, against the Duty of his Allegiance, and the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Indictment he has pleaded not guilty. We shall call our Witnesses, and prove the Fact, and doubt not but you will do your Duty.

Dr. Littleton. Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Indictment opened, as also what Sort of Crime the Prisoner at the Bar stands charged with, viz. That he being a Subject of the Crown of England, has, together with his Accomplices, armed himself in a military Way, to murder and destroy his Fellow-Subjects, and as much as in him lay, to ruin his native Country, by ruining the Trade and Traffick, which is the great Support and Riches of the Nation. And that this Crime might be consummate, he, with his Accomplices, has done what in him lay, to dethrone and dispossess his sacred Majesty; as well knowing it was in vain to expect to make the Nation unhappy, as long as we enjoy so great and good a Prince. So that you are to look on the Prisoner as an Enemy and Traitor to his own Country; and not only so, but as one of the worst and most dangerous Enemies; since he being a Subject of these Islands, was the better able to spy out our Weaknesses and Defects, and thereby to do us the greater Mischief. It is not to be expressed what Ruin and Desolation it would have caused to this Nation, had this Man and his Accomplices brought their wicked Intentions to effect. And all this was done to aid and assist the grand Enemy of Christianity, and of our own Country in particular, the French King. Therefore as you are Lovers of your King and Country, and your Fellow-Subjects, whom the Prisoner and his Accomplices would have destroyed; I am sure you will take Care to do the Nation Justice, and that he be brought to condign Punishment. Gentlemen, There is one Thing further that I must not omit, viz. That the Prisoner at the Bar being in Custody for these very Crimes about a Twelve-month since, did not think fit to trust to his Innocency, nor to his pretended French Extraction, but the Day before he was to be tried, he thought fit to break Prison, withdraw from Justice, and run his Country: Which though not a Confession and full Proof, yet is a great Evidence of his Guilt.

* Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar, Thomas Vaughan, stands indicted for two Sorts of Treason: The one is for levying War against the King, the other is for aiding and abetting the King's Enemies. And to prove the first, the levying of War, we shall prove that he was a Captain of a French Ship, call'd the Granado, of St. Maloes; and that with that Ship he took and carried away many of his Majesty's Subjects, and took several Merchant Ships, and carried them to France. We shall likewise prove that he was Captain of another French Ship, called the Loyal Clencarty, with which he was cruising off of Deal, where we had several Ships lying at the same Time: And there he being on board the said Ship Clencarty, was taken Prisoner, with a Commission, by which he was constituted Captain of the Loyal Clencarty, under the Hand of Lewis the French King.

And to prove him aiding and abetting to the King's Enemies, we shall prove against him this particular Fact; That he and his Accomplices did in the Year 1692, come to London, and went to Tower-Wharf, to enquire what Vessels were ready to go down the River; and there was one laden with Piece-Goods, and he put himself, and several other of his Accomplices into this Vessel, to go down the River; but they had contrived the Matter, and brought it so to pass, that they fell on those Men who had the Government of the Ship, and carried away this Vessel to France. Now if this be true, the Prisoner is certainly guilty of aiding the King's Enemies: And to prove he was guilty of this, we will prove to you, that even in France, where he was at perfect Liberty, he owned he was the Contriver of all this, and that he had a thousand Pound for his Share of what was taken from our Merchants. If we prove these two Facts against him, I doubt not but you will find him Guilty. We will call our Witnesses.

Cl. of Arr. T. Eglington, Rich. Crouch, Samuel Oldham, John Bub, — Noden. (Who appeared, and were sworn.)

T. Vaughan. With Submission to your Lordships, and the honourable Bench, I beg that they may be put asunder, out of hearing of one another.

L. C. J. Let it be so, tho' you cannot insist upon it as your Right, but only a Favour that we may grant.

Mr. Cowper. Set up Richard Crouch. Is your Name Richard Crouch?

R. Crouch. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Cowper. Give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of the Ship Coventry taking of the Clencarty, and what you know concerning the Prisoner at the Bar in taking of her.

R. Crouch. We weighed our Anchor about Four a Clock.

Mr. Cowper. Where were you?

R. Crouch. At the Nore.

Mr. Cowper. In what Ship?

R. Crouch. The Coventry. After we had been under Sail a matter of an Hour, we came to an Anchor with a little Wind; so, Sir, this Thomas Vaughan met with a Couple of Pinks, they were small Vessels, that he designed to take; but he saw us, and so lay by all Night.

Mr. Cowper. Who lay by?

R. Crouch. Thomas Vaughan, the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Cowper. In what Vessel was he?

R. Crouch. In a Two-and-twenty-Oar Barge; he lay by at the Gunfleet: The next Morning we weighed Anchor at Day-light; we saw him, and chased after him; and we made them, and he made us; and we made what haste we could, and coming up, we fired a Gun at him, and then we fir'd another, and then we went ashore.

Mr. Cowper. What, do you mean that he run his Vessel on the Sands?

R. Crouch. Yes, and then we fired another Gun at him, and then he got off again; and then we fired another Gun, and could not bring him to, and then he got off the Sands again; and when we came up to him, we manned our Long-boat, and Pinnace, and Barge, and had him at last. When he came on Board, he said, I cannot deny but I am an Irishman, and that my Design was to burn the Ships at the Nore.

Mr. Cowper. Did he himself confess it?

R. Crouch. Yes, he did; that is the Man, I know him well enough.

L. C. J. When you took him, in what Ship was you?

R. Crouch. In the Coventry.

L. C. J. Out of what Ship was he taken?

R. Crouch. The Two-and-twenty-Oar Barge.

L. C. J. What Ship did he belong to?

R. Crouch. I reckon it was my Lord Barclay's Barge.

L. C. J. Who did it belong to then?

R. Crouch. To the King of France.

L. C. J. What Company was there in her? How many Men had she aboard?

R. Crouch. About five and twenty Hands.

Mr. Cowper. Did you ever hear him say any thing of a Commission he had?

R. Crouch. I heard he had a French Commission, but I did not see it.

Mr. Cowper. Did you hear him say any thing of it?

R. Crouch. No.

Mr. Cowper. But he told you his Design was to burn the Ships at the Nore?

R. Crouch. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. What Ships?

R. Crouch. The English Ships; there were several Ships there then.

L. C. J. Were there no Frenchmen aboard the Barge?

R. Crouch. No, that I can tell.

Mr. Lechmere. From whence did he come, from England, or France?

R. Crouch. From Calais in France.

L. C. J. Pristhee hear me, This Two-and-twenty-Oar Barge, did it belong to any other Ship?

R. Crouch. No, not that I can tell.

L. C. J. Did he call that Vessel the Loyal Clencarty?

R. Crouch. Yes, my Lord.

Then Edmund Courtney was called.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Courtney, pray tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of the going away of a Custom-House Boat?

Ed. Courtney. I will tell you, if you please.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, I think they ought not to examine to that, because it is not laid in the Indictment. The carrying away of the Custom-House Barge is not mentioned in the Indictment; and by the new Act for regulating Trials in Cases of Treason, no Evidence is to be admitted or given of any Overt-Act, that is not expressly laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Nothing else? Suppose a Man be indicted for levying War against the King, or adhering to the King's Enemies, can't they prove any Act that makes out a levying of War, or an Adherence to the King's Enemy?

Mr. Phipps. With Submission, not by that Act, my Lord, unless it be laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Levying of War is the Treason; may they not prove that levying of War, without being confined to any special or particular Act?

Mr. Phipps. With Submission, by the 25th of Edward III. levying of War, as well as imagining the Death of the King, must have the Overt-Acts, that are to prove it, express'd in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Levying of War is an Overt-Act.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Business of Overt-Acts is, where the compassing and imagining the King's Death is a Crime in Question; and this must be discovered by Overt-Acts. But if Treason be falsifying of the King's Money, this is Treason; but there can be no Overt-Act of that, for that is an Overt-Act it self; but there must be an Overt-Act to prove the compassing and imagining the Death of the King, and in no other Sort of Treason.

L. C. J. Levying of War, that is an Overt-Act; so is adhering to the King's Enemies. Now compassing and imagining the Death of the King is not an Overt-Act in it self, but is a secret Imagination in the Mind, and a Purpose in the Heart; but there must be external Acts to discover that Imagination and Purpose.

Mr. Phipps. What is the Meaning of the new Act then, that there shall be no Evidence of any Overt-Act, but what is laid in the Indictment?

L. C. J. What Overt-Acts are there in Clipping and Coining?

Mr. Phipps. That is not within the new Act of Parliament.

L. C. J. That is most true; the one is excepted, the other is not comprehended: But the Question is upon the Statute of 25 Ed. III. to which the late Act doth refer. Now proving an Adherence to the King's Enemy, is proving an Overt-Act. Suppose it be the killing of the Chancellor, or Treasurer, or Judge in the Execution of his Office, what Overt-Acts will you have then? Adhering to the King's Enemies, is a Treason that consists in doing an Overt-Act.

Mr. Phipps. Yes, my Lord, I take it that it is; for the new Act, by saying, that no Evidence shall be admitted of any Overt-Act, that is not expressly laid in the Indictment, must be intended of such Treasons, of which by Law Overt-Acts ought to be laid. Now the killing of the Chancellor, or Treasurer, or Judge in the Execution of his Office, are not such Treasons of which it was necessary to lay any Overt-Acts in the Indictment, and so not within the Meaning of this new Law. But levying War, and adhering to the King's Enemies, which are the Treasons in this Indictment, must by the express Purview of 25 Ed. III. be proved by Overt-Acts, which are to be alledged in the Indictment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The new Act does not alter the Law in this Particular; what was Law before, is Law now; it leaves the Overt-Acts as they were before; and it says not that an Overt-Act need to be express'd, where it was not needful before. Now if a Man be indicted for compassing the Death of a private Person, there ought to be some Overt-Act to prove his Design; but if there be an Indictment for Murder, there needs no other Overt-Act to prove it, but the Murder it self.

L. C. J. But the Force of the Objection lies in this, viz. To say a Man levied War, or adhered to the King's Enemies, is no good Indictment; but it is necessary to alledge in what manner he levied War, or adhered to the King's Enemies; as that he appeared in such a warlike manner, or did adhere to and assist the King's Enemies, by joining Forces with them, or otherwise assisting them, or confederating with them; that must be specified. But if you indict a Man generally for adhering to the King's Enemies, and not say how and in what manner he did adhere to them, that is not a good Indictment; therefore, if you particularize what Enemies, and how and in what manner he adher'd to them, no Evidence can be given of any other kind of Adherence, but that which is so specified in the Indictment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we must put all our Evidence into the Indictment.

Mr. Phipps. So you must, as to the Overt-Acts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That will be the same thing as to put in all our Evidence, if we must give Evidence of no Overt-Act but what is express'd in the Indictment. But I do not take it, that the Act requires all Overt-Acts to be put in the Indictment.

Mr. Phipps. The Act says so. Suppose you had left out the Overt-Act, would the Indictment have been good?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We did not intend to put in all the Overt-Acts, but only what related to that Part of the Treason.

Mr. Phipps. The Treason must be proved by Overt-Acts, and the Overt-Acts that prove the Treason must be mentioned in the Indictment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What! the Overt-Acts of the Treasons before mentioned, as counterfeiting the King's Money, and the like, are all to be mentioned?

L. C. J. Consider, if you can make that a good Indictment, to say, that the Prisoner adhered to the King's Enemies, without mentioning any Overt-Acts to manifest such an Adherence, then your Answer to Mr. Phipps is full; but if it be not a good Indictment, without alledging particular Acts of Adherence, then it necessarily follows, that if Particulars are alledged, and you do not prove them as is alledged, you have failed in the Indictment, and so his Objection will lie hard upon you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we framed our Indictment according to the Letter of the Statute.

L. C. J. In compassing the Death of the King, you must shew how that is manifested by the Overt-Acts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But compassing and imagining must be discovered by some Overt-Acts.

L. C. J. Treby. This is a Doubt I have often thought of; I thought it most natural that the Word Overt-Act should relate to the first Article, viz. compassing and imagining of the King's Death: For Overt-Act seems to be opposed to something of a contrary Nature: Act is opposed properly to Thought, Overt is properly opposed to secret. And that Sort of Treason consisting in secret Thought and internal Purpose, cannot be known, tried, and judged of, without being disclosed and manifested by some external open Act. Wherefore it is pertinent and reasonable, in order to attain a Man of such Treason, that the Indictment should charge and set forth the Act, as well as the Thought. And so it hath been used to be done.

But such Order or Manner doth not seem so natural or necessary, in framing Indictments for other Treasons, where the Treason consists in visible or discernible Facts; as, levying War, &c.

Nevertheless, I think an Overt-Act ought to be alledged in an Indictment of Treason for adhering to the King's Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. And the Overt-Act, or Acts, in this Case, ought to be the particular Actions, Means, or Manner by which the Aid and Comfort was given.

My Lord Coke declares his Opinion to this Purpose. His Words (which I read out of his Book here) are these: The Composition and Connection of the Words are to be observed, viz. [thereof be attainted by Overt-Deed.] This, says he, relates to the several and distinct Treasons, before express'd, and especially to the compassing and imagining of the Death of the King, &c. for that it is secret in the Heart, &c. Now the Articles of Treason, before express'd in the Statute of 25 Ed. III. are four. 1, Compassing, &c. 2, Violating the Queen, &c.

3. Levying War, and 4. This of Adhering, &c. (And yet it is hardly possible to set forth any Overt-Act concerning the second, otherwise than the Words of the Statute, that Article expressing so particular a Fact.)

I do observe also, that these Words [Being thereof attainted by Overt Fact] do, in this Statute, immediately follow this Article of Adhering, &c. And it would be a great Violence to construe them to refer to the first Article only, and not to this last, to which they are thus connected. If they are to be restrained to a single Article, it were more agreeable to the strict Rules of Construing, to refer them to this of Adhering only.

L. C. J. That which I insist on is this, whether the Indictment would be good, without expressing the special Overt-Act. If it be, then this is a Surplusage, and we are not confin'd to it; but if it be not a good Indictment without expressing it, then we are confin'd to it.

Mr. Phipps. I believe Mr. Solicitor never saw an Indictment of this kind, without an Overt-Act laid in it.

L. C. J. Can you prove the Facts laid in the Indictment? For certainly the Indictment, without mentioning particular Acts of Adherence, would not be good.

Mr. Cowper. Yes, my Lord; and as to the Evidence before you, we would only offer this; whether in this Case, if the Indictment were laid generally, for adhering to the King's Enemies in one Place, and in another Place levying of War, and nothing more particular, it would be good: I doubt it would not. But when there is laid a particular Act of Adhering, we may give in Evidence Matter to strengthen the direct Proof of that particular Act of Adhering to the King's Enemies, though that Matter be not specially laid in the Indictment: For the Act goes only to this, that the Prisoner shall not be convicted, unless you prove against him the Overt-Acts specially laid in the Indictment; but whether it shall not be heard, to make the other Overt-Act which is laid, the more probable? Now we have laid a special Overt-Act in the Indictment; and we have produced Evidence of it, and we would produce likewise collateral Evidence, to induce a firmer Belief of that special Overt-Act, by shewing you that he hath made it his Practice, during the War, to aid and assist the King's Enemies: But if the Jury do not find him guilty of the special Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment, they cannot find him guilty by the Proof of any other Overt Act not laid in the Indictment. But if we prove he has made this his Practice, in other Instances, during the War, whether that Proof shall not be received?

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, I desire the Act may be read. It expressly contradicts what Mr. Cowper says; for it says, That no Evidence shall be given in the Overt-Act, that is not expressly laid in the Indictment. [The Act was read.]

L. C. J. That is, you may give Evidence of an Overt-Act, that is not in the Indictment, if it conduce to prove one that is in it. And if consulting to kill the King, or raise a Rebellion, is laid in the Indictment, you may give in Evidence an acting in Pursuance of a Consult, that is an Evidence that they agreed to do it; though that doing of the Thing is, of it self, another Overt-Act, but it tends to prove the Act laid in the Indictment.

Mr. Phipps. The Overt-Act laid in this Indictment, is his cruising in the Clencarty; and this Overt-Act you would prove, is no Evidence of that, nor relates to it, but it is a distinct Overt-Act of it self.

L. C. J. You cannot give Evidence of a distinct Act, that has no Relation to the Overt-Act mentioned in the Indictment, though it shall conduce to prove the same Species of Treason.

Mr. Cowper. We would apply this Proof to the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Any thing that has a direct Tendency to it, you may prove.

Mr. Cowper. We have laid the Overt-Act, that he did voluntarily put himself on Board this Vessel of the French King, the Loyal Clencarty, and did go to Sea in her, and cruise, with a Design to take the Ships of the King of England, and his Subjects. Now Part of the Overt-Act, is his Intention, in the Act of Cruising; we do not charge him with taking one Ship; so that his Intention is a Member of the Overt-Act: and it must be proved, to make his Cruising criminal, that he design'd to take the Ships of the King of England. Now we think it a proper Intention, to shew, that during this War, before and after the Time of the Treason laid in the Indictment, he was a Cruiser upon, and Taker of the King's Ships, and this fortifies the direct Proof given of the Intention.

L. C. J. I cannot agree to that, because you go not about to prove what he did in the Vessel call'd the Loyal Clencarty; but that he had an Intention to commit Depredation on the King's Subjects: So he might, but in another Ship. Now, because a Man has a Design to commit Depredation on the King's Subjects in one Ship, does that prove he had an Intention to do it in another?

Mr. Phipps. He was cruising in the Clencarty, that is the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment; and the Overt-Act you would produce, is his being in another Vessel.

L. C. J. Go on, and shew what he did in the Clencarty. You the Prisoner, will you ask this Man any Questions?

Mr. Phipps. Crouch, you said, that the Prisoner did say he could not deny but he was an Irishman; how came you to talk about it?

R. Crouch. He said, I cannot deny but I am an Irishman.

L. C. J. Did he say he was an Irishman? What were the Words he used?

R. Crouch. He told the Lieutenant he was an Irishman.

Mr. Phipps. What Discourse was there? How came he to say that?

R. Crouch. I went by only, and heard the Words spoken to the Lieutenant.

L. C. J. Did he speak English?

R. Crouch. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. If he spoke English, that is some Evidence he is an Englishman, though the contrary may be proved by him.

T. Vaughan. That would no more prove me an Englishman, than if an Englishman were in France, and could speak French, would prove him a Frenchman, because he could speak French.

L. C. J. You shall be heard by and by to say what you will on your own Behalf.

Mr. Phipps. Were there any Frenchmen on board the Clencarty?

R. Crouch. No, Sir.

Mr. Phipps. Mr. Vaughan, will you ask him any Questions your self?

Mr. Cowper. Call T. Noden.

T. Vaughan. How did you know that there were no Frenchmen aboard? Did I address my self to you when I came aboard?

R. Crouch. No, Sir.

T. Vaughan. Did I not address my self to the Captain when I came aboard? How came I to tell you I was an Irishman?

R. Crouch. They were all Scotchmen, Englishmen, and Irishmen.

Mr. Phipps. Mr. Vaughan, you need not take up the Time of the Court about that Matter.

Mr. Cowper. You may go on.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Prisoner own that he acted by the French King's Commission? Did you know any thing of his having a French Commission?

R. Crouch. Yes, I heard he had one, but I did not see it; but I heard so by the Company.

L. C. J. Were there any Frenchmen aboard?

R. Crouch. No, not that I know of. They were Dutchmen, and Englishmen, and Scotchmen, and Irishmen.

Mr. Cowper. Call T. Noden. (Who appeared and was sworn.) Do you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of taking the Vessel, call'd the Two-and-twenty-Oar Barge?

T. Noden. Last Year, about June or July, to the best of my Remembrance, I belong'd to his Majesty's Ship the Coventry, and we took the Two-and-twenty-Oar Barge.

L. C. J. How many Dutchmen were aboard?

T. Noden. I do not know of above one.

L. C. J. Treby. What were the rest? Were there any Frenchmen?

T. Noden. Yes, there were several Frenchmen aboard. I belong'd to the Coventry; and as we were sailing by the Nore, and the Gunfleet, our Captain spy'd a small Vessel sailing by the Sands, and he suppos'd her to be a French Privateer, and he fir'd a Gun to make them bring to, and they did not obey; and at last fir'd a Gun, Shot and all, and they would not come to. Then the Captain order'd to man the Boat, and row after them: So the Barge, and Pinnace, and Long-boat were mann'd, and they came pretty near them. This Barge we took, was aground also; and they got her afloat, and she run aground again: And as they were aground, most of them out of the Boat, our Long-boat struck aground, and waded after them near half a League; and when we came to the Barge, there was this Captain Vaughan, and two or three and twenty more; and there was two Dutchmen, and, as I apprehended, some Frenchmen. There was in her a Blunderbuss, and small Arms, and a considerable Quantity of Hand-Granadoes.

L. C. J. What Vessel was you aboard?

T. Noden. The Coventry.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Countryman did Captain Vaughan say he was?

T. Noden. I did not hear any thing of it. Our Captain examin'd the Dutchmen what Countryman the Commander was, and he said he was an Irishman; but I did not hear it my self. When Captain Vaughan was brought aboard the Coventry, I was put aboard the Prize we had taken.

Mr. Cowper. Had you any Discourse with Captain Vaughan?

T. Noden. No.

L. C. J. Did they endeavour to take your Ship?

T. Noden. No, but endeavoured to get away from us.

L. C. J. What Guns or Ammunition had they?

T. Noden. I cannot tell particularly; there was some Canvass Bags, every Man had a Carteridge Bag, and there were some Hand-Granadoes.

Mr. Whitaker. What Fire-Arms had they?

T. Noden. I cannot say how many; but they had Muskets, and Pistols, and two Blunderbusses.

Mr. Cowper. Did you understand whence this Ship, the Loyal Clencarty, came?

T. Noden. The Dutchmen said they came from Calais. As near as I can guess, we spy'd them about Eleven a Clock, and we weigh'd Anchor in the Afternoon, on Sabbath-day, and they took us to be a light Collier, and endeavour'd to board us, as the Dutchman said; but when they knew what we were, they endeavour'd to escape from us.

Mr. Cowper. Call Sam. Oldbam. (Who appeared and was sworn.) Mr. Oldbam, was you aboard the Coventry, when she took the Ship called the Clencarty?

Sam. Oldbam. Yes, I was.

Mr. Cowper. Pray give an Account what you observed of the Prisoner T. Vaughan then?

Sam. Oldbam. We weigh'd our Anchor first at the Buoy and Nore; so we saw a Prize in the Morning; the Captain said it was a Prize, and we made Sail after him, and they ran on the Goodwin Sands: And the Captain seeing the Barge run aground, we fir'd at her to bring her to; we fir'd a second, and she would not come to, but ran aground again. When she was aground, by the Captain's Order, we mann'd our Boats, and out we went after her.

Mr. Cowper. Did you take her?

Sam. Oldbam. We went, and our Long-boat ran aground; I was in the Long-boat, and we waded, I believe, a Mile and half after her.

L. C. J. What Frenchmen were aboard?

Sam. Oldbam. I cannot justly say whether there were any.

L. C. J. Were there any?

Sam. Oldbam. I think one or two.

Mr. Cowper. Were there any Dunkirkers or Walloons aboard?

Sam. Oldbam. There was a Dutchman, who they call'd a Fleming; and I discours'd him.

L. C. J. How many outlandish Men were there aboard? Was there a Dozen, or how many?

Sam. Oldbam. I cannot say the Quantity.

Mr. Cowper. Was there more than two or three?

Sam. Oldbam. Yes, more than two or three.

L. C. J. What, Foreigners?

Sam. Oldbam. Yes. And there were two Englishmen.

Mr. Cowper. What did you observe of the Prisoner at the Bar, at the taking of the Ship?

Sam. Oldbam. I did not come aboard along with the Prisoner, but with his Man; and his Man said he was an Irishman, and that he was Commander of the Boat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was their Design in that Ship Clencarty?

Sam. Oldbam. I cannot tell that.

Mr.

Mr. Cowper. Did they resist, in their being taken?

Sam. Oldbam. I cannot tell that; I saw no Arms.

M. Cowper. You were in the Action; was there any Resistance made?

Sam. Oldbam. I saw no Resistance; they offered to run, they were aground once, and got off again.

Mr. Phipps. You say there were Foreigners; what Countrymen did you believe those Foreigners to be?

Sam. Oldbam. I cannot justly say, I believe Dutchmen.

L. C. J. How many Dutchmen were there?

Sam. Oldbam. I cannot say.

Dr. Oldisb. But you said there were some two or three Frenchmen, and that they spoke French; do you understand French?

Sam. Oldbam. No, Sir.

Dr. Oldisb. Then how do you know they were Frenchmen, and spoke French?

Sam. Oldbam. They said they were; they did not speak English; several of the Ship's Company said they were French.

L. C. J. If they were all Dutchmen, and appear in a hostile Manner against the King of England's Subjects, they are Enemies, tho' we are in League with Holland, and the rest of the Seven Provinces.

Mr. Phipps. The Indictment runs, That the French King, quandam Naviculam vocat' The Loyal Clencarty, cum quamplurimis Subditis Gallicis, Inimicis Dom. Regis nunc, ad numerum quindecim Personarum, replet' preparavit.

L. C. J. Suppose it doth?

Mr. Phipps. It is Subditis Gallicis, my Lord.

L. C. J. They will be Subjects in that Matter, if they act under his Commission: They are Enemies to the King of England, and they have made themselves the French King's Subjects by that Act.

Mr. Phipps. It appears not that they are Frenchmen, my Lord.

L. C. J. If Dutchmen turn Rebels to the State, and take Pay of the French King, they are under the French King's Command, and so are his Subjects. Will you make them Pirates, when they act under the Commission of a Sovereign Prince? They are then Subditi to him, and so Inimici to us.

Mr. Phipps. It does not take away their Allegiance to their lawful Prince. They may go to the French King, and serve him; yet that does not transfer their Allegiance from their lawful Prince to the French King, and make them his Subjects. But however, to make them Subjects within this Indictment, they must be Gallici Subditi; so they must be Frenchmen as well as Subjects.

L. C. J. Acting by Vertue of a Commission from the French King, will excuse them from being Pirates, tho' not from being Traitors to their own State; but to all other Princes and States against whom they do any Acts of Hostility, they are Enemies: And their serving under the French King's Commission, makes them his Subjects as to all others but their own Prince or State. And tho' they be not Frenchmen, yet they are Gallici Subditi; for it's the French Subjection that makes them to be Gallici Subditi.

Mr. Phipps. Pray, my Lord, suppose a Subject of Spain should go over to the French, and fight against England; I take it, he may be termed an Enemy of the King of England, tho' his Prince be in League with ours; but, with Submission, he cannot properly be said to be a Subject of the French King: For suppose an Indictment of Treason against a Foreigner, should say, that he being a Subject, did commit Treason; if it be proved he is not a Subject, with Submission, he must be acquitted.

Mr. Cowper. There is a local Allegiance while he is in the Country, or Fleets, or Armies of the French King.

L. C. J. Dutchmen may be Enemies, notwithstanding their State is in Amity with us, if they act as Enemies.

Mr. Cowper. Call R. Bub. (He was sworn.) Was you aboard the Coventry, when she took the Clencarty?

R. Bub. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Cowper. Give an Account what you know of the Prisoner, Tho. Vaughan, at the Taking of that Ship.

R. Bub. We came aboard the Coventry, and were at the Nore at Anchor; our Pennant was taken down to be mended. So in the Night Captain Vaughan, with his Two-and-twenty-Oar Barge, rounded us two or three times. In the Morning we weigh'd Anchor, and fell down, in order to go to the Downs; and we came up with them, and fir'd at Captain Vaughan, and he would not bring to. With that, our Captain order'd to have the Barge, and Pinnace, and Long-boat to be mann'd, to go after him. They follow'd him, and at last came up with him, and came up pretty near; but could not come so near with the Long-boat, but were fain to wade up to the Middle a Mile and a half. We hoisted our Colours, in order to fight them, and bore down still upon them, and they would not fight our Men: And we took them out; and when they came aboard, the Englishman that was a Pilot was to have his Freedom, to pilot them up the River. He confes'd to the Captain, that Captain Vaughan intended to burn the Ships in the Harbour: And the next Day after the Pilot had confessed it, Captain Vaughan himself confessed it on the Deck, that he came over with that Design.

Mr. Cowper. Who did he confess it to?

R. Bub. To the Boatwain and Gunner, as he was on the Deck, on the Larboard-Side; that he came on purpose to burn the Shipping in the Harbour.

L. C. J. Did he confess that himself?

R. Bub. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Whereabout was this, at the Buoy in the Nore?

R. Bub. In the Downs, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did the Ships lie that were to be burn'd?

R. Bub. At Sheerneys.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He own'd himself to be an Irishman, did he not?

R. Bub. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. And that he came from Calais?

R. Bub. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Had you any Discourse with him about a Commission?

R. Bub. No. But our Lieutenant and Captain had, but it was not in my Hearing; I will not speak further than I heard, and what I can justify.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will you ask him any Questions?

Mr. Phipps. No.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Mr. Jo. Crittenden, Marshal of Dover-Castle, (who was sworn.) Mr. Crittenden, Pray what did you hear the Prisoner at the Bar confess of his Design in coming to England?

Mr. Crittenden. I did not hear him say any thing of his Design.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he confess?

Mr. Crittenden. He confess'd he was an Irishman.

Mr. Whitaker. Upon what Occasion did he confess that?

Mr. Crittenden. When I enter'd him into my Book, I ask'd him what Countryman he was.

Mr. Cowper. What are you?

Mr. Crittenden. I am the Marshal of Dover-Castle.

Mr. Cowper. By what Name did he order you to enter him?

Mr. Crittenden. Thomas Vaughan, an Irishman.

L. C. J. Upon what Account did you enter him?

Mr. Crittenden. As a Prisoner.

Mr. Cowper. Did he speak any thing of a Commission?

Mr. Crittenden. I did not hear him say any thing of that.

Mr. Phipps. Have you your Book here?

Mr. Crittenden. Yes, Sir.

Dr. Oldish. Was he not in Drink when he said so?

Mr. Crittenden. I believe he was not very sober, indeed.

Mr. Phipps. Did you ever after hear him say he was an Irishman?

Mr. Crittenden. The next Day he deny'd it.

Mr. Cowper. When he had consider'd the Danger of it.

Mr. Crittenden. The next Day he was examin'd by some of the Justices of the Peace.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was you by when he was examined by the Justices?

Mr. Crittenden. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he then say?

Mr. Crittenden. Then he said he was of Martenico.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Set up Mr. Bullock (who was sworn.) Mr. Bullock, Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Mr. Bullock. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray what have you heard him say of his Design that he came into England for?

Mr. Bullock. He came to Dover about the 14th of July, 1695, as I remember: I went with several others, who were brought by the Captain of the Coventry, and the Lieutenant, and some others: And when we came thither, he there own'd himself an Irishman; but when he went the next Day to be examin'd, he said he was of Martenico. He told me he had that Barge from the Duke of Bulloign, and came on the Coast, and was chas'd into the Flatts, where they took him.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him say he had any Commission from the French King?

Mr. Bullock. I know nothing of that; it was late, and we did not examine him then; but the next Day, when he came to be examined, he said he was of Martenico.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he say his Design was?

Mr. Bullock. He said, that seeing the Boat at Bulloign, he bought it of the Duke of Bulloign; and the Duke ask'd him what he would do with her? And he said, he would fit her up, and go and take a Ship at Sea, that is, upon our Coasts.

Mr. Phipps. We are in your Lordship's Judgment, whether we need give any Evidence; for we think they have not proved their Indictment: For the Indictment sets forth, That the French King fitted out the Loyal Clencarty, of which Thomas Vaughan was Commander; and that very many Frenchmen, Subjects of the French King, were put on board. Now the first Witness swears, there were no Frenchmen; and another swears there was one or two; another, that they were Foreigners; but does not believe they were Frenchmen. So there is no Proof of that Part of the Indictment; nor is there any Proof that he was Captain of the Loyal Clencarty: So that none can say, it is the same Vessel mention'd in the Indictment. Nor is any Act of Hostility proved; for all the Witnesses say, that Vaughan never pretended to attack them, but run from them. So that all they depend on, to support the Indictment, is to prove that he had a Design to burn the Ships at Sbeerness; which will not serve their Turn; for the Words of the Indictment are, ad prædandum super altum Mare. Now Sbeerness is not super altum Mare, but infra Corpus Comitatus; and then not within the Indictment.

VOL. V.

Mr. Cowper. The Words Ships at Sbeerness, do not imply, that the Ships lay within the Town of Sbeerness, but off of Sbeerness, which is altum Mare.

Mr. Phipps. Then it is not in your Indictment; for that says, at Sbeerness.

Mr. Cowper. No, off of Sbeerness.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is no Contradiction, to say the Sea is within Part of a County.

Mr. Phipps. The Indictment says at Sbeerness.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Off of Sbeerness is the high Sea.

Mr. Phipps. Sbeerness is not the Buoy in the Nore. Then you must prove he was Captain at this Time: For the Indictment says, Ad tunc fuit Capitaneus & Miles.

L. C. J. One Overt-Act of adhering to the King's Enemies, is, that he put himself as a Soldier on board the Ship.

Mr. Phipps. You will make one Part agree with another, That the French King did set out a Ship, and gave him a Commission to be Captain of her.

L. C. J. The Witnesses have prov'd he acted as a Captain.

Mr. Phipps. He was taken; and sure, if he was taken, he must have his Commission with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Examine the Marshal, he took an Account of him: And by Direction of Mr. Vaughan himself, he enter'd him as Captain; and he enter'd several Men in the Ship as Frenchmen, by their own Direction. (Mr. Crittenden was call'd.) Mr. Crittenden have you got your Book in which you made the Entry?

Mr. Crittenden. Yes, I have it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. By whose Order did you enter them?

Mr. Crittenden. By the Direction of Captain Vaughan, the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Cowper. How did you know he was a Captain?

Mr. Crittenden. Because he told me he was Captain, and I enter'd him as such in my Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Captain of what?

Mr. Crittenden. The Loyal Clencarty.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray read your Entry in your Book.

Mr. Crittenden. Thomas Vaughan, Captain, Irishman, the 14th of July, 1695; and so of all the rest of the Ship's Crew.

Mr. J. Turton. Did you write these in the Presence of Captain Vaughan?

E

Mr.

Mr. Crittenden. Yes, in the same Room where he was.

Mr. Phipps. Did you write it by his Direction?

Mr. Crittenden. For his own Part, by his Direction; and for the rest, by their Direction.

L. C. J. Take all the Circumstances together, it is great Evidence, considering what they were about, and what Vessel they had. Mr. Crittenden, can you tell how many Frenchmen were there?

Mr. Crittenden. I will tell you presently. (He counts them in his Book.) There were thirteen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Captain Vaughan hear any of them bid you enter them as Frenchmen?

Mr. Crittenden. I cannot be positive in that, I suppose he did; he was in the same Room.

L. C. J. Do you expect Witnesses from France, to testify where they were born and christen'd?

Mr. Phipps. One Witness says there was not one Frenchman there.

L. C. J. Not to his Knowledge.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you know of his having a French Commission?

Mr. Bullock. I did not see it.

Mr. Whitaker. Did he own his having any French Commission?

Mr. Bullock. I cannot tell.

Mr. J. Turton. He own'd himself a Captain.

Mr. Phipps. He might be a Captain in another Ship, but not in this Ship; they ought to prove he was Captain at that Time, in that Ship, by the French King's Commission.

L. C. J. All the Witnesses say he acted as a Captain at that Time.

M. Cowper. He own'd himself the Captain of the Loyal Clencarty.

Mr. Bar. Powis. What can be plainer, than that he own'd himself Captain?

Dr. Oldish. This seems to me a very strange Proof, to be built only upon the Sayings of these Persons, that they were Frenchmen; and this to a Man who had no Authority to examine them, when it might have been easily prov'd in a regular Way, in Case they had been so; they might have been examined before a Magistrate, and thereby it would have appeared whether they were French or no. And 'twas absolutely necessary in this Case, because of the Contrariety of the Witnesses; for the first Witness said, there were no Frenchmen aboard; the next said there were two Frenchmen and a Dutchman; and Crittenden said, there were thirteen. Now how can these be reconciled, unless there had been a legal Examination of the Parties? But the Thing we would chiefly go on is this; I think they have fail'd in the Foundation of the Treason; that is, to prove the Prisoner a Subject of this Crown; neither is there the least Colour of Proof thereof. At Night he came to Mr. Crittenden, and is in Drink; there he says he is an Irishman: The next Morning, when he is examin'd before the Justices, then he comes in a kind of Judgment, and then such a Confession would be of Moment; but then he confesses himself to be a Frenchman of Martenico. Now, my Lord, what Credit is to be given to these Confessions; when before the Marshal he shall say, I am an Irishman, and the next Day, when he is on Examination, he declares himself a Frenchman; in one Confession he is in Drink, in the other sober? Now, my Lord, I say, what Proof is here? Here then the Foundation of the Treason fails: For the Indictment is, That he being a Subject of the King of England, levies War. Now, my Lord, if this Quality be not proved, all the rest of the Indictment falls to the Ground: For it is impossible for him to commit Treason, where he is not a Subject; because there can be no Violation of Allegiance. So that if he be a Frenchman, as he declared before the Justices, he cannot be guilty of Treason. So that here they have fail'd in the Foundation of all; that is, to prove him a Subject of England. And because they affirm him to be so, it lies on those that affirm it, to prove it. But, perhaps, now they will say, that these little Confessions of his will throw the Burden of Proof on him. By no Means; when here is a stronger Presumption on the other Side, a meer extrajudicial Saying to Seamen, that he is an Irishman, cannot ballance his Confession examined before the Justices, wherein he says he is a Frenchman; and so can never throw the Burden of Proof on him. Therefore it lies on them that assert this to prove it. But, my Lord, tho' it doth not lie on him, yet we will prove him to be a Frenchman, and born at Martenico, by those that were at the Christening of him, and have known him from Time to Time ever since. And because they say, he can speak English, if you please to examine him, you shall hear him speak natural French; so that that cannot prove him to be a natural Irishman.

Mr. Phipps. Such a Saying of a Foreigner will be of no great Weight; because, if a Man go into a foreign Country, he may say he is that Countryman to get the more Favour.

L. C. J. What, to hang himself?

Mr. Phipps. No, my Lord, a Man that comes into a strange Country, may very well think he shall find better Usage, by pretending to be of that Country, than by owning himself to be a Foreigner. But we will prove Vaughan to be a Frenchman. Call Robert French. (Then Robert French was sworn.) Mr. French, Pray give the Court and Jury an Account, whether you know Mr. Vaughan, the Prisoner at the Bar, and how long you have known him, and what Countryman you take him to be, and the Reason why.

Rob. French. I have known him this fourteen Years.

Mr. Phipps. Where did you see him then?

Rob. French. I saw him in Saint Christophers.

Mr. Phipps. Pray give an Account how you came to know him.

Rob. French. About sixteen Years ago I was at Mount-Surat, and I came to St. Christophers, and there I chanc'd to come into English Ground, among the Factors; and so they brought me to the French Ground; and coming there, I was in Company with several others that Night, and it happened I was told there was one Mr. Vaughan there; and I coming acquainted with him, he shew'd me this Youth (he was a Youth then :) He told me he was his Son, and recommended him to me, because he look'd on me to be a Man in Trust and Business.

Mr. Phipps. From that Time what has he been reputed?

Rob. French. A Sea-faring Man.

Mr. Phipps. But what Countryman?

Rob. French. To be born in Martenico.

Mr. Phipps. In whose Dominions is that?

Rob. French. In the French King's Dominion.

Mr. J. Turton. What Occasion had you to discourse of the Place of his Birth?

Rob. French. Because his Father was look'd upon to be a Frenchman.

Mr.

Mr. J. Turton. His Father was a Frenchman?

Rob. French. Yes, my Lord, and lived at Martenico.

Mr. Cowper. How old might he be at that Time?

Rob. French. About Fifteen or Sixteen.

Mr. Cowper. How came you to be talking of his Birth, and with whom?

Rob. French. One that was talking with me, told me, his Name was Vaughan, and that he was born there.

Mr. Cowper. What introduc'd this Discourse? How came he to tell you this, that he was born in that Place?

Rob. French. His Father told me so.

Mr. Cowper. You were talking of one Vaughan of his Name: How many were in Company when there was this Talk?

Rob. French. There were many of them.

Mr. Cowper. Name them.

Rob. French. It is so long ago I cannot remember them.

Mr. Cowper. Name as many as you can of them, as many as you do remember.

Rob. French. One Mr. Bodiken, a Factor.

Mr. Cowper. Who else?

Rob. French. Several others.

Mr. Cowper. You named one Vaughan before.

Rob. French. Yes, I did.

Mr. Cowper. But you had forgot him now.

Rob. French. No, there was one Vaughan.

L. C. J. Were there any more?

Rob. French. Yes, there was; I remember the Company that went along with me.

L. C. J. Who were they?

Rob. French. There were several Passengers that went over with me.

L. C. J. How came you to talk of this Man's Nativity?

Rob. French. Because his Father said, he had not been out of the Island in twenty Years; (At which the People laugh'd.)

Mr. Cowper. What Place was this Discourse in?

Rob. French. At St. Christophers.

Mr. Cowper. How did his Father's saying, he had not been out of that Island in twenty Years, prove his Son was born there?

Rob. French. Because he recommended him to me as a Sea faring Man.

Mr. Cowper. What is that a Reason of? What is that to his being born at Martenico?

Mr. J. Turton. What Countryman are you?

Rob. French. I am an Irishman born.

L. C. J. His Father acknowledg'd himself to be an Irishman born; Did he not?

Rob. French. No, my Lord, he did not say where he was born: I do not know.

Mr. J. Turton. Have you continu'd any Acquaintance with Mr. Vaughan. since? How long did you stay at St. Christophers?

Rob. French. I stay'd but four and twenty Hours, to take in Water.

L. C. J. How long was it after this, before you saw this Gentleman, Captain Vaughan?

Rob. French. I never saw him since, till I saw him in London. (Then the People laugh'd.)

L. C. J. Pray Gentlemen have Patience. How do you know now that this is the same Man, that you saw fourteen Years ago? For there must be a great Alteration in a Man in fourteen Years Time, from what was at that Time, being but fifteen Years of Age.

VOL. V.

Rob. French. I believe in my Conscience this is the Man.

L. C. J. Can you take it upon your Oath he is the Man?

Mr. Bar. Powis. In what Language had you the Discourse?

L. C. J. How long were you in Company with him and his Father?

Rob. French. I believe five or six Hours.

Mr. Bar. Powis. In what Language was this Discourse with his Father?

Rob. French. My Lord, he spoke English, a Sort of broken English.

L. C. J. Where do you live your self?

Rob. French. I live in Ireland.

L. C. J. How long have you lived there?

Rob. French. Nine or Ten Years.

L. C. J. Whereabout in Ireland?

Rob. French. In Connaught.

L. C. J. Nine or Ten Years?

Rob. French. Yes, my Lord.

Dr. Littleton. Did not Captain Vaughan, nor his Father speak Irish to you in that six Hours?

Rob. French. No, my Lord.

Mr. Justice Turton. How long have you been in England?

Rob. French. Not above two Months.

Mr. Justice Turton. Did you hear of Captain Vaughan being to be try'd?

Rob. French. No, my Lord.

Mr. Justice Turton. How did he come to hear of you then?

Rob. French. I heard he was in Town.

L. C. J. It is a strange Thing; you have a most admirable Memory, and Captain Vaughan has as good a Memory as you; that you should never have any Intercourse for fourteen Years, and yet should remember one another after so long a Time. It is a wonderful Thing too, that when he could not know you were in Town, yet he should call you a Witness on his Behalf; sure he must have the Spirit of Prophecy.

Rob. French. He did not send to me at all.

L. C. J. How did you come to be here then?

Rob. French. I will tell you. It was my Custom always to go and see Prisoners; and I heard there were Prisoners in Newgate; so I went to Newgate, and I met with one Dwall; and I ask'd him of another Gentleman that was there; and I went to the other Side by Chance, and I met with Captain Vaughan.

L. C. J. What was thy Design? Why didst thou visit Newgate?

Rob. French. Because it was my Custom, because it was an Act of Charity.

L. C. J. Did you go to Newgate out of Charity?

Rob. French. I went to see my Friend, and carried a Letter to him. I went out of Charity.

Mr. Phipps. You were in the West-Indies, upon the French Ground; don't they speak English on the French Ground, and French on the English Ground?

Rob. French. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. So they do here. Did you ever see Captain Vaughan before that Time?

Rob. French. No.

Mr. Whitaker. Did you visit lately any other Prisoners in Newgate, besides Captain Vaughan?

Rob. French. Yes.

Mr. Whitaker. Give their Names.

Rob. French. I have visited Mr. Noland, and another Gentleman that is with him; and I went into the House and drank with him there.

Mr. Whitaker. What is that other Gentleman's Name?

Rob. French. I do not remember his Name at present; but he is a Companion of Mr. Noland's.

Mr. Whitaker. Do you know him if you see him?

Rob. French. I, I would.

L. C. J. Treby. How long have you been in England?

Rob. French. But two Months.

L. C. J. Treby. Have you usually visited Prisoners in former Years?

Rob. French. My Lord, where-ever I have been, it was my Custom to do so.

L. C. J. Treby. But how doth it consist, that you, who are an Irishman, should come hither to visit Prisoners in Newgate?

Rob. French. I can prove under my Lord-Mayor of Dublin's Hand, that I came here upon Business; and I went to the Prison to visit the Prisoners for Charity-sake, and did bestow it according as I was able.

L. C. J. You had best stay there, and not go away; for we may have Occasion to ask you some Questions.

Mr. Cowper. Do you not use, out of Charity, to be Evidence for them?

Rob. French. No, never before in my Life.

Mr. Whitaker. What other Prisons have you visited, besides Newgate?

Rob. French. I did visit none.

L. C. J. Treby. Had you no Charity for other Prisons?

Mr. Bar. Powis. When you so visit Prisons, on what Account is it? Is it to give ghostly Advice?

Rob. French. Upon a charitable Account, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ghostly Advice and Charity.

Mr. Phipps. Where is Mr. Lefleur? (He did not appear.) Call Mr. Gold, (who appear'd.)

Cl. of Arr. That Man is attainted, but pardoned.

Mr. Phipps. Mr. Gold, how long have you known Captain Vaughan?

Mr. Gold. I never knew Mr. Vaughan, before I saw him in the Marshalsea.

Mr. Phipps. Is Monsieur Lefleur here? Is Mr. Deberty here? (Mr. Deberty appeared and was sworn.)

Mr. Phipps. Do you know Mr. Vaughan, the Prisoner at the Bar?

Mr. Deberty. Yes.

Mr. Phipps. How long have you known him?

Mr. Deberty. Five Years.

Mr. Phipps. What has he been reputed all along, since you have known him?

Mr. Deberty. A Frenchman.

Mr. Phipps. Did you know him in France?

Mr. Deberty. Yes, and he was reputed a Frenchman there.

Mr. Justice Turton. What Occasion had you to enquire into that, the Place of his Nativity?

Mr. Deberty. I did not enquire at all; but one that was his Servant, was my Comrade a great while.

Mr. Phipps. Now we will prove where he was christened, by one that was as his Christening. Mr. Dafcine. (He appear'd and stood up, being sworn, and spoke in French to the Court, pretending he could not speak English.)

L. C. J. If he cannot speak English, there must be an Interpreter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They must find an Interpreter, he is their Witness.

Then a Person in Court stood up, and told the Court he could speak English as well as he; that he had been a Bailiff's Follower for several Years.

L. C. J. You can speak English, can you not?

Mr. Dafcine. I will speak as well as I can.

King's Messenger. I am a Messenger to the King, Do you know me?

Mr. Dafcine. Yes.

L. C. J. Prithee speak English.

Mr. Dafcine. As well as I can, my Lord, I will speak.

Mr. Phipps. Are you sworn?

Mr. Dafcine. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Phipps. Do you know Captain Vaughan?

Mr. Dafcine. In 1669, I was in St. Christophers; I went from Roan, and from thence I went with Hats and Cloth to Crebeck, and had a Letter to one Thomas Williams, a Factor in Martenico. And after I had done, as I was coming away, Mr. Williams desired me to go to a Christening, a Mile and half from Port-Royal. He told me, there was one Mr. Vaughan had a Plantation there, and desired him to be Godfather. And about two Days after, I went from Port-Royal to St. Christophers again, and I came to Roan again in a Ship called St. Joseph. So in 1677, I went to St. Christophers again, and from thence to Martenico, to Mr. Williams; I asked him, what is become of that young Man we were at the Christening? and so he shewed me him that is here (pointing to the Prisoner.)

L. C. J. That was in 1677?

Mr. Dafcine. In 1677. So I came from Port-Royal; I went to St. Christophers, and so took Sail, and came to France again. And 13 Years ago I went to St. Christophers again, and to Mountferat, and Martenico; and so when I was at Martenico, and asked Mr. Williams of this young Man, that I was at his Christening, and he said, he is at such an House, and I saw him there.

L. C. J. Thirteen Years ago.

Mr. Dafcine. And we went and drank Punch together, and I came back for Roan.

L. C. J. When did you see him since that?

Mr. Dafcine. Never till I saw him here a Prisoner.

L. C. J. How do you know he is the Man?

Mr. Dafcine. He has a Bruise in his Side.

Mr. Phipps. What was the Gentleman's Name, at the Christening of whose Child you were?

Mr. Dafcine. Thomas Vaughan.

Mr. Phipps. What was the Child's Name?

Mr. Dafcine. Thomas Vaughan.

Mr. Phipps. When you went the next Time to Martenico, did Mr. Williams, you speak of, that was the Godfather, present this Person, Captain Vaughan, to you, as the Man who was then christened?

Mr. Dafcine. Yes, the next Time.

Mr. Phipps. Now is Captain Vaughan, that stands at the Bar, that very Gentleman?

Mr. Dafcine. I am sure it is he.

L. C. J. You say this Meeting was about 1669?

Mr. Dafcine. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray what was the Reason you were so inquisitive to know what became of that Person that was christened when you was there?

Mr. Dafcine. Because I being at the Christening, I ask'd him how the Child did?

L. C. J.

L. C. J. How came you to take such extraordinary Observation of that Child? Was he such a remarkable Child?

Dr. Newton. Where were you born?

Mr. Dascine. In France.

Mr. Whitaker. What are you?

Mr. Dascine. A Barber by Trade.

L. C. J. What Employment have you?

Mr. Dascine. An Officer in the Marshal's Court sometimes.

Mr. Justice Turton. What was this Man's Father, what Sort of Man was he?

Mr. Dascine. A tall Man.

Mr. Baron Powis. What was his Father's Name?

Mr. Dascine. Thomas Vaughan.

Mr. Justice Turton. Was his Father living when you was there the second Time?

Mr. Dascine. The last Time I was there I did not see his Father, but I saw his Father the second Time.

Mr. Justice Turton. But you saw Mr. Williams, his Godfather.

Mr. Dascine. Yes.

Mr. Phipps. Call Simon Danneau.

Tho. Vaughan. My Lord, he is sick, and not able to come out of his Bed.

Mr. Phipps. Call Francis Harvey. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Phipps. Do you know Captain Vaughan?

Francis Harvey. Sir, in the Year 1693, I was in France, with one Captain Bontee, who was taken Prisoner in August the same Year; and my Captain he had the Liberty to go up to Paris with a Guard, for his Pleasure, and to learn the Speech. And, as it happened, we came to lodge in a Street, called Dolphin Street, at the Sign of the Crown; and there was some Gentlemen that were there to learn the Speech, that were my Countrymen; and there was a young Man there, and he was acquainted over the Way, where this Gentleman, Captain Vaughan, lodged; he lodged at his Aunt's, that sold Silks; her Name was Madam Wotton; I saw this Gentleman there; I am sure it is he; and with that I came acquainted with him, as well as the rest.

Mr. Phipps. What was he reputed there?

Fr. Harvey. A Captain of a Ship.

Mr. Phipps. What did he go for there? A Frenchman, or an Englishman, or an Irishman?

Fr. Harvey. He went for a Frenchman, as I heard; one Time his Aunt, she said, that he was born in the West-Indies, at Martenico, and that he was her Sister's Son, that lived in Martenico.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say he was a Captain of a Ship; what Ship?

Fr. Harvey. That I cannot tell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was that?

Fr. Harvey. In 1693.

Mr. Phipps. Is Mr. Lefleur here?

Cl. of Arr. He is a Prisoner in the Savoy; he was taken in the same Ship with Mr. Vaughan.

Mr. Phipps. It is reasonable he should have been here, to give an Account of the Prisoner.

L. C. J. Then they should have taken care to have had him here. Have you any more Witnesses?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think we have given sufficient Evidence that he is an Irishman: But now we shall shew you, that all your Witnesses have given a very extravagant Evidence to prove that he is a Frenchman. All he hoped for was, that the Prosecutors for the King could not be able to prove him an Irishman; he believed there were but three Men could prove him so; that was David Creagh and two more; and so he writes to David Creagh, and tells him, That his Life was in his Power, and he hoped he and the other two would not discover it. This David Creagh was his Neighbour in Ireland; we will call him to prove that Capt. Vaughan was born at Galloway in Ireland.

Mr. Whitaker. And here is his Letter under his Hand. Bring David Creagh. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Cowper. I desire, before he give his Evidence, he may look upon those that have given Evidence about the Prisoner, one by one. (Then he look'd upon Robert French.) Mr. Creagh, do you know him.

Dav. Creagh. No. (Then he looked upon the rest.)

Mr. Cowper. Have you had any of these Men come to you on a Message?

D. Creagh. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know Thomas Vaughan, the Prisoner at the Bar?

D. Creagh. Yes, I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long have you known him?

D. Creagh. About two Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that your first Acquaintance with him?

D. Creagh. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Place was he born at, as you have heard?

D. Creagh. At Galloway in Ireland.

Mr. Sol. Gen. From whom did you hear it?

D. Creagh. From all Persons that I have heard speak of him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he ever own to you that he was born there?

D. Creagh. Yes, oftentimes in my Company.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever receive a Letter from him about your giving Evidence in this Matter?

D. Creagh. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know this Letter? (Which was shewn him.)

D. Creagh. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know his Hand?

D. Creagh. Yes, I partly know it.

Mr. Whitaker. Did you ever see him write?

D. Creagh. This is the Letter I received from him.

L. C. J. Read it. Do you think it is his Hand?

D. Creagh. I cannot swear it; but I believe it is his Hand.

Mr. Phipps. Have you seen him write?

D. Creagh. I have seen him write several Times.

L. C. J. Do you believe it is his Hand?

D. Creagh. Yes, my Lord, but I cannot swear it.

[Then the Letter was read.]

To Mr. David Creagh, in Newgate, These.

Mr. Creagh,

I Have some Assurance that Mr. Whitaker has no Witness to prove me a Subject of England, but you, and two more, which I am glad of with all my Heart: I hope I may have none against me that wish me worse than you and Capt. Etherington. If Mr. Whitaker has not sworn you yet, I hope you will not appear against me. I declare, if I had more than my Life, I would lay it in your Hand. I am like to be sent to Newgate this Day, and it is like you and some more will be sent here, that we may may not talk together. The Dutch Dogs took from me Eleven hundred Dollars in Money, which certainly troubles me more than the Thoughts of Death, which I value not a Straw; but I hope in four or five Days to be supplied. I fear they will keep me close. I have all the Liberty imaginable here to write, and my Friends suffered to see me. I can say nothing that is comfortable, but that I am very well in Health, and nothing concerned, if my Money come in time.

Friday Morning.

T. Vaughan.

Mr. Phipps. Is that Letter proved? That is not to the Purpose; nor of any Weight, considering who proves it.

L. C. J. No, that none could prove him a Subject, but he and two more?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will produce only one Witness more. Call Mr. Jo. Rivet. The Court being informed by some Gentlemen then on the Bench, that there was a Gentleman then in Court, one Mr. Rivet, who being of Galloway, could probably give some Account of the Prisoner; he was immediately called, and required to depose what he knew.

Jo. Rivet. My Lord, I am sorry I am called, where Life is concerned, when I came hither only out of Curiosity; but the Service I owe to this Government, obliges me to speak what I know, now I am called to it. (Then he was sworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar? What Countryman is he?

Jo. Rivet. I have known him a great many Years; we were Children together in the same Town; we liv'd in Galloway in Ireland. I knew his Father, and Mother, and Brothers, and Sisters; and I remember him a Child, as long as I can remember any thing, I cannot determine to a certain Number of Years; and I remember him not only a School-boy, but also an Apprentice to one Mr. Coleman. And I wonder very much at what Mr. French says, for by the Name and Place of his Birth, he must have sworn what he knows to be otherwise; for the Frenches are a Family in Galloway; his Father was an honest Gentleman, and went over into Ireland in the Rebellion, in 1641. and he there married a Woman, a Native of Galloway, and had several Children, one of which, in the latter End of King Charles's Reign, turned Papist, and I believe the Grief for it hasten'd his Father's Death. I own Part of the Evidence may be true, about his being in the West-Indies; but his Mother, I believe, was never out of Ireland in her Life.

Dr. Oldisb. What was his Father's Name?

Jo. Rivet. John.

L. C. J. You say, you knew this very Gentleman an Apprentice to one Tho. Coleman at Galloway.

Jo. Rivet. I did so, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long is it since you saw him?

Jo. Rivet. I cannot be positive, I think at the Reduction of Galloway in 1691. I cannot say whether at or after; but I saw him about that Time, and knew him, and have known him from a Child; I knew him a School-boy, and knew his Brothers.

Mr. Justice Turton. What Year did you know him first?

Jo. Rivet. I dare not be positive; I remember him particularly well.

L. C. J. Are you sure this is the Man?

Jo. Rivet. I know him as well as any Face I ever saw. I came accidentally into Court out of Curiosity; and one that knew me, that was of Galloway, gave Account to the King's Counsel, and so I am called to give Evidence.

L. C. J. Do you know this Robert French?

Jo. Rivet. I cannot say I know him, for I see him but in the Dark; if I saw him in a better Light, it may be I may. (Then Robert French was set up for Mr. Rivet to see him.) I think I recollect the Face, I am not certain.

L. C. J. Do you know this Gentleman?

Rob. French. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did you live?

Rob. French. In Connaught.

L. C. J. Did you know John Vaughan of Galloway?

Rob. French. I have heard of him, my Lord.

Mr. Baron Powis. What Trade was the Prisoner's Father?

Jo. Rivet. He had the Market several Years; he lived very well, and kept a Publick House in the Town.

Mr. Phipps. Did you know any other Tho. Vaughan but this?

Rob. French. No, not in Galloway.

Jo. Rivet. This may be a Confirmation of what I say; if it be the same Gentleman, his Hair is reddish.

L. C. J. Pull off his Peruke. (Which was done.)

T. Vaughan. My Hair is not red.

L. C. J. How are his Eye-brows?

T. Vaughan. A dark brown, my Lord, the same as my Wig.

Mr. Baron Powis. Let Some-body look on it more particularly. (Then an Officer took a Candle, and look'd on his Head, but it was shaved so close, the Colour could not be discerned.)

Mr. Phipps. We can give an Answer to this, my Lord; we shall prove that there was one John Vaughan at Galloway, and he had a Son Thomas, that died ten Years ago. As for Mr. Rivet, he is a mere Stranger to us, we know nothing of him; and, by what I can perceive, he comes in as a Volunteer, not subpcena'd by either Side. And for Mr. Creagh, we shall shew he is not to be credited in any thing; for we shall prove him guilty of Felony, and that he swore, that if his Brother would not supply him with Money, he would swear Treason against him, and shop him in Newgate, and that he should not come out till he came upon a Sledge; and if so, there is Nobody surely can believe he will stick at Perjury or Forgery, or any thing else which may be for his Advantage. Call Mr. Christopher Creagh. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Phipps. Pray do you know David Creagh?

C. Creagh. Yes.

Mr. Phipps. Is he any Relation to you?

C. Creagh. Yes, he is my Brother.

Mr. Phipps. Give the Court and the Jury an Account what you know of your Brother.

C. Creagh. It is an unnatural Thing to come on this Occasion, and I am sorry I am called upon this Account.

D. Creagh. Speak what you have to say?

Mr. Phipps. What do you know of your Brother, whether you have not found him guilty of stealing any thing?

C. Creagh. My Lord, I am upon my Oath, I have known something of it, he has stolen some Gold from me.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. You pretend to be so very nice; you are to answer to what you know of his Reputation in general, and of his Way of Living.

C. Creagh. His Reputation has been but very slender, I am very sorry for it; several in the Court can give Account of it, as well as I. He served a Relation of his in Newcastle; he served there some Time, and came to Town, and came to me, and depended upon me, and I subsisted him; and he took an Opportunity one Day, when I and my Wife were gone abroad, and No-body at home but the Maid, and went up Stairs, where my Wife's Room is, and there being a Sash-window, he opens it, and took out of my Wife's Closet several Pieces of Gold.

L. C. J. How did you know that he did it?

C. Creagh. I found it out afterwards; he was my Brother, and therefore I did not prosecute him. I did not know he had it, till afterwards, that I found to whom he had disposed of the Gold. I inquired who was in the House, and thought the Maid had it; and she said none had been there but my Brother; and he at last owned the Fact, and I had it again.

L. C. J. Have you any more to say of your Brother?

Mr. Phipps. Did he ever threaten to swear against you?

T. Vaughan. Or me?

C. Creagh. He has been confined in Newgate eighteen Months, and I subsisted him in Charity; I allowed him all along; and he has been sending to me by several Messengers, that if I subsisted him not with more Money than I did allow him, he would swear me into a Plot.

L. C. J. Did he tell you so?

C. Creagh. No, but he has sent me Word so.

L. C. J. Is the Man here that he sent this Word by?

C. Creagh. Yes, the Man is here.

Mr. Phipps. Let him stand up.

L. C. J. Where do you live?

C. Creagh. In Walling-street; I am a Merchant; I declare it is not in Favour or Affection, but only in Conscience, that I declare this.

D. Creagh. This is only to hinder me from giving my Evidence against a Merchant that I have taken up.

T. Vaughan. What Character had he in Spain?

[Then David Creagh spoke, but was not heard.]

L. C. J. What do you say of the Gold?

C. Creagh. He had it, my Lord.

D. Creagh. Why did you not prosecute me then, if I had it?

L. C. J. You are not sure he took the Gold.

C. Creagh. I was so sure he had it, because I had it from him again by another Hand.

L. C. J. Did he tell you so, that he had it?

C. Creagh. No, but I had a Letter about it.

L. C. J. Where is that Letter?

C. Creagh. I have it not here.

L. C. J. Give not an Evidence of a Letter, without the Letter were here; it ought to have been produced.

Mr. Phipps. Call Christopher Heyden. (He was sworn.) Do you give the Court an Account what David Creagh has said to you of swearing against any Body.

C. Heyden. Several Times, when my Master has sent me to him, to pay him Five Shillings a Week, or Five and Six-pence a Week, to subsist him.

Dr. Oldisb. Who are you Servant to?

C. Creagh. He is my Servant.

C. Heyden. This David Creagh has often told me, that I should tell his Brother, that if he would not supply him with more Money, he would swear against him. When I came to the Sessions-House, when the Pirates were tried the first Time, I was going thro' the Bail-dock, where this David Creagh called to me; and I asked him what he did there? He said he was to be Evidence against Captain Vaughan. No certainly, said I, you do not know him, do you? Says he, Here's the Thing, it had been better for me that I had been an Evidence against him before this; and I am forced to be an Evidence against him, to save my self: And he bid me tell his Brother, God damn his Soul to all Eternity, if he did not send him Supply that Day, he would have him in Newgate, and that he should not come out again, till he came out upon a Sledge?

L. C. J. Did he say so?

C. Heyden. Yes, my Lord.

C. Creagh. How long is it agon, Mr. Heyden?

C. Heyden. It was the Day the Pirates were tried; more than that, here was Mr. Wrotb's Man was with me at the same Time; and because he should not hear what you said, you took me to the Door.

Mr. Phipps. Is Daniel Bryan here? (He appeared and was sworn.)

Daniel Bryan. I was subpoena'd here for I know not what; for I know not Captain Vaughan.

Mr. Phipps. Give me Leave to ask you a Question: Do you know, or have heard of David Creagh?

Daniel Bryan. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Phipps. Will you give an Account of what he has said of swearing against any Body?

Daniel Bryan. He has threaten'd his Brother several Times, that if he would not send him Relief, he would bring him in for something, and would inform against him.

Mr. Phipps. Did he say he would swear against him?

Daniel Bryan. He did say he would inform against him.

Mr. Phipps. What did you hear him say of swearing against any one?

Daniel Bryan. He said, he had rather others should perish, than himself.

Mr. Whitaker. This Man was condemned for the same Crime.

Mr. Phipps. Mr. Vaughan, have you any other Witnesses? Call Creighton. (Who was sworn.) What Countryman are you?

Creighton. A Connaught Man, I was born in Galloway; I believe Mr. Rivet knows me.

Mr. Phipps. Did you know one John Vaughan, that lived at Galloway?

Creighton. I know him very well.

Mr. Phipps. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Creighton. No.

Mr. Phipps. Do you remember, that that John Vaughan had a Son Thomas, and what became of him?

Creighton. Yes, he had a Son Thomas; but I understood that he went somewhere into the Country, and there died; and it was spread all about the Town.

Mr.

Mr. Phipps. Do you know what he died of?

Creighton. I cannot tell.

L. C. J. How long ago did he die?

Creighton. About ten Years ago. I knew all the Brothers.

Mr. Phipps. Did you know that Thomas Vaughan?

Creighton. I knew him very well.

Mr. Phipps. Is that Gentleman, the Prisoner, he?

Creighton. No.

Mr. Phipps. Do you believe that is not the Man?

Creighton. I believe not.

Mr. Phipps. Did you ever know any other Thomas Vaughan?

Creighton. No.

Mr. Justice Turton. Had not John Vaughan a Son Apprentice at Galloway to one Thomas Coleman?

Creighton. No, as I know of.

Mr. Justice Turton. How old was that Son, Thomas Vaughan, when you knew him?

Creighton. I was born at the next Door to that Thomas Vaughan that was reputed to be dead.

Mr. Justice Turton. Was not that Thomas Vaughan Apprentice to Mr. Coleman?

Creighton. I cannot certainly tell.

Mr. Justice Turton. How old was that Thomas Vaughan when he went away from Galloway?

Creighton. I cannot tell.

Mr. Justice Turton. What is your own Age?

Creighton. My Age is about Five and Twenty.

L. C. J. You have not seen him in ten Years?

Creighton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Can you take it upon your Oath, this is not the Man you saw ten Years ago, that Thomas Vaughan you knew?

Creighton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. How old was he when you were acquainted with him?

Creighton. I cannot tell certainly; I believe he might be about fifteen.

L. C. J. How long is that since?

Creighton. Ten Years.

L. C. J. What is your Name?

Creighton. Creighton.

Mr. Cowper. You say you knew him ten Years ago; pray what sort of Person was he, and how did he differ from this Man?

Creighton. He was better set, and not quite so tall as this Man, and full of the Small-Pox; he was the quarrelsomest Boy in the whole Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say he was not quite so tall as this Man.

Creighton. No, he was not quite so tall.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you think he might not grow since? This was ten Years ago, when he was but fifteen Years old.

Mr. Cowper. You knew him at Fifteen; how long had you known him?

Creighton. From my Infancy, 'till he departed the Town.

Mr. Cowper. During all that Time, what Employment was he in? Tell some Circumstances.

Creighton. I think this Vaughan went to one Mr. Russel's School.

Mr. Cowper. What to do?

Creighton. To learn to write and read.

Mr. Cowper. And was he not an Apprentice in that Time?

Creighton. I cannot tell.

Mr. Cowper. Were you acquainted with him?

Creighton. Yes.

L. C. J. You lived next Door to him; sure you must be acquainted with him?

Creighton. He was a fighting Boy, for I remember he did once thrash my Coat soundly.

L. C. J. Where do you live now?

Creighton. At the Castle and Falcon in Aldersgate-street.

L. C. J. What Trade are you?

Creighton. A Shoemaker.

Mr. Baron Powis. How long have you lived here?

Creighton. This ten Years.

Mr. Baron Powis. What did that Thomas Vaughan die of, that you say was dead before you came away, as it was reported up and down?

Creighton. I cannot tell.

Mr. Cowper. Just now you said he went away from Galloway, and it was reported there that he was dead ten Years ago; now you say you have been in England ten Years.

Creighton. I came into England about ten Years ago.

Mr. Cowper. Did you hear it at Galloway before you came away?

Creighton. I heard it at Galloway before I came to London; and there are many can testify that there was a Report that he was dead.

Mr. Justice Turton. How long was he gone from Galloway before you came away?

Creighton. I cannot say to an Hour; I heard he was dead.

L. C. J. Well, well, he went away from Galloway.

Mr. Justice Turton. Have you not been here twelve Years?

Creighton. I think not; I came a little before the Revolution.

Mr. Justice Turton. That is eight Years ago: Just now you said you had been here ten Years.

Mr. Phipps. Call John Kine. (Who was sworn.) John Kine, did you know one John Vaughan in Galloway?

John Kine. Yes, I lived with him.

Mr. Phipps. What Children had he?

John Kine. Four Sons.

Mr. Phipps. Had he any one of those Sons that was named Thomas?

John Kine. Not of those four.

Mr. Phipps. Had he a Son Thomas?

John Kine. Yes, he had; he died about ten or eleven Years old of the Small-Pox.

Mr. Phipps. You say you lived with this John Vaughan; look upon the Prisoner at the Bar, is he any of those Sons?

John Kine. No, Sir, I never saw this Man 'till now.

Mr. Phipps. How long did you live with him?

John Kine. About eight or nine Years.

Mr. Phipps. But how long have you been come away from him?

John Kine. About ten Years.

Mr. Justice Turton. How well do these Two Witnesses agree together? The other said he died at Fifteen, and was pitted with the Small-Pox; this Man says he died at Ten, and of the Small-Pox.

L. C. J. Where do you live now?

John Kine. I live in the City.

L. C. J. How long have you lived there?

John Kine. Twelve Years.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. How long was this Thomas Vaughan dead before you came hither?

John Kine. Really I cannot be positive, I believe about eight or nine Years.

L. C. J. Did Thomas Vaughan die of the Small-Pox?

John Kine. Yes.

L. C. J. That you are sure of?

John Kine. I am sure that was the Disease he died of?

L. C. J. You knew him well, I believe.

John Kine. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. How old was he when he died?

John Kine. About ten Years.

L. C. J. Where was he buried?

John Kine. At Galloway.

Mr. Justice Turton. Why does not the Officer take Care? There is one talking with the Witnesses. Can you now reconcile your Evidence? (To the Prisoner's Counsel.)

L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses?

Mr. Phipps. No, my Lord.

Mr. Justice Turton. What were the Names of all the Sons?

John Kine. The eldest was John Vaughan, the other William Vaughan, another Edward Vaughan, and another James Vaughan; that was all that he had alive.

Mr. Whitaker. There is never a Thomas Vaughan among these.

Mr. Cowper. Thomas died up and down in several Places.

Mr. Phipps. Mr. Rivet, do you know the Sons of that John Vaughan?

Mr. Rivet. He had all these Sons, John, William, Thomas, and James. He speaks of a Son Edward; I cannot exactly remember whether there was such a Son or no; tho' I have a rude Idea of it, but am not certain. I knew this Thomas, I went to School with him, and I saw him in the Year 1691. about the Surrender of Galloway.

Juryman. Is that Man at the Bar the same Thomas Vaughan?

Mr. Rivet. I am positive of that.

L. C. J. You saw him at the Surrender of Galloway?

Mr. Rivet. I did; it was about that Time.

Thomas Vaughan. I am a Subject of the most Christian King; and I desire, though I speak English, that I may be examined in French, in a Matter that touches me so near. And you may see by my Commission, my Lord, that I am a Frenchman; which I desire may be read.

L. C. J. We shall not trouble you with that.

Thomas Vaughan. I can shew you my Commission, wherein the King, my Master, declares me to be a Subject of France.

Dr. Oldish. Mr. Vaughan, I think, you need not trouble the Court to read the Commission; the Commission is the same as for all other Subjects of the French King, wherein he is look'd upon as a natural-born Subject of France; and so he owns himself upon his Examination before the Judge of the Admiralty.

L. C. J. Have you any more to say? As to the Examination, who can prove that?

Mr. Cawley. I can prove that, my Lord. (Mr. Cawley was sworn.)

L. C. J. Is that Thomas Vaughan's Examination?

Mr. Cawley. Yes, my Lord, it is signed by him, and taken before Sir Charles Hedges the 25th of July, 1695.

VOL. V.

L. C. J. Read it. (Then Mr. Cawley read the Examination of Thomas Vaughan.)

The 27th of July, 1695.

Officium Domini contra Thomas Vaughan, Capuem' Navicule, The Loyal Clencarty.

The Examination of Thomas Vaughan, late Commander of the Ship, the Loyal Clencarty, aged Twenty-six Years, taken before the Right Worshipful Sir Charles Hedges, Kt. Judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England.

THIS Examine saith, That he was born at Martenico within the Dominions of the French King, and is his Subject; but refuses to answer of what Parents he was born: That he came last from thence about four Years ago as Commander of a Ship called the Hare, which had been before taken from the English, and came in her to Nantz in France, and hath ever since been in France, or cruising in French Ships: That he hath been a Commander ever since he was sixteen Years of Age, and hath commanded several French Privateers, and was Commander of a Privateer of St. Malo, called the Granada, of 36 Guns, which about two Years ago took the Diamond; and the Examine was never till now taken. Being asked, whether he ever lived in England, or in Ireland? he refuses to answer. Being asked, Whether he knew any thing of the taking and carrying off a Custom-house Boat from the Downs to Bulloigne? Or, Whether he was then in London, or did give Directions to any Persons, or knew of her being carried off? he answered nothing, but said, That if any Person would prove it against him, he was present to answer it: But saith, That in France he heard of her being brought to Bulloigne; and he the Examine bought her at Bulloigne of the Men that carried her away, and that she cost him 900 and odd Livres, and was then called the Elizabeth and Anne, or Michael and Anne, but which doth not remember: That he the Examine still hath the said Vessel at Bulloigne; That he cannot tell the Names of the Persons he bought her of, and that took her away, but believes they had a Commission: That something above three Weeks ago the Examine went with a Commission from the French King on board a Two-and-twenty-Oar-Barge, called the Loyal Clencarty, then at Bulloigne, as Commander thereof; and on Monday last was a Fortnight was taken by the Coventry Man of War at the Buoy in the Gunfleet; and that the Commander of the Coventry took away this Examine's Commission. Being asked, Upon what Design he came out with the Barge? replied, That it was not to take the Air; That the Barge formerly belonged to the Lord Danby, and was taken by a French Privateer about a Year ago; That before he came out, he met with two English Seamen upon the Court of Guards at Bulloigne, who told the Examine, that they had been taken Prisoners, and the Examine took them in upon Charity; and afterwards met another Englishman, who told the Examine, that he had been taken in Land-Service, and believes it was before Fort Kenoque; and the said Person sitting upon a Stone at Bulloigne, and not knowing what to do with himself, the Examine took him on board for Charity, and designed to put the said three Persons ashore in England. Being asked, Whether he did not put in a Claim for the said Custom-house from-House Boat, by Reason of her Captain? Or, Whether the Persons that took her had any Commission from him? he the Examinee answered, That they that took her, must answer for what they did, and he must answer for his Actions only.

Eodem die Capt'
coram me,
C. Hedges.

Thomas Vaughan.

L. C. J. Mr. Vaughan, have you any more to say?

Tho. Vaughan. It is very hard Circumstances I am under; if an Englishman was in France, under the Straights that I am here, it would be very hard for him to prove himself an Englishman.

L. C. J. You have had a very fair Trial, and you shall have Justice, be it for you, or against you.

Thomas Vaughan. I hope your Lordship will do me Right.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, The Prisoner at the Bar, Thomas Vaughan, stands indicted for High-Treason, for adhering to the King's Enemies, viz. That he put himself as a Soldier in the Service of the French King, in a Vessel called the Loyal Clencarty, with divers other Persons on board her, that were Subjects to the French King, and Enemies to the King of England, with a Design to burn the King's, and his Subjects Ships; and for that Purpose went in that Ship. That the Prisoner was on board the Ship, and with such a Design, is proved, without all Contradiction, by several Witnesses that have been produced; that is, that the Two-and-Twenty-Oar Barge, which is the same called the Loyal-Clencarty, lay hovering about the Buoy in the Nore; those Men in the Coventry imagined they had some Design of Mischief to the Ships, and they made after him with the Coventry. It was apprehended by Captain Vaughan, and his Crew, that the Coventry would be too hard for them, and so they did submit, and were taken. And being examined on what Account he came on our Coasts, it is confes'd by him, That he came with a Design to burn our Ships. You may observe what Sort of Men were aboard. You have heard it proved to you, that Crittenden, the Marshal of Dover, entered those Persons taken aboard the French Vessel, of what Nation, and what Quality they were; and there were about a Dozen of these Frenchmen, for they were entered as such. Now, for a Subject of England to join with the King's Enemies, in pursuit of a Design to burn or take any of the King's, or his Subjects Ships, that is an Adherence to the King's Enemies. But it appears, not only that Captain Vaughan was in their Company, but that he was their Commander; which commanding the Vessel, on board which were French Subjects, Enemies of the King and the Kingdom of England, is High-Treason, and the particular Fact of Treason for which he is indicted. And it appears that he had a Commission from the French King to command this Vessel, the Loyal Clencarty.

Now the Prisoner having this Commission to be Commander of this Vessel, though they who served under him were not native Frenchmen, but other Foreigners, yet their subjecting themselves to him, acting by Virtue or Colour of that Commission, makes them to be the French King's Subjects, during their Continuance in that Service; for otherwise all Prizes, which they should take, would make them to be Pirates; which none will pretend to maintain, when they acted by a Commission from a Sovereign Prince, that was an Enemy. And if they shall cruize upon our Coasts with a Design to take, or destroy any of the King's, or his Subjects Ships, they are Enemies, tho' they were the Subjects of a Prince or State in Amity with the King of England. But at this time there is no Necessity of entering upon this Question, because it is proved that divers, who were on board this Vessel, were Frenchmen; the joining with whom, in Prosecution of such a Design, is that Kind of High-Treason, of adhering to the King's Enemies. So that if Captain Vaughan was a Subject of England, he is proved guilty of High-Treason, if you believe the Evidence.

But now it is insisted on by Mr. Vaughan and his Counsel, that though he was exercising Hostility against the King of England, and designing Mischief to his Subjects; yet, says he, I was not a Subject of England, I was born a Subject to the French King. If that be true, then he is not guilty of High-Treason; he is an Enemy, but not a Traitor: And that is the Point you are now to consider of, whether he be a Subject of England or France?

Now as to that, he being taken under such Circumstances, and speaking English, it is reasonable to be presumed that he is a Subject of England, unless he proves the contrary. But then you have heard by several of the Witnesses, that when he was at first taken, he acknowledged himself to be an Irishman; and he did not only acknowledge it to them that assisted in apprehending him, but being carried to Dover, when the Marshal entered him in his Book as a Prisoner, he entered him not as a Frenchman, but he declared at that Time he was an Irishman. It may be, he did not consider the Consequence of it; for the next Day he was carried before the Mayor of Dover, and then having considered better of it, that it was not for his Interest to acknowledge himself an Irishman, he said he was born a Subject to the French King, and at Martenico. There were Scotchmen and Irishmen taken at the same Time, and they were entered as of the Nation they belonged to, and so were divers entered as Frenchmen. So that unless he hath given sufficient Evidence to the contrary, this is sufficient to induce you to believe him an Irishman born.

But he has endeavoured to take off this Evidence that hath been given. First, he says, it was when he was in Drink, that he did confes himself to be an Irishman; but when he was sober, he said he was a Frenchman. And besides that, he calls a Witness, whose Name is Robert French, to give an Account of him. And French says, that about fourteen Years ago he was at St. Christophers, on French Ground, and he did then see this Thomas Vaughan; he did take him then to be about the Age of Fifteen. He says he stay'd there about four and twenty Hours, and that he was in the Company of this Vaughan and his Father about five or six Hours. He says, his Father told him at that Time, that this young Man, who was then about fifteen Years of Age, was born at Martenico. He says farther, that his Father did recommend this Son

Son to him to be a Sea-faring Man, being the Employment he intended him for; and he is sure this is the Man. This Robert French was ask'd, whether he ever saw this Vaughan from the Time he first saw him at St. Christophers until this Time: He says he never saw him since that Time, till about two Months ago. He gives you this Account how he came to meet with him: He says he came to Town; and being a charitable Man, he used to visit the Prisons; and he came to Newgate to one Noland; and there he saw Captain Vaughan; and though he had not seen him for fourteen Years before, yet he knew him again, and is positive that he is the same Person.

Another swears he knew the Prisoner about five Years, and he was reputed a Frenchman.

There has been another Witness produced, which is that Dafine, who came up as a Frenchman, and talked French, pretending he could not speak English; but on Examination it was discovered that he had an Employment in England, and was a Bailiff's Follower; and it appears he can speak English very well; and notwithstanding his Pretence, has given his Evidence in English. And he tells you, That he, about the Year 1669, did go to St. Christophers, and afterwards to Martenico; and there he went to one Williams, who had a Friend whose Name was Vaughan, at whose House there was a Christening to be of his Son, to whom Williams was to be Godfather; and this Witness was carried thither, and the Child was christen'd Thomas. He tells you he went over again to St. Christophers, and to Martenico, in the Year 1677, and that then he enquired for this Child, and did see him. Then he says, after that he went over again to St. Christophers, and to Martenico, about thirteen Years ago, and then saw him again; and, I think, never saw him since until very lately; and this Prisoner, he undertakes to tell you, is the very Person.

But then one Harvey tells you he saw him in France, in the Year 1693, and there he was taken to be a Frenchman, and he lived with a Woman that sold Silk, that said he was her Nephew, her Sister's Son; and that he was born at Martenico. This is the Evidence he gives you to induce you to believe he is a Frenchman.

Now in the first Place, before I open the Evidence in Answer to it, I desire you to observe the Weight and Import of this Evidence that hath been produced by the Prisoner. First, for this French, that says he saw Captain Vaughan fourteen Years ago; when he was about fifteen Years of Age; he had no former Acquaintance with him; stay'd in his Company but six Hours; and came away within four and twenty Hours after his Arrival; and never saw him again in fourteen Years: It is a strange Thing that he should know him again so well as to be positive that he is the same Person; for in fourteen Years there is a great Alteration in a Man: For a Man that has known one at the Age of fifteen, and not seen him in fourteen Years after; though before he was very well acquainted with him, cannot so easily know him again. But however he is positive, upon his Oath, that he is the same Person that he saw at Martenico.

Then as for Dafine, you may consider him, that he should take Notice of a little Child that he saw christen'd several Years before; and that he should now remember him when he had not seen him in thirteen Years; sure he had a great Liking to this Child, that when he went to Martenico, many Years after, he should be so inquisitive after him:

I must leave these Things to you to consider of: That he might have an Aunt in France, that is very possible too.

But now consider how this Evidence hath been endeavour'd to be answered: Two Witnesses have been produced to contradict that which they have sworn. The first is David Creagh, who tells you he has known the Prisoner for two Years; and says he was always reputed to be an Irishman, and born in Galloway: He has often discoursed with him about his Country, and he told him that he was an Irishman, and born at Galloway. Then you hear what a Letter is produced, writ to Creagh, when he was to come upon his Trial; he mentions what his Defence was, and that it was impossible that any could do him any harm but he and two more. Creagh swears it is his Hand; that he hath seen him write, and he believes it is his Hand.

Then there is a Gentleman, Mr. Rivet, that came here by chance, who is a Galloway Man; he saith he knew the Prisoner's Father, who was reputed to come thither about the Time of the Rebellion in Ireland, in 1641. and lived at Galloway; and that this Prisoner, Mr. Vaughan, was his Son, and he knew him of a Child; was well acquainted with him; liv'd hard by him; remembers him an Apprentice in Galloway, and tells you to whom; and says he is sure this is the very Man; and that he saw the Prisoner in 1691, about the Time and the Reduction of Galloway; and he is confident that the Prisoner is the Son of John Vaughan, at Galloway; and he gives you a particular Account of him and his Family, viz. of the Reputation and Manner of living of his Father; and what other Brothers he had: So that there is no Objection against his Credit; and it is hard to believe, since he is so positive and circumstantial, that he can be mistaken.

But the Prisoner and his Counsel have endeavour'd to answer all this Evidence; and first they have call'd Creagh's Brother to prove that he is an ill Man; for that he came into this Town where his Brother lives, who subsisted him and took him into his House; and one Day, when he and his Wife went abroad, he made bold with some of his Money; but they thought the Maid had it, and he charg'd her with it; but to his Satisfaction, it did afterwards appear that David had it.

Then there is another, Christopher Heyden, Christopher Creagh's Servant, who says, he heard D. Creagh say he was forc'd to be an Evidence against Vaughan to save himself; and that he used to threaten his Brother, that if he would not give him more Money he would swear against him. Bryan saith much to the same purpose. These are produced to take off the Credit of D. Creagh's Testimony.

But then, Gentlemen, as to the Place of the Prisoner's Birth; two other Witnesses are produc'd to give you Satisfaction that this Captain Vaughan was not the Son of that Mr. Vaughan of Galloway whose Evidence I will open to you, and then you will see how coherent they are in their Testimony. The first is Creighton, a Shoemaker; he says he knew Thomas Vaughan, the Son of John Vaughan of Galloway, about ten Years since; he was a Galloway Man bred, and lived the next Door to John Vaughan that had a Son Thomas. He says he has been here about ten Years in England. He says he thinks that Thomas Vaughan, the Son of John Vaughan, was about the Age of fifteen Years; but that this Prisoner is not he; for that Thomas

Vaughan was disfigured with the Small-pox ; he remembered him well, he had Reason for it, for he once basted him soundly ; and that he went away from Galloway when he was about fifteen Years of Age, and was reported to be dead ; and if it were so, this Prisoner cannot be the Person.

The other Witness is as positive as Creighton ; for he saith, he knew this John Vaughan of Galloway, and his Son Thomas ; and that Thomas Vaughan, Son of John Vaughan, died about ten Years since of the Small-pox. So that they have found two Thomas Vaughans : One tells you of one that was fifteen Years old, and was disfigur'd with the Small-pox ; and the other tells you of Thomas Vaughan, who died of the Small-pox when he was ten Years of Age.

You are therefore to consider the Evidence on both Sides. The Question principally is, Whether the Prisoner be a Subject of the King of England. If you are satisfied that he is not an English Subject, but a Frenchman, then he is not guilty of this High-Treason ; but if you are satisfied, by the Series of the whole Evidence, that he is an Irishman, and that he had a Commission from the French King, and that he cruized upon our English Coasts, in Company with the King's Enemies, with a Design to take, burn, or destroy any of the King's or his Subjects Ships, you are to find him guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted ; otherwise you are to acquit him.

Cl. of Arr. Swear an Officer to keep the Jury. (Which was done.)

After a short Stay, the Jury returned into Court, and gave in their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, answer to your Names. E. Leeds.

Mr. Leeds. Here.

Cryer. Vous Avez, and so of the rest.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict ?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you ?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Vaughan, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner. How say you, is he guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty ?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements had he at the Time of the Treason committed ?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court hath recorded it : You say that Thomas Vaughan is guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted ; but that he had no Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge ; and so you say all.

Jury. Yes.

Tho Vaughan. My Lord, let me beg one Favour, that I may be used like a Gentleman ; that I may be sent to a Chamber, and not to a Dungeon ; and that my Friends may come to me.

L. C. J. Captain Vaughan, they say you once made an Escape, and therefore the Keeper must keep you with Humanity, but with all Security.

Tho. Vaughan. I desire I may be kept like a Christian.

L. C. J. The Keeper must do his Duty.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Vaughan, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thou standest convicted of High-Treason against our Sovereign Lord the King ; What hast thou to say for thy self why Judgment shall not pass against thee to die according to the Law ?

Tho. Vaughan. I am altogether a Stranger to the Law, my Lord ; I refer my self to my Counsel.

L. C. J. Well, then you refer your self to your Counsel. You have had a fair Trial, and have no Reason to complain of it : If your Counsel have any thing to say in arrest of Judgment, they shall be heard.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, the Indictment has two Sorts of Treason laid in it ; the one for adhering to the King's Enemies, the other levying of War ; and with Submission, I take it, that the first is not well laid ; for it says that the Prisoner did adhere to the King's Enemies, but says not against the King. Now every Body knows that the French King is in War, not only with England, but Holland, and Spain, and the Emperor : But if a Man join with the French against any of them, he adheres to the King's Enemies ; and yet it cannot be said to be against the King ; therefore they ought to have laid it, that he did adhere to the King's Enemies contra Dominum Regem ; it must be aiding and comforting them against the King that makes the Treason.

L. C. J. It does say so.

Mr. Phipps. No, my Lord, it only says that Captain Vaughan did adhere to the King's Enemies, and does not say it was against the King ; and if that be Treason, is what we desire to know.

L. C. J. If he adhere to the King's Enemies, it must be against the King, though he assist them only against the King's Allies ; for thereby the King's Enemies may be more encouraged and enabled to do Mischief or Damage to the King. Suppose you assist the French King against the King of Spain, that is now in Alliance and League with the King of England, and the French in actual Enmity ; that is to adhere to the King's Enemies against the King.

Mr. Phipps. Would that be Treason, my Lord ?

L. C. J. Yes, certainly ; though that is not a Point in this Case, and so not necessary to be determined now ; for the Act of Parliament of 25 of E. III. defines Treason in adhering to the King's Enemies, and expresses the Overt-Act in giving them Aid or Comfort ; it is sufficient to alledge the Treason in the Words of the Statute, adhering to the King's Enemies. An Overt-Act alledged, shews it to be against the King ; and in pursuance of that Adherence, he did so and so : He was a Captain and Soldier in the Ship ; did join with the King's Enemies, &c. with a Design to destroy the King's and his Subjects Ships ; surely that is most manifestly an Adherence to the King's Enemies against the King.

Mr. Phipps. The Overt-Act, if it were alledged sufficiently, would not help it ; for if there can be an adhering to the King's Enemies, that is not Treason ; they ought to alledge such adhering as is Treason ; and if the Treason it self is not well alledged, the Overt-Act will not help it.

L. C. J. There is an Overt-Act to shew it to be against the King. It is said all along, he being in this Vessel Clencarty, cum diversis Subditis.

Mr. Phipps. But then that Overt-Act is not well alledged; for 'tis said only he went a cruising; whereas they ought to have alledged that he did commit some Acts of Hostility, and attempted to take some of the King's Ships; for cruising alone cannot be an Overt-Act; for he might be cruising to secure the French Merchant-Ships from being taken, or for many other Purposes, which will not be an Overt-Act of Treason.

L. C. J. I beg your Pardon. Suppose the French King, with Forces, should come to Dunkirk with a Design to invade England; if any one should send him Victuals, or give him Intelligence, or by any other Way contribute to their Assistance, it would be High-Treason in adhering to the King's Enemies.

Mr. Phipps. If the French King had design'd an Invasion upon England, and Captain Vaughan had assisted in his Vessel in forwarding the Invasion, it would have been Treason; but here is nothing mentioned but Cruising.

L. C. J. Cruising about the Coasts of England with a Design to destroy the King's Ships.

Mr. Phipps. That Design ought to be made appear by some Act of Hostility; for in the Case of Burton and Bradshaw, and others, which my Lord Coke cites, the agreeing to rise and pull down Inclosures, and meeting and providing Arms for that Purpose, is agreed not to be levying of War; and they were indicted for conspiring to levy War, upon the Statute of Queen Elizabeth. And in this Case, here being only a Conspiring, and nothing attempted, it can be no more Treason than it was in that Case.

L. C. J. When Men form themselves into a Body, and march Rank and File with Weapons Offensive and Defensive, this is levying of War with open Force, if the Design be publick. Do you think when a Ship is armed with Guns, &c. doth appear on the Coast, watching an Opportunity to burn the King's Ships in the Harbour; and their Design be known, and one goes to them, and aids and assists them, that this is not an adhering to the King's Enemies? Here are two Indictments, one for levying War, and the other for adhering to the King's Enemies; but the adhering to the King's Enemies is principally insisted on; and there must be an actual War proved upon the Person indicted in the one, yet need not be proved in the other Case.

Mr. Phipps. The same certainly is necessary in one as well as the other; for barely adhering to the King's Enemies is not Treason; but there must be an actual aiding and comforting them; and a meer Intention to assist the King's Enemies, is not an Adherence within the Statute of 25 Ed. III.

L. C. J. If there be not High-Treason in the Act alledged; that is, if it do not make out an Adherence to the King's Enemies, then your Objection would hold good.

Mr. Phipps. The going to cruise, my Lord, does not make out an Adherence to the King's Enemies; for his Cruising might be for other Purposes as well as to take the King's Ships; and your Lordship will intend the best in favour of Life.

Mr. Whitaker. To burn the King's Ships.

L. C. J. Treby. The Indictment is laid for adhering to, and comforting and aiding the King's Enemies. You would take that to be capable to be construed adhering to the King's Enemies in other Respects; but I take it to be a reasonable Construction of the Indictment, to be adhering to the King's Enemies in their Enmity. What is the Duty of every Subject? It is to fight with, subdue, and weaken the King's Enemies: And contrary to this, if he confederate with, and strengthen the King's Enemies, he expressly contradicts this Duty of his Allegiance, and is guilty of this Treason of adhering to them. But then you say here is no aiding, unless there were something done, some Act of Hostility. Now here is going aboard with an Intention to do such Acts; and is not that comforting and aiding? Certainly it is. Is not the French King comforted and aided, when he has got so many English Subjects to go a Cruising upon our Ships? Suppose they man his whole Fleet, or a considerable Part of it; is not that aiding? If they go and enter themselves into a Regiment, lift themselves and march, though they do not come to a Battel; this is helping and encouraging; such Things give the Enemy Heart and Courage to go on with the War; or else, it may be, the French King would come to good Terms of Peace. It is certainly aiding and comforting of them, to go and accept a Commission, and enter into their Ships of War, and lift themselves, and go out in order to destroy their Fellow-Subjects, and ruin the King's Ships; these are Actings of an hostile Nature. And if this be not adhering, &c. it may as well be said, That if the same Persons had made an Attack upon our Ships, and miscarried in it, that had not been so neither; because that in an unprosperous Attempt there is nothing done that gives Aid or Comfort to the Enemy. And after this kind of Reasoning, they will not be guilty, 'till they have Success; and if they have Success enough, it will be too late to question them.

Mr. Phipps. Intending to levy War is not Treason, unless a War be actually levied.

L. C. J. Treby. Is it not actually levying of War, if they actually provide Arms, and levy Men, and in a warlike manner set out and cruise, and come with a Design to destroy our Ships?

Mr. Phipps. It would not be an actual levying of War, unless they commit some Act of Hostility.

L. C. J. Yes, indeed, the going on board, and being in a Posture to attack the King's Ships. As to the Fault you find with the Indictment, there is a Fault, but not in Point of Law; they might have laid it more generally, so as to have given more Evidence.

Mr. Baron Powis. However, it is well enough. But for you to say, because they did not actually fight, it is not a levying War; is it not plain what they did intend? That they came with that Intention, that they came in that Posture, that they came armed, and had Guns, and Blunderbusses, and surrounded the Ship twice; they came with an armed Force; that is a strong Evidence of the Design.

L. C. J. You would make no Act to be aiding and assisting, but fighting.

Mr. Phipps. Then next I am in your Lordship's Judgment, whether the Statute of 28 of Hen. VIII. by which Captain Vaughan is tried, is in Force, and be not repealed by the first and second of Philip and Mary, which saith, That all Trials, in Cases of Treason, shall be at the Common Law. Now by the Common Law before the Statute 28 Hen. VIII. Treason done upon the Sea, was tried before the Admiral, or his Lieutenant; and my Lord Coke, in the 12 Rep. in the Case of the Admiralty, saith the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty is by the Common Law. By the Statute 33 Hen. VIII.

Trea-

Treason confessed before three of the Privy-Council might be tried in a foreign County, but that Statute is repealed by the Statute 1 and 2 of Philip and Mary; for by the Statute 33 Hen. 8. c. 4. Treason committed in Wales, might be tried in what County the King would assign; but since the Statute of Philip and Mary, it must be in the proper County; so that we are in your Lordship's Judgment, whether the Statute of 28 Hen. 8. be in Force; and whether, since the Statute of 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, Treasons done upon the Sea, ought not to be tried before the Admirals, or anciently at the Common Law?

L. C. J. This is Treason by the Common Law, and the Trial is by the Method of the Common Law.

Mr. Phipps. 'Tis true that my Lord Coke, and other Authorities say, that the Statute 35 H. 8. for trying Treasons committed beyond Sea, is not repealed by the Statute of 1 and 2 Philip and Mary; but they do not say that this Statute is not repealed by the Statute of Philip and Mary; and the Books being silent in this, is the Reason why I propose this Question for your Lordship's Judgment.

L. C. J. It is no more a Question than the Trials of foreign Treason, and then the Determination of the Trials upon the 35th determines the Question upon this.

Dr. Oldish. We must have two Witnesses by the Rules of the Civil Law; an extrajudicial Saying of a Party may be retracted by them at any Time, that is the Civil Law, and so there can be but one Witness.

L. C. J. That is not the Law of England.

Dr. Oldish. I do humbly conceive that the Civil Law is not taken away in this Case; for though the Statute prescribes the Form of Proceedings according to the Rules of the Common Law, yet as to the Crimes and Proofs, the Civil Law is still in Force; and then the Party may retract his Confession in Judgment, much more any extrajudicial Saying.

Mr. Whitaker. You are arraigning the Verdict.

L. C. J. That you should have taken Notice of before the Verdict was given. But we think there is no Danger in hearing this Objection, because it is so easily answered. How many Witnesses were to the Confession?

Sir Charles Hedges. We are not in a Court that proceeds according to the strict Rules of the Civil Law; but if we were, that Law is not so absurd as to allow that a Party may retract his Confession at any Time, so as to make it have no Effect.

Dr. Oldish. There must be two Witnesses at any Time.

Sir Charles Hedges. So there are here to the Confession; but you mistake if you think that every Particular is to be proved strictly as the Civil Law requires; for the End of the Statute which directs the Proceedings of this Court, was to facilitate the Method of making Proofs, that being found difficult by the Course of the Civil Law; and therefore was that Statute made, as plainly appears by the Preamble thereof.

Dr. Oldish. There is a new Statute that revives that Statute again, and that requires two Witnesses; whereby it is reduced to the Rules of the Civil Law again.

L. C. J. Two Witnesses there must be; but then consider it is not necessary to have two to every individual Overt-Act: For suppose there be two Overt-Acts laid in the Indictments, for one Species of Treason, compassing and imagining the Death of the King; if there be one Witness that he bought a Dagger, and said he would kill the King, and he is seen, it may be, going to the King's Bed-Chamber with the Dagger; another Witness says, he said he would kill the King with a Pistol, and bought a Pistol, and he stood waiting to kill the King as he came by; that is another Overt-Act of the same Treason. If one Witness prove one, and another Witness prove the other, this is sufficient Proof with us.

Dr. Oldish. It is another Question, Whether he be a Subject?

L. C. J. That is not an Overt-Act; if there be one Witness to that, it is enough, there needs not two Witnesses to prove him a Subject; but upon the Trial there were above two Witnesses to prove it; that was Crittenden, the Marshal of Dover, Creagh, and Rivet. I must tell you, as to the Doctrine of the Civil Law, it is not universally received in all Countries; it is received in several Countries as they find it convenient, and not as obligatory in itself.

Dr. Oldish. Yes, in all Places, as to Proof; for 'tis the Law of God and Nations, ex ore duorum, vel trium, &c. and one Witness is no Witness.

Sir Charles Hedges. Two Witnesses may be necessary to convict a Man of any capital Crime, but then it doth follow that there must be two Witnesses to prove every particular Fact and Circumstance. In this Point, touching the Place of the Nativity of Thomas Vaughan, was there not sufficient in his own Confession, together with the other Proofs on the King's behalf, to throw the Burden of Proof upon the Prisoner? You yourselves seem to have been of that Opinion; you undertook to prove it, and 'tis you that have failed in that Particular.

L. C. J. Our Trials by Juries are of such Consideration in our Law, that we allow their Determination to be the best, and most advantageous to the Subject; and therefore less Evidence is required than by the Civil Law. So said Fortescue in his Commendation of the Laws of England.

Dr. Oldish. Because the Jury are the Witnesses in Reality, according to the Laws of England, being presumed to be ex vicineto; but when it is on the high and open Seas, they are not then presumed to be ex vicineto, and so must be instructed according to the Rules of the Civil Law by Witnesses.

Mr. Baron Powis. This is not a Trial by the Civil Law; for that Statute was made to avoid the Niceties of your Law.

Mr. J. Eyre. He is tried with like Evidence, as in other Cases of High-Treason.

Dr. Oldish. No, the late Act requires two Witnesses.

Cl. of Arr. Make Proclamation of Silence.

Cryer. All manner of Persons are commanded to keep Silence, while Judgment is giving, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

And then Judgment was given, according as the Law directs in Cases of High-Treason

The Commission of Capt. Thomas Vaughan, which he had by Order of the French King.

Lewis Alexander of Bourbon, Earl of Toulouse, Duke of Amville, Commander of the King's Orders, Governor and Lieutenant-General for his Majesty in the Province of Britany, Peer and Admiral of France; To all those who shall see these present Letters, Greeting. The King having declared War against his Catholick Majesty, the Favourers of the of the Crowns of England and Scotland, and the Estates of the United Provinces, for the Reasons contained in the Declarations published by his Majesty throughout the Extent of his Kingdom, Countries, Lands, and Lordships under his Obedience; and his Majesty having commanded us to take Care that the said Declaration be observed, in what doth depend upon the Power and Authority which his Majesty hath been pleased to commit to our said Charge of Admiral; We have, according to the express Orders of his said Majesty, given Leave, Power and Permission to Thomas Vaughan, living at Bulloigne, to arm and set forth in warlike Manner a Bark, called The Loyal Clencarty, of the Burthen of Ten-Tons, or thereabouts, which is at present in the Port of Bulloigne, with such Number of Men, Cannons, Bullets, Powder, Shot, and other Ammunitions of War, and Provisions which are necessary to set her out to Sea, in a Condition to sail and cruize upon the Pirates, and others without Commission, as also upon the Subjects of his Catholick Majesty, the Estates of the United Provinces, the Favourers of the of the Crowns of England and Scotland, and other Enemies of this Estate, in what Places soever he can meet them, whether it be upon the Coasts of their Country, in their Ports, or Rivers; also upon their Shores, or Places where the said Captain Thomas Vaughan shall think fit to land to annoy the said Enemies; and there to make use of all the Means and Arts permitted and used by the Laws of War, to take them and bring them Prisoners, with their Ships, Arms, and other Things in their Possession.

Provided the said Vaughan shall keep, and cause those of his Crew to keep the Maritime Orders, and that he shall carry, during his Voyage, the Flag and Ensign of the King's-Arms, and of Ours, and cause the present Commission to be registred in the Registry of the nearest Admiralty where he shall be equipped, and leave there a Roll signed and certified by him, containing the Names and Surnames, the Births and Residence of his Crew; and make his Return to the said Place, or some other Fort of France, and make his Report before the Officers of the Admiralty, and no others, of what shall have happened during his Voyage, and give us Advice thereof, and send his said Report to the Secretary-General of the Marine, with the Papers justifying the same, that we may give such Orders thereupon as may be necessary.

And we pray and require all Kings, Princes, Potentates, Sovereigns, Estates, Republicks, Friends and Allies of this Crown, and all others, to whom it shall appertain, to give to the said Vaughan all Favour, Aid, Assistance and Succour in their Ports, with his said Vessel, Company and Prizes, which he shall take during his Voyage, without doing, or suffering to be done to him any Trouble or Hindrance; offering to do the like when we shall be by them thereunto required.

And we do command and require all Marine Officers, and others, to whom it shall appertain, to let him safely and freely pass with his said Vessel, Arms and Company, and the Prizes which he shall take, without doing, or suffering to be done to him any Trouble or Hindrance; but on the contrary, to give him all Succour and Assistance that shall be necessary. These Presents to be of no Force after one Year, from the Day of the Date hereof.

In Witness whereof We have signed these Presents, and caused them to be sealed with the Seal of our Arms, and counter-signed by the Secretary-General of the Marine, at Versailles, the tenth Day of the Month of July, One Thousand Six Hundred Ninety Five.

L. S.

By my Lord de Vallencour.

The present Commission was registred in the Registry of the Admiralty of Bulloigne, after having been seen by us James Abbot de la Cocherine, the King's Counsellor, deputed to the Intendency of Bulloigne, exercising the Charge of Lieutenant-General of the Admiralty, in the Presence of the King's Proctor, at the Request of the said Captain Vaughan, being present, whom we have permitted to sail and cruize upon the Enemies of the Estate. Done at Bulloigne the fourteenth of July, One Thousand Six Hundred Ninety Five.

CLXIII. Proceedings in Parliament against Sir John Fenwick, Bar. upon a Bill of Attainder for High-Treason, November, &c. 1696. 8 Will. III.

Proceedings in the House of Commons.

Veneris 6 die Novembris, 1696.

Admiral Russel acquainted the House of Commons, that his Majesty had given Leave to lay before the House several Papers in the Nature of Informations of Sir John Fenwick, in which he and several other Persons of Quality were named; and desired that they might be brought up to the Table and read; and that he might have an Opportunity to justify himself, or if he did not, that he might fall under the Censure of the House. And Mr. Secretary Trumbal being present, did say, That he had his Majesty's Leave to lay those Papers before the House; and if the House pleased he would bring them up to the Table.

And accordingly (the House shewing a general Inclination for it) they were brought up to the Table and read (being the Account he gave of the last Plot under his own Hand; and his Examination taken by Mr. Vernon, afterwards upon his Trial produced); and after the same was read, the House ordered, That Sir John Fenwick should be brought immediately before them; and that no Person should in the mean Time speak with him, or give or receive any Paper from him. And the House further order'd, That the Lord Cutts, Sir Henry Hobart, and Mr. Norris, three of their Members, should see their Order executed.

And in the mean Time adjourned to the Afternoon.

About Five a Clock in the Afternoon Sir John Fenwick was brought with a strong Guard (which the Lord Cutts had taken Care for) to the House; and being brought to the Bar, Mr. Speaker spake to him thus:

Mr. Speaker. Sir John Fenwick, the House understand that you have shew'd some Inclinations to make a Discovery of the Designs and Practices of the Enemies of the Government; you have now an Opportunity to do it; and the House require it from you, that you make a full and ample Discovery of all you know of that Matter.

Sir John Fenwick. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the House is not ignorant of my Circumstances. I am indicted of High-Treason, and have been arraigned: What I have done to serve the King and Nation his Majesty knows, it hath been communicated to him by his Privy-Council. I do not know but what I say may hurt my self; and therefore I desire that I may have some Security for my self, and I am willing to tell the full of all I know.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, if you please to withdraw for the present, the House will send you their Pleasure.

Sir John Fenwick withdrew. Was call'd in again.

* Mr. Speaker. Sir John Fenwick, since you withdrew, the House have consider'd of what you said at the Bar. * Paul Foley, Esq;

They do not think what you said is an Answer to what they require; they do expect a full and candid Confession from you of what you know; and they think that the best Way for you to obtain the Favour of the House is to deal ingenuously with them.

Sir John Fenwick. Sir, I am in the Hands of the Law, and I would not do any Thing that his Majesty might be angry with me; for I do not know it is with his Majesty's Consent: I have acquainted him fully with all I know of the Matter; this is all the Account I can give you at this Time. 'Tis a dangerous Point that I am under; I know not but I may come to my Trial in a few Days; and what I may say may rise up against me in a Court of Judicature: I humbly propose it to the House, if they do not think it a hard Case for me to make any Confession here, when his Majesty hath all that I know. I shall be very ready to do what this honourable House pleases to command me; but I desire this House will consider my Circumstances; I would not offend the King, nor offend this House.

Thereupon Mr. Speaker again spake to him to withdraw. And being withdrawn, the House debated, whether they should acquaint him with their having those Papers of Information. But they did not think fit to do it for this Reason, because they thought those Papers were a Contrivance, and made by others for him; and that the best Way to get the Truth out of him, would be for him to tell his own Story. Besides, if the House should let him know they had those Papers, he would only refer to those Papers, as he had lately done, when he was examined by the King and Council.

'Twas also debated, whether there should be any threatening Words used towards him; but they thought that not proper; for his Confession ought to be free and natural. It was also debated, whether they should take Notice of his Majesty's Consent; but that was not thought fit, being thought derogatory to the Privileges of the House. So the House ordered him to be called in again; and Mr. Speaker delivered the Sense of the House to him in these Words.

Sir John Fenwick at the Bar.

Mr. Speaker. Sir John Fenwick, the House has considered of what you have said, to excuse your making a Discovery of your Knowledge of the Designs and Practices of the Enemies of the Government; and they think what you stand upon is only an Excuse; they think you have no Reason to apprehend the King should be angry with you for making any Discovery to this House, this being the proper Place to enquire of all Things that do relate to the King and Government, especially his Majesty's Safety; and you ought to discover to them what you know. As to what you stand upon, that you should not be prejudiced by what you discover here, I am commanded to tell you, they do take Notice by what you have said here, that you have already, notwithstanding what you say, discovered it to the King and Council: And they command me to tell you, that you have no Reason at all to apprehend, that you shall suffer any thing if you make a full and free Discovery here; no Man that ever did so, and dealt candidly with this House, ever did: 'Tis in your Power to deserve the Favour of the House; 'tis requir'd by the House, that you make a Discovery; and this is the last Time that you are like to be asked to do it.

Sir John Fenwick. Mr. Speaker, I know not what Answer to make to this House; I would not willingly offend it; what I have informed the King of, is a great deal; and a Man would have some little Time to recollect himself; and I have been kept a very close Prisoner, and had no Conveniency of Pen, Ink, and Paper; 'tis hard to remember just of a sudden; and I would willingly be secure his Majesty will not be angry with me. I was in hopes that his Majesty would have informed the House himself; he hath all that I know; my Circumstances are hard, I am in danger every Day to be tried, and I desire to be secured, that what I say shall not rise up in Judgment against me; 'tis hard to make me accuse my self under these Circumstances, and very hard to put me on it now.

Mr. Speaker. As to what you say relating to the Fear of his Majesty's Displeasure, and the other Excuse, you have had your Answer already. As to what you say relating to Time, if you will now declare what you know and remember, the House will take it into Consideration, whether they will give you farther Time to make up the rest.

Sir John Fenwick. Sir, his Majesty hath all exactly; 'tis impossible for me to inform you of it without accusing my self: I do not really know what to ask but a little Time, if they would please to give it me.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, you know already what the House requires of you.

Sir John Fenwick. I do: But 'tis no Excuse that I have made: What I have told is Truth, to the best of my Knowledge: I am not very good at Speaking; and if I might have a little Time, I shall do what they please to command me.

Mr. Speaker. If that be all you have to say, if you please to withdraw, you shall know the Pleasure of the House.

Sir John Fenwick withdraws. Is called in again.

Mr. Speaker. Sir John Fenwick, this House have considered what you stood upon when you were here last, that your Memory was bad, and that you desired Time; but the House think it a Matter of great Moment to the King and whole Nation, that those that are their Enemies should be discover'd as soon as possible; and this being a Matter within your Knowledge, the House do not think fit to give you Time; but if they find by your Discovery, that you deal candidly and ingenuously with them, and have told them as much as you know upon your Memory, they will consider of your Request of giving you Time for the rest.

VOL. V.

Sir John Fenwick. When first I spake to the Privy-Counsellor, I propos'd it to him, whether I might have a Pardon without being an Evidence against any Man; and in that Case I would serve the King so as to tell him all that I knew. It was upon Honour that I did it to him, and he took the Words in Writing from me, and sent them to the King in Flanders. The King's Answer was, That he made no Objection as to my being an Evidence, nor his giving me a Pardon; but that I could expect no Pardon 'till he knew what I could say: Upon that, I was encouraged to do what I did for his Majesty's Service; and I have found in all my Business since, whatever I do or say, the Answer is, 'Tis not satisfactory, and I am where I was. When this was done, there was a Message sent to me from the Lords Justices, That this was not satisfactory, and I must tell all I know: Now when a Man hath told all he knows, and this must still be the Answer, 'tis very hard. The King's Answer was, That I should more fully make good what I had said. Sir, I did afterwards explain what I had informed that honourable Person, and still it was not satisfactory. I hope I shall not find this from this honourable House: I am upon my Life, and I hope this House will consider of it: I know this House is good Security if I had it; but 'till I have it, I am under these Circumstances, and I may at last be told all is not satisfactory: I desire the House will please to consider of it.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, you know the Pleasure of the House, you know what they require of you.

Sir John Fenwick. I am very unwilling to offend the House; but these are very hard Circumstances, to be told, when I have done all I can, 'tis not satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, you know what the House does expect; you must either give them Satisfaction in it, or withdraw.

Accordingly he withdrew.

And a Motion was made for Leave to bring in a Bill to attain Sir John Fenwick of High-Treason; and after a Debate thereupon, the House divided.

The same Day the House order'd, That Sir John Fenwick should have a Copy of the Order for reading the Bill the second Time, and a Copy of the Bill; and that he should be allow'd Pen, Ink, and Paper.

And further order'd, That Mr. Attorney-General, and Mr. Solicitor-General, should prepare and produce the Evidence against him on Friday Morning.

And Mr. Speaker this Day acquainted the House, that he had received a Letter from Mr. Fuller, which he thought fit to acquaint the House with; but upon a Question for reading of it, it passed by a very great Majority in the Negative; so that there was no Division upon that Matter, but the Letter was writ in the Words following:

SIR,

I Presume that no Person whatever, in the Interest of the present Government, hath been more actually engaged with Sir John Fenwick than my self, it being my Fortune several Times to bring Letters to him from the late King and Queen at St. Germain's, and to carry his Answers: I have also been with him at private Consults of the late King's Adherents, as my Informations assert; so that if I may be serviceable to the detecting his Treasons, I shall be very ready to serve the Government, and to demonstrate my Integrity.

I am, Sir,

Your Honour's most humble and devoted Servant,

W. Fuller.

Martis 10 die Novembris, 1696.

Sir John Fenwick sent the Speaker a Letter in these Words,

SIR,

Newgate, Nov. 10.

I Would have address'd my self in the humblest Manner I could to the Honourable House of Commons, from whom I received a Copy of a Bill against me with their Order; but my Keeper will not carry any Paper from me but to your self, to whom I durst not presume to send a Petition to deliver for me. Therefore I beg the Favour you will please to acquaint the House, that it is my humble Petition to them, That they would give Leave for my Counsel Sir Francis Pemberton, Sir Thomas Powis, and Sir Bartholomew Shower, to come to me, with my Solicitor, Christopher Dighton, to advise with alone. The Keeper will not so much as let me send the Copy of the Bill and Order to my Solicitor, so it is of no Use to me: I humbly beg they will please to give Order, that I may have all Assistance that is necessary for me, and that you will pardon this Trouble from, Sir,

Your most humble Servant,

JOHN FENWICK.

Upon this Letter they did readily order that he should be allowed two Counsel to make his Defence, and that they might be alone with him; and after some Debate, did give Leave that he might have the Solicitor he desired, though it was said, his Solicitor was a very great Jacobite; and it was insinuated, that he was suspected to be concern'd in the Escape of Goodman; but it was also said, that he had been made use of as his Solicitor to prepare for his Trial, and before that, in other Matters; and so that it might not be thought that there was any Hardship upon him, in that Respect, the House thought fit to allow Mr. Dighton to be his Solicitor.

Jovis 12 die Novembris, 1696.

A Petition was presented from Sir John Fenwick, as follows:

To the Honourable the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeesses in Parliament assembled,

The humble Petition of Sir John Fenwick, Bar.

Sheweth,

THAT there being a Bill of Attainder brought into this House for the Attainting of your Petitioner of High-Treason, and your Petitioner is advised, That there are many weighty Reasons to be offered against the said Bill;

Your Petitioner therefore most humbly prays, That your Honours will be pleased to bear him by his Counsel against the Passing of the said Bill at the Bar of this Honourable House; and to appoint such Time for the same, as to your Honours shall seem meet. And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

J. FENWICK.

Which Prayer of his Petition was granted.

Veneris 13 die Novembris, 1696.

Sir John Fenwick was brought to the House (by Order) from the Prison of Newgate; and there being a very great Company of Strangers, both in the Lobby and Speaker's Chamber; and the House being full of Members, to prevent the Inconvenience that such a Number of People crowding in might occasion, the Lobby was ordered to be cleared of all Persons that were not concerned, and also the Speaker's Chamber, and that the Back-door of the same should be lock'd, and the Key laid upon the Table: But it having been said, that the Lords did admit the Members of this House to hear their Debates; there was private Intimation given the Serjeant to let them remain in the Speaker's Chamber, when others were remov'd.

Then Sir John Fenwick was order'd to be brought to the Bar: But it being a Proceeding of that Nature, that none of the ancientest Members could give a Precedent, it was necessary to settle some Preliminaries; and the first Question that was moved, was, Whether the Mace ought to lie upon the Table when Sir John Fenwick was in the House, or whether the Serjeant ought not to stand by him with it at the Bar?

Mr. Smith. Sir John Fenwick being a Prisoner, the Mace ought to be at the Bar, and then no Member can speak.

Mr. Boyle. This Hearing of any Thing I can think of, is most like the Hearing of an Election; and then the Mace is upon the Table, and every one has Liberty to speak and ask Questions.

Mr.

* Mr. Charles Montague. Mr. Chanc. of Excheq. The Mace ought not to be upon the Table, because he is a Prisoner: The Sheriffs of London can't have him in Custody here, and so they deliver him into Custody of the Serjeant.

Mr. J. Howe. That Argument would be good, if he could not be in Custody of the Serjeant unless he had the Mace in his Hand.

Mr. Brotherton. The Mace ought to be upon the Table, because the Bill is to be read.

Mr. Cbr. Musgrave. The Mace ought to be upon the Table. Never any Bill was read but the Mace was upon the Table.

Col. Granville. If the Mace be not upon the Table, it would be a great Hardship to the Members that they cannot speak, and a great Hardship upon the Prisoner that he can't ask any Questions. My Lord Torrington was brought Prisoner from the Tower, and upon Account of his Quality the House did not let him go to the Bar: But while he was in the House, the Mace was upon the Table, and he gave an Account of the whole Campaign; and every Body was at Liberty to ask what Questions they pleased.

* Sir Tho. Trevor. Mr. Att. Gen. The Matter is very new; and I think 'tis necessary you resolve upon the Method before you call in the Counsel, that you may acquaint the Counsel with it: I think it not proper that the Mace should be upon the Table, because he is a Prisoner; though it may not be necessary that the Serjeant should have it upon his Shoulders all the Time, but he may ease himself. I believe you will ask Sir John Fenwick what he has to say, but no Questions to make him accuse himself: And I humbly propose it to you, that after the Counsel is called in, they may open the Nature of the Evidence against Sir John Fenwick; and then, whether you will permit them to go on, or they shall withdraw, and the House will consider what Questions shall be asked.

Col. Mordaunt. I hope the Questions will be taken down upon a Paper by the Speaker, and then read to us, that we may see if they be right, and so asked by the Speaker.

Sir Will. Williams. If the Mace is not upon the Table our Mouths are muzzled: We are in the Nature of Judges; and shall we pass a Vote that the Judges shall not ask any Questions?

Sir Tho. Dyke. I can't be informed without asking of Questions: I know not whether you are a House without it, without having the Mace upon the Table. And will you act in your highest Capacity without being a House? I do not know how it was when the Lord Torrington was here; but when the Duke of Leeds was here, the Mace was upon the Table.

Mr. Boyle. I wish you had appointed a Committee to have settled the Preliminaries, and that the Bill had not been brought in at all; what they labour, as a Matter to avoid Delay, may occasion more. For though when you carry the Mace to the Table, no Member should have the Liberty to speak, yet any Member hath Liberty to desire that the Counsel may withdraw, and then they must withdraw, and the Mace must be brought upon the Table.

Mr. Chanc. of Excheq. That Gentleman is certainly in the right: But I think the Mace must not be upon the Table till when the Prisoner is here; and I think the Questions must be ask'd by the Chair.

The longest Examinations that I remember was of the Admiralty, and then the Questions were asked by the Chair. For the Instance of my Lord Torrington, 'tis true, he had not the Mace with him, but he came at his own Request, he came to give you an Account of his Proceedings; and in that Case not a Question was asked by any Member; any Member hath Liberty to propose any Question, but it must be ask'd by the Chair.

Afterwards the Question was put, and it passed, That Sir John Fenwick should stand with the Mace at the Bar.

Then a Question arose about reading of the Bill: Some Gentlemen said, it could not be read when the Counsel was present, for the Mace would be off the Table; (and they seemed to be under a Difficulty by having passed the last Question;) others said, it was not necessary to read it whilst Sir John Fenwick was present, he having had a Copy of it; but at last it was thought reasonable, it being in the Nature of a Charge upon him, that it should be read to him when present with his Counsel; and 'twas said, it was done so in the Case of Indictments, tho' Copies were delivered to them: But it should be read only as a Matter of Form, as a Charge to which he was to answer; but it could not be reckoned a second Reading, according to the Rules of the House, the Mace being off the Table; and therefore it should be read again when the Counsel and he was withdrawn.

And it was said, that the Journals did take notice, that in some Cases, as in the Case of an adjourned Debate, some Bills had been read four times; and so it was agreed, and that Difficulty was solved.

And the Serjeant took the Mace, and brought Sir John Fenwick to the Bar; and Counsel was admitted for him, and for the Bill, viz.

Mr. Serjeant Gould, King's Serjeant, and Mr. Recorder Lovel, likewise King's Serjeant. And Sir Thomas Powis, and Sir Bartholomew Shower, for Sir John Fenwick.

And Mr. Speaker opened the Matter thus.

Mr. Speaker. Sir John Fenwick, the House have received Information that you have been in a horrid Conspiracy against the Life of his Majesty, and for bringing in a French Force to invade this Kingdom, that you have been indicted thereof; and they have considered the Nature of the Crime with which you stand charged, and how destructive it would have been (if it had succeeded) to the very Being of this Kingdom; and therefore, that you may not go unpunished, if you are guilty, have ordered a Bill to be brought into this House to attain you for High-Treason, which hath been once read, and will be now read to you at the Bar; and then you will hear the Evidence against you, and have Liberty to make your Defence: And though you cannot claim any Right thereto, this House (to shew how ready they are to favour you, in giving you any reasonable Help to make your Defence) do allow you Counsel to assist you therein; and having granted you this their Favour, they do expect that you will make a good Use of it. I am likewise to acquaint those that are your Counsel, that this House do reckon their own Prudence will so guide them, as not to give any just Offence to this House; and that they will not be allowed to question the Power of Parliaments to pass Bills of Attainder, when they judge it requisite; of which this House is more proper to judge than any private Person, and therefore they will not allow you to debate that Point.

Let the Bill be read.

[Clerk of the House of Commons reads.]

Whereas Sir John Fenwick, Bart. was, upon the Oaths of George Porter, Esq; and Cordel Goodman, Gent. at the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer held for the City of London, on the 28th Day of May, 1696. indicted of High-Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death and Destruction of his Majesty, and adhering to his Enemies, by consulting and agreeing with several Persons (whereof some have been already Attainted, and others not yet brought to their Trial for the said Treason) at several Meetings, to send Robert Charnock, since attainted and executed for High-Treason, in conspiring to assassinate his Majesty's Sacred Person (whom God long preserve) to the late King James in France, to invite and encourage the French King to invade this Kingdom with an armed Force, by promising to join with and assist him with Men and Arms upon such Invasion. And whereas the said Sir John Fenwick did obtain his Majesty's Pardon to have his Trial delayed from Time to Time, upon his repeated Promises of making an ingenuous and full Confession of his Knowledge of any Design or Conspiracy against his Majesty's Person or Government, and of the Persons therein concerned. And whereas he has so far abused his Majesty's great Clemency and Indulgence therein, that, instead of making such Confession, he hath contrived and forged false and scandalous Papers as his Informations, reflecting on the Fidelity of several Noble Peers, divers Members of the House of Commons, and others, only by Hearsay; and contriving therein to undermine the Government, and create Jealousies between the King and his Subjects, and to stifle the real Conspiracy. And whereas Cordel Goodman, one of the Witnesses against the said Sir John Fenwick, to prove the said Treason, lately and since the several Times appointed for the Trial of the said Sir John Fenwick, at one of which Times the said Sir John Fenwick had been accordingly tried, had it not been for the Expectation of the said Discoveries so often promised, is withdrawn; so that the said Cordel Goodman cannot be had to give Evidence upon any Trial. Be it Enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That the said Sir John Fenwick is hereby Convicted and Attainted of High-Treason, and shall suffer the Pains of Death, and incur all Forfeitures as a Person attainted of High-Treason.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, the House expects from you, and Mr. Serjeant Lovel, that you open the Evidence you have to prove the Suggestions of the Bill.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. Mr. Speaker, we are here in Obedience to your Commands, to give an Account of the Charge, and likewise of the Evidence of the Fact, that is against this Gentleman, Sir John Fenwick. The Charge against Sir John Fenwick is for High-Treason, and High-Treason of the highest Degree; 'tis no less than a Design of deposing the King, and subverting the Government, and subjecting it to a French, arbitrary, and slavish Power. It further charges, that in Prosecution of this Conspiracy, he hath met, together, with several others, who have consulted, consented, and agreed together, to bring in a French Army upon us; and in order to that, as a particular Overt-Act, it is charged, that they contrived to send one to the late King James to bring in a French Power upon us. It is charged likewise, that he conspired to levy War upon us, and for that Purpose did provide Pistols, and other warlike Arms. This I take to be the Substance of the Charge, as laid in the Indictment.

Now, may it please you, Mr. Speaker, as for the Evidence of the Fact charged and alledged in this Indictment: It is no Secret certainly to any at this Time of Day (after so many Trials, so many Convictions, so many Attainders) that for some Years last past there hath been a wicked Conspiracy to bring in a French Power upon us, to subvert this good Government, and to depose the King; but God Almighty, by special Providence, hath always prevented and disappointed them. We know ever since the Business of la Hogue (in which, even by a Miracle, God disappointed them) they have been still restless, and have been industrious to set up again this Design; and for this have plotted to bring in a French Power, and have not had any Regard to the King's Mercy shewed to them, and that in passing several Acts of Parliament, but have still persisted in the same Designs.

As to the Charge upon this Gentleman at the Bar, we shall shew you that in Time: In the Year 1694. for several Months there was a Conspiracy carried on, but did not take Effect; afterwards, in Time, I think the Beginning of June, or latter End of May, there were several Consults, or Meetings, at the King's Head Tavern at the Upper End of Leadenball-street, where this Gentleman that now stands charged at the Bar was present; there were several Gentlemen, and among the rest (as it hath and will appear upon Evidence) there was Sir John Fenwick, my Lord Montgomery, and several others, whereof Captain Porter and Goodman were there likewise present: It was then proposed, that one Charnock (since executed, and agreed upon by all to be present) should go over into France to the late King James, to communicate to him their Resolution and Sincerity in being serviceable to him in levying War here to depose the King, and subvert the Government; who was to intercede with the French King, so that there might be Forces sent from France. But after this, Charnock (present still this Gentleman) comes and proposes this thing again, and tried whether they were sincere and real in their former Resolutions. To which they all replied, and did agree and assent, that it should be done, and they were very zealous in the Matter, and the Forces were at that Time proposed. And what was that? Why truly, no less than 8000 Foot, and 2000 Dragoons of French, with an Assurance of 2000 Horse from this Country. Charnock did go into France, and did communicate this Matter; and after he had communicated this Matter he came back, and brought Answer, that King James had endeavoured to answer their Expectations, but at that Time the French King could not spare his Forces, but however returned his Thanks to them.

This passed on till towards Christmas last; then comes over Sir George Barclay upon this Expedition, and there was a Commission prepared for that Purpose: And as to one Part, he brought along with him a Detachment of some of King James's Guards, who was to assassinate the King. The next Part was for raising a Rebellion; now that fell to Sir John Fenwick's Part. As to the assassinating Part, you have had several Examples made already. This we have Evidence to prove; and if we prove this Matter as we have opened it, then I think there is no Person whatsoever, but will agree that this is High-Treason in the highest Degree. Now, Sir, here stands our Matter: Here was an Indictment found according to the Law you made last Sessions of Parliament, by two Witnesses to one Species of Treason against Sir John Fenwick; we have one of these Witnesses here viva voce: But Sir John Fenwick hath protracted his Trial by frequent Assurances of making a Discovery, which hath terminated in what you have already mentioned in your Bill; by Means of which, Sir John Fenwick hath not been try'd; whereas he had been try'd in course, without these Applications, and found guilty: But now he hath had all this Time, that Goodman is withdrawn is plain, and we think (but that we must leave to the Judgment of this honourable House) may be reasonably supposed, by Contrivance, to take off this Prosecution of Sir John Fenwick. For why? The Inference is from a Fact that we shall prove to this honourable House: There hath been the like Attempt upon Captain Porter, but Captain Porter hath been more steadfast; he hath been so resolved, that he stood his Ground; and, to speak the Truth, notwithstanding he hath been highly attempted: For we shall prove to you, that one Clancy comes to Captain Porter, and tempts him to withdraw into France, with Assurance of a Pardon, and he hath Three Hundred Pounds paid him in Hand, and Three Hundred more he was to be paid when he should come into France, to be remitted by Bills of Exchange: Besides, he was to have 300 l. a Year; 100 l. from my Lord Aylebury, 100 l. from my Lord Montgomery, and the other 100 l. a Year from Sir John Fenwick, and this to be an Annuity during his Life: And thus far we suspect Sir John Fenwick may be concerned; for his Lady came) he did not come personally, but his Lady did) and gave her Honour and Assurance, that it should be all performed, and much more, if he would withdraw himself.

Captain Porter presently made a Discovery of this, and takes the 300 l. which was paid down; upon this it hath been so far proceeded, that Clancy hath been indicted for it, and convicted, and hath received Judgment, and I suppose there hath been Execution: We have the Record of all these Proceedings.

We have this Circumstance farther in the Case, (which it is my Duty to open to this House) to shew what Labour there hath been to stifle the Truth of the Fact, upon taking of Sir John Fenwick: There was one Webber taken with him, and he slid a Letter into one Fowl's Hand, and this was to be sent to my Lady Fenwick: And what is the Import of this Letter? The Import of it is (they could not prevail with Porter, as I opened just now, therefore) you must influence the Jury, get two or three stout Jurymen to starve the rest, for we have nothing else to depend upon: These Things we shall humbly offer to prove, according to our Duty, and according to the Order of this House, and then leave Sir John Fenwick to make his Defence.

Mr. Recorder. Sir, in what I say, I shall endeavour, as I ought to do, to pursue the Method of this Bill: And first, I will take Notice, that it is the Pleasure and Direction of this House, that we should attend this House this Day, to produce the Evidence against Sir John Fenwick.

The Crime for which he stands indicted is High-Treason: I presume the learned Gentlemen on the other Side will not deny, but that the compassing and conspiring the Death and Destruction of the King, is High-Treason; and that to endeavour it, or shew it by an Overt-Act, to cause a foreign Power to invade the Realm, or to hold Correspondence, or adhere to the King's Enemies, is likewise High-Treason; and therefore I shall not trouble the House to say any thing to it one way or another, because I believe they will not deny it.

In the next Place the Bill does take Notice, that Sir John Fenwick hath been indicted at the Old-Baily in May, 1696. Sir, by the Law of this House of Parliament made last Sessions, no Man ought to be indicted of High-Treason without two Witnesses; pursuant to that Law, Sir John Fenwick hath been indicted upon the Oaths of two Witnesses, Captain Porter (whom we have here) and Goodman (whom we then had, and he did swear) and upon the Evidence of these two Witnesses the Jury found the Bill.

We have this farther Matter: For before the Time the Bill was presented to the Grand-Jury, there was an Examination taken both of Porter and Goodman in Writing, and I think it was before a worthy Member of this House, to whom I appeal in this Case, and in those Informations (if I mistake not) the same Informations they gave against Sir John Fenwick as they gave against Mr. Cook; and upon the Trial of Cook they were sworn, and did justify and verify the Informations they gave before: And then, if you please, we shall call Witnesses to prove, that upon the Trial of Cook, Porter and Goodman gave that Evidence that did equally affect Sir John Fenwick (for he was then withdrawn, and could not be taken); and the Evidence was, That Cook, Sir John Fenwick, with my Lord Aylebury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Friend, Cbarnock, Goodman and Porter, were all together at a Consult especially appointed for the carrying on these traitorous Purposes; they gave the Court a great deal of Trouble, whether Goodman was there at that Time, and they did call some Servants of the House that did prevaricate, but the Court was thoroughly satisfied, and it hath appeared more plainly since, that they did abuse the Justice of the Court, for that Goodman was undoubtedly there. Sir, Cook upon the Trial was convicted, and had Judgment of Death. And, Sir, he is attainted; but it does not become me to say, why he is not executed: His Majesty, no doubt, hath great Reason for it. But this I may say, being present at the Trial, nothing was made more plain; and Sir John Fenwick appeared to be equally concerned.

To shew Sir John Fenwick is guilty, I crave leave to add this, he did withdraw himself, and fled, and was enquired after with Diligence; and at last he was found.

We shall make good all we have with, by Evidence (we hope) to the Satisfaction of this House.

Mr. Speaker. If you please, Mr. Baker, that is Solicitor for the King in this Case, does attend at the Door with all the Papers; we desire that he may be let in.

Mr. Speaker. Serjeant, call in Mr. Baker. (Which was done.)

Mr. Speaker. What do you call Mr. Baker for?

Mr. Serjeant Gould. To give an Account of this Indictment, for we have a true Copy from the Record.

Sir Thomas Powis. Mr. Speaker, since I am here assigned Counsel for the Prisoner, by the Allowance of this Honourable House, upon his Application, without my Privy, I crave Leave humbly to acquaint you, in Behalf of my Client: I take it for granted, that he is, I am sure we that are Counsel for him are, a little surpris'd in what the King's Counsel are going about; for in Truth, we were not aware, nor do we find that any Notice was given to the Gentleman at the Bar, that there would be any Proceeding against him by examining of Witnesses, or giving of Evidence; he had (it seems) the Vote of the House sent to him, and likewise a Copy of the Bill; but I could not understand that the House had given Notice that he should be prepared by Witnesses, if he had any, or be at Liberty to produce them. Nor was there the least Notice to him, that there would be a Proceeding against him by Way of giving Evidence. He did, as I find, humbly apply himself, by Petition, that he might be heard by Counsel, against the passing of the Bill, and I shall very carefully observe those Directions you gave us, which I hope we should not have stood in need of, but have behaved our selves as becomes us, and not have drawn in question the Power of Parliaments: I never had a Thought to do such a thing; but this I humbly lay before you for your Consideration, whether, without any sort of Notice, that I perceive, he had from this House to make his Defence to any Evidence, and consequently there could be no need of Witnesses on his Behalf; whether you will so proceed, unless he had had Forewarning to provide himself otherwise than by the printed Votes, which (I suppose) he had no Opportunity of seeing; and, whether, within the Words you are pleas'd to acquaint us with, we may be heard as to the Reasonableness of this Proceeding, that by and by we must crave Leave to speak unto.

Mr. Speaker. Sir John Fenwick did petition, it is true, that he might be heard by Counsel at the Bar against passing the Bill; but he likewise petitioned for Counsel and a Solicitor; and the Answer from the House was, That he should be allowed Counsel to make his Defence.

Sir Tho. Powis. Yes, Sir, I have seen the Order of the House; and truly there did not any Thing occur from it to me, that it should be expected that he should produce Witnesses; for he praying that he might be heard against passing of the Bill, and the Order of the House being that he might have Counsel for making his Defence, I did not apprehend that it empower'd us so to be prepar'd as to bring Witnesses, especially there being no Notice given to him to bring Witnesses, nor no Way for him to compel them to come here.

Sir Bart. Shower. Mr. Speaker, we do acknowledge that we are so far ready as to offer some Considerations against the Reasonableness of the Bill, not against such Bill in general, but against Sir John Fenwick in particular, and upon those Suggestions in the Bill; but in respect of his making his Defence against Matter of Fact, and to answer the Charge of the Bar, we are not ready. The first Time we had Notice that Sir John Fenwick should attend, or be brought to the Bar, was last Night at Nine or Ten a-Clock at Night; 'tis true, the Order said the King's Counsel should produce Evidence for the Bill upon this Day; but it was not order'd that there should be Evidence produced for Sir John Fenwick, or at that Time that he should be personally present: We are ready, with Submission, to offer what we have to say against the passing of this Bill, upon the Suggestions made in the Bill, as Sir John Fenwick's Case is there represented; but to answer them in respect of Truth or Falshood, that we are not prepared to do: Whether you will hear them to that, before you have heard us, in the other Particular, that we submit to you.

Note. This Order was made the Day before at the Rising of the House.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, you had Notice on Wednesday last, that Sir John Fenwick should have Liberty to make his Defence by Counsel; and if you had doubted whether he should be admitted to do it by Witnesses, you might have applied to have known the Pleasure of the House: But if that be what you stand upon, if you will withdraw, you shall know the Pleasure of the House.

Mr. Serj. Gould. I must confess we depended on it, and expected no other Thing than the Bar Evidence. This was our Order, and I apprehended that the Petition meant the same Thing: For, as I remember, it was an Order likewise that the King's Counsel should produce the King's Evidence: What Reason was there for that Evidence, unless Sir John was to apply himself to answer it?

Mr. Recorder. I beg your Leave to observe with what Reason the Counsel on the other Side make this Objection; when 'tis the Import of this Bill, that Sir John Fenwick is guilty of High-Treason: And your Order says, They are to be heard against the Bill, that is to say, they are to be heard against the High-Treason charg'd upon him by this Bill. Therefore the House did direct us to produce the Evidence against Sir John Fenwick, to verify the Suggestions of this Bill: And so I cannot apprehend what can be more proper at this Time, but to prove the Fact against Sir John Fenwick; and 'tis their Business to defend it as well as they can.

Sir Tho. Powis. What was said by the learned Gentleman on the other Side, I hope, will be some Reason why we might be of Opinion, that we should not have Occasion to produce Witnesses: And the Truth is, this Bill does no where so much as say, Sir John Fenwick is guilty of High-Treason; and therefore Mr. Recorder was under some Mistake, when he said the Bill charged that he was guilty. The Bill does not any where make such an Allegation; there is nothing but a Recital that he was indicted for such a Treason; and then it recites, That whereas he had protracted his Trial by such Means, and Goodman had withdrawn himself; (but it does not say with his Privy;) and then follows the enacting Part; Be it enacted, &c. So that there is no such Thing as any Allegation that he is guilty, whereby we could imagine that that was the Fact or Question between us. We now offer these Things humbly to you, and shall readily submit to what you think fit to do in it.

Mr. Recorder. Sir Tho. Powis says, That Sir John Fenwick is not charged with his doing any Act, or being guilty of High-Treason; but the Bill takes Notice that he stands indicted for it: Then it will be enough for us to prove, that he stands indicted, unless the House think fit to let us go into the Evidence of his being guilty.

Sir B. Shower. We do not oppose the producing Evidence to prove the Suggestions of the Bill, and the Recitals of the Bill specified: But if they attempt to prove him actually guilty, by living Witnesses, as they have opened it here, that we humbly beg Leave to oppose. But if they think fit to prove the Suggestions of the Bill, that there was an Indictment, that there were Witnesses sworn, and one is withdrawn, and the Promises of making Confession, and his prevaricating in that Matter, we are ready to make our Defence to that.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, you must withdraw before you have the Directions of the House.

Accordingly Sir John Fenwick, and the Counsel of both Sides, withdraw.

And being withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, you have heard what is stood upon by the Counsel for Sir John Fenwick: They say, if you call only Evidence to prove the Suggestions of the Bill, they are ready to answer them; but if you call any Evidence to prove Sir John Fenwick guilty of a Conspiracy, by living Witnesses, they pretend they are not ready, and say, They did not know they should be allow'd Liberty to produce any Witnesses.

Sir Tho. Littleton. Mr. Speaker, the Counsel could not think that the Bill should set forth that Sir John Fenwick was indicted, but that the House would know by what Means; and that Goodman was gone away, and we should not enquire by what Means. What are the Objections by the Counsel against the Bill? Say they, We are ready to give Reasons against the Bill; they do not say down-right against your Jurisdiction: But, say they, we are ready to shew 'tis not reasonable in this Case, as stand Circumstances, to pass this Bill: Sir John's Petition was to be heard down-right against the Bill. If that was your Intention to hear him to that, and to that only, I conceive you would not have worded your Answer as you did: You order'd him Counsel to make his Defence; and at the same Time order'd the King's Counsel to produce the Evidence: How could they understand it, but to make Defence to the Evidence? It may be they have a Mind to have another Fee: Whether you will think fit, in the Circumstances you stand, to give them further Time, I do not know: But the Circumstances of the Kingdom, and the King's Life, must be considered as well as Sir John Fenwick. What is the Meaning that they are not prepared? I suppose it is to have further Time; but I think your Order is so plainly worded, that they could not ignorantly mistake it.

Lord Norryes. I rise up to the Matter of Fact: That Gentleman tells you your Order is plainly worded; 'tis so, if they had timely Notice of it: But the Counsel at the Bar tell you, they had no Notice of this Order till Ten a-Clock last Night.

Mr. Speaker. That noble Lord does mistake; for that which they say they had no Notice of till last Night, was, that Sir John Fenwick should be brought hither; but the Notice that he should be heard by his Counsel for his Defence was sent him the Day before.

Lord Norryes. This very Order, for his Majesty's Counsel to produce the Evidence, was made but upon Thursday.

Mr. Speaker. Then I mistake. But the Order that was made upon his Petition, I sent away immediately: But the Order they mean, I suppose, is that for bringing him hither.

Mr. Cowper. Say the Counsel for Sir John Fenwick, We come prepared to make Defence to every Thing charged in the Preamble of the Bill, but what is not charged, we do not come prepared to make Defence to. Now they conceive the Fact of High-Treason is not charged upon him by the Bill; and if true, it is of great weight; but as it is, 'tis none: For first, 'tis plain, the Preamble recites that he was indicted for High-Treason by the Grand-Jury; that is a Charge of High-Treason within the Bill; for it says, he was charged by the Oaths of his Country upon the Oaths of two Witnesses; and there is the very Overt-Act recited in the Preamble of the Bill. Now, allowing this its due Weight, Can any one think, that fits here as a private Judge, that the High-Treason thus recited, as found by the Grand-Jury, was no Part of his Charge? The very Nature of the Bill speaks; for could any one think, that you would ground a Bill of Attainder upon a Suggestion, that he being indicted of High-Treason, had spirited away one of the King's Evidence, or for giving false Information? So that this is trifling with the House, with Submission.

Sir Rich. Temple. Can any Body say any Thing of the Intention of the House, when 'tis reduced into a Bill? Is it not the Bill that he is to make his Defence to? And the Gentleman that spake, says, that no Body could think otherwise: Why, Sir, no Body is to think otherwise than the Bill states it.

Now the thing before you is, Whether upon the Suggestions of this Bill 'tis fit for you to pass it? The Case of Mortimer was, That he had made his Escape, being under an Indictment of High-Treason; and it came before the House, Whether upon the Statute of 25 E. 3. it was High-Treason: But they did not debate the Fact.

Now you have brought a Bill here, and all the Ground is, that he was indicted for High-Treason, had thus and thus prevaricated and delay'd his Trial, upon Promises of Confession, and in Conclusion, one of the Witnesses is withdrawn: Sir, no Man is to make his Defence but to what is in the Bill; nor can you examine to any Thing but what is suggested in the Bill. If you had put the Issue upon the Guilt of Sir John Fenwick, he must have a fair Trial in some Place, and that he cannot have here upon Oath; for upon all Bills of Attainders they have had a fair Trial above.

Mr. Smith. I always thought when a Bill of Attainder was to pass through this House, that every Man was concerned to hear what Evidence he could, could, to make it appear whether the Person was guilty of the Facts that were alledged against him to condemn him for; and, I take it, the principal thing to be considered is, whether he be guilty of such a Crime as deserves such a Punishment. So that, I take it, the Question now is, Whether Sir John Fenwick hath had that Notice to produce his Evidence, as is convenient? For I think we should lose Time to let Counsel ramble upon the Reasonableness of our Proceedings; the Question is, Whether he is guilty of the Fact? Sir, I can never think the Counsel could understand your Order, when it says, to make his Defence, but it must be to the Fact upon which he is to be condemned. You have already determined that Point, as to his prevaricating, but that is not the Matter that shall make me find him guilty; but the Evidence that will weigh with me is the Evidence of High-Treason, and how far they can answer it.

Mr. Hooper. The Question is, Whether or no there be a sufficient Guilt laid to this Man's Charge? For in all Courts of Judicature this is a certain Rule, You must proceed secundum Allegata & Probata; and you shall not go about to prove a Thing unless it be alledged. Now the Question is, Whether this Thing be alledged in the whole Bill, that Sir John Fenwick is guilty of High-Treason? And if not, you will go about to prove what is not alledged. 'Tis true, it hath been alledged that a Bill hath been found; but several have been indicted who have been acquitted. It is possible the Prisoner at the Bar may be guilty; but I think we must observe that Method here, that is observed every where else, and that is not to go about to prove any thing that is not alledged.

Mr. Clerk. The learned Gentleman hath made an Objection that perhaps would hold very well in Westminster-Hall: But I suppose he may remember this Bill must have a second Reading before you, as a House; and then perhaps the Allegations may be different from what they are now. But the principal Matter before you is, Whether this Gentleman be guilty of High-Treason, or no? And if they did not prepare to that Part, I think they were negligent to their Client; for it appears to be that Part that is most sensibly like to affect him.

Mr. Howe. The more I hear the Matter debated, the more it seems strange to me. I have heard the Bill read, and took Notice of the Heads of it: I always understood the Preamble of the Bill to be the Inducement to the End of it; I was mightily surprized to hear the King's Counsel attempt to make good—I think they did not speak materially to one Point of the Allegations in the Bill, so that the Allegations do signify nothing: Or else, if they intended these Allegations should signify any thing, we must have these Allegations proved before we pass our Judgments upon the Bill: Whereas the Counsel, instead of endeavouring to prove that he was indicted for High-Treason, (tho' hinted at) would prove him guilty of High-Treason; instead of proving that he had prevaricated, they say not one Word of it; instead of proving that he has forged Papers, in order to alienate the Minds of the King's Subjects, they say nothing to it, tho' in the Bill it is alledged as High-Treason.

We must not go here upon private Fancies and Opinious; no Man that heard my Lord De-lamere's Trial but believed him to be guilty of the Fact; yet he was acquitted, because there was not Evidence sufficient against him. I think you must stick to one of these Points; if you stick to this, to prove him guilty of High-Treason, you must alter the Bill; and then that must be proved out of the Mouths of two Witnesses. If you please to stick to the Bill, then I hope the King's Counsel will go on to prove the Allegations of it, or let us know why they do not: I shall no more give my Vote to hang him, because he is indicted of High-Treason, than I shall because he hath been in Newgate.

Mr. Sloane. I think a great deal of your Time in debating this Matter may be saved; though I will allow the Bill might have been drawn better, and that a Bar-Indictment is not a sufficient Ground of it self for a final Decision of this Matter: But when at the Time of the finding the Indictment there were two Witnesses, and one of them is withdrawn, and as is supposed by his Means; if the Bill seems imperfect for any thing before you now, you will not stay all the Proceedings upon it; but if you see it imperfect, and it may be amended, you will amend it at the Committee. I think the Favour you have given is abused, and that 'tis perfect trifling from the Bar. In one Breath they say, they could not get ready, for they had no Notice 'till last Night; and in the next Place they say, they will go on to every thing but his being guilty; and I believe they never will be prepared for that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir, I am very unwilling to speak any thing in this Matter; because, Sir, by the Place I have the Honour to serve his Majesty in, as one of his Counsel, if it was in the Courts below, I must prosecute on Behalf of the King: But I am very sensible while I am in this House, I am in another Capacity; I am to vote here as a Judge, and not as a Party.

That which I do now trouble you about, is in Relation to the Matter that hath been objected; That the Bill does not expressly affirm, that Sir John Fenwick was guilty of High-Treason, but only that he was indicted for it. Truly I thought, and do still, with humble Submission to the House, that that Matter of affirming him to be guilty of High-Treason was not to be inserted in the Bill; for that will be the Consequence of your Judgment, and Opinion, upon hearing of the Evidence. That worthy Member that spake last said, the Bill might be better drawn; I am sorry we had not his Assistance in it: But, with Submission to his Understanding, I think that had been too much Presumption, 'till you are satisfied whether he was guilty or no. We could only go so far as to set forth the Faults that we knew; as, that he was indicted, that we can verify, and can't take this to be like the Case of an Indictment; for there you must affirm such and such Things that cannot be altered afterwards. But a Bill in Parliament hath many Steps; you read it several Times, and commit it; so that you alter the Suggestions of the Bill, as the Case appears to you to be verified; and if you be of Opinion that he is not guilty, you will not condemn him because he is indicted: However, that is not immaterial, but proper to be set forth for a Ground of your Proceedings, that there was a Proba-

Probability of his being guilty from that Accusation. Therefore, Sir, I confess I can't think that those Gentlemen that are Counsel for Sir John Fenwick could think, that you did intend to proceed otherwise than to hear Counsel as to the Fact; they could not think that upon Proof of his being indicted, that that would be Ground enough for you to proceed to pass the Bill: For how could any Body think, but you would come to examine the Fact? I can't see how they should come to mistake, unless 'twas wilfully.

Mr. Price. The Matter now debated, is, What Method shall be followed, or what Evidence shall be given upon this Bill; or whether Evidence shall be given of any other Matter than is suggested in the Bill. I must confess, making a false Step at first setting out, hath put us out of the Way hitherto; for in the Case of my Lord Strafford, Witnesses were examined, and Adjudication that he was guilty, before any Order for a Bill of Attainder. But since you are in this Way, consider whether the Counsel against the Bill have gone according to their Order: The Order was, that Counsel should be heard to prove the Suggestions of the Bill, and the Counsel for Sir John Fenwick do not oppose that; but the Counsel for the Bill open more Things than are comprehended in the Suggestions of the Bill: for the Suggestion is only a Recital, and hath no positive Averment. And though the Bill and an Indictment is not the same, yet they must be the same in this, to put a Charge upon the Person. If the Preamble is not to any Purpose, what need they have made any, but have said only, Let him be attainted? To what Purpose does Sir John Fenwick come to the Bar? If it is to any Purpose, 'tis to answer the Charge of the Bill. That learned Person says, to suggest that he is guilty till the Matter is proved, then there must be an Amendment in that Point, and that will make it a new Bill, and then he must have another Day to answer the new Charge: But they might as well have said he was guilty of High-Treason, as to say in the enacting Part, that he should be attainted. Therefore if the Gentlemen for the Bill will proceed and prove the Preamble of the Bill, let them; otherwise let there be another Day for Sir John Fenwick to attend, and let them do all together.

Sir Christopher Musgrave. I think, as to that learned Person, nothing is to be laid to his Charge, for I think they have drawn the Bill pursuant to the Directions; and I am sure if they had drawn it otherwise, before they had known the Sense of the House, I think they had been guilty of a Crime.

That which seems to be before you, is, what was opened by the King's Counsel, and that was to prove the Treason. Now, Sir, I would be glad to know of any Person, whether any thing is to be admitted to be proved at your Bar but what is in your Bill. For let us have a little Regard to the Proceeding in Westminster-Hall: Can any Person, upon an Indictment of High-Treason, offer Evidence of any Treason but what is express'd in the Indictment? And I think this is the same in Effect; for here you draw a Bill of Attainder against Sir John Fenwick, and in Justice you send him a Copy of it, and, with great Favour too, you allow him Counsel to defend himself to that, as to the Suggestions that are in the Bill; otherwise, to what End did you send him the Copy of the Bill? Now if you will admit of any thing to be proved but what is in your Bill, I know not of what dangerous Consequence it may be, for 'tis impossible to be prepared for it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If the Counsel against the Bill could be any way mistaken, or think the Bill defective, I am for giving them longer Time to make their best Defence; but think neither one nor the other of them true; but your Order was to draw a Bill for attainting Sir John Fenwick of High-Treason; and I think if the Bill had gone no farther, but enacted that he should be attainted of High-Treason, we had strictly pursued your Order; for the Preamble is no necessary Part of the Bill.

A Bill and an Indictment are of quite different Natures; there is a Form for an Indictment, but no Precedent for an Act of Parliament.

As to the Preamble, the Debate, when it was ordered, went no farther than that he was accused of High-Treason, and was like to have been brought to his Trial; and to delay it, he pretended to make an ingenuous Confession, and instead of that, there was produced a Paper which you have censured (as you thought fit) and upon that you voted a Bill to be brought in to attain him of High-Treason: What then could be expected more for the Inducement, but the Debate upon which it was ordered?

If this House had thought fit to examine Witnesses before (as now) no doubt but the Bill would have suggested that he was guilty of High-Treason; but 'tis Time enough for you to suggest that, after you have heard what Witnesses there are. If the Counsel did not know this, notwithstanding all that I have said, I am for giving them Time; but (with Submission) it was impossible for them to mistake it: If the Bill had went no farther than, Be it enacted, that he should be attainted of High-Treason, then they had some Colour to say there were different Species of High-Treason, and they could not tell to what particular Facts they must apply themselves: But when the Indictment is recited, which charges him with particular Facts, and tells him by what Witnesses the Bill was found, it was impossible not to know that this was the High-Treason you did intend to enact that he should be attainted for: But when they say they are not ready, truly there may be some Reason for it; for I believe they never will be ready: Sometimes Men will be wilfully mistaken, and sometimes 'tis their Misfortune to be so. They say they are mistaken; which of these are true, I know not, but we have seen already the Time when he hath trifled with the Courts of Justice; he hath delay'd his Trial till one Witness is withdrawn; if you give him longer Time, he may have the good Fortune to have the other gone too. I see no Reason for you to forbear hearing of the Evidence.

Mr. John Montagu. I am not surprized to hear Sir John Fenwick desire Time; for giving him Time is giving him Life; nor for his Counsel to tell you his Witnesses are not ready; 'tis a common Excuse; I hardly ever knew a Person brought upon his Trial, but that was his Excuse; and yet I have seldom known it allow'd as a good Excuse: But 'tis objected, you must go secundum allegat' & probat'; and nothing being in this Bill like what the Counsel for the Bill did open, 'tis not fit to hear them call Witnesses to what is not alledged in the Bill. I grant that; and yet I think they ought to be allowed to call Witnesses to prove every thing they have opened to you: 'Tis agreed they ought not to have brought in a Bill, to say in point blank Terms, he is guilty of High-Treason; but, they say, you should have charged with what Treason he is accused of, and then they should have been admitted to prove it. With Submission, the Bill does that thing; for the Bill does recite, that he is indicted of High-Treason, in compassing, &c. This is the Treason that is charged upon him by this very Bill: Now sure you will permit them to prove what is alledged in the Bill. What did the Counsel for the Bill open? That at several Meetings they met to consult of the Matter that this Bill takes Notice of. Did not he tell you when Charnock came first there for that Purpose, and when Charnock met them again for their Assurance? Now this being so plainly set forth in the Bill here, which recites, that this Matter was proved by two Witnesses, upon the Credit of whose Testimony this Matter was found, and that one of them is gone away; and, say they now, we are ready to prove the Matter then sworn: Is not that proper to satisfy Gentlemens Consciences that won't convict this Man without Evidence?

Sir Fr. Winnington. Mr. Speaker, I humbly conceive the Question is not now, Whether Sir John Fenwick is guilty or no? But, Whether the Objections the Counsel for him have made, be so strong as you will grant what they move to you? They tell you, if Counsel will proceed upon nothing but what is suggested in the Bill, according to your Order, we are ready to make our Defence. It was said the King's Counsel was ordered to give their Evidence; that can have no Interpretation but as to the Matters in the Bill.

Says the King's Counsel, We will prove him guilty: Says the Counsel on the other Side, I hope the House will give us Time to encounter them in that, for you have no such Thing in the Bill; the sending them the Copy of the Bill was as much as to say, You need not prove any thing but what is therein asserted. 'Twas said by the learned Gentleman there, that there might have been an Act of Parliament which might have said only, Be it enacted, that such a Man be attainted, without giving any Reason. I cannot deny but it might be so without any Reason, but I don't believe it will be so. And another learned Person was for mending of the Bill: Says he, When you have the Matter of Fact proved before you, it may lead you to the amending of the Bill, and inserting what you please, and enacting of it; but does not answer what the Counsel said on the other Side? Would you have us answer what we did not know that you would stand upon? The Question is not, Whether he be guilty or no? But, Whether the Objections that are made be good to give them Time?

Col. Granville. Sir, the Counsel (by what I observed from them) have started two Difficulties, and really (to me) both seem very material; the first is, Whether the King's Counsel shall be at Liberty to prove any thing that is not suggested in the Bill: The other is, Whether Sir John Fenwick had due Notice to make his Defence.

The first is a Matter of very great Moment: You are proceeding upon a Bill where not only the Life of Sir John Fenwick, but the Life of every Man in England is in some measure concerned: When a Precedent is made in this Case, No-body knows who may be affected or hurt by it; and therefore I desire you will settle that Matter, and have the Judgment of the House, whether they will admit the Counsel to prove any thing that is not suggested in the Bill: If you will, I do not see how any Man that stands at the Bar of your House, can be prepared to make his Defence. For there shall be one Crime alledged in the Bill, and when he comes to the Bar, the Counsel that are to prosecute, shall go quite off from that which is laid in the Bill, and produce you Evidence to a new Crime; and he stares and looks round him, and you had as good allow him no Counsel, or Copy of the Bill. This you thought so necessary for every Man that was to come upon his Trial for his Life for Treason, that you altered that Trial, and declared no Man should have any Treason proved against him that is not alledged against him in the Indictment.

We have had great Complaints of Westminster-Hall, and if the Parliament should proceed in this manner, may have the same again. If they are too rash in their Proceedings, they will be countenanced mightily in them, if you should proceed against a Man, and condemn him for one Thing, when he is accused of another. I desire to know, how we can proceed in a Bill upon which Sir J. Fenwick is to be proved guilty, and he hath no Opportunity to answer it? I take it, as this Bill is drawn, Sir J. Fenwick's Guilt is no way concerned in it: For whereas the worthy Gentlemen tell you the Treason is specify'd, there is no Treason specify'd, otherwise than he is indicted for it.

Mr. George Rodney Bridges. Sir, I think the proper Question before you is, Whether you will allow Sir J. Fenwick Time to produce such Witnesses as he shall desire for his Justification. 'Tis a little strange to me, that the Gentlemen that are of Sir J. Fenwick's Counsel, should insist upon those Things, to desire farther Time for his Preparation, when (I think) 'tis very plain, they were told what they were to prepare for by the Bill; which was, they were to justify Sir J. Fenwick against those Things he stands indicted for; and the Matter of the Indictment is the Thing to be proved before you, and the Witnesses to make it good are likewise mentioned; one of them is gone, but his Testimony remains upon Oath, not only to the Grand-Jury, but in another Place, that I am told of: I do not think you will think it reasonable, after the King's Counsel have made out their Evidence, to give him Time to make their Observations upon the Charge; so you will consider before you hear the King's Counsel, whether you will allow him farther Time, or no.

Sir Jos. Williamson. Mr. Speaker, the Gentleman that spoke last, states the Case to be, Whether you will think it reasonable to allow Sir J. Fenwick farther Time to produce his Witnesses? You may, Sir, make that the Question; but that will depend upon another, which is, Whether you think that Sir J. Fenwick had not Notice enough to prepare to defend himself against the Charge contained in the Preamble of the Bill? And I add this further, Whether the Manner and Way of expressing that particular Charge in the Bill, is not so worded, so charged, as here expressly to become a Charge that he is to answer for, and not only as a Matter of Fact historically related, not to come in Proof here: For if it proves to be well charged in the Preamble, 'tis a particular
Fact

Fact of Treason he is to answer for in this House; and then he hath had Time enough; so that now you are to judge of your own Way of expressing your selves. I believe every Gentleman knows it was the Sense and Meaning of the House, that those are the particular Treasons mentioned in the Indictment with which he should be charged at the Bar, and have Time and Liberty to defend himself; and not only to the Allegations, that he had been indicted, &c. Now, Sir, if you shall allow these Gentlemen to except against your Way of expressing your selves, that I submit to you: But 'tis clear to me, that this was a very good and proper Way of expressing your selves, to charge him with these Facts, and to give him Liberty to disprove it. If he and his Counsel understood it otherwise, the Question is, Whether their differing with you in the Way of expressing it, shall be allowed to them, without taking a reasonable Exception to it? You are ty'd here to the strict Rules of Justice; but as to the Forms of Proceeding below, I do not think you are. Our Meaning was most certain (though he was indicted, that was nothing to us) that they should bring their Proof to our Bar to prove him guilty; and if you should give him two or three Days Time, you must mend your Bill to their Way of Expression, and to their Sense.

Mr. Brotherton. I take the Question to be now, Whether the King's Counsel should give Evidence of any other Matter than what is alledged in the Bill? As to that I must observe to you, that this Bill does not set forth any particular Charge against him; it does not say, that he such a Day did such a Fact, whereby he can make his Defence; 'tis only the Recital of an Indictment; and it does not say the particular Time and Place where the Fact was done. Now as to what that Gentleman says, if it had been said generally, that he should be attainted, it had been sufficient. 22 H. 8. the Statute for attainting one for putting Poison into a Pot, &c. there is the Day and Year when the Fact was committed; and so he might make his Defence. Then the King's Counsel offer to prove, that this Goodman was convey'd away by Sir John Fenwick; and there is no such Charge in the Bill; for the Bill only says, that he is withdrawn; and I am of Opinion they ought to give Evidence of nothing but what is in the Bill.

Mr. Whitaker. As to the Exceptions made by the Counsel to the Insufficiency of the Bill, by which they pretend Sir John Fenwick was led into an Error, so that he had no due Notice, I must needs say, if they were in Westminster-Hall they would be in the Right: But this House is not bound to those Forms; for I believe the enacting Clause would do the Business of Sir John Fenwick well enough, if all the rest were laid aside; and I will consider it with as much Tendernefs and Conscience for the Prisoner at the Bar, as any that brings Arguments from Westminster-Hall. I would consider, whether such a Defence as they have made, that from the Bill (as to what is laid in it) he had not Notice enough to prepare to make his Answer: They say, a Recital is no direct Affirmation in civil Matters: It is an Affirmation; for to say, Whereas such a one is Bound, is good in a Declaration upon a Bond. Now I would know, whether this be not enough, to say, That he is indicted, without any Allegation that he is guilty? Had the Bill no Recital at all, it had been an Objection; but it may be, it had been such an Objection, that they ought to have done something of their Parts, as to have desired the Opinion of the House to what they should have answered: For suppose there had been no Recital at all (and you may make what Recital you think fit) what should Sir John Fenwick have done? There are some Instances at Common Law: A Man is indicted for being a common Barrater, and there are no Instances given in the Indictment; why then he comes and prays the Court, that they may declare what Instances they will give, and that they may give no other Words in Evidence: Therefore I question not but that should have come on his Part; he is to be heard as to the enacting Part of the Bill; and under Favour, you could do no otherwise. Now if they do offer to give Evidence of any Treason that is not specified in the Recital of the Bill, and the Counsel make an Objection to it, I shall agree with them.

Sir Ed. Seymour. My Lords and you Mr. Speaker, what hath been said to you by that worthy Person that spake last, no doubt, is true; Because many Lords in the Gallery.

That if there had been no more than the enacting Clause, it would have done Sir John Fenwick's Business with a Witness, or rather without a Witness: But that is not the Question we are disputing here; but the Question is, Whether you will give Sir John Fenwick longer Time to make his Defence to that Part he insists on, that is not contained in the Bill. Past Three a-Clock.

You are well satisfied that you cannot go through with the Suggestions to Night, and the Debates, and what relates to it; and I find no Person against putting it off, but because it would be a Delay; and if it be no Delay, that Reason is out of Doors.

They tell you the Counsel could not but take Notice of the Matters suggested in the Indictment: I cannot think that is reasonably argued; because they do know the Practice and Method is such, that they can take Notice of nothing but what is specified and contained in the Bill. And therefore there being no Guilt charged upon Sir John Fenwick in the Bill, is it reasonable they should come and accuse themselves here, or make a Defence to what is not charged? No; but, say they, it is implied: This is an untrodden Path, and you ought to walk as securely in it as you can. 'Tis extraordinary that you bring Sir John Fenwick here to answer for Treason, when 'tis allow'd in the Suggestions of the Bill, you have but one Witness to that Treason; and when you take these extraordinary Steps, you should comply with him as much as you can in the Forms. For if Treason be not Treason unless it be proved by two Witnesses, and you will give him Liberty to make his Defence, I think it no Loss of Time; for you cannot go through the Bill to Night, to see whether Sir John Fenwick be guilty of what is contain'd in the Indictment. And I will give you one Reason why he could not be prepared to make his Defence in so short a Time; for he could not produce his Evidence if he had any; and if you give him longer Time, I suppose you will think fit that Sir John Fenwick should give an Account of what Witnesses he shall make Use of for his Defence; and you will give an Order for those Witnesses.

Mr. Harcourt. If Sir John Fenwick's Business must be done, I hope we shall do it like rational Men, and what we enact, be able to give a reasonable Account of it in the Preamble of the Bill.

As to the Question proposed, your Debates have run several Ways: The first is, Whether Sir John Fenwick shall be allowed further Time? And in this Case, whoever I differ with, 'tis of that Nature that I must desire the Liberty of speaking my Mind. I must confess, I see no Room for enlarging the Time; and I shall humbly submit my Opinion to other Gentlemen, whether he should have further Time to prepare his Witnesses: And for that, pray consider the Nature of the Matter before you.

Sir, there is nothing certain that is alledg'd in the Bill; and should you allow him further Time to answer that which is not alledg'd, I cannot imagine what Effect you would have of it. 'Tis said indeed, he stands indicted; but 'tis no where suggested, that he is guilty of that Indictment. This general Charge seems a great Hardship: There is no one Thing that so many have been unjustly taken off by, as the Uncertainty of alledging general Facts in Indictments of High-Treason; nor has any Thing been complain'd of in such Trials for a greater Grievance. What have you done in the Bill for regulating of Trials in Cases of High-Treason? In that Bill you have reformed that Abuse, and taken Care, that whatever Treason a Man might be guilty of, yet he shall never, upon his Indictment, answer to any Fact, unless the particular Overt-Act be expressly laid and affirmed in his Indictment.

That which seems most reasonable in this Case to be done, is not to enlarge the Time; but when you think fitting to proceed, proceed upon what is before you. Here are some Matters expressly alledg'd; let them go over the Recital, see whether they can prove that; but I cannot imagine to what Purpose you should give the Prisoner further Time to answer nothing; for that which is not charged is so.

Mr. Finch. Mr. Speaker, Sir, this is a Question, in my Opinion, of very great Consequence: You are very well told from below, that this is an untrodden Path; and I am the more confirm'd 'tis so from this Debate.

We are told, that Sir John Fenwick, or his Counsel, could not be ignorant of what they were to prepare themselves for. For this was our Meaning, says one Gentleman, though I find the Path is so untrod we are very unfortunate in expressing of it, for we have not said it at all in this Bill; we have said, Sir John Fenwick was indicted, &c. Sir John Fenwick hath had a Copy of this Bill sent him, Counsel allow'd him, and upon a second Reading he comes to make his Defence. We are told, the Proceeding upon this Bill is not to be resembled to the Proceeding in Westminster-Hall, and this is sufficient in a Bill (tho' in an Indictment it would not) without alledging that Sir John Fenwick is guilty. But one would think, that if Sir John Fenwick is guilty, every Allegation in the Bill, that is, the Inducement to the Bill, which is for attainting him, should be a good and just Ground for the Attainder; and then, this Gentleman that hath had a Copy of the Bill to prepare for his Defence, and shew you Reasons why the Bill should not pass, though our Proceedings are not to be resembled to the ordinary Proceedings, yet we are to expect from him such a Defence as the ordinary Proceedings in Westminster-Hall would require: But I think this is hardly to be expected; one might have thought, and reasonably enough, that it might have come into his Imagination, that if there had been Ground to attain him, by the ordinary Proceedings and Methods of Justice, the Parliament would not have taken an extraordinary Course to come at it: For I can never think it a good Reason to proceed this Way, that is, for the saving of Time; and if there be extraordinary they must guess at that out of the Bill: Now that is grounded upon those Suggestions that I have cited; and then I should have imagined, that whereas he had been indicted upon the Oaths of two Witnesses, as the Law requires, and one of them was withdrawn; that you had rather intended to have charged him with some Contrivance to elude Justice, whereby you had Reason to exert your extraordinary Authority to proceed against him by Way of the Legislative; and I do not find we have any Precedent to warrant this Proceeding, tho' in our Debates we have endeavoured to find one; yet I cannot but observe the Consequence of this hereafter: For whether we can find a Precedent to warrant this Proceeding in former Ages, or not, we are making a Precedent for our Posterity. And consider the Consequence of this Precedent you are making; I think all the Bills in Parliament are grounded by the most serious Ways of Deliberation, before you come to Judgment: And Bills of Attainder ought much more, sure, to require the Seriousness of your Debates; but I cannot but observe the Steps now made; I am afraid there was a wrong Step at first; I was not here the first Day: But I recollect some Things from the Bill it self; the Tenderness of those Things upon which this enacting Clause does stand. Here was no Evidence given to induce the House to bring in this Bill of Attainder; when this Bill is brought in the House, and the Preamble that suggests that which is the Ground of the enacting Part, consider'd in the House; and the House did not think it reasonable to proceed to the Reading of it a second Time; I remember we were told, Won't you read it a second Time, when you may have an Opportunity of having those Suggestions prov'd to you? This was the Ground why this Bill was read a second Time. For consider, otherwise a Gentleman may in any other Case as well as this, desire Leave to bring in a Bill for attainting such a one; and tell you, you shall have a good Reason given to you for it afterwards; and tho' the Reasons suggested in the Bill, are not sufficient, you may have Reasons out of the Bill that are sufficient. What a Precedent will this be! Why, Sir, Length of Time gives a Sanction to those Precedents which the Age that makes them think not of; and they become good Examples to Posterity, that were even very heinous Precedents to the present Times. Now if this shall stand, as now in the Bill, I would ask, what Man in England is secure when a Parliament shall arise that hath a Mind to attain him? Why then, Sir, if you do amend the Bill, consider the Method of your Proceedings; you do your selves, in effect, declare, that for bringing in of the Bill, for twice reading of the Bill, you had no Ground at all; for otherwise you had good Grounds recited in the Bill, and that must be a sufficient Ground to attain him; and if you declare it no sufficient Ground to attain him, you declare you have brought in a Bill, and read it twice, without any Ground. Whether you will allow Liberty to offer at your Bar any Suggestions otherwise than in the Bill, that I must submit to you; and for giving Time, since that is a Question of a very extraordinary Nature; but have have humbly offered my Thoughts, whether any thing shall be offered otherwise than is suggested in the Preamble of the Bill? I hope you will not, for the Precedent sake you are now making; which if you do, I am afraid Bills of Attainder may become now as frequent as Bills of Attainder were in Richard II's Time; which I hope never shall be.

Lord Norreys. Mr. Speaker, I will not pretend to tell you that you are bound by other Rules than Rules of Justice; but what is Justice in Westminster-Hall, is so here, and every where. And last Year you thought it Justice, that no Man should be brought to a Trial, but he should know what were the particular Facts that were alledged against him.

Lord Cutts. I think it, in some measure, a Misfortune, that a Matter of this Nature, as is your present Debate, hath held you so long; and conceive it a Thing to be wished, that every Gentleman that speaks upon this Occasion, would apply himself more closely to Reality, and less to Forms; I mean, to Forms, consider'd merely as Forms; for it ought to be true Reason that is convincing to you: And you ought not to tie your selves to any Forms upon this Occasion, but such as are grounded upon Reason; and really I have not heard any thing that fell from any Gentleman that shews his Doubt of the Nature and aggravating Circumstances of the Crime of the Prisoner; but it hath consisted with the great Candour and Justice of this House, to shew this Favour to the Prisoner before you. The Counsel say, they are unprepared; if they mean they should prepare themselves for more Grounds of Difference and Chicanry, I would not give them farther Time; I can't perceive there is any Reality of Argument in it; and there is Reasoning, as in Religion, sometimes a Form without a Power.

Sir Tbo. Dyke. Sir, you have now two or three Questions before you; I desire you will confine our Debates to one Point: I think, whatever Opinion Gentlemen may be of concerning the Proof, I think the Point under your Consideration, if you will make a right Judgment, is the Preamble of your Bill, which I take to be the Foundation of it, and the Cause for which you attain this Gentleman: Now the Preamble does not recite, and say, he is guilty, but only indicted; nor set forth any Time; nay, it does not say he was arraigned. So that these Things are very uncertain, and yet you must attain him for the Things recited in your Bill. And you know these Acts of Attainder are extraordinary Methods in Cases of Treason; and if you put it upon this Point, that the Act attains him for one thing, and the Counsel shall prove another, it makes it more uncertain than it is, and no Man can be safe; and therefore I hope you will confine the Counsel to Proofs of the Matter contained in the Bill.

Mr. J. Howe. Sir, I shall not move you to any thing that may tend to a Delay of the Matter before you: I think, if you please to go on upon the Matter suggested in the Bill, they are Allegations which must be proved before the Bill is committed; and that will not hinder Sir J. Fenwick from being examined to the Treason likewise. Therefore all that is alledged in this Bill, I suppose, being thought necessary to be proved, I desire he may be called in, and the Counsel may go on to prove what is alledged in the Bill, and afterwards Sir J. Fenwick may answer them.

Lord Coningsby. If the Question was, whether you should grant this Gentleman Time or no to make his Defence, I should not have troubled you. But the Question now seems to be, Whether the Bill does depend upon the bare Suggestions of the Bill, or upon the Guilt of Sir J. Fenwick? And therefore if Gentlemen do insist upon it, that he should have longer Time to defend himself, as to his being innocent or guilty, I shall not oppose it; but if you think fit to put it off, as if the Fate of the Bill did depend upon the Suggestions of it, I can't agree to that Matter; therefore I desire a short Time may be given him to answer the Matter of his Guilt.

Mr. Harley. I find all Gentlemen that speak of this Subject, to say this Matter is of a very extraordinary Nature, and you have entered into it by very extraordinary Methods: But I must only observe, that this being the first Bill of this kind that hath been brought into the House, before any Proof, Gentlemen must be excused if they are cautious what Steps they do take; and when the Wisdom of the House has thought fit to take quite different Methods, as to the Preliminaries, 'tis not to be wondered if they meet with Difficulties in their Proceedings.

Some Gentlemen press for more Time to be given to Sir J. Fenwick to be prepared; and others urge, that you should declare, whether the Counsel should be heard to any thing but what is suggested in the Bill. And I think you must give a Determination to the last Question, though the whole House agreed to give him longer Time: For if you give him longer Time, it will after come to the same Debate, whether they shall be heard to any thing but what is suggested in the Bill? If you should think fit to add any thing, then it will be reasonable that he also should be heard to that; for in the Case of the Death of a Man, let him deserve never so much, yet he does not deserve to die unjustly by your Hands.

It seems a very plain Proposition, that when a Man is accused, he should not answer to what he is not charged with; and to charge it with Innuendo's and Implications is so uncertain, that as I always have seen it denied in this House, so I hope I shall not see so great an Assembly give any Countenance to it. They did tell you, they were prepared to speak to the Reasonableness of the Bill; but this Matter not being suggested in the Bill, they are not prepared to speak to it.

Sir Tbo. Littleton. I see now where your Debates have led you: I thought the regular Subject of our Debates had been the Point upon which the Counsel withdrew; and that was for Time. For what? Why, to prepare themselves to answer any Evidence that might be given against them; because they perceived you did expect the Counsel for the Bill should produce their Evidence. But they made an Objection: Say they, We did not understand your Order was, that we should come prepared to oppose any Testimony viva voce to be given against us, but only prepared to speak to the Reasonableness of the Bill. Now, Gentlemen, after five or six Hours Debates, have been willing to accommodate the Matter (that no Body might think that any one pressed a Matter unreasonable) that they might have have Time: But some Gentlemen will not be satisfied with granting what the Counsel desired, but they desire more. And what is that? Why, that is, to know the Opinion of the House, whether you will admit any one thing to be proved that is not suggested in the Bill? And I do take this to be within the Suggestions of the Bill, as fully as can be expressed. For what does the Bill say? The Bill does say he was indicted of High-Treason, and that one of the Witnesses is gone: And, Gentlemen, come to the Conclusion, and skip over the immediate Part of the Bill; for the Bill does say, that he did incite and consult, &c. And the Objection of the Counsel was not against the Evidence; but they said, they were not prepared at that Time to answer it, and there they leave it; and thereupon the House go on upon the Debates. What can we expect that they intended? They might think, either we shall gain our Point, and the House will give us Time; or otherwise, if they go on and hear this Evidence, then we say we wanted Time. And that will be only Evidence ex Parte, and not carry so much Weight with it, tho' we have nothing to say to it; or they might think it may have this Effect, that the House will not go on, and hear any Evidence at all: In either of these Cases, we have the fairest Advantage that we can have, on the second Reading of the Bill, in Defence of our Client: All they desired was, that they might have Time; and I hope that which satisfied them that are most concerned, may satisfy any Gentleman of the House.

Mr. J. Howe. The Question is not, what they asked, but what is reasonable for us to grant: I was in the Beginning against any Delay, and I think there is no Occasion of Delay: All I desire is, Sir, that the King's Counsel may be desired to prove the Suggestions of the Bill ex Toto.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Most that have spoke of this Matter have said, that the Matter is very generally laid in this Bill, and the Counsel could not very well know to what to apply themselves: That it speaks of High-Treason in general, and of aiding the King's Enemies, which is very general: It recites that indeed; but the Indictment is legal, according to the late Act of Parliament. 'Tis not only said, that he designed the Death of the King, but for that Purpose he and others met together and agreed to send Charnock to France, to go to King James, to induce the French King with an armed Power to invade England. Now how can any thing be more particularly charged? And the Indictment is so charged in your Bill. I think therefore the Counsel could not be ignorant to what they ought to apply themselves: But by what I perceive, Gentlemen are very well contented to give him further Time. I remember, when the Bill was first brought in, there was a long Debate for a second Reading; and some Gentlemen thought it hard to be tried by so great an Assembly, and said, they had rather be tried by a fewer Number: But I shall observe, that you have sent the Copy of the Bill to Sir J. Fenwick beforehand, and you sent him Notice that he should provide himself. But I remember a much better Man than Sir J. Fenwick, who had the Misfortune to be under an Accusation of High-Treason, had his Indictment one Hour, and was tried the next; and tho' he pleaded to have his Trial put off 'till the Afternoon, he could not prevail with the Court of Justice to do it: Sir John Fenwick hath had a Copy of his Bill for two or three Days, but he never had any Copy 'till he had pleaded.

Mr. Waller. I stand up only for my Information; that which I would know is, whether the Counsel did not ask you the Question, whether they should be bound to answer any thing that is not in the Bill? If they asked that, then the Gentleman that spake here is answered; and the Gentlemen of the House do not insist upon what Sir J. Fenwick's Counsel did not insist on. And I do think the King's Serjeant, who opened the Proceedings, after he had opened what had been before the Grand Jury, seemed to make it a Charge, as if Sir J. Fenwick had been condescending to the withdrawing of Goodman. Now that seemed as if they designed to make that a Part of the Evidence.

Sir Richard Temple. The Counsel did not insist upon it only to answer the Suggestions of the Bill: Every Body knows, they objected to the others going on with the Evidence they opened, because it was not in the Bill; and the King's Counsel could not so much as alledge, that it was in the Bill; and they would have gone on to have prov'd the Indictment. There is another Thing: It is told you, as if the Preamble had suggested something of this kind, that there was a Meeting. Now that Gentleman that spake last but one, has cleared it, that it only recites he was indicted for these Things, and this brings nothing in Issue, whether he be guilty or no? Now I think the present Question, and only Question before you, is upon the Suggestions of the Bill; for you can bring nothing in Issue here, but what is in the Bill; and Nobody can insist, by the Rules of Reason or Justice, that any Man should be heard to any Matter of Fact but what is in the Bill. And therefore I think there is nothing before you, but that you should give Direction to hear them to what is suggested in the Bill.

Mr. Melbwen. Sir, I speak to the Method of your Debates: Your Debates arise upon an Objection that was made by Sir J. Fenwick's Counsel, against the Counsel for the Bill going on with their Evidence to prove Sir J. Fenwick guilty of High-Treason.

I must beg Leave to differ, as to what the Counsel did say, from some of the Gentlemen that spake last; the Force of their Objection was, that they should not now go on, for they were not prepared to answer them; and the Reason they gave was, that they had not formal Notice; and the other afterwards spake to the Shortness of the Time: Your Debates for a long Time went pursuant to this, whether you should allow them further Time or not? But the Length of your Debates hath raised a new Matter. Though I think that Doubt, though it was not made by the Counsel, may be very properly made by any worthy Member that hath that Doubt, whether, as the Bill is brought in, the King's Counsel might at any Time speak to that Point, though Sir J. Fenwick be acquainted with it? And I must always agree, that Doubt ought to be resolved, before you come to resolve, whether farther Time shall be allowed him or not; and therefore I propose it, that this Question may be put, Whether the House will hear, at the Bar of the House, the Evidence there is to prove Sir John Fenwick guilty guilty of the High-Treason whereof he was indicted?

Col. Wharton. You have three or four Questions upon your Paper; and now after so long a Debate as we have had, I hope Gentlemen will not think fit to start new ones; and I hope you will take Care that Gentlemen shall not rise up three or four Times to speak to this Matter. You have another Rule of the House, That when a Question is moved, and seconded, though another Question is moved afterwards, yet that must be the first Question that is to be put; and I hope you will keep us to these Rules.

I wonder at some Objections: 'Tis told you, that this is such a Proceeding that never any Thing of this Kind was before; and that you are here going to read a Bill of Attainder before you have had any Manner of Evidence, upon which you should ground the bringing in of this Bill. Gentlemen must remember, or should have informed themselves; for 'tis very certain that you had very good Grounds to vote this Bill to be brought in: I see the Gentleman that brought in his own Accusation; you had his own Discovery read, and Mr. Attorney did inform you what was against him, and how he stood indicted. And another Gentleman by me, told you, he was with him, and there was a Treaty for his Pardon; this was Evidence for reasonable Men to go upon. And to tell you that these Precedents will endanger your Liberty! Under Favour, this is the Ground of all your Liberty. 'Tis by this Power of Proceeding, when you have not that Evidence that Westminster-Hall requires, by which you will keep great Men in Awe.

Now give me Leave to speak to the Question that I think you ought to put: 'Tis told you, by the Counsel for the Prisoner, that they are not apprised what the Sense of the House was, and upon that Account they desired further Time: I confess, when you allow'd Counsel, I was of Opinion it was a Favour; and now since they have made this Objection, though I do not believe you are obliged to allow them further Time; yet I had rather err on that than the other Side; and therefore I think the fairest Thing is to allow them some further Time.

Mr. Secretary Trumbal. Mr. Speaker, I have attended all this Day to your Debates, which are now in my Opinion of a very extraordinary Nature; for a great deal of your Time hath been spent upon Motion of the Counsel for the Prisoner at the Bar, whether you should allow them further Time or no: And now, by what I recollect from the Sense of several Gentlemen, the House seems willing to allow them further Time; even that is oppos'd at this Time of Day.

Sir, the King's Counsel have open'd the Matter of Fact, upon which they did intend to produce their Evidence; and when they had open'd the several Heads, the whole Objection that I heard made by the other Side, was, They did not think the King's Counsel could have proceeded to examine Witnesses upon those Facts; and that they were not prepared to bring Witnesses on the Side of the Prisoner, and therefore pray'd for further Time: Truly, whether that be reasonable or no, or whether upon one Favour, the House think fit to grant another; I cannot tell what might appear, if it had come to a Question; since the Life of a Man is concerned, we ought to be tender of it, and I shall be as tender as another; therefore I am of Opinion, that a reasonable Time should be allow'd. To do what? Why, upon the Evidence the King's Counsel should produce, they shall bring their Witnesses on the other Side to answer them. Whether the King's Counsel will produce Evidence that is foreign to the Bill, that will be in Judgment of the House; but it was a good Motion made below, which I close withal, that a short Time may be allowed them to make their Defence, and bring their Witnesses.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, you have had a long Debate; I do not remember any formal Question that was propos'd at first, till such Time as I read to you what I thought was the Question upon the Debate; when I read you the Question for further Time, there were several Members stood up, and said, that was not the Question; and took Exceptions to it, and propos'd that the Counsel should be confined to produce Evidence only to the Matters suggest'd in the Bill; so that now I have two Questions upon my Paper, which I will read to you, and put which you will. One Question is, That they be confined to make their Proof to what is suggest'd in the Bill. The second Question is, That Sir John Fenwick be allowed further Time, &c.

Sir Christopher Musgrave. A Gentleman said, the second Question upon your Paper was but lately started; but I remember, a little after the Counsel was withdrawn, it was moved, Whether you would give them further Time? And I, presently after, in the Debate, did take the Freedom to ask, Whether it was intended they should answer to any Thing but what was contained in the Bill? And, I remember, there was a Gentleman of the long Robe said, That there was nothing offer'd by the King's Counsel, but what was within the Suggestions of the Bill. Another Gentleman said, When they may have longer Time, they'd not seem so fond of it; 'tis indifferent to me, provided he be prepar'd to answer. But I cannot but observe, that the Conclusion of that honourable Person was, that at last you must come to determine the Question. You are likewise told, by an honourable Person nearer the Bar, Why do you dispute this, now you have order'd the King's Counsel to produce the Evidence; and so you have concluded your selves? But for my self, I must confess, I did never think the Evidence was to be heard otherwise than as to the Suggestions of the Bill. And if that Point be to be determined, why will not you determine it now, rather than to have another Debate upon it?

Mr. Boscawen. That which is press'd by some Gentlemen, is begging of the Question. What have we here brought Sir John Fenwick for? Was it not to satisfy our selves, whether Sir John Fenwick was guilty of High-Treason? Now that is suppos'd, by some Gentlemen, not to be within the Bill: If it be not within the Bill, I desire you would throw out the Bill. But the Thing is, we must not examine to those Things that will make Sir John Fenwick guilty. Sir, this is a very nice Thing, and very curiously woven. The great Thing, say some Gentlemen, we must take Care of, is the Blood of a Man: Does any one say he is innocent? No: But we must have some Way or another that he must not be brought to his Trial. I desire, as English Men, you will not only take Care of the Life of one Man, but of the Life of the King; of the Lives of our Wives and Children, dren, and all our Families. What will they say without Doors? You are afraid to meddle with Sir John Fenwick; and therefore you will slide it away upon another Point; that his being guilty of High-Treason is not within the Bill. I am not for taking the Advantage of Time; I desire, as it was moved before, that you will give him Time, and try whether he be guilty of this Treason or no, or otherwise do nothing in it at all.

Then the Order was made for Candles to be brought in.

Sir Thomas Littleton. Now you have Candles brought in, it will be fit for you to return to the Question: For my Part, I am willing to put both: But I think the last Question that you have upon the Paper, properly speaking, is to be put first; and that is, That the House will proceed to examine Witnesses to the Treason in the Bill for which he stands indicted.

Mr. J. Howe. I think the Question ought to be, That his Counsel be directed to bring Witnesses to the Allegations in this Bill.

Sir Thomas Littleton. I propose it to you thus; That the House will proceed to examine Witnesses at the Bar, to the Treasons mentioned in the Bill for which he was indicted.

Mr. J. Howe. I think that Gentleman might very well have moved the Question without that Limitation; for that is as much as to say, that Witnesses shall be examined to none of the Treasons in the Bill, except those for which he hath been indicted; and that is a Limitation, I hope, shall not be put to the Enquiries of this House. I hope you will put it, That they shall bring Evidence to the Matters alledged in the Bill generally: There are several other Allegations in the Bill which I would have him answer to; as the alienating the Affections of the King's Subjects from him, which I take to be High-Treason.

Members. No, no.

Mr. J. Howe. Why? If it be not High-Treason, it hath nothing to do in that Place. I believe 'tis a very high Crime, and would induce me very much for the Punishing of Sir John Fenwick.

Mr. Norris. Sir, I do not know how the Questions may be carried since Candles are come in; but I think 'tis for the better. I think there are two Things have been spoken to; one is this Bill: I find those Gentlemen that were against the Bill on Friday, are more against it now. I was for the Bill then, and am now for a second Reading of it: I think the Bill is very plain, and know not what they would have mentioned in it more, unless they would have had the King's-Head Tavern, and what Wine they drank there. I think there is all the Reason in the World to hear the Witnesses to prove him guilty of High-Treason. As to the Point of Time, I should be very willing to allow it them, if that Question was put; and, I think, you have been very favourable to him already, in allowing him Counsel.

Mr. Smith. I would only observe, when the Bill was to be brought in, the Objection was, that you had not Witnesses. And now the Question is, Whether you can hear Witnesses upon Facts not particularly assigned in the Bill. I believe no Man can say, but that in the Indictment there are particular Facts that ought to be examin'd: I do own for my Part, if Sir John Fenwick was a greater Man than he is, it were better he should escape, than you should spend so much Time about him.

Sir, the Indictment is mentioned in the Bill; no Man thinks that Goodman's going away, is Reason enough for bringing in such a Bill against Sir John Fenwick.

Mr. Speaker. Shall I read you the Question?

That Sir John Fenwick be allow'd further Time to produce Witnesses in his Defence, against the Charge of High-Treason, and that he name his Witnesses.

Which Question was put, and passed in the Affirmative.

Mr. Speaker. The other Question is,

That the Counsel, who are to produce their Evidence against Sir John Fenwick, be allowed to prove Sir John Fenwick guilty of High-Treason.

Sir Thomas Littleton. I do think one of the Reasons why this Bill was brought, was, because possibly, by the Absence of this Witness, he could not, strictly speaking, be proved guilty; though all Mankind is satisfied in his Guilt. And therefore I question whether it will amount to a legal Proof: And if you had such a Proof as would convict him by the common Proceedings of Law, I should not have been for a Bill of this Nature; for 'tis against the Honour and Dignity of this House, to do the Work that an inferior Court can do. But probably, by the Absence of this Witness, Sir John Fenwick, at a Trial in the Old-Bailey, might escape; though at the same Time 'tis highly probable, the Witness that is wanting to convict him, is by his Means gone out of the Way. Therefore I speak to the Wording of the Question; you say, Shall be allowed to prove. I would willingly prevent what may be objected when we come upon this Debate: If you do use the Word Prove, they may say, this is not Proof; for still Goodman is not here. If you please to say, That we will examine Witnesses to the Treason, and we will be Judges how far it appears to us, whether he be guilty, or not guilty.

Mr. Speaker. Will you let me propose it to you thus then? That the Counsel, in producing their Evidence against Sir John Fenwick, be allowed to examine Witnesses touching the Treasons mentioned in the Bill, for which Sir John Fenwick is indicted.

Mr. Montagu. I do not observe, that in reading of it, you say any Thing as to the other Allegations of the Bill: I think you should word it, That the Counsel be allowed to produce Evidence to the Allegations in the Bill, and the Treasons whereof he stands indicted.

Mr. Speaker. Well then, the Question is this, That the Counsel that manage the Evidence against Sir John Fenwick, be allow'd to produce Witnesses touching the Allegations in the Bill, and the Treasons whereof he stands indicted.

Which Question being put, it passed in the Affirmative.

Mr. Speaker. Will you please to appoint a Time for it?

Mr. J. Howe. That I would move you is this: You were so extremely late before you went upon this Information, that you had not Time to go through any Part of it; therefore I would move you you, that you would appoint early in the Morning for Sir John Fenwick to be here.

And thereupon it was Ordered, That Sir John Fenwick should be remanded to Newgate, and brought to the House on Monday Ten a-Clock.

Mr. James Montagu. Sir John Fenwick now insisted he had not Notice; I humbly move, that he may be brought in, and acquainted with what you have ordered. (And accordingly Sir John Fenwick was brought to the Bar.)

Mr. Speaker. The House have consider'd of what Sir John Fenwick hath said at the Bar, by his Counsel, and they are of Opinion, That Witnesses ought to be examined there, to prove the Allegations of the Bill, and to prove him guilty of High-Treason whereof he stands indicted; but in Favour to you, because your Counsel said you were not prepared, the House is willing to give you Time till Monday next, to make your Defence; and they require you to give in a List of your Witnesses; and if you send to me, you may have a Warrant for their appearing at that Time; and they require you to be here, so that they may proceed upon the Bill exactly at Ten a-Clock.

And Sir John Fenwick being withdrawn,

Resolved,

That the Bill for Attainting Sir John Fenwick of High-Treason, be read a second Time on Monday next.

Lunæ 16 die Novembris, 1696.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, I would receive your Directions in one Thing: You have ordered a Member to produce a Letter, and the Counsel, in opening the Evidence, have referred to it. That Member desires to know the proper Time for him to do it; Whether, while the Counsel are managing the Evidence at the Bar, or whether he must stay till they are withdrawn?

Mr. Sloane. As to this Matter, I do not question but 'tis to be offered as an Evidence: and by the same Reason that you give him the Favour to examine the Witnesses that are produced against him, for the same Reason the Letter ought to be read in his Presence, that he may explain it, or deny it: And give me leave to tell my Thoughts of another Matter: If that worthy Member is to offer Evidence of what he took from Sir John Fenwick's Mouth, (though a Member commonly gives his Evidence in his Place, after the Counsel is withdrawn) I think 'tis not only fit to produce the Letter in his Presence, but that Sir John Fenwick should hear what he says, and deny it if he can.

Mr. Speaker. Is that your Pleasure, that the Letter be produced before Sir John Fenwick, and that the Evidence to be given by Mr. Vernon shall be in the Presence of Sir John Fenwick?

The Question being accordingly put, it passed in the Affirmative.

Then the Serjeant was ordered to take his Mace, and go into Westminster-Hall, and summon the Members.

And being returned, The Order of the Day for proceeding on the Business of Sir John Fenwick was read. [It being a Quarter before Eleven a-Clock.]
VOL. V.

Then Sir John Fenwick, and the Counsel and Solicitors on both Sides, were brought in.

Mr. Speaker. Sir Thomas Powys, when you were here last, you insisted upon it, That the Counsel against Sir John Fenwick should be kept to the Proofs relating to the Allegations in the Bill only; or else that you might have further Time, because the Witnesses were not ready. The House have considered that Matter, and in favour to Sir John Fenwick, that he might have no Surprise, have given him to this Day; but they do allow the Counsel to give Evidence not only as to the Allegations in the Bill, but to prove Sir John Fenwick guilty of High-Treason; and therefore, Mr. Serjeant Gould, you are at liberty to go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. May it please you, Mr. Speaker, We are here to give in our Charge, and the Evidence that we have against Sir John Fenwick. I find by your Order, that we are now allowed to produce Evidence touching the Allegations of the Bill, and likewise of the Treasons for which he stands indicted; therefore I shall beg leave to open first, how he stands charged by the Indictment.

The Indictment first charges him with Compassing and Designing to depose the King, and put him to Death. The second Charge is, For inciting the French King to send an Army of Soldiers to invade this Kingdom, and to make a miserable Slaughter amongst the Subjects of this Kingdom. The third Thing is, For adhering to the King's Enemies. The fourth Part is, That to effect this, he, together with several others, that is to say, Charnock, Sir John Friend, and others, did consult, propose, treat, and agree to invite the French King to send a Number of Soldiers to invade this Kingdom, and to procure great Numbers of armed Men against the King, to rise and be formed; and with these Enemies, upon their landing and invading this Kingdom, to join, for to make and carry on a Rebellion and War in this Kingdom. And further it charges, That he did consult, consent and agree, to send Charnock as a Messenger from Sir John Friend, and others, into France to the late King James, to propose to him, to procure the French King to send Soldiers and armed Men to invade this Kingdom. Then likewise to effect this, the Indictment charges him with providing Horses, Pistols, and other warlike Arms. This is the Charge of the Indictment; and these Matters are in the Bill: For the Bill does charge him with compassing and imagining the Death and Destruction of the King, with adhering to his Enemies, by consulting and agreeing with several Persons at several Times, to send Charnock to the late King James in France, to invite and encourage the French King to invade this Kingdom with armed Forces, and Promises to join them, and assist them with Men and Arms.

Then the Bill does take notice of other Matters, That Sir John Fenwick hath protracted his Trial, by giving Assurances to the King to make a plain Discovery; by Reason of which he did not come to his Trial, and now one of the Witnesses against him is withdrawn. May it please you, Sir, This is the Charge as it stands before this honourable House; and the Evidence we shall charge him with, will be of this Nature: We shall give you an Account, That the latter End of May, or Beginning of June, Sir John Friend and Charnock, and several other Persons, met at the King's-Head, and upon that Meeting they consulted how to invade this Kingdom; and they concluded in this, That they would send Charnock into France; and he was to propose it to King James, That he should procure 8000 Foot, and 2000 Horse and Dragoons; and upon their Landing they were to join them with 2000 Horse. After this they had another Meeting; for Charnock, to be sure of the Matter, would have another Meeting; and then he proposed it to them, Whether they continued in the same Resolution? And they all then declared, particularly Sir John Fenwick, That they did approve of it, and stuck by it; and that Charnock should go for that Purpose to France. Charnock, in pursuance and execution of this Treason, does go to France, and brings back a Message, That the Matter had been communicated to the French King, but at that Time he was not ready for them, and could not spare his Soldiers, and his Troops. Then it rested for some Time, till towards Christmas, when Sir George Barclay came into England, and he brought with him a Detachment of about Sixteen, and their Province was to assassinate the King. But there was another Part, and that was the Invasion; and in that Part was Sir John Fenwick concerned, which we shall produce our Evidence to prove upon him; but it does fall out that we have but one Witness to this Matter, that we can produce viva voce; though when this Indictment was found, (for it was found upon the Act last Sessions, which required two Witnesses to each Species of Treason) we had two, but one is since withdrawn, and that is touched in the Bill, as in Truth the Fact is. Now if Sir John Fenwick had come on in the ordinary Course of Proceedings to be tried, Sir John Fenwick might have been tried upon this Indictment, for then Goodman had been there; but he procrastinates his Trial, he makes Application to the King, and gives him Assurances from Time to Time of an ingenuous Discovery; but instead of that, when Goodman now is withdrawn, these Assurances have terminated in this counterfeit Confession that hath been laid before the House, and is charged in the Bill.

But, Sir, to supply this, we shall produce the Examination of Mr. Goodman; we shall prove to you not only the Evidence that hath been given upon this Indictment, upon which he hath been arraigned, but also the Evidence which hath been given upon the Trial of Cook, who was convicted upon that Evidence. We shall go by these further Steps in the Case; and humbly offer it to the Consideration of this House, how far Sir John Fenwick will be affected with it: And that is this; Here hath been Goodman, and Captain Porter who still stands his Ground; but they have tempted him with 300 Guineas in Hand, and 300 more was to be remitted to him upon his first landing in France, with Assurance likewise of King James's Pardon, and likewise 300 l. a Year; 100 l. a Year whereof was to be settled by Sir John Fenwick. This Proposition sprung from one Clancy: It could not be expected that Sir John Fenwick should appear in his proper Person, but he did by his Lady, who was with Captain Porter, and gave him Assurance of all that was proposed by Clancy, that That should be performed, and a great deal more.

We shall further give this Account, That when Sir John Fenwick was taken, there was a Letter handed to a third Person; and it appears by That, that he thought himself at that Time not safe, unless they could corrupt the Jury: For, says he, we must now get two or three stanch Persons that will starve the rest. These Steps we shall proceed upon, and begin with the Indictment, and call our Witnesses to it.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. Mr. Speaker, I shall not repeat what hath been said; because I know what hath been materially said, can't pass the Observation of this House. The Method we desire leave to proceed in, is the Method you have prescribed us; and that is, first to prove the Allegations of the Bill. And that we shall make appear to you by undoubted Proofs, That Sir John Fenwick does stand indicted for these Treasons at the Sessions at the Old Bailey, the 28th of May, upon the Oaths of Porter and Goodman; that we shall prove by Records, and that is not capable of any Traverse or Denial. We shall also prove, by Matter of Record, That several who were concerned with Sir John Fenwick in this Conspiracy have been tried and attainted; and then we shall call a living Witness to prove Sir John Fenwick guilty of Treason in the highest Manner. Mr. Tanner, deliver in the Indictment of Sir John Fenwick.

Which was delivered in, and read at the Table.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. The Bill does charge, That he stands indicted upon the Oaths of these two, Captain Porter and Mr. Goodman; Besides, I must beg leave to observe, that by the Act of Parliament made last Sessions, 'tis enacted, That no Person shall be indicted unless upon the Oaths of two Witnesses: Had not these Witnesses been sworn before the Grand Jury at that Time, this Bill could not have been found according to that Law, nor would Sir John Fenwick have pleaded: But he hath been arraigned, and pleaded; so that we submit it to this House, that it does appear upon Record, That this Indictment was found upon the Oaths of two Witnesses. Besides that, two Witnesses are subscribed to the Bill. Now that other Persons have been indicted, and convicted upon the same Evidence, we shall prove, and that likewise by Records.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. I thought when we came to give you an Account of the Absence of Goodman, then to have given you an Account of this, and other Matters.

Mr. Speaker. You will agree upon your Method, Gentlemen: Who do you call in the first Place?

Mr. Serjeant Gould. Captain Porter, Sir. (Who being present.)

Mr. Serjeant Gould. I desire, Mr. Speaker, that he will give an Account of what he knows concerning this Matter, as also of what is charged in the Indictment.

Mr. Speaker. Captain Porter, the House requires you to give them an Account of your Knowledge of any Conspiracy, by Sir John Fenwick, against the King and this Government; and likewise of your Proceedings upon the Indictment against him for High-Treason.

Captain Porter. About the middle of May was twelve Months, there was two Consultations, one at the King's-Head in Leadenball-Street, and the other other in Pall-mall; these two Consultations were for the Considering of the best Means to bring the late King James into England again: For it was said, that King William being gone beyond Sea, he had left but few Forces, and therefore they thought they could not have a fitter Opportunity than that Juncture; upon which, they pitched upon Charnock to go into France, and make some Proposals to the late King James, to borrow 10000 Men of the French King, whereof there should be 8000 Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons; and it was proposed, when they came over, to meet them with 2000 Horse.

Mr. Speaker. Where was this?

Captain Porter. Our first Meeting was at the King's Head in Leadenball-street; after that, Mr. Charnock desired another Meeting, and then we met at Mountjoy's in St. James's, and we all stood to what we had before resolved, That he should go over to King James, and make this Proposal; and that if he could get so many Men of the French King, we would meet him with so many Horse.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, you say the first Meeting was at the King's Head in Leadenball-street; who was then present?

Captain Porter. There was my Lord Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Friend, Sir William Perkins, Charnock, Mr. Cook, and my self; we dined there, and after Dinner Mr. Goodman came in to us.

Mr. Speaker. Did Sir John Fenwick hear this Discourse?

Captain Porter. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker. Did Sir John Fenwick consent to it?

Captain Porter. He did absolutely consent to it. Sir John Friend did propose it; says he, Do not let us propose more than we can bring.

Mr. Speaker. Then you say you had a second Meeting.

Captain Porter. When we agreed upon this Business in Leadenball-street, Captain Charnock desired another Meeting, to know if we continued in our Resolution; and the next Meeting was at Mrs. Mountjoy's; I think then my Lord Montgomery was not there, nor Mr. Goodman; but there was my Lord Aylesbury, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Friend, Sir William Perkins, Mr. Charnock, and my self.

Mr. Speaker. How long after?

Captain Porter. About eight or ten Days, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Speaker. What was said at that Meeting?

Captain Porter. The second Meeting was to agree to the same Thing: We desired Charnock to go as soon as possible to acquaint King James, that the sooner he came that Year, the better.

Mr. Speaker. Did Sir John Fenwick consent and agree, at the second Meeting, to his going into France to procure the Forces?

Captain Porter. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker. Will you give the House an Account of any Thing else you know, relating to this Matter?

Captain Porter. That is all.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. Was you examined by the Grand-Jury, when the Bill was presented against Sir John Fenwick?

Captain Porter. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Gould. What Evidence did you give to them?

VOL. V.

Captain Porter. The very same I give now.
Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serj. Gould, what have you to say further to him?

Mr. Serj. Lovel. We would ask, whether Mr. Cook was at the first Meeting?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Sir, he was at both Meetings.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. Was Mr. Goodman, at the preferring of the Bill of Indictment at the Old Bailey?

Captain Porter. I saw him go in to the Jury, and he told me it was for the same Thing.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. We have some of the Jury here, and we will call them to that.

Mr. Serj. Gould. Now, if it please you, Sir, we will ask him to the Matter concerning Clancy's tampering with him.

Mr. Speaker. Will you give the House an Account of that Matter?

Sir Tho. Powys. By your Favour, I hope you will give us leave to interpose in this Matter: For I am sure in the Case of Life, and in Case where there is a Law prepared to be made subsequent to the Fact, to condemn any Man to Death, you will not only have good Evidence, but that which is legal Evidence. And I take it, that in Cases of this Nature, of a subsequent Law, the Evidence ought to be much stronger, and much fairer than when a Man is to be tried by a Law in Being. If they should offer that which was said in the great Case of my Lord of Strafford, (which Attainder there hath been an Act of Parliament to reverse) by a Gentleman that did then appear against my Lord of Strafford, That where the House proceed in a legislative Way, there needs no Evidence at all; but every Man may follow the Dictates of his own Thoughts and Conscience: ('Tis in Rushworth's Collections, fol. 377.) Yet, I hope, you will be of another Opinion, and expect stronger Evidence, than if a Man was to be tried by a Law in Being. Now that which is offered now, cannot be allowed in any Court of Justice: They were going about to shew, That my Lady Fenwick, the Wife of the Gentleman at the Bar, that she had used some Means to take off Goodman's Evidence, and they would make use of that against her Husband. Now, what any Man's Wife says cannot be made use of against him, as nothing that she says or does can be made use of for him; and, by the same Rule of Justice, it cannot be made use of against him: For otherwise the Rule would be unequal, That she might be a Witness against him, but not a Witness for him; that seems so unjust, that it will not be admitted in any Court whatsoever.

Sir Barth. Shower. By your Votes the Prisoner is allowed Counsel, and the King's Serjeant is to produce the Evidence against the Prisoner: That Phrase of Evidence makes us believe, or at least to hope, that you will give us leave to object to that which is not so; and in this I appeal to the Knowledge of the Gentleman on the other Side, who hath had a great deal of Experience of this Kind; and I am sure, in all his Observations in the Old Bailey, he can't say this was ever admitted in Case of Treason, nay not in Felony, the Actions or Sayings of other Persons; and I must confess I wonder to hear him move it now.

When attempted on behalf of a close Prisoner, that was not visited by any Body, it was not admitted that the Actions of a third Person at large, should be admitted against him: There the Actions of a Wife cannot be Evidence for, nor against her Husband. It was never but in one Case, and that for Sodomy, allowed, and that was after two or three Witnesses besides had been produced; and by the Opinions ever since, it hath been allowed not to be Law; and that for the Oeconomy, the Danger might follow in Cafes of Matrimony and Families. Now they both do concern the Acts of other Persons, and not Sir John Fenwick. Besides, I have one Objection more, and that is, There is no such Thing alledged in the Bill: and, with Submission, you have declared, That they should produce Evidence as to the Allegations in the Bill, and the Treasons in the Indictment; but I can't find any Order that they should produce Evidence concerning the carrying away of any Witness; and 'tis not alledged, that Goodman is withdrawn by Sir John Fenwick's Privy. As to Porter's being tampered with, there is no Colour of Suggestion in the Bill; so that this neither being in the Bill, nor being Evidence at Law, we must be surprized very much by it, if you should admit it.

Mr. Speaker. You hear the Exception, What do you say to it?

Mr. Serj. Gould. I think what these Gentlemen say, will receive a plain Answer. They have made an Objection without answering the subject Matter; it is an Allegation in the Bill, That Goodman hath withdrawn himself. Now the Use we make of this, is to let us in to give an Account of what Goodman hath sworn, and to entitle us to read his Examination: For, say we, he hath been tampering to stifle this Conspiracy, to take off the King's Evidence. For no Body doubts of the execrable and wicked Conspiracy; and 'tis as plain, here hath been two Witnesses to prove it; and as plain that this Indictment is found according to the late Act of Parliament, upon the Evidence of Porter and Goodman. Now to shew this Conspiracy is carrying on, we offer to prove the Tampering that hath been to take off the King's Evidence, and to lay that before the Consideration of this House; so the Use we make of it, is only preparatory to let us in to tell you what Goodman hath sworn, and in good Time we shall produce to you an Indictment, where, upon his very Oath, and upon the same Evidence as we offer here, another of the Traitors hath been convicted; and therefore we humbly offer it, Whether, as this Case is, we shall not be admitted to prove this Tampering?

Mr. Serj. Lovel. Before we withdraw, I beg two Words as to what is objected on the other Side, for the learned Gentleman appeals to me; and I must appeal to the Knowledge of some Members that are learned in the Law, and to all, That even in criminal Cafes, Courts are not bound up to positive Evidence, but that the Evidence of Circumstances, and some Persons to corroborate them, is admitted: And if it should be so, that nothing but positive Evidence should convict, we should have very few Convictions at the Old Bailey; as to Clipping and Coining, where One is convicted by positive Evidence and direct Proof, Forty are convicted and attainted by Circumstances, as Materials found about them, and putting off Counterfeit-money. Sir, I must submit to you, Whether, as the Nature of this Case is, this House will not think fit to hear all Evidence that may concern this Matter, whether Certain or Circumstantial; and the Wisdom of this House will distinguish afterwards, what they think is Material, and what is not. We do take this to be Part of the same Conspiracy we do charge the Prisoner at the Bar with, that he might not come to condign Punishment; and therefore we pray, that let the Proceedings of other Places be what they will, that you will hear the whole Matter in this Case, whether the Evidence be positive or circumstantial.

Sir Thomas Powys. I think they mistake us when they give us such an Answer. We doubt not but there is positive Evidence and circumstantial; but we suppose this to be no Evidence at all. Mr. Recorder tells us true, That circumstantial Evidence is frequently made use of; but we say, That whatever my Lady Fenwick hath said or done, is not to be admitted as Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar; because what she hath said by Way of Endeavour to draw off Goodman, is no Evidence at all to be offered against her Husband, and is not so much as circumstantial Evidence.

Sir Barthol. Shower. We do agree, If the Bill had been brought in against my Lady Fenwick, or against Clancy, this had been proper Evidence; and they did, and may deserve Punishment for it themselves: But this is no Evidence against Sir John Fenwick, that is here.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. We think 'tis properly before the House, even by the Order of the House it self: For in the first Place, we are to speak to the Matters contained in the Bill. One Matter is, That Sir John Fenwick had been tryed before now but for Reasons mentioned in the Bill; and that he delayed his Trial till such Time as Goodman was withdrawn; therefore what lies before us by the Direction of the House, is, That till such Time as Goodman was withdrawn, Sir John Fenwick did pretend to go on to make a Discovery, and afterwards put it off with what is charged in the Bill: But say they, What is done by my Lady Fenwick, is no Evidence against him. When all the Circumstances are laid before the House, what Dealings there was with Captain Porter, and what was said at that Time, and the Consequence presently after Goodman's going away, I hope it is as much Evidence as the Case will bear.

Sir Richard Temple. Sir, Desire they may withdraw.

Accordingly they withdrew.

Sir Richard Temple. I think it much concerns the Honour of the House, when a Prisoner is at the Bar, that he should be allowed the Right of an Englishman; what you do here, may be a Precedent in after Ages: You are told what is offered as Evidence here is admitted in no Court, and the Answer that is made to it, is of no Force at all; they tell you there is no Allegations in your Bill, That Sir John Fenwick had any Hand in his withdrawing, nor nothing in the Indictment of it, and for that Reason the Evidence seems improper; and if it was, this would be no Evidence at all; for the Oaths of other Persons is no Evidence against the Prisoner, to make him guilty of any Thing.

Lord Cutts. I think 'tis agreed already, That the Counsel for the Prisoner should not meddle with the Authority and Jurisdiction of this House: For if we are to be ty'd up to all the Forms and Niceties observed in inferior Courts, then to what End is the Prisoner brought here? I think, Evidence ought to be admitted, that may clear every Man's Conscience, that this Bill against Sir John Fenwick ought to pass.

Mr.

Mr. J. How. A Gentleman said, We are not ty'd to the Forms of inferior Courts; but tho' we are not ty'd to the Forms of inferior Courts, we are ty'd to that which was the Ground of them, and that is, right Reason and true Sense: They have alledged that he was indicted; no Body doubts it. That Goodman is withdrawn, no Body doubts it. But what is that to Sir John Fenwick? It might be with a Design for Good or Evil to Sir John Fenwick. My Lord Jefferies said, at my Lord Delamere's Trial, (as I am informed) That one Witness, with good Circumstances, was enough to convict a Man of High-Treason. And I am told, it was told him then, that if they ever met him in the House of Lords, he should answer it with his Head. I desire you would ask Captain Porter, when he comes in, Whether this was discoursed before Dinner, at Dinner, or after Dinner? And whether he knows that Goodman heard this or no?

Mr. Chancel. of the Exchequer. There seems a particular Shyness to know the Truth of this Matter, I mean in the Counsel t'other Day: The Gentleman says, That Goodman might be withdrawn to the Prejudice of Sir John Fenwick, as well as for his Good: I desire you will not let the Government be so stigmatized. You have given leave to the Counsel to examine to any Thing that may be added to the Bill; for upon a Commitment, I can move you to put any Thing that shall be thought reasonable.

Sir Thomas Dyke. It may be a reasonable Thing to enquire why Goodman is withdrawn? But the Question is, Whether this be a proper Time? The House is not ty'd to the common Forms, but they are ty'd to the common Rules of Equity: And the Question is, Whether the House will permit any Person to suffer by the Acts of another?

Mr. Sol. Gen.* It is discretionary, whether you will determine that this is Evidence now, or after you have heard it. I can't tell at whose Trial it has, but I won't enter upon the Legality of the Thing; 'tis one Thing when a Man is to be tried by a Jury, and another Thing when he is to be tried before Judges. A Jury may be so sway'd and possessed by it, that it may not be fit for them to hear it: But look into the Court of Chancery; and there Depositions, if one Side say they are Evidence, and the other Side say they are not, are every Day admitted; and the Rule is, That it is sooner dispatched by hearing of it than not. You do not sit here as a Jury, but as Judges; and will consider how far the Actions of a Wife shall concern her Husband; you will do the Prisoner Right, and your selves Right, if you will hear them.

Sir Francis Winnington. The Question is, Whether the King's Counsel —

Mr. Speaker. Let me set you right; they are not here as King's Counsel.

Sir Francis Winnington. Very well: But in this House you are the Judges and Jury too. The Evidence that is opened, is to induce you to believe that he is guilty; and the Gentleman that spake last will not allow it to be a legal Evidence. Then the Question is, Whether you, being Judges of the Fact as well as of the Law, should be afraid to be induced to believe a Fact, by that which is not legal Evidence? Suppose my Lady Fenwick had had the Design, and had told her Husband what she intended to do, and he should have said, he scorn'd it: This is possible, if you go to supposing; and that he might apprehend it would do him a Mischief. Now it can be to no purpose to hear this Evidence, unless it be to satisfy the House, in order to attain the Prisoner. No, but say they, Let us hear, and we will judge afterwards: Why so? It can't affect the Prisoner: And if any Person hereafter have a Mind to have my Lady Fenwick punished, they may examine it.

Mr. Sloane. The Gentleman that spake last hath made one Supposal; let me make another. He supposes, That it may appear by the Evidence, upon the Examination of Witnesses, that what my Lady Fenwick or Clancy did, was contrary to the Direction of Sir John Fenwick: If the Evidence happen to be so, 'tis nothing. But we may suppose again, Suppose it happens, that it appears by the Evidence, that it was for the Benefit of Sir John Fenwick to the greatest Degree, to get away one of the Witnesses; & cui bono, is the strongest Presumption to me. I do allow, in Westminster-Hall, that a Woman should not be a Witness for or against her Husband; but if she be directed by her Husband, Qui facit per alium, facit per se; you do not alledge all the Evidence in the Indictment, that runs in general; if the Evidence differs as to Time and Place, ye may find him guilty of the Indictment.

Lord Norryes. Because I would not willingly go upon Suppositions, I desire the Clerk may read the Question that you have passed the last Day, to examining Evidence.

Which was accordingly read.

Now I desire to know, Whether this be Treason within the Indictment, or any of the Allegations of the Bill: Otherwise, I think you have tied your selves up by that Rule.

Mr. Pelbam. I did expect the Gentleman that spake lately would have cleared the Matter. He gave you a Distinction between the Proceedings of Westminster-Hall and the Court of Chancery. I am ignorant of both. I desire to know, Whether we are to go here by the Proceedings of Westminster-Hall, or the Court of Chancery. If we are not tied by these Rules, we may let our selves into any Evidence that will induce us to believe him guilty or not guilty. If we are tied to those Rules that are observed in all Courts of Justice, where Trials of Treason are had, this can be of no Validity: So I desire to know, Whether we are to go according to the Proceedings of those Courts, or whether we may proceed as the Court of Chancery.

Sir Tho. Littleton. The honourable Member that spake last, desires to know, Whether we are bound by the Rules in Westminster-Hall, in their Proceedings, or not. I believe it would have been to very little Purpose to have thought of this Bill, if those Courts could have convicted him. I believe if the Counsel had tied you to the Proceedings of Westminster-Hall, and therefore that you could not have proceeded on this Bill, you would have taken Notice of them, and reprimanded them for saying so. I know not what to say to the Proceedings of Chancery in this Case; but I suppose upon this Trial, you will inform your selves by the best Methods you can; and every Man, according to his Judgment, be for or against the the Bill. If upon what I hear, I am of Opinion he is notoriously guilty, I shall freely pass the Bill. If I do so much as doubt that he is guilty, according to the old Rule, Quod dubitas ne feceris, I shall not be for it; and in order to this I am for hearing every body that comes before us. It is said, that possibly Goodman is withdrawn to Sir John Fenwick's Prejudice; I would be glad to hear that; if so, I shall have the worse Opinion of the Bill. They say, 'tis not alledged in the Bill, concerning Captain Porter's being tamper'd with; but 'tis alledged, That Goodman is withdrawn, and that 'tis not alledged, that Sir John Fenwick was privy to it; but it may weigh to Gentlemen's Judgments, how he comes to be withdrawn. They that tamper with one Witness may be thought like to tamper with another. They tell you, That the Evidence of a Man's Wife will not weigh against her Husband. It may be so in point of Law; but if you think your selves bound up to the strict Rules of Law, dispose of your Bill presently.

Sir Will. Coryton. You have been pleas'd to give Leave to the King's Counsel to prove Matters against Sir John Fenwick. You have heard Captain Porter upon the Fact. If they had opened the Matters, that Sir John Fenwick was instrumental to convey Goodman away, I should have been willing to have heard it: But they opened it, That my Lady Fenwick was instrumental in Conveying away Goodman; and this ought in no sort to be admitted. An honourable Gentleman of the Long Robe, made a Difference in the Proceedings between the Court of Chancery, and the Courts of Westminster-Hall; but I would fain know, if a Fact was stated, Whether my Lord Keeper could determine the Matter before a Commission went to prove it. 'Tis true, we are not tied to the Forms of Law, but we are tied to the Forms of Justice. I know no Case where a Wife is admitted to be a Witness for or against her Husband. In Brown's Case indeed, who took a Woman away, and forced her to marry him; the Question was, Whether she should be admitted? And in that Case she was admitted as a Witness, because the Necessity of the Thing required it; and there was no other Way to prove, whether he had her Consent or not. Another Case there was of my Lord Castlehaven, where from the Nature of the Thing it was admitted; for it was impossible there should be any other Proof of it. But if my Lady Fenwick be guilty of this Matter, it must only by way of Inference affect Sir John Fenwick. They tell you, they insist upon it as an Indictment; then it comes to be a Matter of Consequence; and therefore since the Matter hath been fully stated to the House, as to what they would prove, I think we may now give our Judgment upon it.

Mr. Boscawen. You are here in your Legislative Power, and are no more tied to the Rules of Law in Examining of Witnesses, than you are in giving of Judgment; for you can give those Punishments that never are given in Westminster-Hall. I am of Opinion, that my Lady Fenwick cannot be examined for or against her Husband; but if he send her to solicit for him, it shall have some Weight with me. Those that don't believe it from what he says, may give their Judgment accordingly: I desire to know of this Gentleman, if I don't believe it, whether I can give Judgment against him? I believe a Man's Conscience ought to go with his Judgment.

Mr. Speaker. I will read the Question. That Captain Porter be examined to the Attempt of taking off his Testimony as to the late Conspiracy.

Which Question being put, it passed in the Affirmative.

Mr. Harley. I suppose you will let the Counsel of both Sides have first done with their Questions, and then there will be some Questions proposed to you.

Mr. J. Howe. They tell you how that Sir John Fenwick was indicted, and that Goodman is withdrawn; but there is one Thing the Counsel of both Sides slip over, and that is, Sir John Fenwick hath given in false Informations; it looks as if they were agreed on both Sides in that Matter: I desire the King's Counsel may be asked, Whether they have any Evidence of that Matter?

Col. Crawford. Since I am mention'd in that Paper—

Adm. Ruffel. I believe though that Gentleman was afraid that Matter would have been passed over, yet that the Gentlemen of this House that are therein named will take Care, for their own Vindication, That that Matter should not be slipped over; I suppose the proper Time for that is, when the Evidence is over: I assure you, if no Body else will, I will.

Then Sir John Fenwick, and the Counsel of both Sides, and Captain Porter, were brought in.

Mr. Speaker. Sir Tho. Powys, the House hath considered of your Exception to the Testimony of Captain Porter, as to the Point he was to be examined to, and they are agreed, That 'tis fit that all the Evidence should be laid before them, and they can judge afterwards, whether it be material or fit to be allowed, or not. Therefore, Captain Porter, pray do you give the House an Account at large of what Attempts have been made upon you, at any Time, to draw you off from your Testimony, with respect to the late Conspiracy.

Capt. Porter. I had a Meeting with one Clancy, first in Mitre-Court, at and afterwards at the King's-Head Tavern by the Play-house: At those Meetings he propos'd to give me 300 Guineas to bear my Charges to France, and to send me a Bill for 300 more; and likewise that I should be allowed 300 l. a Year.—

Mr. Speaker. How long had you been acquainted before?

Capt. Porter. Several Years.

Mr. Speaker. Did he tell you who he came from?

Capt. Porter. He said, he had been with — Fenwick, who desired him to make this Proposal to me.

Mr. Speaker. How often had you Meetings with him.

Capt. Porter. About seven or eight Times.

Mr. Speaker. What Satisfaction did he give you, that Sir John Fenwick would perform the Agreement?

Capt. Porter. He told me, my Lady Fenwick, and my Lady Montgomery, should meet and confirm every Thing that Night. The Day before I was to go, I met with my Lady Fenwick, who told me, my Lady Montgomery could not come, because one of her Children was fallen sick.

Mr.

Mr. Speaker. What Satisfaction did she give you, that Sir John Fenwick would perform what Clancy had proposed?

Capt. Porter. She said, what Clancy had proposed should certainly be made good.

Mr. Serj. Gould. Did you receive any Thing in part, in pursuance of this Agreement?

Capt. Porter. I received 300 Guineas of Clancy, and he promised to me a Bill of 300 more, which was deposited by ——— Fenwick in his Hands, to be sent after me into France.

Mr. Serj. Gould. Pray what Letter was that he brought you?

Capt. Porter. He brought me a Letter, and said it was writ by Sir John Fenwick to King James on my behalf.

Mr. Speaker. Did he deliver that to you?

Capt. Porter. No; he delivered it to the Gentleman that was to go with me, one Captain Donelagh.

Mr. Speaker. Why did you not take that Letter into your own Hands?

Capt. Porter. I had it, and read it, before it was seal'd up.

Mr. Serj. Gould. Do you remember the Contents of it?

Capt. Porter. As much as I remember was, He desired his Majesty, by reason that my going away was to save my Lord Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery, &c. to pardon what I have done.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. Who subscribed it?

Capt. Porter. It was not Sir John Fenwick's Name, but they told me, King James would know who it came from.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. How did you proceed after the Meeting with my Lady Fenwick?

Capt. Porter. The next Night after that he had paid me my Money, and shewed me the Bill, and I was to go away the next Day after; They said, the Boat was provided.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. Can you tell whether the Boat was provided?

Capt. Porter. They were taken up presently after.

Mr. Serj. Gould. We will now produce a Record to confirm the Evidence that he hath given you: This Person hath been convicted for this Tampering.

Accordingly the Record for Clancy's Conviction was produced.

Sir Tho. Powys. I desire to know, Whether they offer this as Evidence against Sir John Fenwick?

Mr. Speaker. They offer to prove, That this very Person hath been tampered with, to take off his Testimony; and they leave it then to the House to judge, who is most likely to be guilty of Goodman's Withdrawing. They begin to shew you, there hath been an Attempt to take off this Person's Testimony; you have heard the Person himself to it already: So now they offer to read the Conviction of Clancy to this Matter.

The Record of Clancy's Conviction was read.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. We will prove the like Solicitation hath been made by Mr. Dighton, who is the Solicitor for the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Speaker. What is your Witness's Name?

Mr. Serj. Lovel. Thomas Roe: If you please, Sir, to ask him what Endeavours have been used by Mr. Dighton, to make Use of him, that Goodman might withdraw himself.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Roe, You are required to give this House an Account of what hath passed between Mr. Dighton and you, in order to take off the Testimony of Mr. Goodman.

Mr. Roe. About the middle of September last, I had Occasion to go to Mr. Dighton, to enquire, Whether the Commissioners of the Land-Tax in Surrey sate; for I knew he was concerned in some Affairs for that County: He told me, he did not positively know, but would speedily enquire. At the same Time he took Occasion to tell me, he knew it was in my Power to do Sir John Fenwick Service. I asked him, What he meant by it? Says he, I know you know Goodman well, and it will be the better for you if you will tell me: I asked him, What he meant by that Way of talking? He desired I would meet him some other Time, and I should know further of his Mind. Accordingly I did meet Mr. Dighton: Says he, you know Goodman well, and if you can say any Thing that can discredit Goodman's Testimony, you shall have 100*l.* a Year settled upon you for your Life. Says I, Sir, I do know him well: Says he, Did you never hear him talk of Poisoning the Duke of N. and Robbing on the Highway, and that he is concerned with Clippers. Says I, I have heard him talk of those Matters several Times; but you can't think I will be a Witness, and expose my self, and disparage People, till I know for what. Says he, For that you shall be satisfied; you shall have 100*l.* a Year settled upon you, provided you can discredit Goodman's Testimony, that Sir John Fenwick may come off, and it will be done by a Friend of yours.

We accordingly agreed to meet the next Day at a Coffee-House in the City, and appointed a Friend to be there; but Mr. Dighton did not meet at the Time; and the Reason he told me was, because Sir John Fenwick was that Day to be arraigned. As soon as Mr. Dighton had made this Proposal, I told Mr. Goodman of it, and he advised me to go on with him, and see if I could get any Offer under his Hand: I told him he had appointed to meet me in the City, and a Friend to be there to hear me. I went, and told Mr. Dighton, but Mr. Goodman would not be satisfied with that, but said I must go to the Archbishop, and tell him what passed; so I did go and tell the Archbishop what I have told you now.

Mr. Speaker. Had you any Meeting after that?

Mr. Roe. Yes, on the 19th of September, and then he made great Asseverations, that what he said should be performed; and that I should not only oblige Sir John Fenwick, but my Lord Montgomery; and that Goodman was a lost Man by being become a common Evidence; and that it would not be in his Power to oblige any Man, my Lady Dutchess having discharged him of his Employ, and he would not be in a Condition to do further for me; and says he, whatever you would have gotten by serving my Lady Dutchess in her Concerns shall be made up over and above this 100*l.* a Year that I have promised.

Mr. Serj. Gould. I desire he may be asked, Whether Goodman did not acquaint him, that a Sister of Sir John Fenwick's had been with him, and upon what Occasion?

Mr. Roe. About the Time of the Preferring of the Bill against Sir John Fenwick I saw Goodman at Hick's-Hall; and a little after he told me, that a Sister of Sir John Fenwick's had come to him, and made some Proposals to him, and I acquainted the Duke of Sbrensbury's Deputy, Mr. Vernon, with it.

Mr. Speaker. Did you pursue this Discourse with Mr. Dighton, so as to come to any positive Agreement?

Mr. Roe. No otherwise than what I told you; my Design was to have Mr. Dighton to have given it me in Writing, or else for him to have said it before some other Man; but I don't know any thing whereby I could have discredited Mr. Goodman, if he would have done it.

Mr. Serj. Gould. You observe, Sir, that one of the Witnesses whose Name is subscribed to the Bill of Indictment, is withdrawn: Now to give you an Account that he is withdrawn, I desire the King's Proclamation may be read.

Members. No, no.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. We have Mr. Goodman's Examination under the Hand of Mr. Vernon; we pray it may be read.

Sir Tho. Powys. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be spared a Word to this Matter: I take this to be a great Point, not only as it concerns the Life of this Person, but as it may be a Matter of Example in all Times hereafter; that which they would offer is something that Mr. Goodman hath sworn when he was examined by Mr. Vernon; Sir John Fenwick not being present or privy, and no Opportunity given to cross-examine the Person; and I conceive that cannot be offered as Evidence; for if that should be allowed for Evidence, then what is sworn behind a Man's Back, in any Case whatsoever, may as well be produced as Evidence against him; and they know, that in a Case of the Value of Five Shillings, no Depositions or Examinations of any Man can be made use of; and I am sure they will not say, that the Depositions taken between other Persons, where a Man is not a Party, can be made use of as Evidence against him; and if not admitted where Property is concerned in the lowest Degree, I hope you will never admit it in this great Place, from whence inferior Courts (as to Justice) take their Measures.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. Mr. Speaker, I desire you would spare me a Word of the same Side. I humbly oppose the Reading of this Examination, as not agreeable to the Rules of Practice and Evidence, and that which is wholly new; and this in civil Causes can't possibly be done: No Deposition of a Person can be read, though beyond Sea, unless in Cases where the Party it is to be read against was privy to the Examination, and might have cross-examined him, or examined to his Credit, if he thought fit; it was never pretended, Depositions could be read upon other Circumstances. But in criminal Cases, I appeal to the Gentlemen on the other Side, who know the Proceedings in the Old Bailey very well, it was never admitted: Nay, in an Appeal of Murder, if Depositions be taken before the Coroner, and there be an Examination of Witnesses upon the Indictment, though the Appeal be for the same Fact, and in order to bring the Person to the same Punishment; yet, in that Case, those Depositions can't be read, because 'tis another Suit: But it was never attempted in any Court of Justice, that the Examination of Witnesses behind a Man's Back, could be read in any Place whatsoever. Our Law requires Persons to appear, and give their Testimony viva voce; and we see that their Testimony appears credible, or not, by their very Countenances, and the Manner of their Delivery: and their Falsity may sometimes be discovered by Questions that the Party may ask them, and by examining them to particular Circumstances, which may lay open the Falsity of a well-laid Scheme; which otherwise, as he himself had put it together, might have looked well at first; and this we are deprived of, if this Examination should be admitted to be read.

Now, though the Practice of other Courts does not oblige this House, yet we know you will consider the Rules of Justice; 'tis but Justice in criminal Cases, especially as our Constitution is, that the Person shall see his Accuser. A Man may swear a Deposition reduced into Writing, whose Conscience perhaps would not let him publicly accuse the Prisoner Face to Face: Experience hath shewed it often, that several that will calumniate another privately, will not justify the same in open Court of Justice. What Goodman is, 'tis not proper for us at present to give an Account of, but we oppose it at present, for that we were not present, nor privy, nor could have cross-examined him; 'tis only an Information before a private Justice; for if not so, we know not what Authority he had to examine him; and then if so, Mr. Recorder knows, that in the Old Bailey, if Goodman had died it had not been Evidence; in case he had been sick, or withdrawn without our Privy, they could not have read it; nay, if he were withdrawn by our Privy, it could not be read: 'Tis true, the Inciting him to withdraw had been punishable in another Man, but could not have been read to have convicted the Party; and since this Examination could never have been read there; and if it must be unjust, and hath not been practised, I hope you will not do it now.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, What do you say to it?

Mr. Serj. Gould. I observe this Gentleman's Objection, why this Examination should not be read; and, under Favour, we think we are regular, as this Case is, to have his Deposition read. 'Tis true, as long as the Witnesses can be produced in all Courts, and Practice of the Law, you shall not read his Examination, or what is taken before a Justice of Peace: But that is not our Case; it is now fully proved before you, that he is withdrawn: and it is fully before you, that he hath given Evidence for the King, and hath been examined; and this is an extraordinary Case, and that is the Reason we are in Parliament: He hath sworn this Matter, and before a proper Officer; why then shall not his Evidence be read and allowed when he is wilfully withdrawn, and we say, by the Contrivance of the Prisoner at the Bar? And the Thing speaks it self. Now, with Submission, I take it to be every Day's Practice, that where an Evidence is dead, his Deposition shall be read. It appears to you, that there was to have been a Trial, but the Witness is withdrawn; and it appears plainly that he hath been tampering. The Evidence is full in the Case as to Porter; and we have produced a Record of Conviction, that does confirm it: Now this is such a Practice, we come into Parliament to have it remedied; for otherwise Men shall commit Treason, and by their Contrivance and Art, the Witnesses shall be drawn away, and the Prisoner shall not be brought to condign Punishment. Here is the Record in which he gave Evidence, and he is withdrawn: and there-therefore I hope, in this Case, we shall be admitted to read his Deposition: For I deny what the Gentleman says to be Practice; and Mr. Recorder can give you a better Account, who knows more of the Practice of it, That if a Witness is dead, they may read his Depositions. We are here before you in Parliament; and by the same Reasons that others have been tampered with, this Witness may be presumed to be tampered with; and therefore we are in your Judgment, Whether in this Case his Depositions shall not be read.

Mr. S. Lovel. 'Tis objected, on the other Side, That this Evidence ought not to be offered; and for what Reason? Because, say they, a Jury ought to go secundum allegata & probata; and what is not strictly Evidence by Law, you are not to take notice of; but in criminal Cases (which is this Case) where Persons do stand upon their Lives, accused for Crimes, if it appears to the Court, that the Prisoner hath, by fraudulent and indirect Means, procured a Person, that hath given Information against him to a proper Magistrate, to withdraw himself, so that he can't give Evidence as regularly as they used to do; in that Case his Information hath been read; which, I suppose, with humble Submission, is this Case; but I suppose we are not here tied up to formal Evidence; but 'tis our Duty, since the House hath commanded, to lay the whole Fact before you, and you are Judges what is material, and what is not material.

Sir Thomas Powys. 'Please, Sir, to spare me a little; for sure this is no small Matter. I did expect that they, if they intended to have supported this Evidence, would have mentioned some Author, some Case, or some Precedent, where this has been before: — But he makes such a Distinction, I am mightily surprized at; for Mr. Recorder cites no one Instance, that ever he saw such a Thing in his Life; nor cites one Book that hath such Authority; but he gives you a Distinction, whether it be of his Side or ours, I must submit to you; for he seems to agree, that in Cases of Property, such Evidence is not allowed; but in Cases of Life, in which we ought to be more tender, he says, 'tis to be allowed. Sure if it be not Evidence where five Shillings only may be at Stake, I submit it to you, whether it ought to be admitted in the Case of Life? For my Part, I know nothing of it, if it be a Rule; but I always thought the Evidence ought to be more clear and full in the Case of Life, than in the Case of Property; but Mr. Recorder turns it upon us, and says, though it is not Evidence in Case where Property is concerned, yet 'tis Evidence in Case of Life: But I desire he will shew any one Lawyer in England, that ever said it, but himself.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. I answer to what Mr. Serjeant Gould says: That this is an extraordinary Case, I will not pretend to say any thing, you are the proper Judges of that; we now oppose it in respect of the Rules of Justice. As to Mr. Recorder's Distinction between civil and criminal Causes; he hath admitted, that in civil Causes it would not be allowed; and I hope you will be of Opinion, that it ought not to be admitted in criminal. The Jury must go secundum allegata & probata. I desire to know what other Rules a Jury hath in criminal Cases? But they say, that a Juryman hath not as much upon his Oath in trying a Prisoner for his Life, as in trying an Action of Trespas. Is not the Oath, You shall well and truly try, &c. according to the Evidence you have heard? Now, I would know whether the Form of the Oath, which the Wisdom of our Ancestors hath thought fit to use for 1000 Years past, does not direct what shall be Evidence? Evidence of Prima Facies must be Evidence of living Persons: I am speaking for the Life of a Man, and for maintaining the Rules of Law, which I hope shall continue for ever: And that is, that the Examination of a Person that is absent, shall not be red to supply his Testimony. What you shall think fit to do here, we must submit to; but that 'tis allowed below, we must deny.

Mr. Recorder. Sir, I do, with humble Submission, stand to what I said: As to the Definition of Allegata & Probata, in Matter of Property, we agree with them; but as to Allegata & Probata, in Matters Criminal, we must differ with them: I did say it before, and do say it again, with Submission, That in many Cases criminal, there need no positive Evidence at all; and yet the Jury, according to Allegata & Probata, in that Case, may convict a Criminal. And I do say, with Submission, that where there is no positive Proof at all; yet in that Case, many Criminals are, and still will be convicted. I did instance before in the Case of Clipping and Coining, which are Matters so secretly practised, as 'tis very rare, there can be any positive Witness to prove the Fact: What is then the Method? Why, we go by Circumstances, by Information of other Persons, by Tools, and other Instruments that are found; and tho' no Body ever saw them do the Thing, yet they are convicted. We do not offer this Evidence to be as concluding Evidence, as if Goodman was here; but a corroborating Evidence of what Captain Porter hath said. If it did wholly depend upon this Evidence, it may be it might have no great Weight; but since there is other Evidence viva voce, and since you have been pleased to order us to lay before you all the Evidence, we humbly offer it to you, and pray it may be read.

Mr. Manley. I humbly pray they may withdraw.

Mr. Speaker. If you please to withdraw; but first I am required to ask, if on both Sides you insist upon this Point?

And the Counsel for both Sides declared, they insisted on it;

And then withdrew.

Mr. Manley. I should not have presumed to have given you this Trouble of their withdrawing, but that a Thing is insisted on by the Counsel for the Bill, which I think is of the greatest Consequence to all the Freemen of England. 'Tis true, the Rules of Westminster-Hall are not binding to the Legislative Power; but I would not have the Legislative Power to be governed by the private Sense of any Man whatsoever, but by those Rules that are the Rules of Justice and common Equity. God forbid that we should, upon Suppositions, suppose our selves out of all the Rights of the Law! I never heard any Gentleman of the Long Robe, before the learned Serjeant at the Bar, assert, that an Examination before a Justice of the Peace could be read against a Man for his Life. 'Tis known to all that have looked into the A B C of the Law, that it was never practis'd. 'Tis true, in Equity, Depositions may be read, because they are taken by the Consent of all Parties ; and 'tis as well a Deposition of one Side, as of the other, and the Witnesses may be cross-examin'd : But that is nothing to this Purpose.

Mr. Sloane. I believe I may save you a great deal of Trouble in this Matter ; for those Gentlemen from the Bar that made Objections, spake without Book, but I speak by Book ; (having my Lord Chief-Justice Hales's Pleas of the Crown in his Hand.) No less a Man than my Lord Chief-Justice Hales (and I think he was past his A B C of the Law ; I know not how far this Gentleman is advanced) in his Pleas of the Crown ; in that Part where he shews what is Evidence to the Petit-Jury, he says :

First, By the Statute 1 and 2 Phil. and Mary, c. 13. and 2, and 3 Phil. and Mary, c. 12. the Justice hath Power to examine the Offender, and Informer ; and so he goes on in several Particulars : And then, 5. He says, these Examinations, if the Party be dead or absent, may be given in Evidence. I must allow, such an Examination not of the same Authority, as if the Witness was present it would be, because he can't be cross-examin'd ; but still it must be of some Weight, and it must be read : But in this Case, 'tis of greater Weight than in that which my Lord Chief-Justice puts ; for he says, it would be Evidence, if the Party was dead ; or if he was withdrawn without the Consent of the Party against whom he is a Witness, and that comes to the Case in Chancery, every Day practised ; That if any Person gets my Deeds and Evidences into his Hands, and he hath imbezzel'd the Deeds, they shall be presumed to say what I alledged, because 'tis his Fault he does not produce them. So this Withdrawing by the Infatigation of Sir John Fenwick, is a strong Presumption, that what he swears against Sir John Fenwick, is true.

Sir Richard Temple. No Man can give Evidence of any Depositions, nor was it ever admitted to be Evidence either upon the Party's Death or Absence ; and I would not have that Doctrine pass, that we are not tied to the Rules of Law. My Lord Chief-Justice Vaughan, when he was of this House, told us, we were not bound to the Forms of Law, but we were tied to the Rules of Law ; and if you are not, how will you judge of this Crime ? How will you judge it to be Treason in the worst of Times ? In the Trial of my Lord Mordaunt, who was try'd before the High Court of Justice, they would not allow of this Piece of Evidence, though they had thrown aside Juries. We are tied by the Rules of Law, or we are tied by nothing.

Sir Thomas Littleton. The worthy Member here tells us, we are tied by the Rules of Law, or we are tied by nothing. I hope he does not intend to put the Pun upon us, that was by a noble Lord, You are tied by Rules or no Rules ; if you are tied by no Rules, what Rules are you tied by ? I think you may act by Rules, and yet admit of this Evidence. I told you before, I should not reckon my self so tied by the Rules of Law, but that I would hear all Evidence that should be offered : And I do not think 'tis for our Honour to stifle any thing that may bring out the Truth. A worthy Lawyer said, Let them produce one Evidence that is of the Recorder's Opinion ; and a Member hath produced the Opinion of my Lord Chief-Justice Hales : And I hope we shall not be debar'd from the Satisfaction of hearing what they might hear in the Courts below. Here are two Witnesses that have been examin'd against him, which the Jury did believe that found the Bill. If we cannot have these two Witnesses, let us have as much as we can. We have heard what one said : We have an Opportunity of hearing what the other said. No, says the Gentlemen, we do not desire to be informed ; but I believe it must come to that at last.

Sir Richard Temple. The Gentleman that spake last, insinuated, as if I had dropped something he could not understand. Give me leave to tell you, there was the Courts of the Presidents of Wales ; when they urged Rules of Law, then they were a Court of Equity ; and when they argued from Points of Equity, then they were tied up by the Rules of Law ; and so gave Judgment neither according to the one nor the other ; and so it was taken away by Act of Parliament.

Mr. Boscawen. I have seen it my self, that a Justice of Peace has been examined himself, as to Depositions he hath taken ; and I take it to be an ordinary Examination.

Mr. Harcourt. Sir, I must say, if you were to pick all the Absurdities out of the Trials in the last Reign, you could not pick out more than has been endeavour'd by the King's Counsel to be impos'd upon you this Day : This does in some Measure convince me of what was said by another Gentleman the other Day, that it is much better to be tried by an Assembly of 400 Gentlemen, than at the Old-Bailey. There was a Quotation of a learned Author ; and the Gentleman read you what was Evidence, and what was not : And the Conclusion was, That these Depositions, if the Party was dead or absent, is Evidence. Why Sir, if these Depositions be Evidence if the Party be absent, then what are we doing of all this Day ? If that be a certain Rule, there is no manner of need of applying to this extraordinary Way ; but if you please to enter into the Consideration of that Point (I am neither afraid, nor unwilling to be informed,) If Gentlemen will take it De bene esse, for better for worse, with all my Heart ; but if you enter into that Matter, I will freely tell you my Opinion of it.

Sir Edward Seymour. It hath been made a Question, how far you are bound to pursue the Rules of Law ? I suppose it is no new Thing I am going to say, That Bills of Attainder, and Judgments of Attainder, have been reversed for no other Reason, but because the Parliament have not proceeded according to the Rules of Law : I will not say, you are bound by the Rules of inferior Courts, but you must be bound by the Rules of Parliament, and by the Proceedings and Practice of Parliaments, which is the Law of Parliament. And then I would know, whether this House did admit of an Affidavit for Evidence ? And the Reason is this, because by that you make this, which is the superior Court, lame, without the Assistance of an inferior Court.

Mr. Geo. Rodney Bridges. The Matter before you is, whether Sir John Fenwick be guilty, in your Judgments, of this Conspiracy ? And if so, I cannot imagine why you should not take all the Information that is offer'd to you ; and why not hear all the Circumstances of it : If you do not read this Affidavit, I do not say but 'tis a Kindness to Sir

John

John Fenwick; but what Kindness will it be to the Country and Government?

Mr. James Montagu. I hope you will not spend much more Time about this, because the Law is so plain: If there be any thing in the Objection, 'tis this, That if it be Evidence, the other Courts below may proceed upon it: but that I take to be no Objection neither; for though it be Evidence, there are not two Witnesses; and the Courts below require two Witnesses, though there be other Evidence, and one Witness besides; so that you can't try him without two Witnesses: It would be admitted in the Case of Felony, and there two Witnesses are not required expressly by the Law. And I can tell you, upon my Reputation, I have seen it done several times.

The learned Gentleman tells you, my Lord Chief-Justice Hale's Opinion is so, and that is grounded upon an Act of Parliament; and I think that is of greater Authority than any Judge; and therefore I think that Objection will vanish. He says, you have no Authority to receive Affidavits; but sure we must take Notice of Acts of Parliament; and if that requires Depositions to be taken, and to be Evidence against Criminals, we ought to take notice of it; so that what the Law makes to be Evidence will be good in this Place.

Mr. Harley. I look upon this Matter under your Debates to be of the greatest Consequence to the Lives of the Subjects of England, that possibly can come before you: Gentlemen have given you several Reasons for reading these Depositions; one, that it was my Lord Chief-Justice Hales's Opinion; another, that there is an Act of Parliament for it: Now, I think, it would be proper to join Issue in these two Points: If any Act of Parliament can be produced for this, then the Debate will be at an end; but if there be an Act positive in Fact against it, then I hope you will not receive it: And if my Lord Chief-Justice Hales's Book have not one Word relating to this, then I hope that will be no Argument. He begins his Chapter of Evidence, and says, that the Evidence to the Jury, in Cases of Treason, must be two Witnesses; and then comes to the Cases of Felony: But is that any Debate before us? And he tells you, that Informations might be taken of the Person himself, but that was not by the Common-Law, but was allowed of by particular Acts of Parliament; and then tells you, that his Information, and that Depositions before the Justice, were to be admitted (but he was to be by:) But is this any thing to lead you? Have they brought any Statute that tells you, there must be two Witnesses in this Case? If you will take notice of a Statute, you must take notice of a Statute that is in Point. If any Man suffers by one Witness, I believe all the World must say, he suffers unjustly: I think 'tis of the greatest Consequence to admit of Affidavits. Here it is, that the Boundaries are established for the Lives and Liberties of Mankind: And this is an Observation that is found in History, that those that have broke their Bounds down, it hath returned upon them to their Prejudice.

Sir Robert Richard. I am sure now we are not upon the Point of Reading, whether it be much or little, but upon the Point of Hearing, and that I speak to: And, I think, the Gentleman near the Table did not mistake what the Bar said; for the Counsel on the other Side insisted positively, that neither by the Practice, nor by the Books, was a Deposition to be read as Evidence: Against that the Gentleman near the Chair produced that Book. As to the Matter of Treason, every Parliament-Man can remember, that you have made an Act, that there shall be two Witnesses in Cases of Treason. Now at the same time, it will be taken notice of, that you have taken Care in that Act, that the Proceedings of this House shall not be tied up. The Gentleman tells you of a Court that wavered between Law and Equity, and so came to nothing; and I am afraid, if we bring the House of Commons down to the Courts of Westminster-Hall, they will make nothing of us neither. I do not say, that this Paper shall be as strong Evidence as if Goodman was at the Bar; but to say, it shall weigh nothing, I can't agree neither: I agree also, to make a common Practice of reading Affidavits, will be of ill Consequence: And if you take this to be a Matter of small Consequence, I am not for reading this Affidavit. Now I aim not at Sir John Fenwick's Blood, but the Safety of the King and Government: And I would not refuse any Evidence in this Case, be it never so small. These Gentlemen speak against a Matter being Evidence before it is read; 'tis offered as Evidence; if it be small, or come to nothing, it is the better for the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Pelham. I am indifferent whether I hear that Paper read, or no; but what is said by a learned Gentleman startles me: Says he, in Westminster-Hall they are bound to the Evidence of two Witnesses, and there this Evidence would not be proper, but here we are upon another Foot. I hope we are not here upon another Foot; I hope, though here we are not to be tied by the Chicanry of the Law, we are to be tied by the Equity and substantial Reasons of it. I desire to know, if any one can be tried for Treason upon one Witness? And if we are not tied by the Rules of Law, we may hear any Evidence whatsoever; if the King's Counsel thinks it may satisfy your Fancies, it must be received.

Lord Cutts. I conceive, Gentlemen, we are out in the Way of arguing; I must put you in Mind that we are, at the Bottom, only arguing against the Jurisdiction of this House; and though that Matter hath been settled before, we are told very often of the Law, and Rules of Westminster-Hall. In Answer to that, I must observe there are several Sorts of Laws; there is the Law of Nature, the Law of Nations, the Law of God, and there is the Legislative; and 'tis a Self-evident Maxim, not to be contradicted, That no Superiour is to be circumscribed by an Inferiour: And I would ask, if the Courts below are not inferiour to the Parliament? There is nothing can limit us, but the Law of Nature, the Law of God, and the Law of Parliaments; and though I cannot tell you very well what is the Law of Parliaments, yet no Gentleman hath said any thing upon that Subject, that is against the Question before you: The Matter was in a Course of Law; but upon an extraordinary Accident, and for extraordinary Reasons, 'tis brought before you. The Accident is the withdrawing of a Witness; the Reason is the securing of the King, the Government, your Selves, and Posterity. I don't think any Man that spoke against it, is for favouring Sir John Fenwick; for I think this is the worst Way : I would appeal to every Man, what Prejudice 'tis to you to hear this Paper read? And it may be a Disadvantage to you not to hear it.

Mr. Hovv. There have been many Arguments given for and against the Reading of this Paper ; and if I did not take it that the Reading of this Paper could be of no use to the Judgment we are about to make, I should be for the Reading of it : Either it amounts to a Proof of High-Treason against Sir John Fenwick, or it signifies nothing to you. If you suppose it to weigh any thing, I can never agree to the Reading of it ; for 'tis only an Hearsay brought to convict a Man that is tried for his Life. But there is a greater Argument which weighs more than the Reason hath been urged ; and that is, your Enemies will have an Advantage, and your Government is at stake : But I don't take that to be so much an Argument of their Strength, as of their Weakness and Neglect ; however, when they prove that, I will see how far I can go. 'Tis said, that in the worst of Times, they would not convict a Man upon one Evidence. As to Sir John Fenwick, though he should not be a good Englishman, yet his Cause may be a good Englishman's. The Question is, whether there be more danger by the withdrawing of a Witness, and the escaping of Sir John Fenwick, or the withdrawing of the Witness, and the convicting of Sir John Fenwick? Here they let Goodman (such a Rake) go about, and he is gone ; and now the Fate of the Government seems to depend upon it. The Precedent on the other Side is not so much to be feared ; for I suppose future Governments will take care not to let a Witness go about the Streets again : But it may happen that certain Men, for asserting the Liberties of their Country, may be run upon by ill Governments, and Attempts made upon their Lives by false Witnesses. But the Bill of Treason provides, that no Person shall be prosecuted without two Witnesses. Now it may happen that they shall have no such Witnesses as can convince a Jury ; (I believe this Man to be as much guilty, in my own Thoughts, as I believe any Thing in the World, and yet I will condemn no Man upon my primate Fancies ;) but here are two Witnesses brought before the Grand Jury, and nothing is so easy as to get a Bill found by them (and that is all that is done by Goodman.) Now say they, if this should come before a Petit Jury, one of these Witnesses may not be credited ; so they will carry him away, and urge this for a Precedent, and so this Man may be convicted.

Mr. Smith. I think we are come to the Debate of the Bill, instead of reading the Paper. Was the Question, Whether this Paper should be allowed as a second Witness? Then it would be a great Question with me, whether it should be read ; but the Question, as to Col. Sidney, was not whether the Paper should be read, but whether it should supply the Place of a second Witness? But your Debate is extraordinary ; your Bill takes notice of Goodman being gone away, and now you won't take notice of what he hath left behind him, which I should the rather be satisfied in, because I saw a Gentleman soliciting at the Bar, that did endeavour to get him away. If Goodman had been brought a Prisoner to the Bar, I do not know, whether it might not have been reckoned as great a Fault, as now his having too much Liberty. It hath been cited as a great Lawyer's Opinion, that it might be given in Evidence ; but he does not say what Weight shall be laid upon it.

Mr. Pelham. I am sorry that honourable Gentleman mistook me so much ; I thought I had spoke very plain ; I told you, I was not against reading of the Paper, till the learned Gentleman told you, you were not tied up as the Courts of Westminster-Hall, to two Witnesses. As to what I said of Mr. Sidney's Case, it was not against reading that Paper ; but I said, he did rely upon it as against common Justice, to be attainted upon one Witness : And that Attainder you have thought fit to reverse ; and the Reason he gives for it was, because it was impossible for a Man to make any Defence against one single Witness.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Matter you are now debating upon, is, whether these Papers should be now read. And Gentlemen have let themselves into a Debate foreign to the Question. A great many are against it upon this Argument, that they would not be of Opinion to condemn him, unless there were two Witnesses : That is not the Question, for I think no Man is ready to give his Opinion to condemn or acquit him, unless there were two Witnesses : One Gentleman is against the reading of it, and yet believes Sir John Fenwick guilty. I must respite my Judgment till I have heard his Defence : I think that the Counsel for Sir John Fenwick at the Bar, are very much mistaken, when they said, that such a Thing as an Examination in Writing was never read in any Court of Justice. I think that is a great Mistake, and a good Authority hath been cited for it ; and every one knows the Practice is otherwise ; 'tis often allowed, that the Examinations before a Justice of Peace are read. The Question is now, whether the Examination shall be read? If there do not appear another Witness to prove him guilty, you will debate that Matter then, Whether you will condemn him without two Witnesses? You might as well have debated before, whether Porter should be examined, because no Man will condemn him without two Witnesses, and therefore do not examine one. Why, we know not what further Witnesses may be produced, if Sir John Fenwick was upon his Trial ; I think this Information might have been admitted for Proof, if Goodman was out of the Way ; but if it was admitted, unless there was another Witness produced, I believe the Court will tell the Jury, here are not two Witnesses, and therefore you must acquit him.

Sir William Coryton. I must crave leave to differ from that worthy Gentleman : I think this is the proper Time to determine, whether this Evidence is to be admitted afterwards. Indeed you may determine how far it is available. I thought both in Law and Justice, before I came into the House, that this ought not to be admitted for Evidence. A Gentleman grounded his Argument, upon what? My Lord Chief-Justice Hales's Opinion ; but the Fate is, that my Lord Chief-Justice Hales states the Difference in Cases of Treason, and in Cases of Felony. Now in Felony, they make use of Depositions ; and the Reason is, because 'tis more for the Advantage of the Prisoner than his Disadvantage ; for if the Witnesses ness differ from his Examination before the Justice of Peace, that turns to the Advantage of the Prisoner. In the Nature of the Thing it seems not to be reasonable, for it is easy to turn the Tables. And suppose Goodman in the Place of Sir John Fenwick, and Sir John Fenwick in the Place of Goodman; it would be hard (take the Informations to be as they are) to admit them for Evidence; which in my Opinion, are great Reflections upon Persons of great Honour and Worth.

Sir Charles Musgrave. That which I perceive to be your Debate, is that upon which the Counsel withdrew; you heard it asserted, That there was no Instance in a criminal Case, where an Affidavit was allowed for Evidence: And I think the learned Counsel at the Bar did not much insist upon it; and yet I don't think they were ignorant of the Case quoted out of my Lord Chief-Justice Hales, but they thought it was not applicable to this Business before the House; but only related to Felonies, and when Depositions were taken in the Presence of the Party. 'Tis said, we are not tied up to the Rules of Westminster-Hall; and that Parliaments may denominate Crimes after they are committed; but I never did hear, that the Parliament did take upon them to determine that to be Evidence which is not Evidence in any Court of the World. If you read this Paper to inform your selves, you admit that to be Evidence which is no where else to be admitted. You are told, you are not tied to the Forms of inferior Courts of Law nor Equity: If you are not bound by them you are bound by your own Constitutions. You are told, you are used to read Affidavits in common Causes; but if my Memory serves me right, you have always had it opposed in this House; therefore I think, according to the Rules of your own House, we shall not read Affidavits. Will you make a new Rule in this Case? Pray consider the Consequence of it hereafter. Suppose there came down Affidavits upon another Person, against a great Man for High-Treason, Whether that may not be thought sufficient for to govern your Judgments: I hope those that hear me will have a Care of the Matter. Why, by the Parity of Reason, may not two Affidavits do by the help of the Legislative Power? I would be glad to know, Whether in the Case of an Impeachment, they ever heard of Affidavits being read? And this is much in that Nature; and therefore, why should you admit of an Affidavit now, when the Party charged was not present when that Affidavit was taken?

Sir Joseph Williamson. I am sorry this Point costs us so much Time; the Gentleman that spake last hath brought us to the Question, How far you will admit this Affidavit (as they call it) to be read: I am of Opinion notwithstanding all that hath been suggested, that it not only may be read, but that it ought to be read. None of the Cases that have been instanced, comes up to the Case in Question; all the Cases that are brought are from inferior Courts, and the last that is brought is from the Example and Usage, in less considerable Cases, and indeed of a different Nature.

This Bill of Attainder is indeed a Thing so extraordinary (as hath been said) as it never ought to be used but upon extraordinary Occasions; and upon that Principle, all that is feared is all answered and avoided. It is to be thought never to come but upon the like Occasion; and then God forbid, but they should be governed by the like Precedent; and if that was proper to speak now, which will be at the bottom of it, when we come to give Judgment, and we have time to consider of it, I can't think we shall differ in many Voices. Whether it be Evidence, and how far it is so, is not now the Question; but the Question is only, whether it be such an Evidence as ought to be read? And all the Inconveniencies that have been alledged, depend only upon this, that it should not be admitted in the ordinary Proceedings in the Courts of Justice. Now I say, there was a Power lodged in the Parliament of England to make a Man guilty of Treason, that was not so before; and that even in a Reign when they came to determine what Treasons were: They did not think it for the Safety of the Community of Mankind, but that there should be a Power lodged in the whole, to declare that to be a Crime, that was no Crime before it was committed, giving them more than is asked here: For here can be no Question, but as to the Forms of Proceedings. The Question is not upon his Crime, that is no Question; and I take it, that if upon any Occasion 'tis to be justified in this, and the Law hath trusted the Parliament with a greater Power than now they are about to execute, and there are only Objections to it raised from another Place, which I think can never conclude in this.

Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer. I am for reading of this Paper, though I don't think it Evidence equivalent with viva voce; nor do I think, that in like Cases it ought to be admitted below; but I think, in your Proceedings in Parliament, it ought to be read, whether it be an Affidavit or not; and I am more of that Opinion, from what happened in a Case to Day. We had a Dispute, whether Porter was to be examined, because the Testimony of a Man's Wife was not good below. But when that came to be examined, it was not the Testimony of a Man's Wife, but his own Letter appear'd in Evidence; and Clancy told Porter he came from Fenwick himself, and therefore the Evidence, which at first, for that Reason, was urged not to be heard, did amount to more when it came to the Proof. I would have this Paper read; not because it should supply the Place of a Witness; no, but because you see he hath been indicted by the Evidence of Goodman and Porter, and the first is withdrawn; and by whose Means you have heard: And I would know, whether Goodman's Evidence did amount to accuse him of the same? I do say, in your Power of judging, you are not constrained to the Rules of Westminster-Hall: And I would say, that for your Constitution, the Courts of Westminster-Hall are to be governed by the Letter of the Law; but there is lodged in the Legislative a Power to judge those Crimes that are sheltered behind the Law; and I believe, if the several Attainders were examined, there was never any Attainder that went upon a more just Proceeding than this. I take the Crime to be a Plot with your Enemies to bring in a foreign Power; and as if that was not sufficient, he hath made a false and scandalous Confession, to bring a Distrust and Jealousy among the King and his People; and he hath dallied and gain'd so much Time, as he hath had Opportunity to corrupt one of the Witnesses; and therefore it would be hard hard, if no Law should reach him. 'Tis said, Why did not you keep the Witness? It would be hard, after a Person hath made a Confession for the Good of the Kingdom, that he should be always kept in Irons. We are debating of the Bill, while we are now only purely to see what is in this Paper. I should not have offered to have made use of this as a second Witness; but the being an Affidavit or not, is not material in this Point; the Commons proceed upon Impeachments, without Affidavits. 'Tis offered as Evidence: That Goodman was a Witness against him (you have had Proof of;) and that he hath been tamper'd with to withdraw, by the Friends of this Gentleman. I do think we have gone more fairly and equally to work, than upon any of the Records of Attainder in your Journals.

Mr. Brotherton. The Question is, Whether this Paper shall be read? First, It hath not been proved before whom it was taken, nor nothing at all. It hath been objected, that there ought to be two Witnesses by the late Statute. But I must put you in mind, that it was so by the Statute of Edward VI. and so was the Common-Law before; and my Lord Coke says, there must be two Witnesses, and they brought Face to Face: And so goes to the Divine Law; and if it should not be so, I will put you in mind of an Inconveniency: Eleven Witnesses were produc'd before the Grand Jury; and when they came to give Evidence Face to Face, before the Petit Jury, the first Witness did not know the Criminal that he had sworn against. It was in the Case of Sir Rowland Stanley.

They mention a Paper against Algernon Sidney; but that Paper was wrote by himself. 'Tis said, this House is not bound by the Rules of other Courts; for that Reason they ought to give Rules for other Courts. Nothing is more common than to say, Judgment was so in the House of Lords, and that settles the Law in other Courts below.

Sir Godfrey Copley. Several Gentlemen have spoke to the Reading this Paper; some have said, That it should be read as Evidence: Some others are for reading of this Paper; but yet at the same time tell us, it is not to be looked upon as Evidence, at least not equivalent to a Witness. If the Paper be to be read at all, I would know for what Reason? If it be to have any sway upon our Judgment? If it hath any Effect upon my Judgment, then in some measure it is equivalent to a Witness, when 'tis in the Nature of a Witness; and if it should be read to supply the Defect of a Witness, then I would know, what the Consequence of this might be? I do very well understand, that the Court of Parliament does take no Precedent from Westminster-Hall; nor am I afraid of any Precedent they should give to Westminster Hall: But I am afraid of a Precedent to future Parliaments. Suppose the Information of Sir John Fenwick, that hath been delivered in here, should be produced as Evidence against any of those honourable Persons that are charged in it, though I believe they are very innocent; and some Knaves or Rascals in future Reigns should come in against them, and this Paper should be brought to supply another Witness, what a Consequence would that be!

Sir Henry Hobart. I must differ with the Gentleman that spake last; as to the Gentleman that spake before, I did not expect any thing to be quoted out of Lancashire against the Reading of it. I will tell you why I think this Paper should be read; you have it suggested in the Bill, that Goodman was one of the Evidence against Sir John Fenwick; they are to make good the Suggestions, and this will shew, that Goodman was an Evidence. You are told the Danger of the Precedent, and there may come ill Reigns, and ill Parliaments; as to that, I shall only say, in a good Reign, and a good Parliament, there is no Danger; and in an ill Reign, and ill Parliament, they will make Precedents without your giving of them. Mr. St. John tells you in his Arguments, 'Tis true in inferior Courts, by the Statute of Edward VI. they are bound by two Evidences viva voce; but you are not prescribed by that here, but you are to judge in your own Consciences as the Thing appears. I may say as another did upon another Occasion, let it be read; Valeat quantum valere potest.

Sir Marmaduke Wyvell. I desire to take notice of one Argument that hath been made use of by one or two honourable Persons; which is, that they tell us, that Goodman hath been tampered with by Sir John Fenwick: I remember no such thing that hath been proved; but indeed it was said, that Mr. Dighton offered Mr. Roe 100*l.* a Year, to invalidate Mr. Goodman's Testimony.

Lord Castleton. Let me ask you this Question, Whether if you read this Affidavit, you read it as Evidence?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I desire you would consider what you did, before you ordered Captain Porter to go on with his Evidence, and did agree you would consider of it afterwards. Some are for reading this Paper, and others are indifferent whether it be read or no; and those that are against reading of it, are against reading of it, because 'tis no Evidence: But that is no Reason why you should not read it; for it is at most but doing a vain Thing.

I think you have been told already, if it was insisted on below, it must be read; and the other Side must demurr. The Court might say, 'tis not material, but it must be read before they can demurr: So that the Question, Whether it is Evidence? must come afterwards; and if you go according to the Rigour of Law, with Submission, it must be read.

Mr. Price. I did not design to trouble you in this Matter; but the Doctrine laid down by some Men of our Gown, surprizes me: 'Tis only an Argument, that the Court below ought to admit this Paper to be read; but there is no Precedent shewed, nor convincing Reason given, why the Courts should admit it. The Question is, Whether an Information taken before a Justice of Peace, ought to be read here? If it be to introduce a new Law, and make a new Crime, then you make a new Sort of Evidence: But if this be a Crime against an Act of Parliament, or Law in being, then you must take the Evidence the Law doth afford you, in the Nature of the Crime. The Charge here is a Charge of Treason against a known Law: But the great Argument is, this is an extraordinary Offence; that Sir John Fenwick, or his Lady, had a Hand in sending Goodman away: 'Tis a Mistake; and offering one Thing that is not Evidence, brings us to another; the Evidence of Clancy's tampering with him: Captain Porter does not say, that Sir

John Fenwick employed him; only, that Clancy said so, which is but a Hearsay, and that is no Evidence, unless Clancy was at the Bar, and would say it.

In the next Place, it is said, That there was a tampering by a Solicitor: What is that? Is it not natural for a Solicitor to say, is there any Objections to such a Witness? Is it not natural for him to lessen his Reputation if he can? Now you would have a Copy of an Information to be Evidence. 'Tis said, 'tis tantamount: If so, then the Courts of Westminster ought to intermeddle with it, and not this House. A noble Lord mentioned to you the Law of Nature, the Law of Nations, and the Law of God; but he forgot one Law, which, was most material, and that is Martial Law; which if he had said, does justify the taking away a Man's Life upon extraordinary Evidence, he had said right.

Mr. Speaker. The Question is this, That the Information of Cordel Goodman, taken upon Oath, 24th of April, 1696. be read.

Which Question being put, the House divided.

Yeas, 218. Noes, 145.

So it passed in the Affirmative; and Sir John Fenwick, and the Counsel, and Solicitors on both Sides, were called in again.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, since you withdrew, the House have considered of the Matter, upon which you did withdraw, and they have thought fit, that the Information of Cordel Goodman, taken upon Oath, before Mr. Vernon, 24th of April, 1696. be read.—Clerk, read it.

Clerk of the House of Commons reads——This is signed, Cordel Goodman, and sworn 24th of April, 1696. before James Vernon.

ABOUT some two Years since, or better, I understood Col. Parker was Resident here, in order to engage several People for the Service of King James; and Captain Porter told me, he had a Mind to see me, which he accordingly did; where he told me, there would be an Invasion, and King James would be restored; and that in order to it he had Commission to levy Men, and to grant out subordinate Commissions for a Regiment of Horse, and did ask if I would accept of one, which I accordingly did. He likewise said, he would see me as often as he could; and that Captain Porter and I should receive Directions from him, from Time to Time, upon several Meetings; and having received my Commission, I understood what Captains were to be in the Regiment; which were Captain Porter, Sir William Parkyns, Mr. Charnock, Sir Hugh Smithson, Mr. Higgins, and myself; and one Mr. Witberington, to be Lieutenant-Colonel.

The Commissions were to be Blank when they were to be delivered, and to be filled up by the Captains, &c. I then came acquainted with Mr. Charnock and Sir William Parkyns; and by them and Parker, Captain Porter and I were informed, that there was a great Body of Horse to be ready in the North; but though I asked, yet they never named any Persons to me, but said, it was sufficient, I should receive Orders, and a Roll to March, to Rendezvous upon Occasion; and indeed I did not much press it, because I did gather there were a great many concerned; and at this Time Captain Porter and I took a House in the Chase, with Stables and Barns, fit for holding Horses, and as a fit Place to meet, upon Orders given us to March, which were then daily expected.

Some Time after this Colonel Parker was taken, and being committed to the Tower, he made his Escape; and after that I saw him, and then he told me, he would be sure to correspond with me and Porter; and I should receive his Letters of Mr. Charnock or Mr. Johnson, and he accordingly did; and in his Letters he still gave us Hopes, and said, he would certainly send us notice to be in readiness Time enough, to be serviceable to the Design of the Invasion.

The last Letters I received from Parker, gave me Advice, That he doubted not, but the Cause would come to a Hearing as this Easter Term; and he should write no more, but bring the Orders himself: Upon which I went to Charnock, and he told me he did expect him here in a short time: But always, or most commonly, in his Letters, he told me, for a Sign, That when the Thoulon Fleet should join the Brest Fleet, I might certainly depend, that we should be invaded here.

During these Transactions, Captain Porter complained, that something he was sending to Lancashire, had miscarried; he desired me to set by two Boxes, which I looked not into, but supposed them to be Arms, and I did set them by for him: I had not bought any Arms, but had bespoke some of one Perry, a Gunsmith, who said, I should have them at a Week's Warning.

After Parker's having made his Escape, and getting into France, Mr. Charnock came to me, some Time before the King's going to Flanders, and said, he had something to propose to me; and desired me to go along with him, which I did; and he brought me to one Mr. Waugh, who said, he expected a Commission from King James, to seize King William; accordingly we went to the Chocolate-House in St. James's-street; and after some Discourse about the Commission he said he expected, we appointed another Meeting at that Place, and adjourned from thence to my House in Brownloe-street, where was present, Mr. Charnock, Mr. Porter, Mr. Waugh, Major Matthews, and Mr. Donelagh. The Subject of our Discourse was, about the Surprizing and Seizing the King, as he came from Richmond; and after several Ways proposed to that Purpose, I particularly asked; Suppose that the King were in our Power, what then? For we ought to have regard to some End or other in such an Undertaking; for I was not willing to offer any thing to his Person. Mr. Waugh said, we might have a Coach and convey him away; and he said, he was assured of a Fort to be delivered to him, and put into his Hands (to the best of my Remembrance it was Deal) which might give us Shelter till we might find Opportunity to carry him into France by Shipping. I must confess, I did see very little probability in what he said; neither did I believe, that he would receive any such Commission, as he said he expected: (For about two Years since, I remember I saw Sir George Berkeley, with Col. Fountain, and Mr. Porter; Sir George was then going over to France, and it was the only Time that ever I saw him; and then Captain Porter and I did desire, that if King James designed any such thing as seizing King William, he would send over a Commission, and a Pardon withal withal in Case of an Accident ; which Message Sir George carried over, and King James refused to send it.) However, we had another Meeting after that at my House, by which Time, he said, he would shew us the Commission, and facilitate the Design ; it was at a House behind the Temple, where the aforesaid Company met, and Mr. Waugh brought with him one Mr. Hays, who, he said, could furnish us with a Ship which would be ready to transport us after we had seized the King ; but upon Discourse with Mr. Hays we found that the Demands were so exorbitant, and not in possibility of being complied withal ; and besides, no Order nor Commission being produced, we did desist then ; for Captain Porter and Major Matthews, and I, did declare we would not meddle without sight of the Commission. After this, Captain Porter and I talked of having a Vessel, and sending Le Rue and Charnock about it. We met at the Fountain by the Temple-Gate, and Sir William Parkyns was there ; and during the Time of our being there, one called Sir William out, and Sir William called out Porter, who came in, and said, there was a Gentleman that could help us in this Affair ; who he was I know not ; I believe Captain Porter may, for I saw him not : But all this proved ineffectual, for the King went away suddenly, and no Commission ever came. And by Letters from France I understood King James was angry, that they used his Name to what he had not promised ; and Porter and I wrote over, by his Order, the Truth of the whole Matter.

Some Time after this, Captain Porter, the Earl of Aylesbury, Sir John Freind, Sir William Parkyns, and Sir John Fenwick, and others, met about sending over some Proposals to King James, to expedite an Invasion ; and likewise Captain Porter said, it was proper I should be there, for he had engaged for me. I told him I would come ; and at the King's Head in Leaden-ball-street, I found the Persons above-named, together with my Lord Montgomery, and one Mr. Cook.

The Effect of their Consultation was, the sending Mr. Charnock with a Message to this Purpose ; That if the King of France could spare such a Number of Foot, and so many Dragoons, amounting to about 12 or 15000, or thereabouts in all, that then upon Notice given, that every particular Man there, was to furnish such a Number of Horse, some more, some less, to be ready to succour the Forces from France when landed. Mr. Charnock went and returned with a Refusal, that Forces could not be spared : Sir John Freind and my Lord Aylesbury were of Opinion, that if King James would venture hither with some small Retinue, he had Friends enough to appear for him, without any foreign Forces ; but that was held in doubt.

I used afterwards to see my Lord Aylesbury ; I always asked, what News he heard ? He said, when he received any Orders, he should know ; for he having been in France (as he did not deny) I supposed him not to be ignorant of what was intended.

And to the better facilitating an Invasion, Sir John Fenwick used to send over a List of the Forces, and how they were quartered, and what were in Garrison, and what otherways disposed of : He having made a Mistake in the Account, Parker did by Letter desire me to try if I could procure such an Account ; which I accordingly did of one Gibson, a Clerk in the Office, and sent it over frequently.

After the Escape of Parker out of the Tower, Sir John Fenwick, when I asked him how he got away, and how much Money was given ? he said, 200*l.* promised, and 300*l.* given ; for when a Person came in and told him, he had brought him Liberty, and was to have 200*l.* he replied, you shall have 300*l.* and it was made good to him afterwards.

Cordell Goodman.

Much about the same Time, I used now and then, with Captain Porter, to be with Sir John Fenwick, and it was agreed, that if Parker should not bring us timely Orders, that what Forces we could bring in, (viz.) Porter and I, we were to take Orders from Sir John Fenwick ; this we offered him, and he kindly accepted : And then he said, That he believed most of my Lord Oxford's Regiment would go to King James ; when I told Mr. Paradise had promised to bring in 7 or 8 to me, and that Mr. Aynsworth was to bring in 20, and Parker had said, if I made it 30, it was sufficient for me.

As to keeping the Horses, Sir John said, it was dangerous, and they would certainly be seized ; but the best Way was to have a List of what Horses were in and about the London Stables.

Captain Porter and I sent accordingly to view the Stables. I sent Mr. Reybough, and Captain Porter sent Cranborn, and they took an Account.

Cordell Goodman.

Jurat. 24 April, 1696.

Coram me, Ja. Vernon.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. Now Mr. Speaker, if you please, we will call some of the Grand Jury that will give you an Account what Evidence they found the Bill upon — Mr. Gracedue, you were one of the Grand Jury that found this Bill ?

Mr. Gracedue. Yes, Sir.

Sir Thomas Powys. This is so far from being Evidence, that I think 'tis the Oath of the Grand Jury, That they shall not disclose or discover the King's Secrets. The Bill of Indictment is but an Accusation. A Bill of Indictment cannot be given in Evidence against a Man for the least Crime forever. It can't be given in Evidence to be credited, because 'tis but an Accusation ; and by Consequence, whatever any Witness says at that time, can go no farther. When a Person comes upon his Trial, they can't so much as resort to any thing that is sworn before the Grand Jury, nor make use of it.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. We humbly oppose this Evidence ; because the Gentlemen can give no Instance in their Reading or Observation, that the Testimony that hath been given before a Grand Jury, hath been given in Evidence to a Petit Jury : And 'tis Part of the Oath of a Grand Jury-Man, that it should not be disclosed. We do not say, it will bind your House ; but I hope it will be Evidence to you, that 'tis not agreeable to the Rules of Law.

Members. Go on, go on.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Gracedue, will you give the House an Account, who were the Witnesses before you upon finding the Bill ?

Mr.

Mr. Gracedue. The Witnesses before us, were Captain Porter, and Mr. Goodman.

Mr. Speaker. Can you remember so well, as to give an Account to this House of what Evidence Mr. Goodman gave?

Mr. Gracedue. Yes, I think I can. When he came before us, he told us, That he was at a Meeting at the King's Head in Leaden-ball-street, where there was Sir John Fenwick, my Lord Montgomery, Captain Porter, Mr. Charnock and others; and the Business was to send Mr. Charnock over to France, to procure Men to invade this Kingdom; and 8000 Foot, and 2000 Horse was proposed. He told us, the Result of that Consult was, that if France would supply 8000 Foot, and 2000 Horse, it would be a sufficient Power to come over; and that they would supply 2000 Horse among themselves. Upon which Charnock replied, Gentlemen, you send me over upon Uncertainties; you say, you will supply 2000 Horse, but unless you give me some Assurance, I can't, nor will I go. And the Question was proposed to all of them, if they would make good their Proportion; and they promised singly. Says I, Did Sir John Fenwick promise? And he said, Yes. Says I, Did my Lord Montgomery? And he said, Yes. He was asked, Who else? But, says he, 'tis not a Question for you to ask us; and for that he referred himself to me: For, he said, he was not bound to answer further, having proved the Indictment.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. We desire Mr. Joshua Meade may be asked to the like Purpose. Were you one of the Jury that found the Bill against Sir John Fenwick?

Mr. Meade. Yes.

Mr. Speaker. Pray, who were the Witnesses before you upon finding of the Bill?

Mr. Meade. There was Captain Porter, and Mr. Goodman, Sir.

Mr. Speaker. Can you remember what Mr. Goodman testified then?

Mr. Meade. Mr. Goodman did then testify, That Sir John Fenwick, my Lord Montgomery, &c. were at the King's Head Tavern in Leaden-ball-street; and Charnock, and the rest there did consult how to bring in their old Master; as to Charnock, That they agreed to send him over to King James, to know whether the French King could furnish them with 8000 Foot, and 2000 Horse, and that they would endeavour to meet him with 2000 Horse. Hereupon Charnock (Goodman said) put it to every Man of them, to know if they were all of one Mind? and they all said they were. This he did prove, and this is all I can remember.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. We have many more to the same Purpose, if the House think fit to hear them.

Members. No, no.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. We will go thus much further; That upon the Trial of Mr. Cook, wherein there was Evidence given by this Gentleman, and in that this Gentleman that is the Prisoner at the Bar was particularly named to be concerned, we will call them that were present there at the giving of the Evidence: But first, we desire to read the Record of Cook's Conviction.

Thereupon a Motion was made for the Counsel to withdraw; and being withdrawn, a Motion was made for Candles, which passed in the Affirmative without a Division, in regard it being dark without Candles, there could be no Motion made for adjourning the Debate, or remanding the Prisoner.

VOL. V.

Afterwards a Motion being made for adjourning the House 'till to Morrow Morning, the House divided.

Ayes, 141.

Noes, 163.

And so it passed in the Negative; and Sir John Fenwick, and the Counsel, and Solicitors, were brought in again to the Bar.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, the last Evidence you were about to offer was, that of the Record of Mr. Cook.

Sir Thomas Powys. Mr. Speaker, we oppose that being offered as Evidence; as I understand it, they are going to give in Evidence against Sir John Fenwick what was sworn against Mr. Cook; that is not admitted in the Courts below; for, according to that Method, the Trial of one in the Company would be the Trial of all the rest. This was never allowed in any other Case, and I hope you will not allow it here.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. The Indictment is, that they did consult together, but their Crimes are several; if they had been mentioned in one Indictment, and one had been tried at one Time, and the other at another, it would not have been allowed that they should give in Evidence against the one, what had been sworn against the other; for though their Charge is by the same Witness, and for a Fact done at the same time, yet the Defence of the Parties may be different; and it cannot be expected, that we, on the behalf of Sir John Fenwick, are prepared to give an Answer, in regard of any thing that was sworn against Mr. Cook.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, you hear the Exception.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. We hope in this Case we shall go on with our Evidence, as offered and proposed to this House. These Gentlemen have made their Objections, as if they were below in the inferior Courts; but we are here now before you in a parliamentary Way; and what is that which brings us here, but because there is a Witness withdrawn by Artifice, so that we cannot produce him? And therefore we come, and humbly apply our selves to this honourable House. Now, Sir, you are Judges of the Method of coming at the Truth, and supplying that Defect: If we could produce him, there would be an End of the Matter; but in this Case we are in the Judgment of this honourable House, Whether we shall not give such Evidence as he hath given upon his Oath, though in other Cases it is not admitted.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. When we produced the Record of Conviction, we only produced it to shew you there was such a Trial; and by that means to let us in, to shew you what was sworn by Mr. Goodman at that Trial.

Then upon the Motion of Colonel Granville and Sir Richard Temple, Sir John Fenwick, and the Counsel, and Solicitors, withdrew.

Sir Richard Temple. If I did not believe what is now offered, is what was never offered before, and of dangerous Consequence to every one here, I would not have troubled you at this time of Night. There has nothing been offered that this hath ever been done. They say, It hath not been done in inferior Courts: Pray let us see if ever it hath been done in Parliament, That what was given in Evidence at another Trial, should be given in Evidence against another Person here, when this Person was not by, and had no Opportunity to defend himself against it; I am sure it was never done yet.

Sir Thomas Mompesson. This Gentleman complains this was never done. When the Duke of Monmouth was impeached, the Bill was read three times in one Day, and that Gentleman moved for the Impeachment.

Sir Richard Temple. Here were three Witnesses that did declare they saw him in actual Rebellion, at the Head of an Army; but I hope I am not to answer for all the Proceedings then.

Colonel Granville. When I saw them going on to make use of that as Evidence, which was never allowed in any Court, I thought I ought to move for them to withdraw. I shall not give my Consent to have it read, 'till some Body satisfies me 'tis good Evidence against Sir John Fenwick: I can't see how you can admit this for Evidence: Are we to read all the Trials that are upon this Plot? Therefore I desire you will bid them produce what is Evidence against Sir John Fenwick, and not to trifle with you.

Sir Thomas Littleton. If you proceed in this manner I know not when you will have done. They do not tell you, they produce this as Evidence against Sir John Fenwick; nor do I take this to be the only Evidence to prove him guilty. If nothing but exact Proof would have satisfied, this Bill would not have been brought in: But this is to make as good Proof as the Nature of the Thing will bear. You have heard several Things before, in relation to Goodman, that possibly might strictly be no more Evidence against Sir John Fenwick than this; as Goodman's being withdrawn. First, they offered to prove that he was gone; that it was suspicious that Sir John Fenwick was privy to his going: Why did you admit the Evidence of what he said to the Grand-Jury? What is this, but to give Evidence of what he said to the Petit-Jury, wherein the Grand-Jury and Petit-Jury have both believed him.

Mr. Harley. I think if you had come to one Determination before you had entered upon this Matter, you had very much shortened your Business; that is, that you would not expect such Proof as is necessary at Law; and it may be if you would come to it now, it would save you Time: For I find by the Counsel, that what is sworn against another Man, at another time, would not be Evidence at Law against the Prisoner; and I believe if he should except to a Jury-Man, because he was upon Cook's Trial, it would not be allowed as a good Exception, and he would be told, he was no way concerned in another's Trial.

Mr. Howe. 'Tis a strange sort of Evidence that is offered here, and 'tis a strange Way of bringing it in. The House made nothing lately of Hear-say, and yet now Hear-say must be taken for Evidence. I have heard that the Grand-Jury take an Oath not to discover what was sworn before them; this, since the Grand-Jury have subjected themselves to (yet you have brought them here as Witnesses to give an Account of what was sworn before them, which I am afraid is a Breach of their Oath) it shall make me give less Credit to what they say. We are here to attain a Man, but we must not talk of Proof; that is a strange Thing! I am sure, if you do not find it with Proof, it would be against Proof. Shall I be plain with you? I question, if this House had heard what Goodman swore at that Trial, and what was alledged against it, whether this House would have been of that Jury's Mind: For I have heard that two or three did swear, he was not at the Place at the Time he swore he was, as plain as a Negative could be sworn.

Mr. Harcourt. If you please to let the King's Counsel go on upon this, you will save a great deal of Time, and prevent any Exception to any Evidence afterwards: For 'tis not in the Power of Man to offer any thing more absurd. I don't believe that ever any Man heard of such a Thing offered, That a Record should be given in Evidence against a Man, that is no manner of Party to the Record: I am sure never any such Thing was attempted before. As for the other Things, you had something offered that made it seem doubtful how far you should give Credit to them. Upon those Matters, the Counsel at the Bar for the King told you, That there was some Pretence that it was Law, and practised below, and a Book was produced to justify it: But in this Case, if there be Book, Practice, Precedent, or any thing to justify it, I will sit down. The Answer made it ten times worse: The Gentleman said, he would not have the Record read, but upon that Record to prove what was sworn at the Trial: Why, does that concern any Person in the World but Cook?

Lord Cutts. If the worthy Gentleman that spake last had made out all his Propositions with Clearness, equal to the Assurance with which he asserted them, they would have more Weight: But I will say, that which he hath asserted does not appear to me so. I take this to be the same Thing in some measure debated over again. It hath been told you, That this House are to give their Judgment in a Matter of great Importance; and therefore I think 'tis fit that all the whole Matter should be laid before them; when that is done, they only are the Judges of what Weight it is.

Mr. Sloane. I go along with those Gentlemen, That this is no sort of Evidence against Sir John Fenwick: But our Question is about a Witness that is withdrawn, and to know what he said, and how he was believed when he was here. How he is gone, we have seen already; and therefore though I think the Verdict against Cook, nor nothing of that can be given in Evidence against Sir John Fenwick; yet if he hath withdrawn the Witness, and the Credit of him is at Stake, as you have heard Evidence of what he said upon Oath before the Trial came on, by the same Reason you may hear what he said at the Trial.

Mr. Pelham. I think it would shorten our Debates, if we were truly satisfied about what we are a doing, that we are trying Sir John Fenwick, as we are told at the Bar; he called it a Trial, and 'tis a Trial. I must confess I was in hopes I should never sit in the House of Commons to try any Body; I did not think it the Business of us; if I had, I would not have come hither: But since we are come into it, is any thing more natural, than to examine whether this Evidence be proper, or such Evidence as any Court would allow of?

Sir William Williams. I suppose there is no Gentleman of our Profession that hath seen any Record, cord will say, that this hath been offered in any Court of Law: I believe, if he was upon his Trial upon the Indictment, no Body will say it would be read against him. Let us consider how many Judgments, that have been given hastily in the late Reigns, have been reversed. What is the Reason that is given for it? It is for receiving that for Evidence, which was not Evidence in the Law: Your Bill of Right takes notice of it.

Mr. Solicitor General. I did not think this Matter would have held you a quarter of an Hour; but if Gentlemen will debate upon the same Matter that hath been over-ruled twice before, all that is to be proved by this Record is, that one Peter Cook was attainted for High-Treason: If the Counsel on the other Side would have owned Peter Cook to have been attainted, you had not been troubled to have the Record brought to the Table. But as to what they say, that Sir John Fenwick was no Party to the Record, and therefore it can be no Evidence against him; I suppose it would be Evidence for him. Suppose Goodman had sworn he never had been at the King's-Head Tavern, would not the Prisoner have produced a Witness to prove what he had sworn? Then I would put you in mind of a Case, because there is a Nicety in this Matter without any Reason; it was in the Trial of Alderman Cornish; he was indicted and tried, and the great Fact was in the House of one Shepherd; there was a Witness against him, one Rumsey, who swore, &c. Says Mr. Cornish, He was a Witness at my Lord Russel's Trial, and he did not name me to be one; and it went so far, that when Shepherd said, I was in the Room; he stood up and said, No, it was read before I came in. Mr. Cornish would have produced a Witness to have proved what Rumsey said: Says the Court, We cannot admit of that; for it does not appear to us, that my Lord Russel was ever tried for High-Treason; and there, upon that Slip, was that Gentleman destroyed. I pray it may be read; I have given no Opinion of what Force it is, but I think it depends upon the same Reason; nay, you have more Reason to do it, than any thing you have read to Day.

Mr. Price. 'Tis very much pressed, that you should read that, which, when read, they say, is not Evidence, but only to introduce another Matter. If it be not Evidence, upon what Account shall they read it? But if it introduce other Evidence, this is an Ingredient and Part of that Evidence. Now suppose the Record should be produced, and they should bring Witnesses to say what Goodman swore at that Trial: would that be Evidence? No sure, for no Body ever pretends that this hath been admitted either at Law, or in Parliament. By what Law? By what Rule? By what Measure of Reason are we to proceed in this House? If you would permit to be produced a Record of Conviction against a third Person, and this to be Evidence against one that is not present, I think you may as well admit to be produced a Record of the Conviction of any other concerned in the Assassination. But I stood up principally upon the Observation made at the Bar, and he put you that which he takes to be a sinister Case; for says he, suppose Sir John Fenwick had brought this Record, and made use of it to take off Goodman's Testimony, should it not be Evidence? Yes, no doubt of it; and there is the Distinction. 'Tis one thing, where you are to give in a Record to convict and attain a Person, and another thing, where it is to prove a Man perjured, and to invalidate his Testimony; for when Evidence is brought against a Prisoner, he hath no way to lessen his Evidence but what is collateral; if it be upon a Trial when another is concerned, if the Witnesses gave a contrary Evidence, or the Party was acquitted, then the Record may be made use of against the Witness: But it differs very much, where you bring Evidence to take off the Credit of a Witness, and where you bring it to convict or attain a Person. The Case of Cornish, that turns upon the same Reason, and it was only to be used to take off the Testimony of Rumsey; but if this Record of the Conviction of Cook be brought to any purpose now, 'tis to satisfy your Consciences, that Goodman gave a good Testimony at that Trial; and I wonder the Serjeants should offer it, who are sworn to offer nothing in Violation of the Law.

Dr. Oxenden. If I did not think this Question had been determined before, I should not trouble you in this Debate; for did not we receive what Goodman deposed upon Oath before a Justice of Peace? Was it read because it was taken in Writing, or because it was his Evidence? Now they offer you an Evidence of his, that was not put into Writing, but they will prove by Witnesses; what is the Difference? If it had been taken down in Writing, it must have been admitted as the same was before.

Sir Marmaduke Wyvell. That worthy Gentleman desired to know the Difference, &c. That Deposition was against Sir John Fenwick, but this Evidence, that they offer now, was given against Peter Cook.

Mr. Att. General. You are now upon a Debate, Whether you shall read the Conviction of Peter Cook: I do agree with those Gentlemen that have spoke of this Matter, that the Conviction of Cook, nor any Evidence upon his Conviction, can be Evidence against Sir John Fenwick. I don't pretend that this is; nor don't believe that this is offered upon any such Consideration; but 'tis one of the Allegations of the Bill, that several of these Gentlemen were present at this Consult, of which Sir John Fenwick is accused; therefore I suppose the Counsel for the Bill did offer this Record to make good that Allegation, and so think it may be properly offered: Unless it be admitted: I don't see how it can be made good further; I do not think it proper to examine to what Goodman swore at Cook's Trial.

Sir William Williamson. I speak only to shew my Concurrence with the Attorney General; Mr. Attorney hath stated it right no doubt, as to the Conviction of this Person; as Mr. Attorney offers it, it may be proper enough.

Members. Call them in, call them in.

Sir Christopher Musgrave, I hear Gentlemen say, Call them in: Do you intend when you call them in to read this Record? I think the learned Gentleman hath stated it, that it ought not to be read as Evidence. Now the Counsel for Sir John Fenwick said, they hoped you would not suffer it to be read as Evidence against the Prisoner: I never heard the Counsel say, that Cook was not attainted, nor ever heard that any Man did doubt it; then if it be no Controversy between the Counsel, to what End is it brought hither? Do you think that the Steps that are urged to be taken in this Case, will not be a Precedent for Posterity? I take it that there is a great deal of Difference between the Paper you have read and this Record; and therefore if you call in the Counsel, I hope you will not gratify them in reading of it.

Mr. Edward Harley. Before you call the Counsel in, I humbly propose it to you to consider to what Purpose this Record should be read; if as Evidence, you overthrow all the Course of Proof that is settled by the Common Law, and Statute Law; for it hath been in all Trials opposed, to give in Evidence that which is improper, because it should not influence the Jury. I would not have it said, that under the Reign of King William, any thing was done contrary to the Law and Constitution of the Nation. There hath been an Instance given of the Trial of Mr. Cornish, tho' that Case does not come up to it: But we know what was done in those Reigns hath been justly reflected upon; and I hope you will not make a Precedent here, to encourage Judges to do what is against Law.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, This is your Question, That the Record of the Conviction of Peter Cook shall be read.

Which Question being put, the House divided.

Ayes, 181

Noes, 110.

So it passed in the Affirmative.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, You have had another Question that hath been the Subject of your Debate, That the Counsel for the Bill be admitted to give Evidence, as to what Goodman swore against Peter Cook.

Mr. Robert Harley. The learned Gentleman did tell you, That what Goodman said at that Trial, ought not to be given in Evidence; and, therefore, I think, Gentlemen won't insist upon that, that is carrying it too far; and, I think, he opened it, that it was only to prove that Cook was attainted, and to make use of it no further.

Mr. Speaker. Is it then your Pleasure, that Sir John Fenwick and his Counsel be called in?

[Which Question being put, it passed in the Affirmative, and accordingly they were called in.]

Mr. Speaker. Sir Thomas Powys, the House hath determined to have this Record read, not as Evidence against Sir John Fenwick, but to prove the Allegations in the Bill, and that Cook was attainted.

Read the Record.

[Accordingly that Record was read by the Clerk.]

Sir Barthol. Shower. We are sure the Record does not prove that he was convicted upon Goodman's Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. Look upon the Indictment.

Sir Thomas Powys. It appears by that, that Goodman was a Witness upon the Indictment; but it does not prove by that, that he was a Witness upon the Trial.

Mr. Serj. Gould. May it please you then, Mr. Speaker, thus far 'tis agreed, that here is a Record of the Conviction of Cook; and 'tis agreed, and the Record speaks it, that Goodman was a Witness, for it is indorsed upon the Indictment.

Now the main Dispute is, Whether Goodman's Evidence did prevail to convict Cook upon that Indictment? And for that we shall apply our selves. Call our Evidence, some of the Jury, and some that were then Witnesses, and they will give you an Account upon what Evidence that Conviction was.

Sir Thomas Powys. In what you were pleased to acquaint us at our last coming in, you were pleased to give such a Reason in relation to the reading of this Record, that if we had heard it before, we would not have troubled you to have withdrawn; for it was proper to make out the Allegations of the Bill, and that Cook was convicted; but, we apprehend, they can carry it no further than what they have applied it to. But I perceive from hence, the Gentlemen of the other Side are encouraged to proceed to another Piece of Evidence, such they call it; they are going to call the Witnesses to prove what was sworn at the Trial of Cook, where Sir John Fenwick, nor no Person on his behalf, was present, either to hear, or observe, or cross examine, or offer any thing to their Credit, which possibly he might be furnished with, tho' Cook was not: I hope that will be no more allowed of as Evidence here, than in any other Place.

Sir Barthol. Shower. We humbly oppose their calling of Witnesses to give this Account of the Evidence given at Cook's Trial. And we submit it to your Consideration, whether you will think it just, that the Evidence that is given with respect to one Man only, shall conclude another Person that stands at the Bar in Defence of his Life, or that it shall be given against him. Every Man's Defence is several; and we opposed the reading of the Record before, and so do now the calling of any Witnesses to this Purpose, for the same Reason.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. We call these Witnesses for no other Purpose, but to prove, that Goodman, what he did inform by that Paper, he did swear before a Jury.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, you must withdraw.

[Accordingly they withdrew.]

Mr. Manley. I thank God I have that regard for the Laws of England, and to every Englishman's Life, that when I see any thing attempted against it, I must give my Testimony against it: I did not believe they would have insisted on it, for there was a Gentleman that sat near to you, who in the Close of his Debate, I thought, had satisfied every Body, that this was a Thing that ought not to be read; if they should do it, it would be a Thing of dreadful Consequence; if you should admit of every thing these Gentlemen, that come in for the Bill, offer, I know not where it will end. How will it appear that upon Goodman's Evidence the Jury found Cook guilty? For they might find Cook guilty, and yet give no Credit to Goodman; for he was contradicted materially, and there might be other Evidence upon which they might find him guilty, and yet lay aside the Evidence given by Goodman; but whether one Way or the other, we can't tell. They tell us, We are not to be guided by the Rules of Westminster-Hall; but we are to be governed by the Rules of Justice; and we are not at this Time to seek a Way to the King's Favour, by voting against a Criminal for High-Treason.

Mr.

Mr. Sloane. There is no manner of doubt of it, That that Gentleman is in the right, who tells you, If this Indictment and Conviction of Peter Cook stood singly, as to Sir John Fenwick, 'tis no Evidence; and if they will produce Goodman now, it shall be no Evidence against them; but take the Case as it is, here is a Witness, who hath given me Satisfaction, that 'tis one of Sir John Fenwick's Friends or Agents (which is the same Thing as if done by himself) by whose Means this Witness is withdrawn: Now the Question is, What could this Witness say, when he was here? What did he say? 'Tis not Conclusive, but 'tis Material for you to hear what he did say, when he was upon his Oath.

Sir Christopher Musgrave. The Gentleman of the Long Robe that spake last, was pleased to tell you, It is very reasonable that you should hear those Persons, as to what Goodman swore at Cook's Trial; I confess, I think this is harder than all the rest, because what you have hitherto admitted was in Writing; one was an Examination before a Justice of Peace, the other a Record; but for any Man to say, he can exactly repeat what any Man swore at the Trial, to me is wonderful: Why, in his Evidence, the least Mistake of a Word alters the Nature of the Thing, and therefore this would be a bold Undertaking for any Man; for if he wavers in the least Circumstance, 'tis not true that he swore so: Then this Gentleman was no ways concern'd in that Trial; and to what Purpose is it read, if not to the Prejudice of Sir John Fenwick? I do not know but by the same Rule, you may hear Evidence of what any Man hath sworn upon all the Trials this three quarters of a Year.

Mr. Sloane. I have been called upon to know in what Cases Testimony hath been given, that Witnesses have sworn so and so at a former Trial. 'Tis every Day's Practice between Party and Party, that where a Witness doth die, between the same Parties (I will state the Case fairly) 'tis given in Evidence, that such a Witness, at such a Trial, did swear so and so; sometimes they take it in Short-Hand, and then they can tell the Words of it; otherwise they repeat it upon their Memories; but I will not strain it: But I put it with a further Reason upon it; for we do not desire to hear it as conclusive Evidence upon the Prisoner, but only in this Sense; here is a Witness supposed to be carry'd away by the Prisoner's Means; and therefore, is it not necessary to hear what he said before he was deluded and carried away? Not that after it is heard, it is any conclusive Evidence; but it is reasonable we would come at the Truth, omnibus viis & modis, quibus melius sciri poterit.

Sir Thomas Littleton. A Gentleman says, to what Purpose should it be read, if it be not to the Prejudice of Sir John Fenwick? On the other Side, we may say, 'tis for his Benefit; that is only supposing one Way or another: I will hear any Body to his Benefit, and any Body to his Prejudice. Says a worthy Gentleman, it is not done in criminal Cases: Why, in this Case you have heard the Grand Jury, what he swore before them already; and what Objection is there more against hearing what he swore in another Case, than against hearing what he swore upon the Indictment? The main Inducement for you to hear it, is because he is gone away, and cannot be heard viva voce, and with Suspicion that it was by Contrivance of the Party.

Mr. Grey. I would speak but one Word as to what the Gentleman that spake last but one, said, and that is, as to the Courts below, That one Man is allow'd very often to give in Evidence what another swore; it hath been so, and 'tis at the Peril of any Person that swears that he swears Truth; for he may be prosecuted, if he does not swear Truth; but I would ask him, what Remedy there is here, if he do not say the Truth? We have no Remedy against him, if he takes away this Man's Life by what he says here.

Mr. Smith. Truly, Sir, if I must give my Opinion, I do think 'tis very reasonable that Bills of Attainder should be only upon extraordinary Occasions; I think that, take it at best, if there was not a Place where the Witnesses are to be sworn, and more particularly examined, I know not whether I should give my Consent for the passing of this Bill through your House; for the Witnesses against the Prisoner are not sworn, nor the Witnesses brought against them; so that we can only give our Opinion upon the Probability of the Matter; for what that Gentleman says, weighs with me, That 'tis a difficult Thing for any Man to charge himself with what was sworn at a former Trial; for the Mistake of a Word may alter the Sense very much. We are told by a worthy Gentleman, That there was two or three Witnesses that did give such Evidence against the Testimony of Goodman, that 'tis a Wonder almost how Cook could be found guilty: It is our Misfortune that Goodman is not here; it would have been worth our while to have heard what Goodman could have said in his own Defence; but since there are such Witnesses like to be offer'd against Goodman's Testimony, Is it not reasonable that we should hear what Goodman said for himself?

Mr. How. Sir, I always thought it very reasonable that you should hear any Evidence that might tend to your Information; but I think 'tis plain, that nothing can tend to your Information that is alledged by any Person that is not to be believed; that is to say, is not to be believed from the Nature of the Evidence, though from the most credible Person in the World. I know not whether these Witnesses are to be brought or no; but I have heard that Cook, after he was condemned to die, without any Apprehension of his being saved, did, upon the Sacrament, declare, That Goodman was not upon the Place at that Time he swore himself to be there. I have heard since, that the same Divine that gave him the Sacrament, Dr. Wake, when he had confessed it, after he had made such a Declaration, had such an Abhorrence of it, that he would go to him no more; but I cannot think we can have Information from these Persons, that I supposed did not think of giving Evidence in this Trial, and therefore did not take Notice so particularly of what he said; and if so, 'tis losing your Time to hear it.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, the Question is this, That the Council against Sir John Fenwick be allowed to examine Witnesses, as to what Goodman swore at the Trial of Peter Cook.

Sir Godfrey Copley. I must confess it would weigh with me, if it had been made appear, that Sir John Fenwick had taken off any Evidence, and I should be ready to apply it as well as I could; but I must needs take Notice of what was said in this Debate, That we had done as much as this comes to already; this makes me a little more apprehensive, and to take Care what we do now, since what this

House

House does, hath so quick an Operation. We are citing Precedents of this very Day already, and make one Thing a Hand to draw on another; and so they may easily be made use of in after Parliaments.

Sir Henry-Dutton Colt. I believe no one Gentleman doubts, that Cook was convicted upon the Evidence of Goodman; if they do, I would know the Reason of it; for upon the last Act, there are to be two Evidences to the same Treason: There were but two positive Witnesses against him for Treason, and they were Porter and Goodman: I think, therefore, he was convicted upon the Evidence of Goodman; what then needs any Person to remember any Particulars that passed at the Trial, if they remember in the whole, that he was convicted by the Evidence of Porter and Goodman?

Mr. Speaker. As many as are of Opinion, that the Counsel against Sir John Fenwick be allowed to examine Witnesses, as to what Goodman swore at the Trial of Cook, say, Aye.

Ayes 180.

Noes 102.

[Afterwards the Question of Adjournment was put, and it passed in the Negative; and several Gentlemen that were against the Bill, to about Forty, went away together in a Body; some of them having declared, that their Health would not give them leave to stay there longer.]

And Sir John Fenwick, and the Counsel, were brought in again.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, the House do allow you to examine Witnesses as to what Goodman swore at the Trial of Cook; pray go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. We call Mr. Collins, Sir.

Who was brought to the Bar.

Mr. Speaker. Was he a Jury-Man?

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. He was one of the Petit-Jury, Sir.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Collins, can you give the House an Account of what was sworn by Goodman upon the Trial of Cook?

Mr. Collins. To the best of my Memory, I will give the best Account I can. Goodman did depose, That he came to the King's-Head in Leadenball-street, and enquired for Captain Porter, according as the Captain had order'd him; and the Captain came down and carry'd him up into the Room where the Gentlemen were. There was Sir John Friend, Sir William Parkyns, Mr. Charnock, Mr. Cook, and Sir John Fenwick; there was two others, if you please to have me name them.

Members. Yes, yes.

Mr. Collins. My Lord Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery: This was what he deposed.

Mr. Speaker. Go on, Sir; you have named those that were at the Meeting.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. Did he give you an Account of what was agreed on at that Meeting?

Mr. Collins. I think it was about sending Charnock to France.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, you should repeat all the Particulars, what Charnock was to do.

Mr. Collins. I can't remember any Thing further than what I have told you.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. If you please that Mr. Cooper may be asked to this?

Mr. Speaker. Was you of the Petit-Jury that convicted Mr. Cook?

Mr. Cooper. Yes.

Mr. Speaker. Can you give the House an Account what Evidence Goodman gave to you for Conviction of Cook, and what he said in that Evidence?

Mr. Cooper. Mr. Goodman did declare upon his Evidence, That he was at the Old King's-Head in Leadenball-street, where he did meet with divers Persons that were in Consultation; he named Charnock, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Friend, and divers others.

Mr. Speaker. What was the Consultation?

Mr. Cooper. It was about sending Charnock over into France.

Mr. Speaker. To what Purpose?

Mr. Cooper. To bring over Forces, or encourage the Bringing over of Forces: That was the Purport of his Message.

Mr. Speaker. Will you produce any other Evidence to this Point?

Mr. Serjeant Gould. We desire this Gentleman may be asked to the same Purpose.

Mr. Speaker. Was you one of the Petit-Jury.

Another Witness. There was Captain Porter, and Mr. Goodman, that were the two Evidences; and Goodman did say, That he had been at the Old King's-Head in Leadenball-street, one Coxe's, and Sir John Fenwick was there, and several other Gentlemen, consulting of an Affair to send over into France for some Forces to be brought over into England; and that Charnock was the Person, and they all agreed he should go over.

Mr. Speaker. But did he give you an Account of what Cook and the others did agree to, upon which you found Mr. Cook guilty?

The same. We did apprehend that Cook did consent that Charnock should go over to France, and acquaint King James, That there had been a Meeting of several Gentlemen, and that they had made several Offers of Soldiers and People that were to be raised here, and to acquaint King James with it; and he declared, That Sir John Fenwick was there at the same Time.

Mr. Speaker. Pray, can you give this House an Account of what Exception was taken to Goodman's Credit, and how it was answered?

The same. There was Exception taken, That he was guilty of a great many Crimes, and that he had his Pardon; and the Fines were levy'd upon him; but it was said then, that he had paid his Fine, and that he was a very good Evidence in the Case.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, have you any other Evidence to produce?

Mr. Serjeant Lovel. If you please, Mr. Speaker, here is Mr. Tanner, the Clerk of the Arraignments, that best knows the Nature of these Things; that as to these Objections that were made, it appeared to the Court to be a Contrivance, for he was never bailed, but discharged without any more to do. If you please that he may be asked, What Objections were made to Goodman's Reputation, and what Answer was made to it?

Mr. Speaker. I did ask the Jurymen that; and I suppose you need not labour this Point, unless the Credit of Goodman comes in question here.

Mr.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. Then may it please you, Mr. Speaker, we have one other Piece of Evidence against Sir John Fenwick, which we are humbly to offer to your Consideration, and I think 'tis very material; and 'tis some of the Evidence which I did open in stating of the Case, wherein Sir John Fenwick hath, in a manner, given a Verdict against himself; for while Sir John Fenwick was working of his Escape to go beyond Sea, at that very Time there was a Letter written by him, directed to his Lady, and delivered into the Hands of one Mr. Fowler, who was to cause it to be delivered to his Lady, by one Webber, who was taken up when Sir John Fenwick was. This Letter imports, That Sir John Fenwick look'd upon himself, as having no Defence, but depended only upon a Contrivance with the Jury; they were to work with some Persons of the Jury, who were to stand it out, and to starve the rest; and so by that Means to save him. Our Evidence of this will be, that it fell out that Webber (we have him not here now, but have endeavour'd it as much as was possible, but he is gone too out of the Way) that he was taken at the same Time that Sir John Fenwick was; but by reason of the protracting of Sir John's Trial, he comes, and is delivered, there being no Charge against him; and he is since his Deliverance, upon his Habeas Corpus, gone out of the Way; but we shall, in the Method of our Evidence, produce you Mr. Fowler, the Person to whom this Letter was handed, who will give you an Account of this Letter; and then will produce this Letter: To which End, we must humbly beg the Favour of a worthy Member of this House, Mr. Vernon, who hath this Letter, that it may be produced, and shew'd to Mr. Fowler.

Mr. Vernon. Sir, I receiv'd your Order to bring the Letter that Sir John Fenwick wrote, while in Custody at Rumney, which was sent up to me by Mr. Mascall, who had it of Mr. Fowler; and, if you please, I am ready to deliver it.

Mr. Speaker. Who sent it to you?

Mr. Vernon. One Mr. Mascall, a Justice of Peace of Rumney.

Sir Thomas Powys. I hope now we shall make an Objection to this Letter with good Authority. Surely for them to produce a Letter, as Sir John Fenwick's, is not to be allow'd as Evidence, unless it was prov'd that he wrote it, because that sort of Evidence was particularly taken Notice of by Parliament: And Judgment given upon that sort of Evidence, by Comparison of Hands, in the Case of Mr. Sidney, and the Act of Reversal of his Attainder, does allow it to be illegal Evidence. This is such an Authority as, I hope, will bear no Dispute: And the Courts of Westminster-Hall have since thought it so; they did so in the Case of Crosby, who was tried the other Day in Westminster-Hall.

Sir Barth. Shower. In this Objection we have the Opinion of inferior Courts, and the Parliament too; for the particular Evidence Mr. Sidney was convicted upon, was upon a Paper which was found, and proved by some who pretended to know his Hand; and I am sure that is more than they can pretend to, and more than they have yet opened. We do therefore humbly oppose this Evidence, it being in the Case of the Life of a Man; and the King, Lords and Commons, having declared, That this sort of Evidence ought not to be allowed: And therefore, I hope, you will not allow it in this Case. And in Crosby's Case, upon reading the Act of Parliament, this Evidence was not allowed, and Crosby was acquitted.

Sir Thomas Powys. I have a Copy of the Bill for reversing the Attainder in my Hand; and it says, The producing a Paper found in the Closet of Mr. Sidney, which was not proved by any Witness to be his Hand-writing, &c. And, we hope, if in the Judgment of the Parliament that was not thought reasonable Evidence to Attain him, this will not be thought reasonable in Parliament to Attain this Gentleman.

Mr. Serj. Gould. As this Case is, we hope this may be a concurring Evidence: It will be plain; upon the Evidence we shall give, that Webber was with Sir John, and taken with him; and at that Time this Letter was handed by him over to Fowler, to be carried to my Lady. Now, Sir, we humbly offer it to your Consideration, How far it is available, and what Operation it will have? Whether, in a Case of this Nature, these two being taken together, and Webber delivers this Letter to Fowler to deliver it to Sir John Fenwick's Lady, and the Import of the Letter concerns Sir John Fenwick for his Acquittal; you will not suffer it to be read? 'Tis not to charge him with a Treason, for that is the Case of Algernon Sidney: 'Tis not to prove a Crime upon him; but we will prove that Sir John Fenwick handed this Letter over, that it might come to his Lady; by which he desired his Lady so far to work the Matter, that some Jury-man might be found to starve the rest, and stand out for him: If we could produce Webber, we would; 'tis plain, Webber corresponded with Sir John, and was with him.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. I humbly beg one Word in this Matter: The Counsel on the other Side do very well know, the constant Practice is, That in the Case of a Deed or Will, let the Value of the Estate be what it will, if the Witnesses cannot be produced, or are gone beyond Sea, they always admit Evidence by Comparison of Hands. But for the Case of Algernon Sidney, there is no Doubt but his Attainder ought to be reversed, because that Attainder was upon no other Evidence; for there was no other Proof, but a Paper, that he himself did say, was only for the Exercising of his own Ingenuity and Parts; and it was said to be written for no other Purpose, and proved only by the Comparison of Hands: Had there been any other Witnesses to corroborate, it had alter'd the Case. But in our Case, we do produce the Letter, not for the convicting of the Prisoner at the Bar; but we are humbly to lay before you all the Matter of Fact. It will be worthy of your Consideration, what you will think fit to take, and what to reject; that is a Matter for your own Judgment. We produce this Letter for this Purpose, to shew you, that after Sir John Fenwick was taken, he apprehended his Case to be so desperate, that he us'd these indirect Means.

Mr. Speaker. What mean you by that? This Letter came from Mr. Fowler.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. Here is Mr. Fowler that receiv'd it from Webber, when Sir John Fenwick was by, in the Presence of Sir John Fenwick.

Mr. Speaker. Shew Mr. Fowler the Letter.

Accordingly the Clerk went down to the Bar, and shew'd Mr. Fowler the Letter.

Mr. Speaker. Do you know that Paper?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker. Where have you seen it before?

Mr. Fowler. I had it from one Webber, that was at Rumney, about the Third of June, as I remember.

Mr. Speaker. Was that the Time that Sir John Fenwick was seiz'd?

Mr. Fowler. He was then at Rumney. Mr. Webber, I was told, had some Acquaintance with me, and desired to speak with me. I went to him; and he was rising; and when up, says he, Mr. Fowler, I would desire you to put a Letter into the Post; says he, There is no Hurt in it; it is directed to Mrs. Frances Farrer, at the Countess of Carlisle's in Soho-Square; and when I had deliver'd it, he desired me to come to him again.

Mr. Speaker. Did you come to him again?

Mr. Fowler. Mr. Masfall of Rumney sent for me to his House, and told me, That he had heard that I had received some Letter from Mr. Webber; and when he had open'd it, and saw what it was, he thought fit to send it up to the Secretary of State; and I made my Mark upon it, that I might know it again.

Mr. Speaker. Have you made your Mark upon it?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. I desire he may be asked, Whether Sir John Fenwick was not in the same Room when Webber delivered it?

Mr. Fowler. Yes: But I question whether he saw Mr. Webber give it; for he deliver'd it privately, as I thought.

Mr. Speaker. Was Sir John in the Room then?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker. Can you say any thing more of Sir John Fenwick's Knowledge of that Paper?

Mr. Fowler. No, I know no more.

Mr. Serj. Gould. If you please then, Mr. Speaker, because perhaps there may be some Objections, that we should give an Account of Webber, we will call a Witness, that we have done our utmost to find him out.

Members. No, no.

Sir Thomas Powys. That which I was going to offer is, That this Proof is short; if that which in the Act of Reversal of the Attainder of Mr. Sidney, is admitted to be no Proof against him; for the Act recites that Letter was found in his Closet, and proved by Comparison of Hands, and yet for all that, this sort of Evidence is condemn'd by this Act of Reversal, as illegal Evidence. This Case before you comes short of that; for here is no Proof by Comparison of Hands, nor that it was in the Possession of Sir John Fenwick: But only that a Person in the Room, without the Privy of Sir John Fenwick, delivered it to another; and the Witness says, he did it in a private Manner.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. With Submission, this Letter could not be read in any Place whatsoever against Sir John Fenwick, in a Civil Cause; for even in that Case, they must prove it to be his Hand-writing by Comparison of Hands.

Mr. Serjeant Gould. I think not to insist upon it*: But that we shall desire is this; we have now done with our Evidence, only we shall desire the worthy Member, Mr. Vernon, to give an Account what was the Reason why Sir John hath not been tried; for indeed, he hath very much trifled with the Government, pretending still to make a free and ingenuous Confession.

Sir Thomas Powys. I am of Counsel for this Gentleman at the Bar; for his Life, for his Fortune, for All that he hath in the World. 'Tis not only this Gentleman's Case, but 'tis a Case that may be of great Consequence in all future Times. I have, as 'twas my Duty, attended for at least these twelve Hours, either in opening the Matter, or by producing such Evidence as, we hoped, we did fairly object to. Sir, there are several Things offer'd on their Parts, which I confess we little expected, and which will require something to be said to; and I have a great deal to offer on the Behalf of Sir John Fenwick, both as to this Method that is taken, and what is alledged in the Bill, and what is contained in the Indictment, upon which the Bill is founded, wherein I desire to be heard; and since you have been pleased to allow us to be Counsel for him, I am sure we shall have a fair and favourable Hearing. We have a great deal to offer to you, both as to the Matter of the Indictment, and the Manner of it: And I hope to shew you, That the Indictment, as it is laid, does not contain a sufficient Charge of Treason. We have likewise a great deal to say, as to the Evidence they have offer'd, at least what they call so: But I must make it my Request, That we may have Liberty 'till to Morrow Morning to make our Observations, and answer what hath been said by the Counsel on the other Side. I am not in a very good Condition by this long Attendance, and by attending my Duty in the Courts in Westminster-hall; and I am afraid I am not now in a Condition to do my Duty, as may be expected from me. I must own it, I am not prepared as I ought to be; and I hope when there is so great a Stake, you will allow us 'till to Morrow Morning.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. I beg your Favour in the same Manner, and to the same Effect as Sir

* This Letter was wrote with a Black-Lead Pencil, and was as follows:

“WHAT I fear'd is at last happen'd; had I gone alone I had done it; but the other was betray'd from London. It is God's Will, so we must submit. I know nothing can save my Life, but my Lord Carlisle's going over to him [meaning King William] back'd by the rest of the Family of the Howards, to beg it, and offering, that I will be Abroad all his Time, where I cannot hurt him; and that I will never draw Sword against him. I must leave it to you what else to say. All Friends must be made. My Lord Devonshire may perhaps, by my Lady; my Lord Gadolphin and my Lord Pembroke, by my Lady Montgomery; Mr. Nelson by the Bishop of Canterbury. My Lord Arran might engage his Brother Selkirk to use his Interest with Keppel. I believe, if my Lord Carlisle would go, it were best before my Trial, or else they will cut me short for want of Time; if he can prevail with him for a Pardon, he will procure it as well before my Trial as after, at least he may prevail for a Reprieve, 'till some can come over to him. My Lord also will have an Opportunity to engage Bentinck [the Earl of Portland] and get my Lord Essex to join with him. I cannot think what else to say; but the great Care must be the Jury, if two or three could be got that would starve the rest; that or nothing can save me. Money. I know, would do it; but alas! that is not to be had, nor shall I get enough for Counsel. I beg of you not to think of being shut up with me; I know it will kill you, and besides, I have no such Friend as you to take Care of my Business: Though it would be the Comfort of my Life, the little Time it lasts, to have you with me: And I have this only Comfort now left, that my Death will make you easy. My dearest Life, grieve not for me, but resign me to God's Will. You will hear, as soon as they bring me to Town, where they put me, and then I would have a servant, or somebody with me. I am interrupted, so can say no more now. Engage Sir John Lowther, the new Lord, who has more Interest than any body. Let my Lord Scarsdale engage Jermaine to engage Overkirk for me. Speak to my Lady Arlington. If my Trial could be put off 'till the King comes back, there would be more Opportunity to solicit him.

Thomas

Thomas Powys hath done. It is to be acknowledged there are several Things offered in Evidence, which is new to us Lawyers. We do not desire to trifle: We do not desire it on behalf of the Prisoner by way of Delay, but on behalf of the Length of the Proceedings, that you will give us a fair Hearing, as you have allowed it to the King's Serjeants; and that we may make that Defence that is incumbent upon us in discharge of our Duty to the Prisoner.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, you must withdraw.

And being withdrawn.

Mr. Smith. I would not give an Opportunity to any Man to practise with Witnesses, to hinder the Truth of the Matter from appearing, after they have heard the Evidence for the Bill. I would know what List of these Witnesses Sir John Fenwick hath given in?

Mr. Speaker. You did make an Order, That Sir John Fenwick should deliver in a List of his Witnesses; but I believe he did not send in a List to any Body upon that Account, for I have made no Order for any.

Lord Coningsby. I am convinc'd that you are obliged to sit so long as to hear the Witnesses on both Sides; and therefore my Motion is, to call in the Counsel, and ask them, if they have any Evidence to produce; but I do not desire the Counsel should go on to make their Observations to Night.

Sir Walter Young. I think you are rightly moved by that noble Lord that spoke last. I think if Sir John Fenwick hath any Evidence to produce, he ought to produce it now; and that you ought not to give him Time till to morrow Morning to produce that.

Mr. Speaker. Is it your Pleasure that Sir John Fenwick and the Counsel be called in, and told, That the House do expect, if they have any Witnesses, that they do examine them to Night; but as to their Observations, the House will give them Time till to morrow Morning?

Which was generally consented to, and they were brought in again.

Mr. Speaker. Sir Thomas Powys, the House have consider'd of what you said, when you went out, and they are inclin'd to allow you Time for making your Observations; but they have commanded me to ask you, Whether you have any Witnesses to produce? And to let you know, That if you have any Witnesses to produce, they expect you would produce and examine them to Night.

Sir Thomas Powys. Sir, I would acquaint you with all the Openness that becomes me on this Occasion. I must confess we have not any Witnesses that we propose to call; but when we come to speak to the Matter, we hope to give you some Satisfaction as to that; but at present we have no Evidence to produce, unless it be a Copy of a Record.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, if you please to withdraw, you shall know the Sense of the House.

Accordingly they withdrew.

Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer. I suppose, since the Gentlemen have no living Witnesses to produce to Night, you will not think fit to receive them at any other Time, for 'tis giving them too much Advantage; and the whole Meaning of the Chicanry of the Counsel, is only to get Time to reply, Mr. Dighton having heard the Evidence. And now I have mentioned him, give me leave to tell you, That I think you can't rise without taking some Notice of him. I think there is as plain a Subornation prov'd in Dighton, as can be, by one Roe; and when you have heard such a Character of a Man, and there is no other Evidence that he can solicit, I think you ought to take care that he be forth-coming; and that he should be taken into Custody. I think you may give the Counsel further Time, as to the Record; that can't well be falsified, tho' I believe, in a Matter of this moment, where the Government is concern'd, there never was such a Proceeding by the Counsel, as this has been, to entertain us six or eight Hours together, by Delays.

VOL. V.

Mr. Smith. I suppose before you hear any Thing as to Dighton, you will do something as to the putting this Cause off to another Day; I humbly propose that you will go on this again on Wednesday.

Sir H. Hobart. When 'tis proper to go upon Ways and Means, I shall come into it: But while this is upon your Hands, I believe you will never get heartily into other Business: And therefore I humbly move you, that you will go upon this to morrow Morning.

Thereupon the House came to these Resolutions.

Resolved, That this House will proceed further in relation to this Business of Sir John Fenwick to morrow at Twelve a-clock.

Ordered, That Sir John Fenwick be remanded to Newgate.

Ordered, That the Bill be read a second Time to morrow Morning.

Mr. Ruffel. I am unwilling to trouble Gentlemen at this Time of Night; But I would know, Whether, when Sir John Fenwick is called in, you will ask him any Questions upon that Paper?

Members. No, no.

The Counsel were called in, and withdrawn again.

Resolved, That this House being informed that the Counsel for Sir John Fenwick have no living Witnesses to produce, except to prove a Record, that this House will not hear any Witnesses, except to prove the said Record.

Ordered, That Mr. Dighton do attend to morrow Morning.

Adjourned till to morrow Morning at Twelve a-clock.

[Memorandum, It was half an Hour after Ten, at the Time of Adjournment.]

Martis 17 die Novembris, 1696.

Sir John Fenwick and the Counsel on both Sides were called in.

Mr. Speaker. Sir Thomas Powys, you that are of Counsel for Sir John Fenwick, the House agreed last Night, to give you Time till to Day to make your Defence, your Observations upon the Evidence that hath been given.

Sir Thomas Powys. Mr. Speaker, I am of Counsel for Sir John Fenwick, who now stands before you upon

upon the greatest Concern he can have in this World; and as you have been pleased to assign us to be of Counsel for him, and I must own have very favourably heard us hitherto, so I shall think my self very unfortunate, if I should let fall any Expression in his Defence, that should seem indecent, and give Offence to this House; for I am sure I have no Intention to do it, but on the contrary, to behave my self with all the Deference that is possible, in a Case of this Nature.

The Thing I shall insist upon, will be upon three Heads.

First, The Manner of Proceeding, and Method that hath been taken in this Prosecution.

Secondly, I shall take notice of those Things that are alledged against him in the Bill, upon which he is to make his Defence.

In the Third Place, I shall beg your Favour, to observe what sort of Proofs they have offered on the other Side, and which they call Evidence.

As to the first Matter, I must intreat the Favour of you to be thus understood; That when I say any Thing in relation to the Manner of Proceeding, I do not speak in Opposition to the Power of Parliaments; for I know very well, that our Lives and Estates, and all that we have, are subject to Acts of Parliament; but I hope you will permit me to offer some Reasons, which (I hope) may be of Weight, in Opposition to the exercising of that Power in the Way you are now going. No Body can say, but when an Act of Parliament is passed, though the Party concerned may think it was upon hard Terms; yet when it is become a Law, it is not to be opposed. I can't say but those Persons, who in the last Sessions of Parliament were imprisoned by an Act ex post facto, and subsequent to the Fact complained of; yet when it was passed into a Law, they were legally detained: But, I hope, I may so far take notice of their Case, as some kind of Reason against this, to the End that those Laws may not grow familiar, that they may not easily be obtained; because Precedents generally grow; and as that Law ex post facto, extended to Liberty, so this extends to Life: One Precedent is apt to beget another; and therefore, sure you will be careful how you give Precedents, especially in Case of Life.

The first Thing I observe, is obvious; that is, the Person who is to be sentenced by this Bill, is forth-coming, in order to be tried in the ordinary Method of Justice. He is not only indicted, and actually under Process; but he hath pleaded, and he is ready, when his Majesty, in the Course of Justice, shall call upon him, to undergo his Trial; and either there is sufficient Evidence, legal Evidence against him, as the King's Serjeant insisted there was; and if there be so, then, under Favour, there is no Reason but he should have the Benefit of an ordinary Trial, which is the Birth-right of all the King's Subjects: Or there is not sufficient Evidence against him; and if there be not, it will be a good Reason against making a particular Law for taking away his Life: For, we think, nothing can be said for this Law, but want of Evidence; and that, to my Understanding, is a very odd Reason.

Sir, I would not spend Time in taking notice, That the meanest Subject in the Kingdom is entitled, by being born in this Kingdom, to be tried by a Jury, where there are those just Advantages that can't be had in another Case: There is a Liberty of challenging 35, without shewing any Reason, and as many more, as he can any way object to with Reason. The Witnesses are upon Oath, and all the Proceedings are by certain known Rules and Methods, and not only by the Statute of Magna Charta, but by the Common Law of England, much more ancient than that Statute; and though the Proceedings therein are such as a Criminal may sometimes escape, yet the just Advantages are so much beyond any Thing of that Nature, that I hope we shall never complain of that ancient Course of Proceeding by Jury: I am sure it is the Honour of our Government, the Mark of our Freedom, and Envy of our Neighbours; and I hope, that Method of Trial shall never be laid aside, though sometimes it may not have the Effect that is desired by it.

I would take notice to you, that in a Case of the greatest Crime, and most Notoriety of Fact, yet the Persons concerned in it were brought to their Trial. The Regicides, who did not fly, but were found upon the Restoration of K. Charles II. though their Treason had the worst Effect, even in the Murder of the King; yet, notwithstanding, though the Fact was so notorious, those that were found upon the Place were admitted to their Trials in the ordinary Course of Justice; although at the same time there was a Bill of Attainder against some that fled, and some that were dead, and so could not be tried.

I would, with your Favour, likewise observe, That the Parliaments of England have been so far from depriving Persons from their ordinary Trials, that whereas the Common Law of England says, that Persons Out-law'd for Treason and Felony, if taken, shall be put to Death without Trial; yet the Parliament, in the Reign of Edward VI. made a Law, providing, That Criminals that returned within a Year, according to that Law, should be admitted to their ordinary Trials.

Sir, all along the Statutes run in favour of Trials; there are no less than two Acts of Parliament in the Reign of Edward VI. in the first and fifth Year of his Reign, that say, there shall not be less than two Witnesses against any Person for Treason: And I hope I shall never see a Law made so much in Opposition to those Acts, as that a Person shall be sentenced to Death without so much as one Witness, as I shall shew by and by.

Perhaps it might be thought extraordinary, That in the same Parliament that passed a Bill for regulating Trials in Cases of High-Treason, requiring two Witnesses with great Strictness, and giving further Advantages to the Criminal than ever were before allowed, an Act should pass, to put a Person to Death, without any Trial at all. And let any one compare the Preamble of that Act with this Bill.

Sir, I take it, with humble Submission, that the present Case is not at all to be likened to most of those Bills of Attainder that may be cited; those, when they come to be looked into, will be found either to have passed against such Persons as fled from Justice; and therein they only pursued the Rules of the Common Law, which allowed them to be Out-lawed, and by Consequence to be attainted: And the Parliament therefore, in attainting them, did but the same Thing; and therein, in, there was nothing done extraordinary. True it is, that where Persons have been forth coming, there have been some few Bills of Attainder: But I will presume to say, they are never mentioned without heavy Censures, and a great Complaint against them.

This Cause is not like the late Instance of the Bill of Attainder against the Duke of Monmouth; for he was present in the Kingdom: yet he was in direct Opposition to any Method of Trial; he was in Defiance to all Courts of Justice: But here is a Person who submits himself, and hath pleaded, and stands ready to be tried; and I hope, I may take Notice, to take off all Prejudice that may be raised, That this Gentleman, though he was of the Parliament that passed that Bill, yet he was not in Town, 'till at least a Month after the Bill was passed.

I do agree, there are some Cases where Persons have been attainted without being admitted to be tried. In the Beginning of the Reign of Edward III. Roger Mortimer was attainted and executed, without being tried; but 28 Ed. III. it was reversed, because he was not brought to Judgment according to the Law of the Land, 1 Ed. III. The like in the Case of Edmund Earl of Arundel: But 4 Ed. III. Richard his Son, petitioned in Parliament, setting forth the Proceedings to be against the Great Charter, and insisting, that there ought to have been due Process of Law, and he was then restored in Part; but 28 Ed. III. there was an Act of Reversal, declaring, That it clearly appeared, that the said Edmund was unduly put to Death; and that the Statute by which he was attainted, was void, erroneous, and null. There is an Instance in 32 H. VIII. Col. 4. Inst. fol. 37. of Thomas Cromwell Earl of Essex, who, though he was in Custody in the Tower, yet he was attainted without being tried: But the Words of my Lord Coke, are as follow, Auferat oblivio, si potest, si non utrumq; silentium tegat: For the more high and absolute the Jurisdiction of the Court is, the more just and honourable ought it to be in its Proceedings, and to give Examples of Justice to inferior Courts. And he adds further, to the End, as I apprehend, that the Reversal of this Attainder may be of no ill Use: I am, says he, confidently perswaded, such worthy and honourable Members, shall from Time to Time be of both Houses of Parliament, as never any Attainder, when the Person is forth-coming, shall be had hereafter, without hearing of him; which I understand to be, without trying of him: And 'tis memorable, what my Lord Coke recites, That he who thus died, attempted the like against another.

There is another Case, of Thomas Seymour, Admiral of England, who likewise was attainted by Act of Parliament; and as it appears, without Execution: You have an Account thereof in the second Part of the History of the Reformation, Fol. 98, 99, 100, whither I will refer you, only to read the Sentence of the learned Author, there pronounced against him. That latter Case is, that of my Lord Strafford, which every Body knows. I shall, as the best Account of that Matter, crave leave to read the Words of the Parliament in the Act of the Reversal. I will not trouble you with reciting the Whole, but only read the Beginning, and some Part thereof in another Place. Whereas Thomas, late Earl of Strafford, was impeached of High-Treason, upon Pretence of endeavouring to sub- vert the fundamental Laws, and called to a publick and solemn Arraignment and Trial, before the Peers in Parliament, where he made a particular Defence to every Article objected against him; insomuch, that the Turbulent Party then seeing no Hopes to effect their unjust Designs, by an ordinary Way and Method of Proceedings, did at last resolve to attempt the Destruction and Attainder of the Earl, by an Act of Parliament, to be therefore purposely made to condemn him upon Accumulative Treason — And then it goes on to shew, it was carry'd by the Tumult of the People, and then follows — And to the End that Right be done to the Memory of the deceased Earl of Strafford aforesaid: Be it further enacted, That all Records and Proceedings of Parliament relating to the said Attainder, be wholly cancelled and taken off the File, or otherwise defaced and obliterated, to the Intent the same may not be visible in after Ages, or brought into Example to the Prejudice of any Person whatsoever. So that the Parliament that enacted that Reversal, did consider those Proceedings as very evil and unjust, and was not willing there should be any Remains of such an Example to future Ages.

Sir, having made these Observations as to the Manner of Proceeding, I come now to that which is the subject Matter of the Bill at present before you, and which we take to be the Charge against Sir John Fenwick: I must crave leave to observe, that in all Courts of Justice, where any Person is accused, he is to make his Defence secundum allegata & probata: 'Tis not enough that a Matter is proved, if it be not alledged; nor that it is alledged, if it be not proved; but if it be both alledged and proved, then it is a full Charge, and requires an Answer. It is not only the Law of England, but I believe all Nations, and wherever any Person is to make his Defence, especially in Capital Crimes; that to which he is to answer must be alledged against him; from whence I shall observe what is alledged against Sir John Fenwick; for, I hope, we are not concerned to defend him further than as to what at this Time he is charged with. This Bill of Attainder, as it is drawn, and now stands before you, doth not so much as alledge, or say, That Sir John Fenwick is guilty of the Treason whereof he was indicted; and that hath prevented us from producing Witnesses to that, and several Matters which the King's Counsel have enter'd upon: For though you have permitted them to examine Witnesses to several Things quite out of the Bill; yet, I hope, you are not come to any Resolution, That these Matters shall be thought fatal to Sir John Fenwick, that are not so much as alledged against him. We do not therefore think we are bound, or ought to follow them in those Things that are totally out of the Bill; and therefore his being guilty, is not now the Question, because 'tis not a Charge upon him.

The first Thing that is alledged in the Bill is, That Sir John Fenwick was indicted at the Sessions, for that which is laid in the Indictment to be Treason (which by and by I shall crave leave to be heard to) and, I think, no Body will say this alone does require any Answer, further than to own the Fact or to deny it: And we do admit that he was so indicted. I need not labour much to clear him of the Consequence of that alone; for very often innocent Persons have been indicted and accused (for an Indictment is no more than an Accusation;) and this Bill, as I have observed, doth not say he is guilty. When the Bill hath recited that Matter, it proceeds to take Notice, That they, by some unfair Prevarications (for so I agree they were, if the Facts alledged in the Bill are true, which by the way hath not been yet proved, by producing any one Witness) did obtain the King's Clemency to put off his Trial, in Expectation of an ingenuous Confession, which the Bill takes for granted he hath prevaricated in, by charging several Persons of Honour and Fidelity with Matters of a high Nature, only by hearsay; and by using other unfair Artifices to put off his Trial. How far it is made out, that I must submit to you; we think at present there is no Proof of it, and by Consequence we are not concerned to answer it: But had they proved it as fully as it is laid (though far be it from me to excuse such a Behaviour;) yet when a Criminal is to be tried for that which will be of fatal Consequence to him if he be convicted, no Body can say it comes near Treason, by unfair Means, to contrive to put off his Trial.

The next thing the Bill recites is, That one of the Witnesses, who might have been produced against him upon his Trial, if it had proceeded as was intended, is since withdrawn. I cannot say, but Goodman is withdrawn: But as the Bill does not so much as alledge, that it was by the Means or Procurement, no nor Privy, of Sir John Fenwick; so from thence that Part of the Bill charges no Offence home to Sir John Fenwick: For in case the same Witness had happen'd to have died by the Act of God, it would not have been said to have been a good Reason for this Bill of Attainder against Sir John Fenwick, unless he had contributed to it.

From these Premises follows the enacting Part, That Sir John Fenwick be attainted of High-Treason; and in future Times the Act must be supposed to be grounded upon the Inducement to it. And I humbly submit it to you, Whether this Bill condemning him for High-Treason, upon such Recitals, will be thought to be reasonable?

These being the Allegations of the Bill, I will now, with your Favour, come to that, which they on the other Side do call Proofs; and I must humbly observe to you, and submit it to your Judgment, Whether in the Case where a Man's Life is to be taken away, by a subsequent Law made on Purpose for him, the Proofs in that Case ought not to be much more evident, than if he were to be tried by a Law already in being? In my poor Apprehension (I speak it with all Submission to you, Sir,) it would be too much at once, to make a subsequent Law to condemn a Man to Death, and to do it upon doubtful and uncertain Evidence, or rather upon no Proof at all. Nothing could excuse such a Law, but an undeniable Proof of the Fact. And therefore surely the Position we find of Mr. St. John's, in my Lord Strafford's Case, is of most dangerous Consequence. I am afraid none are safe, if that be admitted, That a subsequent Law may take away a Man's Life without any Evidence, other than the private Opinion or Conscience of every particular Law-maker. He is pleas'd so to assert, That it may be done, as in Rushworth's History of that Trial, fol. 677. I am sure if this be so, no Man knows how long his Life is his own: I hope this Doctrine shall never be followed or approved. Sir, we have the Happiness to live under an Establishment that every Man does, or may know the Law he is to go by: Every one is bound at his Peril to take Notice of the Laws, and to act accordingly, because they may be known: But at this Rate none but Prophets can live amongst us.

In the next Place, I would observe what Course they have taken in their Evidence who are the King's Counsel.

First, They have betaken themselves to that which is not alledged in the Bill; and we think that this is not agreeable to a Course of Justice.

In the next Place, to make out what they insist on, they have produced but one Person that comes hither viva voce to speak to it; and I must take Notice to you, That he is not upon Oath. I know very well it is not your Course in this House to administer an Oath; but I know very well, though it is not your Course in this House to administer an Oath, yet, I hope, that is so far from being a Reason why this Bill should pass here without an Oath, that it is a good Reason why such a Bill should not begin here: There is no Place in the World, where a Person is sentenced to Death without an Oath. In the Case of my Lord Strafford, the Proceeding first was by way of Impeachment, and the Witnesses had been first examined upon Oath in the House of Peers; and that Bill of Attainder takes notice of it, reciting that it had been fully proved; and, by Consequence, we may suppose, that they would not otherwise have passed it, that being the Ground of their Proceeding upon that Bill of Attainder: But for the Bill to begin originally in this Place, to form such a Judgment, the heaviest that can be pronounced against a Man, a Judgment of Death, corrupting of his Blood, and forfeiting all he has in the World; and this upon bare Allegations, without so much as the Sanction of an Oath, is extremely hard. Mr. Porter is such a Person, that I know not how he hath gained so much Credit, that this Act should pass upon his Parole to take away the Life of a Man. He was lately of that horrid Conspiracy of the Assassination of the King; and shall that Man, who was so lately of that villainous Disposition, to be engaged in a Crime of that black Nature, and not convicted by his own Conscience, but by the Danger he had run himself into, not so much as pardoned his Crime, but at this time, if I may without Offence use that Expression, Drudging for his Pardon; I say, shall this Person's Life be taken away by his Parole?

Sir, The next Thing I would go to, is that (which likewise they call Evidence) which is an Examination, as they term it, of Goodman, taken before a Justice of Peace: But he was not examined, and I must insist upon it, that though you permitted it to be read, yet I did observe you did not declare it to be Evidence; but you were, I presume, willing to hear all Things, and then judge what would be the Evidence. And, I think, the King's Counsel did not press it further. Sir, as this is not Evidence that would be allowed in an inferior Court, so, I hope, you will not allow it to be Evidence here; for then it is like to be followed by other Courts, who observe the Proceedings here as their great Rule. 'Tis only what Mr. Goodman thought fit to write down without being examined.

Sir, the next Thing they resort to is, What Goodman swore upon his Examination in another Cause, where Sir John Fenwick was neither Party nor present. Sir, there are, I suppose, such Reasons against that sort of Evidence from natural Justice, that it is not admitted in any Court; because there may be a weak Defence, or the Person that swears it against one, perhaps may not, when Face to Face, have the Confidence to persist in it, in Case it be false against another; or at least that Person, who was not a Party before, when he comes upon his Trial, may think of such Questions as may go a great way to discover the Truth, may produce such Evidence against his Credit as may overthrow it.

But if what is sworn at one Time against one Man must be always taken for Truth against all others, the Trial of one of the Company is the Trial and Condemnation of all the rest: And how contrary is this to a fundamental Rule in our Law, That no Evidence shall be given against a Man, when he is upon Trial for his Life, but in the Presence of the Prisoner; because he may cross-examine him who gives such Evidence; and that is due to every Man in justice.

But I would with Submission inquire, how they are sure that Goodman would have sworn this Matter again, if he was now forth-coming? Because he did swear so in Cook's Cause, is it necessary that he would swear so again now, if Face to Face, with Sir John Fenwick? No Body can say so positively and absolutely; they only can imagine it, because he once swore it, therefore it is possible that he would do so again: Whereas we may as well say, he did then swear to save his own Life; and having done that, and found an Opportunity to get out of the Way, his own Conscience might put him upon flight, to prevent his doing of it again; and that might be the Reason for the withdrawing of himself. However, I insist upon it, That there is no Proof that it was by the Procurement of Sir John Fenwick: The Bill does not alledge it, and the Proofs do not come up to it: Nay, there is nothing offered to such Purpose, save only that Mr. Porter was pleased to say, That another Man told him, that the 300 Guineas he was offered, and 300 more he was to have received, were to have come from Sir John Fenwick: But hearsay Evidence is to be rejected, especially against a Man for his Life; because every Man is at liberty to talk at large: But God forbid that that should be allowed for Evidence!

The next Thing they went upon was what Mr. Roe said; That Mr. Dighton, who by your Permission is Solicitor for Sir John Fenwick, was inquiring of him what he could say to take off Goodman's Evidence: The Words I think he used were, What he could say to discredit Goodman's Evidence; and, I hope, that does no way affect Sir John Fenwick: For it does not appear that he had any Authority from him; but 'tis only suspected, because he is now Solicitor for him, which he was admitted to after the Time spoken of. But I take the Word, to be nothing relating to Goodman's withdrawing of himself; but to inquire what he could say to discredit his Testimony, which supposeth he would appear, and imports the quite contrary of withdrawing himself: And if he had gone no further, I think, there had been no fault in that; for any Solicitor may enquire up and down for the Advantage of his Client; and the Word Solicitor imports his Employment.

As to the Offer Mr. Roe says he made him of a very great Recompence, how far he is guilty of that, I suppose, he can give some Account, if you should please to enter into an Examination of it; and as I find he does not doubt to clear himself: So that Sir John Fenwick is in no sort proved to be privy to Mr. Goodman's withdrawing himself, much less to be proved to have had a Hand in it.

There is one Thing more I would offer, and that is grounded upon the Bill of Indictment preferred at the Old-Bailey against Sir John Fenwick; That the Matter in the very Indictment that they have read on the other Side, as it is there laid, and as far as it hath been offered to be here proved, does not amount to Treason; or, at least, it hath been made a very great doubt, and by some within these Walls: But this I offer, with all Submission; I have the Author in my Hand, who is a Person of Note of the King's Counsel; he hath furnished me with such Arguments as, I hope, I may be admitted to put you in mind of without Offence.

The Indictment lays, That there was a Conspiracy and Agreement to call in Foreign Power, and to that Purpose to send Charnock to France; but the Indictment does not say, That Charnock was sent, only that there was a Meeting, and an Agreement, and a Conspiracy, to send him: So the Indictment does not lay it as a Thing done, nor does the Bill charge it so; but only takes Notice, That he, I mean Sir John Fenwick, was indicted for Conspiring, and Agreeing to call in a foreign Force; so that this Bill does not say that Charnock was sent. And I appeal to you, Whether it be proved that he was sent: For Mr. Porter says no more, but that there was a Meeting at the King's Head, and he named Sir John Fenwick to be one who was present; and there it was, he says, agreed, That Charnock should be sent into France. Now, if there was nothing more than an Agreement and Conspiracy to do it, and no further Act, but such a Meeting to do it, but the Person was not actually sent, or, at least, not proved to be sent; then, from this learned Author's Opinion; I insist upon it, that this is not a sufficient Overt-Act of Treason. In the late Case of my Lord Ruffel, whose Innocency is vindicated by this Author, he takes notice, That a Conspiracy or Agreement to levy War is not Treason, without actual levying War; and of that Opinion was my Lord Coke, and my Lord Chief-Justice Hales. A Conspiracy or Agreement to call in foreign Forces, unless actually done, or a Person, at least, actually sent, or something more than a bare Agreement for that Purpose, is the same as a Conspiracy to levy War. And in the Case of my Lord Ruffel, the Proof being only, That he, and others, met together, and agreed to seize upon the Guards, and levy War which he never actually did, it is insisted upon by this Author, that that was not Treason; for that Indictment went no further. And therefore my Author says, 'Show me where such an Accusation was ever agreed to be more than a Conspiracy to levy War; and that such a Conspiracy was ever agreed to be Treason within the Statute of Edward III. till within these few Years.

Sir, now I must humbly submit it to you, whether this be any thing more: And for the Purpose you will please to consider, What this present Bill, and what that Bill of Indictment is: For it is not, for that Charnock was sent into France to solicit foreign Forces; but only that Sir John Fenwick was at a Meeting, where they did agree so to do. Calling in foreign Forces is levying War, but Conspiracy to levy War is not Treason, unless it be actually done: A Conspiracy to call in foreign Forces is nothing more. And therefore I humbly insist upon it, That neither by this Bill, or by the Indictment recited in it, or the Proofs offered before you, any thing is charged, but only an Agreement at that Meeting mentioned by Captain Porter, a single Person, and he not upon Oath, to call in foreign Forces. For he only says, That Charnock told him he had been in France. I shall not trouble you any further; we have not thought fit to produce Witnesses, for the Reasons I have offered: For that we do not find, that Sir John Fenwick throughout the Bill is charged with being guilty of Treason; and we are not willing to enter upon the Defence of a Matter not charged upon him. I hope, Sir, you will not make a Precedent, That where a Person is indicted, and ready to abide his Trial, in the ordinary Course of Justice, as Sir John Fenwick now is, that he might be taken out of the Hands of the ordinary Judges, and be brought to this Bar, to receive his Trial here.

A Matter of this Nature may be of very great Consequence: We know at present upon what Ground we stand; for by the Statute of Edward III. we know what is Treason; by the two Statutes of Edward VI. and the late Act of Treason, we know what is Proof; by the Statute of Magna Charta, we know how we are to be tried, per legem terræ & per judicium parium; That is, a Peer by his Peers, and a Commoner by a Jury: But if Bills of Attainder come into Fashion, we shall neither know what is Treason, what is Evidence, nor how, nor where we are to be tried. Sir, I submit it to you, and hope this Bill shall not pass.

Sir Bartholomew Shower. Mr. Speaker, I am of Counsel for Sir John Fenwick, the Prisoner at the Bar; and first, I am humbly for to thank you for your Candour, of which I have had frequent Experience; and humbly beg for my self, That if I offer any Words that are indecent, or unfit for me, that you will interrupt me; for it is furthest from my Intention so to do.

The Bill that is brought into this House against Sir John Fenwick, is that whereby every one of you (with Submission) are to declare and pronounce, That he shall be drawn, hanged, and quartered, as a Traitor. And the Question before you is, Whether you will do this in this Case?

Sir, I shall not pretend to question, nor enter into any Debate or Argument in this Thing concerning the Power of Parliaments: No question, but in all Governments, there is some supreme Power; and by our Constitution, it is lodged in the King, Lords and Commons.

There are Precedents of Attainders, and that many; but can they shew me, where there hath been any Attainder by Parliament, for High-Treason, upon one single Act, which if Treason, was determinable at Common Law; there have been Bills of Attainder for flagrant Treasons, and for great Ministers of State; some topping Sinners, who have been above Judges and Jury, and whom inferior Courts could not tell what to say to: But I believe I may say this, That for a single Consult or Agreement between four or five private Gentlemen, in a private Room, in which there was no Danger, but by the Consequence of the Resolution, if it was put in Practice, no Man can shew any Precedent for attainting any Person in Parliament.

If you please to observe, the 25 Edw. III. reserves the Power to Parliament, to proceed in Treason nor expressed within the Statute; but as to the Compassing the King's Death, Adhering to the King's Enemies, and those Things that are there particularly specified, it seems the Sense of the Parliament to leave them to the Rules of the Common Law. So 1 Hen. IV. No. 144. upon the Roll it is at large complained of Accusations in Parliament for Treasons and Felonies, and declares for the future, they should be determined in the inferior Courts.

1. This was occasioned by Sir Raw. Harrey; Cotton's Abridgment, 189.

There is a melancholy Precedent or two of single Acts of Attainder; but they are most of them reversed. Sir Thomas Haxey in Richard the II's Time, was Attainted for bringing in a Bill into the Commons House against the Prerogative; but 1 Hen. IV. it was reversed with great Censure, Cott. Abridg. 362, 363. There are others in Hen. VIII. Time, but they were for Acts in that Reign, which were questionable, whether or no within the Statute of Edw. III. and were for such Actions, as perhaps were not for the Honour of the Prince, or Good of the Government, to disclose by publick Trial, as the Attainder of the Queen, and others concerned.

I beg leave to repeat the Words of a great Author, the Bishop of Salisbury, in the History of the Reformation, which I crave leave rather to do, because it hath been approved of by this House, for he had Thanks of the Parliament for it; Fol. 359, 360. where speaking of these sort of Attainders, he says, After these Executions, followed the Parliament in 1439. in which these Attainders were not only confirmed, but divers others were made of Persons in Custody, without bringing them to Trial; (and he says) which can't be enough condemned as a Breach of the most sacred and unalterable Rules of Justice.

That of the Marchioness of Exeter, &c. I shall make no Paraphrase upon it: There is no question but you will agree, and I must admit, Salus Populi to be Suprema Lex; but for an Act, not the last of May, but last May was twelve Months, the Danger passed, the Persons executed that were concerned in the great Treason, and all Danger that might have been from that Act gone, and no Fear now concerning it; I hope you will not use the extraordinary Power of the Legislative to punish for that Fact which may be punished by the ordinary Rules of Law.

The Reason suggested in the Bill is, That 'tis impossible to have this Gentleman tried by the Rules of the Common Law; for otherwise there is none: For you will not waste your Time; and if the Doctrine that was broached here Yesterday be true, there is no Occasion to trouble you now; for according to their Doctrine, there is legal Evidence, and there is no need of a Bill of Attainder; but taking that for granted, that we must do; otherwise there is no Reason for this Bill. Then the Bill says, That Goodman was an Evidence, and that he is withdrawn; which I must observe, is neither laid, nor proved to be by the Privy, Consent, or Procurement of Sir John Fenwick. There is no Pretence of it in the Bill; no Insinuation of it, nor any Evidence to that Purpose. Then suppose Goodman is withdrawn, we may presume you will not pass a Bill to put Sir John Fenwick in a worse Condition than if Goodman was present, if he had been ready to have sworn the same Thing.

In case you do pass this Bill, you do put Sir John Fenwick in a worse Condition than he would have been if Goodman were here: Perhaps it might have been reasonable to have an Act passed, that Goodman's Depositions should be read at the Trial, if Goodman was withdrawn; but we hope it can't be a Reason to condemn Sir John Fenwick of High-Treason without Trial; for the Consequence of this is (if it were by his Means) that he is punished greater than the Thing requires. For if Goodman was here, Sir John Fenwick would have had his Trial by a Jury, the Benefit of challenges, Exceptions to the Array, might have challenged upon Account of Favour, if any of the Grand-Jury had been impanelled, had his legal Exceptions to the Testimony of the Witnesses, might have these Witnesses examined upon Oath, might give Evidence upon Oath to it; and all this he is deprived of: So that now he is in a worse Condition, by Goodman's Absence, than if he was present. We insist upon it therefore, and submit it to you, whether any Punishment can be imposed by the Legislative Power, but only to supply that Defect, and put the Case in the same Circumstances it would have been, if such a Miscarriage had not been committed. But this Bill is to condemn him to Death upon the Oath of one Witness, though there was your Act of Parliament last Year requires two. With submission to their Judgment, it was the Law of the Land before that; and in all Cases, where Trials are per Testes; and 'tis the Law of God, and the Law of the whole World; and no Law allows a Man to be condemned but by two Witnesses; and the Reason that here one Witness is admitted, is, because he hath the Benefit of a Jury, and Challenges to them, who the Law supposes are privy to the Fact, and therefore are to come from the Vicinage, from the Neighbourhood of the Place where the Party dwells; and for that Reason, in Cases of Felony, where no Statute interposes, the Law allows but one Witness. Natural Reason requires two Witnesses in case of so great Crimes, because that one Witness can be no Rule to guide your Judgments; one affirms, the other denies, this is equal; and Presumption ought to be on the Side of Innocency, rather than otherwise; but we hope, in this Case, it will not be thought reasonable to pass the Bill to condemn Sir John Fenwick for Treason, and to condemn him to the basest of Executions, upon the Testimony, nay, upon the Parole of one Witness. And 'tis no more than if Goodman had been dead, then you would not have done it. If Goodman and Porter had both come to this Bar, you would not have done it, but have referred him to his Trial at the Common Law. Now what is there pretended by them to induce you to judge the contrary, or at least without so much as an Allegation in the Bill, that Sir John Fenwick procured his withdrawing. I propose it to your Consideration, Whether there be any Proof that Goodman is withdrawn? He was once in Custody, let out upon Bail, the Prosecutors approved the Bail, he never yet called upon his Recognizance; nay, there is not one tittle of Evidence, but that Good- man may be in the same Lodging where he was: And then, suppose when you have passed this Bill, Goodman should appear again, and contradict his Testimony he has given before; then it may be too late for you to do Right to Sir John Fenwick. 'Tis not so much as offered that Goodman could not be found; they offered a printed Proclamation, which I am sure the King's Serjeant will not allow to be any Evidence. Whether it passed the Great-Seal before it was printed, or whether it passed it at all, non constat; for it was not read; they waved it. It does not appear Sir John Fenwick consented, or procured Goodman's withdrawing; he could not procure it, for he was a Prisoner, and so not likely to affect it, being a Prisoner, especially for his Life.

As for my Lady Fenwick, whether she did so or not, I am sure you'll be of Opinion, it ought not to affect Sir John Fenwick: Suppose Clancy a Stranger to Sir John Fenwick, and in Truth he never saw him: Or suppose him a Friend, and he officiously did what he did; he ought to answer for it, and I think he hath undergone the Punishment the Law thought fit to inflict in that Case; 'tis his own Crime, and by the Rules of Justice, no Man's Crime ought to tend to the Punishment or Misfortune of another Man: The Act of one Criminal, thought to be a Party, or Acquaintance, or a Friend of Sir John Fenwick's, ought not to affect him, nor no Body but the Actor; 'tis he that hath suffered for it.

And what hath been said in that Matter ought not to influence your Judgments; for 'tis not improbable, but what Clancy told Porter is false; you will never allow Hearsay, not permit your Judgment to be governed by any Thing but what is certain, and hath all the moral Rules of Persuasion: Hearsay was never, by any Law in any Court of the World, allowed, nor indeed believed in private Conversation.

As to my Lady Fenwick, there is this further, That Husband and Wife, in respect of Crimes, are distinct Persons; and what one does cannot affect the other, no more than she deserves to be executed for what Sir John Fenwick did: And as to what Porter says concerning it, it only relates to himself; it proves no Suggestion of the Bill, which is, That Goodman is withdrawn, because a Stranger to Sir John Fenwick, (and it must be so in Construction of Law) made an Attempt upon Captain Porter; therefore Goodman being withdrawn, there was an Attempt upon him, and by the same Person, and by the same Means: This is no Evidence; it carries no Logick in it, and won't prevail upon your Judgment.

We offer another Thing to your Consideration: 'Tis said, that one Roe was spoke to by a Solicitor of Sir John Fenwick's, Whether or no he could say any Thing to the Discredit of Goodman, as to his Robbing or Clipping. The asking of that Question was lawful; and to desire him to testify it was lawful: I must agree, to offer too great a Sum of Money, may subject him to an Information in the King's Bench; (but Mr. Attorney knows that best) but God forbid it should affect Sir John Fenwick! Mr. Dighton was not his Solicitor at that Time, not appointed, nor had any Liberty to come to him; besides, it can't be an Evidence, nor can't induce you to believe, That the same Person was instrumental to get away Goodman, because he asked Roe if he knew Goodman to be guilty of those Crimes; for there is no Evidence, that that he asked him to persuade him to withdraw himself.

There's another Thing we could offer to you : There's no Proof of that, which, upon the first Reading of this Bill, was aimed at, to be punished with greater Pains than the Common Law inflicts, and that is, the giving of false Papers and Accusations against great Persons ; they have not attempted any Thing like it ; so that That is to be taken as if there was no such Thing. Neither is there any Proof of protracting his Trial, by any Promises of Confession or Discovery ; they opened it, but did not attempt the Proof of it, but waved it.

But take it to be so ; I hope you will not pass an Act to attain a Man for making a false Accusation, which only incurs an Action of Scandalum Magnatum, or Fine and Imprisonment upon an Indictment ; and, I hope, you'll not condemn him to a greater Punishment, when, at the Time he did it, he had no Notice of that Punishment. The Design of the Law, is to influence Men by Fear of Penalty ; and how can that be, when Penalties are not known at the Time the Fact was committed ? I speak with Submission still ; it seems not just, that I should forbear with so much Caution, from an Action that exposes me to the Penalty of 20*l.* as from an Action for which the Law says, I shall forfeit my Life : Now, Sir, in this Case it might be expected that he should incur the Penalty of Fine, Pillory, and Imprisonment ; but not that he could incur the Penalty of Death.

Then, Sir, as to the protracting of his Trial by such Promises of Confession. Certainly the putting off his Trial, in it self, is so far from being a Crime, that it can't be thought but lawful : 'tis every Man's Duty, upon the Principle of Self-preservation ; and it was at the Liberty of the Government and Ministers, to do as they thought fit in it.

In the next place we do insist, That there is no Treason alledged nor proved in this Case : There is no Pretence of Truth nor Charge, in respect of the Assassination ; nor of buying of Arms or Horses, though mentioned in the Indictment : And if Sir John Fenwick had been to have been tried upon this Indictment, and they had had both these Witnesses there, all that could have been proved, must be of the Consult ; as to the rest, he must have been found not guilty : And I believe 'tis most notorious, that the whole Company there, could not have raised what was talked of. Now as to this single Act, it hath been said, that a Conspiracy to levy War is not Treason : My Lord Russel was attainted for it, and that Attainder was reversed upon this very Account, and the Act declares the Reason of it, he being deny'd his lawful Challenges, and by strained Construction of Treasons he was unlawfully convicted of Treason. Now the Overt-Act in the Indictment was this, That my Lord Russel, and others, did consult and conspire to seize the King's Guards : The Proof of it went further, That they sent Sir Thomas Armstrong to view them and seize them : But then the Question is, Whether the Consulting to send a Man to invite foreign Forces, is any more than a Consult to seize the King's Guards ? We say each are levying of War, and 'tis not within the Clause of adhering to the King's Enemies ; for they must be either present aiding and abetting of them, or sending them Money, Arms, and Ammunition, and the like ; and I think, for that, I may appeal to your Act made against corresponding with the King's Enemies ; which, I suppose, if the Law before was otherwise, it needed not to have been made. Now here is only a Consult and Agreement to do this Act.

It hath been questioned, Whether Scribere est agere. But here it is only mittere ; nay, it is not so much, 'tis only agere mittere ; six Men had between them a little private Discourse, and at last one of them did agree to send Charnock to France : The Question is, Whether the Law of the Land will warrant this to be Treason ? And if not, then you must not pass this Act upon such a single Point. Dr. Story's Case is deny'd to be Law ; this Case is no more than that in my Lord Dyer, for writing a Letter to invite the Spanish King to invade England ; and it was a Time of great Fear of them, as it is of the French King now ; and he was attainted upon that, but that Judgment hath been questioned and deny'd to be Law. My Lord Hales expressly, in his Pleas of the Crown, says, That a Conspiracy to levy War, is not an Overt-Act of the King's Death ; and that attempting to levy War, is not Treason. Now the Sorts of Treasons are these Three ; Compassing the King's Death ; Levying War ; or, Adhering to the King's Enemies. Now for compassing or agreeing to levy War, to apply that to be an Overt-Act of compassing the King's Death, hath been always complained of as a Strain of the Law.

Upon these Reasons, we think this would not have been an Act of compassing the King's Death, as laid in the Indictment ; and then if it be but a Question, Whether it be or no ? We hope you will not proceed in your Legislative, especially when he is deprived of the Advantage of insisting on this at his Trial at Common Law : Witnesses are there upon their Oaths ; he might have had a Challenge to the Jury ; he might move in Arrest of Judgment. Now the Question is, Whether you will pronounce Sentence of Death upon him for High-Treason, upon one single Act, a Year and a half ago, just after the Act of Parliament for regulating Trials in Cases of High-Treason ; and if we had had a Trial at Law, we should have canvassed these Things, if we had Witnesses upon their Oaths ; for the Pardon reached the 29th of April, they could swear no new Discourse but just in May ; and now they say it was in the Middle of May ; if it had been before, the King's Grace would have exempted Sir John Fenwick from Punishment ; and these Things we should have had the Advantage of, if we had had the Liberty of a Trial.

There's another Consideration ; Sir John Fenwick hath pleaded, and hath so pleaded to Issue, and Issue is joined, and a Venire Facias is awarded. Now we submit it to you, whether you will think fit to take it out of the Hands of the Common Law, when there is no extraordinary Necessity ? And the Consideration we have to offer to you, if you do not cast out this Bill, if we should have the good Fortune, as we hope for in another Place, Sir John Fenwick stands still liable, and must submit to his Trial, if the King's Counsel think fit to prosecute him, and we think it hard to undergo your Censure, to be condemned in this Place ; and if (perhaps) he be acquitted here, to undergo the like Danger in another, and then to be tried in a Third : And for these Reasons, we hope, you will reject this Bill.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Gould. May it please you, Mr. Speaker, I have hearkened to what these Gentlemen have objected, and could not be aware of all they have said: They have enlarged upon several Topicks; I shall recollect them as well as I can, and answer them in the Method they have taken. I never did think, that the Parliament would take Things out of the ordinary Course of Justice, nor attain any of Treason, unless in Cases extraordinary; and these Gentlemen have agreed, That in Cases extraordinary they have done it. They likewise have agreed, and Sir Bartholomew Shower has told you, That there are some Treasons, by the Statute of 25 Edw. III. reserved by that Act, to be declared by Parliament. Sir Thomas Powys says, This is taken out of the ordinary Course of Justice: So says Sir Bartholomew Shower; says he, Here is an Indictment before you, the Party hath pleaded not Guilty; and they say he may be tried in the ordinary Course of the Law; and therefore they look upon it as improper to bring it here.

The Gentlemen are mistaken very much, to think that I did say, That the Examination that I said was Evidence here, would be allowed below. If I had thought so, I should have thought at the same Time, this House would not have meddled with it: But I do disagree with them in this; and take it, That where a Case is extraordinary, you will come and meddle with the Matter. Here is an abominable Treason, that is agreed on all Hands. Here is Plot upon Plot; here hath been a Plot now to take away the King's Evidence; there was two Witnesses in the beginning, and 'tis very plain that one of them is not here; for that here was a Proclamation produced, and I did look upon that Matter as taken for granted, That Goodman was withdrawn, and for that Matter they may be easily satisfied. They say, we have not proved the Suggestions of the Bill; but we think we have: For first of all, Captain Porter hath here sworn it expressly; it is not a Thing of loose, bare talking, but he hath proved a deliberate and formed Conspiracy; he hath proved, that it was actually agreed upon, a first, and at a second Time; and that Charnock was sent in order to the Execution of it: And what was it for? It was plainly to depose the King. He tells you, for that Purpose, they had desired 8000 Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons from the French King; and these Gentlemen agreed to join them. Now, can there be a greater Evidence of deposing the King, and consequently of imagining his Death? 'Tis an Evidence of the Imagination of the Death of the King, as well as of the Rebellion; it being so in the necessary Consequence of it. Now, I think, he hath fully proved that. Then we offer to you, how far you will allow of this Examination: Why? Because upon a second Contrivance here is a Witness withdrawn; and can we give you greater Evidence of that than we have given? We have proved that there was tampering, let the Thing run as far as it will. Captain Porter was dealt with, had 300 Guineas in Hand, and 300 more he was to have remitted to him; and was to have 300*l.* a Year, whereof Sir John Fenwick was to pay one. It does follow after, that he is withdrawn: We must leave it to this honourable House, what Construction you will make of that; Whether here is not a second Plot?

Now this Matter is brought before this honourable House, we have gone so far in it, as to produce Goodman's Examination that was taken before a Justice of Peace: We have shewed you the Evidence that he hath given upon a former Trial; and now he is gone, sure no Body but must justly infer, 'tis by Sir John Fenwick's Means: So that here they have taken away the Evidence that is necessary in the ordinary Course of Proceedings. In such an extraordinary Case I think it hath been usual for the Parliament to interpose: Therefore, what they pretended, under Favour, that this should not be Evidence, is all taken off. For now we are in Parliament, you will make use of such Informations as can give you any Light into the Matter, and may obviate and cure the Distemper that is upon us; and you are Judges of your own Methods, and how far Sir John Fenwick hath been concerned upon the Instances we have given you, that is in your Judgments. As for what Sir Thomas Powys tells you; says he, This Power hath not been executed by Parliaments very frequently, but it hath generally been done where Persons are withdrawn from Justice, and can't be come at in the ordinary Course. Why, we are in the like Case; if so be we can't come at Justice in the ordinary Course, and that by our Evidence having been tampered with, and drawn away; then, Sir, under Favour, by their own Arguments, 'tis proper to come before this honourable House; so that notwithstanding what hath been said, we do think we have given you Evidence.

And as for what they said, That we have not given any Account that Sir John Fenwick, by giving Assurance of his Confession, had protracted his Trial; for that I did apply my self, That Mr. Vernon might give you an Account of it: So that upon the whole Matter, we must leave it to your Consideration, and hope we have given you good Satisfaction, that there hath been a great Plot against the Government; and there was no Evidence of any other Matter before the Judges, and they allowed it to be High-Treason. Here is the same Evidence, only we have not one of them viva voce.

Mr. Serj. Lovel. Mr. Speaker, I shall not trouble you nor the House very long; but I humbly hope, with a little Pains, to satisfy the House, that most that hath been said on the other Side is, not much to the Purpose. Sir, I will consider, with the Leave of this House, what the Common Law was before 25 Edw. III. and how the Law does now stand; and draw some Consequences from thence, and the Necessity of this Case.

The Statute of 25 Edw. III. I must observe it, is not an enacting Law, it is only a Law declaratory; for all those particular Instances of Treasons that are mentioned there, were Treasons before that Law was made; and so, by the Preamble of it, plainly appears: But the Judges had a greater Liberty upon constructive Treason, and upon accumulative Treasons; and that was left too much at the Discretion and Liberty of the Judges below, and the executive Power of the Law. Then that Statute comes and restrains the Judges in that Point; and says, That they shall not give Judgment in any Cases of Treason, but only in these Cases particularly mentioned there: And that Statute says, That if any other Matter which shall be thought Treason, should come before them, they shall not proceed to Judgment, but acquaint the King in Parliament with it. I only make use of it, to prove how Treasons stood before that Act, and how it comes to be altered from the Common Law: And I am sure it is not to be denied, but that one Witness was sufficient at the Common Law: But then comes 1 Edw. VI. c. 12. and that, for the Security of the Subject, does ordain, That in Cases of High-Treason there shall be two Witnesses of the Fact: But that Statute does not alter, but was made for the more Security of the Subject in Point of Proof. But in that Statute of 1 Edw. VI. c. 12. that does provide there shall be two Witnesses in Cases of High-Treason, there is an Exception of Treason for counterfeiting and forging of the Coin; and that is the Reason that the Law is taken now, that though there must be two Witnesses in the Cases of other Treasons, yet in the Case of Coining, there needs but one. The Offence or Crime is never the greater, because there are to be two Witnesses to prove it. In this Case that is here before you, we come to desire your Help, because one of the Witnesses is by Art and fraudulent Means withdrawn: Does that purge the Crime at all, or lessen it? No Man will say the Crime is less, but it does prevent a regular Trial before the Courts below; and that is the Reason why we did come here; and we hope this Defect shall be supplied by a special Law. But, say they, 'tis very hard a Law should be made ex post facto to take away a Man's Life. It would be very hard, if the Case was as they have stated it, to make a Crime ex post facto, that was not so before: But I do not take it to be hard for a Law to be made to repeal another, to make a Matter triable that was not triable before.

Suppose a Law should be made, That all Treasons from and after such a Time, suppose from a Time before the Fact is here supposed to be committed, as May was twelve Months, should be triable as at the Common Law; no doubt the Parliament may repeal a Law in part, or in all. No Man can say but Sir John Fenwick might be tried at the Common Law by one Witness, before the Statute of 1 Edw. VI. so that I do observe, and humbly submit it to you, That this Law, by the Act, is not changed as to the Crime; the Crime is as it was before, it is only changed as to the Number of Witnesses. The Instances that have been observed on the other Side, with humble Submission, I think, do not reach our Case. We do not insist that there are two legal Witnesses; we do confess the Information that hath been read is not a legal Proof; but this House, in their legislative Capacity, is not to be confined to the Evidence that a Jury must have below. This House may take what Ways and Methods they please to satisfy themselves. Say they, Here is the Life of a Gentleman that is concerned. I know all good Men will be tender of the Life of a Man; but here is the Life of the King, and the Safety of the Kingdom, the Peace and Safety of us all, that is concerned in the same Case; and let them put these Things into the Balance, and consider which ought to weigh most.

You have a Record before you of the Conviction of Peter Cook, who was indicted by the same Witnesses.

A learned Gentleman, that is of Counsel for the Prisoner at the Bar, did make the same Objections, as are made now, at the Old Bailey; (it may be there are some other Particulars now) and after all the Debates and Arguments that could be used at that Time, it was unanimously resolved, That the Crime was High-Treason: And if it was High-Treason in Peter Cook, 'tis no less in Sir John Fenwick, who was present at the same Time, and engaged in the same Business:

For what was a Crime in one, was the same in both.

I think 'tis too diminutive an Expression, to say, This was nothing but a little Twittle-Twattle. They did there meet upon a solemn Consultation; and not only once, but they did meet a second time; and what was it to do? It was to invite a foreign Power to invade this Land, and to make War with the King and Kingdom; and they did promise, and solemnly engage to assist them with armed Forces; and it was proved, That they did agree with Charnock to go into France; and Charnock was not willing to go the first Time he was desired, 'till he found they were stanch and steady in their Resolutions; and upon a second Meeting, they were all found so, and then he would go: I think that is an Overt-Act of Treason, if there be any. And when he came back, he said, he had been in France, and brought an Answer to the Message he went about: This is all now laid before you. But, say they, this is an extraordinary Case: I do agree it; but because it is an extraordinary Case, and for the Safety of the King and Kingdom, it is fit there should be an extraordinary Remedy.

They ask, What Mischief it would be if this Gentleman should be left to the ordinary Course of Law? It hath been the Wisdom of all Ages to make a Law, to punish such as by their Artifice would evade the Law. Here is this Gentleman, as we say, guilty of High-Treason; but that we submit to you.

This Gentleman was in the Prosecution of the Law, and might have been tried in the regular Way, and had the Witnesses upon their Oaths; (the Grand Jury have found Billa Vera upon their Oaths;) but we must appeal to a worthy Member of the House (who because he was a Member we did not call upon him) to give you an Account how he did delay and protract his Trial; and now they know he can't be tried at all, they pretend he is willing to be tried: And because he can't be tried, they would have it as an Argument that he should not be punished by any other Means.

Sir, If so notorious a Crime as this is, should be committed against the Body of a Nation, and go unpunished, either in the common Course, or by some extraordinary Methods, the Nation would be in a doubtful and dangerous Case.

When this House hath passed their Judgments in this Matter, it will go to another Place, where it will have another Examination; and it will have that regular Consideration that all other Acts have. We are in an extraordinary Case, and do think, That this extraordinary Case does deserve an extraordinary Punishment.

Sir Barth. Shower. I beg Pardon but for one Word: No Man does abhor such Consults more than my self; but I do not think, that Discourses are such an Overt-Act of High-Treason, as deserves the Punishment of Death.

Sir John Fenwick and the Counsel withdrew. And being withdrawn.

Admiral Ruffel. I think this may be a proper Time to ask Questions: If so, I think my self enough concerned to trouble you with one or two. I think in the Paper that hath been read, I am mentioned twice. These are the Meaning Fenwick's Informations.

Que-

Questions I desire to have asked, What Proof he hath of this? Whether ever he saw —. And, what Proof he has that I sent Captain Lloyd over, and that I gave him a List of the Ships? And that I said, we could not fit out thirty Ships in May? And whether or no, since this Revolution, he hath had any Conversation with me?

Colonel Crawford. What that honourable Person says, calls me up; my Name is mentioned in Sir John Fenwick's Paper; I desire you would ask him, Why he mentioned me in his Paper, as he hath done? And that you would require him to make Proof of what he says in relation to me.

Colonel Godfrey. I desire some Questions may be asked him in relation to a noble Lord, my Lord Marlborough: If he be guilty, I would have it known, and I would as willingly have it known if he be innocent, as I believe it will so appear. I would have him asked, Whether, since the Beginning of this War, or from the Time of this King's Landing, Sir John Fenwick did ever speak to him, in publick or private? Or ever did write to him, or receive any Message by Word of Mouth, or Letter, from my Lord Marlborough? He says, That some Service he had promised King James, inclined him to promise him his Pardon: I would know what that Service was? And in relation to his sending Lloyd into France, Whether he can, by any Body else, make that appear?

Colonel Crawford. That Gentleman hath put me in mind of one short Question; Whether ever he conversed or spake with me in his Life?

Mr. Bridges. Whether Sir John Fenwick hath any Body but himself, to support the Hearsay he hath given an Account of? And I desire a Question may be asked him on behalf of the Duke of Shrewsbury; What Proof he has that the Duke of Shrewsbury came into the Office of Secretary of State again, by the Operation and Consent of King James?

Mr. Vernon. I desire a Question may be asked previous to that, because 'tis so in Time; How he knows that noble Lord was in Treaty with King James, before he went out of the Secretary's Office, when he first came there?

Colonel Grawil. I desire he may be asked, What Proof he can give, that my Lord Bath was to betray Plymouth into the Hands of King James, or the King of France; and whatever else my Father is accused of in that Paper?

Mr. Harley. I humbly propose it to you for the Method of your Proceedings, since you take this Method, Whether it will save you Time for you to look upon that Paper, and ask him as to the several Parts of it, what Proof he can make of it.

Mr. How. I do not oppose Sir John Fenwick's being examined to this Paper; but it might have been more to your Credit, if you had examined him before your Vote: But here are a great many Gentlemen rise, to ask a Man to that which he does not pretend to any Proof of. The best Way for saving your Time is, I conceive, to have the several Parts of the Paper that does concern these Gentlemen read to him: and to ask him upon what Grounds he gave the King that Information. This will lead him into all that he knows of the Matter.

Mr. Boscawen. I am not against the Question that is proposed last; but you may ask him that at last. But there is a noble Lord that is reflected on in that Paper, and that is my Lord Godolphin; I desire you would please to ask the same Questions as to him.

Lord Cuninghby. I did intend to take care of my Lord Godolphin; there is a hard Reflection upon that noble Person; but under favour, you must, I think, let him know you have such a Paper; and then ask him in general, What Proof he has to the Particulars of that Paper? And then you will do Injustice to no body.

Mr. Norris. There have been several Questions moved by several worthy Members; and, I think, the Questions ought to be asked: But, I think, there is one previous Question to all these; and that is, when you tell him that you have such a Paper, I think the first Question should be, Whether ever he delivered those Papers to the King?

Sir R. Delaval. I find I am named in that Paper that Sir John Fenwick hath given; I desire that Part that relates to me may be read to him; and that he may give a Reason why he hath said so of me and Mr. Killigrew.

Lord Walden. There is another mentioned, and that is Commissary Crawford; I desire he may be asked, What Proof he hath, that he gave Mr. — a List of the Army?

Mr. Chanc. of the Exchequer. I can't blame Gentlemen for asking Questions that concern them or their Friends: Some are for reading of it to him, I am against that; But yet I would have you to enquire into this Paper. And being you intended to do it, it might have been as well enquired into before Mr. Dighton came last to him. I think you may put your self into an easy Method, and avoid all leading Questions; and ask him upon every Name in that Paper, as you come to it, What he knows of that Gentleman? And ask him no other Question.

Mr. Smith. I was standing up to the same Purpose: I would not have you to put Words into his Mouth, nor let him know by any Question what Answer he is to make.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, I am willing to do you any Service I can: but here are long Informations, and I never read them, nor know the Contents of them, but as they were read at the Table.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think the Method lately proposed will save you a great deal of Time, and is proper for the Discovery of the Truth; that you will name the Persons to him in order as they are in the Paper, and ask him in general, What he knows of those Persons? But when you call him in, I am not for asking him to the particular Things he hath said against them in that Paper; because that Paper, though it is under his own Hand, is not his own; and if he knew it then, he knows it still.

Colonel Mordaunt. I won't pretend to propose any Thing, only for the shortning of your Time: If after you have informed him there is such a Paper, that you should ask him, Whether he will own it? And then, What Sort of Proof he will bring to prove it? You will find he will either tell you, he will advise with Counsel, or whether he will give any Answer at all.

Lord Cutts. I have only one Question to be ask'd Sir John Fenwick; 'tis not a Question that relates to any Person named in that Paper. I think there is no one Person that he hath named, but is eminently known or believed to be in the Interest of this Government; and none but what are in some Post of Trust, and Employment in it. Then, I think think it highly necessary to know, How it comes to pass that he hath had so much Conversation with Persons of that Character, and none with those People that he hath been seen daily to converse with? And if he hath, Why he hath not discovered them, as he hath done the rest?

Mr. Speaker. Is it your Pleasure I inform him we have the Informations?

Mr. Palmer. If I am not mistaken, when you first called Sir John Fenwick before you, he referred himself to what he had informed the King; and referred himself to that Paper, as often as you asked him any Questions. And if you ask him general Questions, I presume he will give you the same Answer: Therefore, I think, it may be proper to ask him, Whether this is the Paper that he delivered in, or not? Or otherwise, I doubt, he will tell you, He knows nothing but what is in that Paper. Now, if he refers to that Paper, you may ask him, if he knows it again, if it be shewed to him?

Mr. Sloane. What this Gentleman has said, has partly interrupted what I was going to offer; but as to what he says, That when he was here before, he referred to his Confession delivered in to the King; we did not tell him we knew of that: But he put it further, That he was not bound to accuse himself, and that what he said might be given in Evidence against him; and so far he was in the Right: For if he knew of any Body that was concerned in a Conspiracy against the Government, that was Misprision of Treason at least in him. I don't question but it was a very mischievous Contrivance; but if he should confess it, without some Assurance of being indemnified, he proves himself to be guilty of it.

Mr. Vice-Chamberlain. You are now upon the Method of your Proceedings. There is great Suspicion whether this Paper be Sir John Fenwick's own or no. If you will tell Sir John Fenwick, that in the Paper in your Hand he hath laid Things to the Charge of Persons of Trust, whom this House hath a good Opinion of; and that this House desires to know, What Ground he hath for it? If he does not think fit to give you an Account of it, there is an End of your Enquiry.

Mr. James Montagu. The House seems to agree, that they will have Sir John Fenwick sent for in: I suppose you will not have the Counsel, nor Solicitor by; and when he withdraws, I desire he may be kept private, from his Counsel and Solicitor.

Lord Cutts. By Sir John Fenwick's Behaviour, when he first appeared at the Bar, and by what he said then, I believe Sir John Fenwick did tell you to this Sense, That he had Assurance from a noble Person, that what he then said, should not rise against him in Judgment; and I think he was told, If he dealt ingenuously, he might expect Favour, or to that Effect. I do, for the saving of Time, mention it to you, to consider how far the House may give him Security, that what he here says shall not rise up in Judgment against him; and that if he dealt ingenuously he might expect some Favour from this House.

Mr. Harley. You are upon the nicest Thing, in its Nature, that possibly can come before you. I think before you call him in, it ought to be understood that the Questions be very plain.

Mr. Manley. I think you have been well moved from the other Side, That we should not read this Paper to Sir John Fenwick: And I am of that Opnion from this Consideration, besides what hath been mentioned: We are here in a Judicial Capacity as well as a Legislative; and this Paper I take to be an Examination made upon Sir John Fenwick; and as my Memory serves me, some Things he speaks of as Matters of Fact, which he does positively assert; which being contained in the same Paper with other Matters of Hearsay, if you should read that Paper to him, and ask him a Question, Whether that be his Paper? That, I doubt will be contrary to the Rules of Law: For it will be asking, Whether this Information against himself be true or false? And I think it does not become the Dignity and Honour of this great Assembly, to ask him any Questions that may make him accuse himself.

Mr. Vernon. I would observe to you, that he has not considered these two Papers: The first of these Papers I think the Bill refers to, and that is under Sir John Fenwick's Hand: and there he does charge nothing at all upon himself, but it is an Accusation upon the Persons named. In the first Paper he does say, There was a select Number to manage the Affairs of King James, and — was sent over, but they are not named; and afterwards he went about to explain it in the second; and the Bill referring only to the first, I suppose you will confine your selves only to the first Paper.

Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer. I would think of some Way to reconcile these Things you are going upon: For though Gentlemen are in the Right to press for these Questions; yet I do not think it the Business before you. Therefore I think you should acquaint Sir John Fenwick, that this Paper hath been presented to you, which this House hath thought false and scandalous: But before he goes away, this House has a Mind to hear what he would say to it; and let him say what he would upon that, then you would not lead him by any Question. The first Person that is named I have a great Respect for, and am as willing he should be vindicated as any. The first Question that you ask him is, What he knows of my Lord Godolphin? But that you should literally ask him Questions, as the Paper states it, I don't think it proper for this Assembly to ask; for there are Facts beyond the Act of Indemnity, many of them. After you have done with the Paper, I have some Questions to ask him: I take these Matters to be false; but I shall have some Questions to ask him which I believe will prove true.

Mr. Bridges. Before you call in Sir John Fenwick, I would offer one Thing to your Consideration: I think that Paper you are upon is written with Sir John Fenwick's own Hand. Why may it not be fit for you to ask Sir John Fenwick, if that be his Hand?

Members. No, no.

Mr. Speaker. Is it your Pleasure that Sir John Fenwick be called in?

Which Question being put, it passed in the Affirmative. And he was brought in without his Counsel.

Mr. Speaker. Sir John Fenwick, this House does understand that you have given in Informations against several Persons of great Quality, that have been in the Government; and they do expect from you, that you should deal clearly and candidly with them, and give them an Account of what what you know in relation to those Persons. I am commanded in the first Place, to ask you, What you know of my Lord Godolphin, in relation to this Matter?

Sir John Fenwick. I am under a double Prosecution for my Life: I know not but what I say may turn to my own Prejudice: I hope the House will not think it Obstinacy in me; and since this House have done me the Favour to hear me by my Counsel, I hope they will please to consider what they have said.

Mr. Speaker. No doubt the House will consider what you have said by your Counsel, that is, in reference to your own Defence; but they do expect from you, as I told you before, That you do deal candidly with them in what you know of this Matter.

Sir John Fenwick. Sir, I am under Prosecution for my Life: and, I hope, the House will please to consider, That I know not what Inconveniency may come upon me by it; and, I hope, the House will excuse me, for I do it not out of Obstinacy, but for my own Preservation.

Mr. Speaker. You would do well to advise yourself well in this Matter; 'tis of great Concernment; the Favour of this House, if you deserve it, may be of great kindness to you. I have only in Command to tell you, what the House expect, and you are to consider how to answer it.

Sir John Fenwick. I hope the House will not put me upon any thing that will hurt my self: I should be sorry to incur the Displeasure of this House, but I hope they will consider my Condition; and I am sure the Justice and Honour of the House is such, That they will not press any Man to do any Thing that may hurt himself.

Mr. Speaker. Sir, if you please to withdraw.

Accordingly Sir John Fenwick withdrew.

Lord Cutts. I would humbly propose something to you to save your Time, and remove this Inconveniency. The House have heard what Sir John Fenwick says; I can't but say, that in Matters of Blood we can't be too tender; but that I would propose to you, if this House approve of it, is this; Suppose you wave the whole Matter to the last Moment of passing your Bill, and then I shall have something more to say to you in the Matter.

Mr. Clerk. Now I think it very proper for you to proceed in your legislative Capacity. I am glad the House have taken so much Pains in the Examination of the Matter; and it is no small Satisfaction to me, That the Gentleman was brought to the Bar upon this Enquiry; very probable, another Time may induce him more to comply than he does at present; though, if I may speak my Opinion, there is little hope of the Gentleman's answering your Expectation here: And I think the first thing you are to do now, is to Read your Bill.

Mr. Pultney. One of the Allegations of the Bill is, That his Trial was put off upon several repeated Pretences of making a Confession. The Counsel for the Prisoner took notice, That that Allegation was not proved: The Counsel for the Bill told you, They must refer to a worthy Member of this House, who could prove it; the worthy Member is Mr. Vernon. I suppose, before you enter into a Debate, as there will be after the second Reading of the Bill, Gentlemen will desire to have all the Evidence. And I find your Orders is, That Mr. Vernon do give in his Evidence while Sir John Fenwick is at the Bar; and therefore I humbly move, That Sir John Fenwick may be called in while Mr. Vernon gives his Evidence.

Mr. Speaker. I suppose if Mr. Vernon gives Evidence, you will call in the Counsel.

Members. Yes, yes.

Mr. Speaker. Pray then hear the Motion that hath been made. Shall I put the Question, That Sir John Fenwick and the Counsel be called in, while Mr. Vernon does give his Evidence?

Which Question passed in the Affirmative; and Sir John Fenwick, and the Counsel on both Sides, were brought in.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, you that are of Counsel of both Sides, the House, before they proceed any further, was willing to hear the Testimony of a worthy Member of this House, which has not yet been given; and they are willing that Sir John Fenwick, and you, should be present while it is given. Mr. Vernon, will you please to acquaint the House, &c.

Mr. Vernon. If I understand the Counsel for the Bill aright, that which they did appeal to me for, was about the protracting of Sir John Fenwick's Trial, and upon what Pretence it was. The Account, Sir, that I can give of it, is this: That Sir John Fenwick's Trial was put off, will appear best from the frequent Adjournments of the Sessions at the Old-Bailey for six or seven Weeks together. For when Sir John Fenwick was committed to the Tower (which was, as I take it) on the 19th of June, there was, I believe, a Sessions to be held soon after; for, as I remember it, the first Application that Lady Mary Fenwick made for putting off Sir John Fenwick's Trial was upon the 30th of June; and the Petition was, That he might have some Friends come to him to advise him how to make his Application to the King: On the 30th of June, or about that time, my Lady Mary Fenwick did first propose, That somebody should be sent over from Sir John Fenwick to the King upon some Matters of Importance, but did not declare what they were; but only that she was told there was such Matters, and she had a proper Person to send, and would acquaint the Lords Justices with the Man, if he might have leave to go to: But afterwards my Lady Mary Fenwick said she could not provide a Person so soon; and, I think, the 2d of July, she came and offered to go her self, and said, if it was not as much for the King's Service, as Sir John Fenwick's Benefit, she would not undertake the Journey. She had leave to go, and would have capitulated, that the Trial should be put off till she returned; but the Lords said, when she should return, would depend upon her Pleasure; but they would write to the King at the same time, and give notice of her Intention, and that the Trial should not go on till they had an Answer of their own Letter.

There was a Passage in the Transport-Ship going to Holland, and my Lady Mary Fenwick desired to speak with Sir John in private, in Order to her Journey; the same Night she came back again, and said, she had considered of it, and said, she would not go; and several Reasons she gave. Upon the 7th of July there was a noble Lord that was in the Commission for the Administration of the Government, said, he had had an Application made made to him from another noble Peer, my Lord Carlisle, who desired that he would go to Sir John Fenwick, for he had been very earnest to speak with him. That noble Lord did acquaint the Lords Justices with it, who acquiesced in what he thought fit to do in the Matter.

He went the same Day to Sir John Fenwick, and the next Day the Lords Justices met again; he then told he had been with Sir John Fenwick, and that Sir John Fenwick had told him, he had sent to the King; for he did not allow it should be otherwise communicated. My Lords then thought it was fit to stay for the King's Answer. This was the 7th of July; and by what Accident I know not, but no manner of Account came till the 7th of August, that the Letter was received; but the 7th of August, the Letter was acknowledged to be received; and the Answer that then came to it, was, That the King had not received any great Satisfaction by the Message; (I know not what it was) but that Sir John Fenwick should be tried; but withal, that noble Lord acquainted my Lords Justices, That the King was pleased to write to him, That what Sir John Fenwick had to say should be sent him in Writing. It happened at that time, that the Judges were upon their Circuit: and there being the King's Directions to receive what Sir John Fenwick had to say in Writing; that noble Lord did undertake to go again to Sir John Fenwick; and, I suppose, he did receive something from Sir John Fenwick, which he sent to the King: When the Answer to that came it was in September, and that noble Lord was at the Bath; and so it required a little time—Why then it appeared, That the King's Direction was, That what Sir John Fenwick had sent to the King, he should prove it; and he should likewise shew his Ingenuity in Confessing what he knew of any other Designs against the Government: And the 10th of September, as I take it, I was directed to go to Sir John Fenwick, who was then in the Tower, and to acquaint him with this Message from my Lords Justices. Sir John Fenwick's Answer was, That he had no more to say, or some words to that effect; and then he must prepare for his Defence as well as he could; but if he could speak with that noble Lord, he should be glad to do it; but he was not come from the Bath, and Direction was then given for his Trial. Again in the mean time that noble Lord did come, and he did go to Sir John Fenwick, and he brought an Account from him, That Sir John Fenwick would prove to the King, and make out what he had said; and was ready to give the Lords Justices Satisfaction: And upon that, I was sent to Sir John Fenwick; I carry'd the Message in Writing, which you may see when you please; and it was to ask him, Whether he was willing to make out by Proof, what he had already said to the King; and whether he was ready, in Compliance with the King's Directions, to give the Lords an Account of what he knew of any Design against the Government? I carry'd Sir John Fenwick this Message, and he returned an Answer in Writing, That he was ready to make out to the King what he said, and would acquaint the Lords with all the Matter, that he had not observed to the King; (his Arraignment was then to have come on the 17th) but he did dictate a Paper which was brought to the Lords, which they thought fit to be sent to the King; and the Trial was put off as to that time; And before an Answer from the King came, it was (I believe) the beginning of October: And this is the Account I have to give you.

Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen, you consider that this Evidence is given, with Relation to that part of the Bill, that sets forth, how Sir John Fenwick had delay'd his Trial by Offers of Confession. You have heard what the Evidence is; if you have any thing to observe as to that Point, you may speak before you withdraw.

Sir Tho. Powys. As to this Matter, I can only say, That in it self at least, according to our Rules of Law, it is not, in any degree, Treason: What you will construe it to be, I can't tell. We think it is only what is very usual when Persons are under an Accusation; they will put off their Trial as long as they can: Perhaps their Witnesses may be out of the way, or something else may be the Reason of it, and it does not carry any Crime in it self; at least, not of the Nature that this Bill is of.

Sir Barth. Shower. We do think, with Submission, that, considering the Nature of the Bill, and the particular Case of Sir John Fenwick, will (in some measure) answer this Fact: I take this singly in it self, as it hath been observed, not to consist with Honour; but it does not import a Crime, for any Man to use little Insinuations to put off his Trial. But, suppose it was unlawful, or that which they call prevaricating; I hope it is far from making him guilty of High-Treason, which is the greatest Crime this Bill designs to pass Sentence for; and, I hope, you will consider, if it be an Offence, 'tis so at Common Law; and the same Evidence will prevail to bring Sir John Fenwick to condign Punishment by the common Methods. And if it be no Offence, I hope you will not by a Law make it an Offence, so as to inflict the greatest Punishment for this Artifice.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Serjeant Gould, Have you any thing to say?

Mr. Serj. Gould. No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker. Then withdraw.

And being withdrawn,

Mr. Sloane. I propose it to you, Whether, if the Paper be Evidence, it should not be read in the Presence of the Prisoner?

Members. No, no.

Then the Question was put for Candles, which passed in the Affirmative, and they were brought in.

Ordered, That the Counsel be discharged any further Attendance at this time.

Mr. Metbuen. There can be no Debate previous to the reading of your Bill. I desire the Order of the Day may be read.

Accordingly the Order of the Day for reading of the Bill a second Time, was read by the Clerk.

Then the Bill was read a second Time by the Clerk.

And being afterwards opened by Mr. Speaker, and Mr. Speaker having expected for some Time, and no Member rising up to speak:

Mr. Speaker. Shall I put you the Question of Commitment?

Sir

Sir Tbo. Dyke. Sir, I hope you will not put the Question of Commitment 'till some Exception is made to the Bill; I am sure it is as liable to Exceptions as any Bill that hath been brought in a great while: 'Tis a tender Subject to speak of, the Pretence of the Bill being for the Preservation of the King and Government: And if I thought it was really so, I should be heartily for it; for I think there is no Comparison between the Value of the King's Life, and that of private Persons: But that hath been often said, but not proved; therefore, I think, I may tell you my Reasons why I am against the Bill. That the Parliament hath a Power to make such a Law, is agreed; but I think it ought not to be used but upon extraordinary Occasions, when Great Persons are concerned, that can't be otherwise brought to Justice, and when Crimes do not fall under the Denomination of the Law, which is not the present Case. This Case is, That a Gentleman is charged with Treason; and 'tis proved but by one Witness; though the Counsel did say, That a Consult to levy War was not Treason. Now either it will not be the Crime that is alledged, or it is not proved. Here you are Judges, Prosecutors, Witnesses and Jury: I would know in what Country it is so? Besides, the Witnesses are produced here, and not sworn; and upon the whole, there is but one Witness. Sir, I am against the Bill, and against it, as being of dangerous Consequence.

Mr. Pultney. This Matter before you is of such a Nature, that as a Debate is rising upon it, I hope all Gentlemen will hear one another with the greatest Attention that may be.

The worthy Member admits you have a Power to pass the Bill, and I do not find that contested by any Body; though (with Submission) the latter Part of what he said, contradicted what he admitted at first; but since that is so much agreed, I shall say but little to it, and that is this, That without such a Power as this, any Government would be imperfect, and would want a sufficient Power for its own Preservation, upon extraordinary Occasions. You have been told, this hath been an untrodden Path; but, I believe, Gentlemen are pretty well satisfied it hath not been so untrodden, and many Precedents of that kind have been quoted; and the Counsel against the Bill have admitted, That there have been frequent Precedents. An Objection hath been made to some of them, That they were made in ill Reigns; but I take it to be no Objection, That the Precedent was made at one Time or another, since 'tis agreed, that we have such a Power, and that that Power hath been executed.

The chief Matter before you is, Whether in the present Case, there is sufficient Ground for you to exert that Power? And upon that, give me leave to observe the Nature of the Crime of this Gentleman, and the Evidence that hath been brought to prove him guilty of that Crime. His Crime is High-Treason, the highest Crime in the Law: 'Tis for conspiring the Destruction of the King, and the Overthrowing of the Government. The Overt-Act which the Bill tells you (and which is mentioned in the Indictment) is his inviting in a French Force, in order to accomplish his Design. If this Crime would admit of Aggravation, some other Parts of the Bill would aggravate it; but I think it will admit of none. The Counsel at the Bar made a Doubt, Whether or no, that which was laid in the Indictment, did amount to a sufficient Overt-Act of High-Treason; and his Argument he drew from a Book that hath been put out by a learned Gentleman of the House; but the Gentleman could easily have answered himself; and, I presume, did not speak his own Opinion. For that Gentleman did write a Book, called, His Majesty and Government vindicated: By which he endeavoured to overthrow the Arguments in the other Book of the other Gentleman.

As to the Proof before you, you have had the Testimony of Mr. Porter, whose Evidence hath been justified by the several Convictions grounded upon it; and by the Confession of several Gentlemen, that have owned the Fact at the very Time when they have been going out of the World: And there hath been no Evidence brought by the Prisoner at the Bar, that should invalidate the Testimony of this Gentleman. And so (with Submission) you have one undoubted Evidence, that does charge the Prisoner with the Fact mentioned in the Bill: You have other Proof that does not come up within the Letter of the Law; but you have strong circumstantial Proof, that every Gentleman will apply to his Conscience in the Judgment he shall give in this Matter. One of the Allegations in the Bill is, That he did, by repeated Promises of making a Confession, from Time to Time, gain a Delay of his Trial. It is a great Presumption, that That was in order to a Design that he had of seducing Mr. Goodman, that was one of the Witnesses; for it was observed to you, what Practice there was in the Case, with the other Evidence, Mr. Porter.

Sir, Gentlemen have objected the Consequences of making a Precedent: You were very well told by a worthy Gentleman that spoke the other Day, near the Place where I am, That in the Case of a good Parliament, 'tis not to be imagined that they will make use of this Precedent, but upon as good a Ground as you have now; and an ill Parliament, they will have the same Reason, for they will copy after the same Precedents that have been made before, and will not stick at doing of it.

Besides, let Gentlemen consider the Way of Arguing: I have a Power to do such a Thing, and yet if I have such a Ground as is sufficient, I shall not make use of it: To say you have a Power, but shall not exert it, is as good as to say, you have no Power at all.

There were some Precedents cited by a learned Gentleman that spoke against the Bill, and he particularly quoted that of my Lord Strafford; and the Act of Parliament that repeals that Attainder, was in Part read to you: But, Sir, the Reasons given in that Bill of Repeal of my Lord Strafford's Attainder, are, That it was obtained in a tumultuous Manner, which influenced the Parliament in doing of it; and that it passed in the House of Lords, when most of the Lords were absent: And at last, the King, when he gave his Consent, by Commission, to the Passing of the Bill, it was with great Reluctancy. 'Tis certain, all these are Reasons that are given; but there is not One that questions the Parliament's Power of doing it; though upon the Trial, Gentlemen may remember, there was a Doubt in the Law, Whether the Evidence was sufficient.

Sir, It hath been urged to you, of what ill Consequence it would be, and how much Injustice, to make a Law to punish a Man ex post facto; but that that the Parliament may declare That to be a Crime, which was not so before, no Body doubts; and without that, the Clause in the 25th of Edw. III. signifies nothing; and I don't imagine it is a greater Injustice to supply in Point of Form, as to Matter of Evidence, when the Fact committed by the Prisoner, was against a known Law, at the Time when it was committed: And the rather, if I think that Defect of Form in the Courts below, was occasioned by the Prisoner. 'Tis a Matter of Blood, 'tis true; but I do not aim at this Gentleman's Life in it; but any Man must believe he must be concerned in great Matters, to bring to pass this great Design; therefore, all I propose by it, is to get his Confession, which in all Probability we might have had, if the other Witness had remained here.

Sir, upon the whole Matter, I do think we have Power to do this: I do think here is good Evidence (I speak with respect to my self) to think him guilty of this Crime. I do think, if this Bill does miscarry, there is the greatest Blow that can be given to your Constitution. And give me leave to use this Expression; I think, if this Bill miscarry, it not only turns this Plot upon you, but makes it impossible ever to come to the Depth of any other; and for these Reasons, I am for committing of this Bill.

Mr. Newport. Sir, I am unwilling to trouble you at any Time, but more especially at this Time, when I am afraid I am like to speak against the Opinion of the Majority of the House; for I see Gentlemen are in great haste for the Commitment of this Bill.

Sir, in this Matter I look upon my self, as every Gentleman here, to be a Judge; and therefore, I will in this Case, as in all others, go according to the Dictates of my own Conscience: I must be saved by my own Faith, and never will pin my Faith upon another Man's Sleeve: Perhaps it may be a Weakness in my Nature, that I am very tender in the Matter of Blood; but I hope Gentlemen will not be in so much haste to commit the Bill; for De morte hominis, nulla est cunctatio longa. A Gentleman below said, the other Day, it was possible in his own private Opinion, he might believe the Prisoner guilty; and some notice was taken of those Words: But, Sir, I would put a Case for Argument's sake, and would have it taken no otherwise; and I would go a little farther than that honourable Gentleman, and suppose that I knew, of my own private Knowledge, that Sir John Fenwick was guilty; yet, Sir, with humble Submission, as a Judge, I do not think it ought to weigh one Way or another with me; and will give you my Reason for it; for as a Judge, I am to go according to my judicial Knowledge, and not according to my private Knowledge. 'Tis a Maxim, Nil refert quid notat Juxta, si non nota forma judicii; and it puts me in mind of a Case in Hen. IV's Reign: Two Men travelled together, and one killed the other, and the Judge saw it: Afterwards that Judge went the same Circuit, and an innocent Man came to be tried before him for it; and yet the Judge, in that Case, was obliged to go according to his judicial Knowledge; all the Judge could do (the Man being found guilty) in that Case, says the Book, was, to respite the Judgment and Execution, and to make Application to the King for the poor Man's Pardon.

The Evidence that is produced, is first a living

Witness; the next Evidence, was the Confession of Goodman, taken before a Justice of Peace; for that, truly I did not think Yesterday, it was a legal Evidence: I am sure in a Court of Law, it would not be admitted; but the House was pleased to read it, and Gentlemen, when they pressed it, told us, Read it, valeat quantum valere potest. Then if you strike this Paper out of the Case, with humble Submission, there is nothing left but the Testimony of Captain Porter; and so then in that Case, you have but one Witness. It would seem a little strange, that the Commons of England, that lately were so very careful of the Lives of the Subject, and were so desirous of passing a Bill, that did provide, That where there were two Species of Treason in one Indictment, and one Witness to one Species, and another Witness to another Species, that That should not be good Evidence to convict a Person of High-Treason; that they should be attainting a Man for Treason upon one single Evidence! Surely they will say, we have mightily changed our Opinions since last Sessions. I speak not this upon the Account of Sir John Fenwick; I know him not, though I am not a Stranger to his Character, and I hear that is none of the best: I speak it as it may be my Case, or any Man's whatsoever. God knows, we live in an unsettled Time, and how soon a Precedent of this Nature may turn upon any Man whatsoever.

Amongst the great Irregularities committed in the late Reign, I thought that of Mr. Algernon Sidney, one of the greatest Strains I saw in Westminster-Hall; for there was my Lord Howard a Witness against him, and the next Evidence was a Book that he had wrote against Sir Robert Filmore, which, I think, is printed since this Revolution, and I have it in my Study; and I hope, I shall not be hanged for it. That was construed to be calculated for a Treason that hath not been committed above two Months, and was the second Witness to convict him; but that Attainder was reversed, and it was fit it should be so; for I thought it a hard Strain to convict him upon that Evidence.

I am very sorry this Bill is brought into this House; nor can I imagine, after all that hath been said by the learned Gentleman, why this Man was not tried when there were two positive Witnesses against him. All the Reason this Gentleman has told you, is, That he promised to make an ingenuous Confession: But any Man might have easily seen through this Confession, That it was only an Artifice to abuse the King's best Friends; nay, the rather, when this Gentleman's Brother had served this very Government, but two or three Years ago, the same Trick. We know my Lord Preston was attainted of High-Treason, and then he must do something for his Pardon; and he made an ingenuous Confession, as he called it, whereby he accused most of the Great Men; and when he had a Pardon, though his Confession was under his own Hand, and delivered to the King, he denied every Word of it; and what he told, was to save his own Life. My Neighbour cited you several Precedents; I have looked into a great many of them, they are mentioned in Rushworth's Collections, in the great Argument that Mr. St. John made for passing the Bill against my Lord Straford; and as to those Precedents, all I can say, is, I could not have come up to them, if I had lived in those Times. The last Precedent was of a Cook that put Poison into the Pot of the Bishop of Rochester: And what did they do? They did enact, that he should be boiled alive. I have a great Honour for the present Bishop; but if it had happened in his Family, I should hardly have consented to the like. Judicandum est legibus non Exemplis. I should be glad this Gentleman might suffer his due Punishment; but I am not, by any means, satisfied in the passing of this Bill: And as to what Gentlemen say is the Reason why this Man was not tried, because it was thought he would have made an ingenuous Confession; Sir, if they have made any Mistake, I will not help it by the passing this Bill of Attainder. I ask your Pardon for troubling you so long: I am a Judge in this Matter, and ought to deliver my Opinion. I hope no Man doubts but I am as zealous for this Government as any Man whatsoever; but let what will come of it, I can't give my Vote for passing of this Bill.

Mr. Sol Gen. This is a Bill for Attainting Sir John Fenwick of High-Treason: 'Tis the greatest Crime we know in the Law; and, I think, the greatest Crime known in a Government. It is much greater than Murder, or any thing else; because it subverts the Government, and the Law whereby these Crimes are punished; and Persons should be deterred from committing these Crimes.

It hath been made a Question by the Gentlemen at the Bar (I think Two of them) Whether this Matter that Sir John Fenwick is indicted and accused of, is High-Treason or not? I must confess I heard something of it without Doors; and that they would make it out, That if he was guilty of the Matter charged, it was not High-Treason. I thought it somewhat a bold Matter, but did not think they would have undertaken it in this Place, though they might have pretended some Flaw in the Indictment: But it seems they have the Authority of a good Lawyer in it; and they have quoted one learned Author, as they please to call him, though I take that for a great Compliment: I believe they may mean my self; and they have done me some Honour; for they say, my Lord Chief-Justice Hales was of the same Opinion; and then said something of Dyer. Now he hath read something at large out of that Author he speaks of, and challenges any one to shew any Opinion, That ever a Conspiracy to levy War was High-Treason within the Statute of 25 Edw. III. Now, I would give a Challenge on the other Side, That he would shew me any Opinion before that Time, or since, That a Design to depose the King is not High-Treason within that Statute. The Author that he speaks of, says that expressly in the Matter of my Lord Russell, and tells you particularly; and in The Government vindicated, which was only an Answer as to the Prosecution of my Lord Russell, there are several Cases cited, That a Design to depose the King was High-Treason, and agreed to by that very Person; and it always was agreed to be High-Treason. Then take the State of this Case, and that of my Lord Russell: The great Matter was, That he sent some Persons to view the Guards (it was said, in order to seize the King); this was Evidence against my Lord Russell, for a Conspiracy to levy War: But it was said, That this was not so much a Conspiracy to levy War against the King, as against the Guards. But this is of a quite different Nature: Captain Porter hath given you an Account of it, (and I think Goodman's Examination is to the same Purpose); That they met in Leadenball-street, and consulted how to bring King James back again; and the only Method they could think of, was to send Charnock over to King James, that he might prevail with the French King to send them 10000 Men, and they would meet him here with 2000 Horse: And for what Purpose was this? It was to bring back King James again. I would be glad to hear if those Gentlemen that were at the Bar, or any Body else, could say this was any thing else but a Design to depose King William: And they can't shew me one Lawyer's Opinion, but that designing to depose the King, was ever called imagining the Death of the King, within the Statute of 25 Edw. III. The first Resolution of this Matter was pretty early; I think it was Hen. IVth's Time, and that was pretending Richard II. was alive, and that he was the lawful King: So that the Matter is Treason, as it is charged in the Indictment.

Then, as to the Precedent, That 'tis an ill Precedent; I must confess I am not afraid of a Precedent of this Kind: I should be glad if these Gentlemen should turn back, and see how many Attainders have been by Act of Parliament. But I dare say, there have been more Men destroy'd by the irregular Judgment of a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, than by all the Acts of Parliament, whether legal or illegal.

As to what they say of my Lord Coke, who mentions the Attainder of my Lord Cromwell and Sir J. Mortimer; the Gentleman pretends to repeat my Lord Coke's Words at large; but he did not deal so well as he ought to do by you; for he should have told you all my Lord Coke tells you; That Cromwell was never brought to answer, never permitted to say any thing for himself; neither in Parliament, nor where he was. Now, pray Sir, is this the present Case? Hath not Sir John Fenwick been heard by you? I would be glad that Gentleman, or any Body could shew me, that any Person hath so fair an Hearing before Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, as Sir John Fenwick hath had before you. As to Sir John Mortimer, 'tis much of the same Nature: My Lord Coke says, there was a Jealousy of Sir John Mortimer's pretending to the Crown; and because they suspected him, they did give out, that he said, That the Earl of March was Heir to the Crown; and if he did not, he would pretend to it himself, &c. Now, says my Lord Coke, this was but a bare Pretence, and nothing else: He speaks as if he did not ever think him guilty of those Words, and says, having indicted him, they not being able to proceed that Way, they made it good by Act of Parliament, and he was condemned: So that what my Lord Coke complains of, is, That these Persons so condemned were never heard; and if this be the Truth of the Matter, these Precedents (with Submission) have no Affinity with yours. But I believe this may be said in this Case, Sir John Fenwick hath been heard, and that more than ever any one in Parliament was before, in a capital Matter.

As to the Case of my Lord Stafford, he had Counsel assigned him to stand by and hear, but not to prompt him. If there arose any Point of Law, he was to propose the Matter to the Lords, and the Counsel was to assist him by their Direction. And in the Case here before you, you have allowed Sir John Fenwick Counsel, not only to assist him in Point of Law, but to assist him in Point of Fact too. They have made Answer for him; so that I say, he hath been tried fairer than any Man ever was in Parliament, be it upon Bill or upon Impeachment, that is, as to the Matter of Precedent. Then it hath been said, This would not be good before the Judges. I must confess it; but the Evidence Captain Porter gave of his own Knowledge of Sir John Fenwick, every body will agree is what the Law will allow. But he is but a single Witness, and you ought not to proceed upon the Evidence of a single Witness. Let us see how the Law stands upon the whole Matter: You have made an Act of Parliament last Sessions, and I own the Law was before that, That there should be two Witnesses in Case of Treason; but all that goes no farther than to Trials in the King's Bench, and Commissions of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-Delivery. And if you look upon those Acts, 'tis very plain; for they refer mostly unto the Judges, what they shall do in such and such Cases: But then you will see what is the Reason of making those Rules; I think there was good Reason that you should not put that Power in Persons below, that you have in your selves: You give them Rules to proceed by, and they are to keep up strictly to them; you may act by other Rules. 'Tis one Thing when I command my Servant to do such a thing, and another thing when I act my self. And there is a Difference when a Judicature is by few, and when 'tis by many; the Law puts a greater Confidence in many than in a few. The ordinary Trial is by twelve Jurors; but if it be a Matter of an high Nature, as an Attaint, then it shall be by Twenty-four; and you do prefer a greater Number in every thing to a few. 'Tis said, Though a Judge do think in his Conscience a Person guilty, yet he ought not to make use of that private Knowledge; and a Case was quoted out of Hen. IV. but I think that Judge might have behaved himself something better than he did; and sure I am, now he would be blamed. I do not say, that a Judge upon his private Knowledge ought to judge; he ought not; but if a Judge upon the Bench knows any thing, whereby the Prisoner might be acquitted or convicted (not generally known) then I do say, he ought to be called from the Place where he sate, and go to the Bar and give Evidence of his Knowledge; and so the Judge in Hen. IV.'s Time ought to have done, and not to have suffered the Prisoner to have been convicted, and then get a Pardon for him; for a Pardon will not always do the Business; for there may be a Forfeiture that the King's Pardon doth not restore. But though we act as Judges here, do we act only as Judges? I thought we were as well Triers of the Fact as Judges. There is this Difference between the Judicature of Westminster-Hall and this Court; they are to judge upon a Fact found by a Jury; but we act both the Part of a Jury in trying, and also of Judges in judging what the Fact amounts to: So that if a Jury-Man may make use of his private Knowledge to acquit a Prisoner, as (I think) no body doubts but 'tis his Duty to do; then every Gentleman in this House may make use of his private Knowledge to acquit the Prisoner, or convict him.

I confess, for my part, I am satisfied, that Sir John Fenwick is guilty of this Crime for which he stands accused. I do think this Crime is High-Treason; I think there is no danger of a Precedent in this Case, if you convict him, being convinced upon the Evidence you have heard, that he is guilty: I do own, if any Gentleman think he is not guilty of Meeting at the King's Head in Leadenball-street, or at Mrs. Mounjoy's, for the Purpose given in Evidence, he ought to be against the Bill; but I think, every Man that is of that Opinion ought to be for the Bill. I am one of those that think he is guilty, and therefore am for Committing the Bill.

Mr. Harcourt. I can readily agree with the Gentleman that spoke last, that High-Treason is the highest Crime in the Law; and further, That the Matter of the Indictment that is mentioned in the Recital of the Act is undoubtedly High-Treason; and I am sure he will agree with me in one Thing also, That the greater the Crime is that any Person is accused of, the clearer the Proof ought to be by which he is convicted.

Some Gentlemen have begun their Discourse in relation to the Power; but sure 'tis no Argument, because I can do a Thing, therefore I will do it; because we have Power to repeal Magna Charta, and all other subsequent Laws, which have been made in favour of Life and Liberty, and Property, by the same Consequence we ought to do it: A better Reason must be given me before I consent to this Bill.

Then for the Precedents, 'tis said, There have been many, and many have been mentioned; and if I thought it worth while, I would mention many more you have not heard of. As for Precedents in general, they are so far imitable as they are grounded upon true Reason, and agreeable to Justice; but I don't remember any one Precedent of this Nature, for a Person in Custody, forth coming, to be tried, yet to be Attainted without a Trial at Law, but what has been universally branded; and they all seem to be Reproaches even to those ill Reigns in which they were usually made; and rather to be marked out as Rocks for us to avoid, than Patterns for our Imitation.

Before I particularly mention the Facts how they stand before you, I would beg leave to observe upon the general Method of your Proceedings, and tell you what staggers me in it.

I have often heard this called a Trial, and that we are the Judges; the Gentleman that spoke last gave us another Title, and told us we were the Jury also. I know no Trial for Treason but what is confirmed by Magna Charta, per Judicium Parium, by a Jury, which is every Englisbman's Birth-right, and is always esteemed one of our darling Privileges; or per Legem Terræ, which includes Impeachments in Parliament; but if it be a Trial, 'tis a pretty strange one, where the Person that stands upon his Trial hath a Chance to be hanged, but none to be saved. I can't tell under what Character to consider our selves, whether we are Judges or Jury-Men: I never heard of a Judge, I am sure not of a Jury-Man, before, but he was always upon his Oath: I never heard yet of a Judge, but had Power to examine Witnesses upon Oath, to come to a clear Sight and Knowledge of the Fact: I never heard of a Judge, but if a Prisoner came before him, the Prisoner was always told, he stood upon his Deliverance, and had not only a Power to condemn the Guilty, but to save the Innocent. Have we this Power? Suppose upon such a Trial as this (if it must be called so) it may so happen, that a Person that comes before us, should be the innocentest Man in the World; what Judgment is it that we can give, for for so much as such a Person hath made his Innocency fully appear? Is the Speaker, by his Warrant, to send him back again to Newgate? You can't dispose of him otherwise, though you were satisfied of his Innocency: But in such a Case, the Party must undergo a double Trial, which is contrary to all the Rules I have heard of. If I am a Judge in the Case, I beg leave to tell you, for my own Justification only, what a Definition I have met with of a Judge's Discretion: My Lord Chief-Justice Coke says, 'tis discernere per Legem; and by that Discretion I beg leave to consider this Case: If Judges make the Law their Rule, they can never err; but if the uncertain arbitrary Dictates of their own Fancies, which my Lord Coke calls the crooked Cord of Discretion, be the Rules they go by, endless Errors must be the Effect of such Judgments.

As to this particular Case, I did expect from the Gentleman that spoke last, that he would have told you there was a plain Evidence, why you should go on to the Passing of this Bill; but instead of that, I am surprized to hear a Thing mentioned, That in Parliamentary Proceedings a Man may be hanged by one Witness; certainly that is not to be taken for granted.

As to this particular Case, I would take Captain Porter as upon his Oath, for Supposition: You have one Witness against Sir John Fenwick of High-Treason; and, with your leave, I desire to examine what you have more in this Case.

Yesterday you voted a Paper to be read, Goodman's Narrative or Examination; 'tis a different Case now you have it before you to determine upon. Yesterday the Question was only for hearing; but Gentlemen now consider how far they ought to believe it, and the other Evidence we heard. And first, there is some Evidence that Clancy tampered with Porter, and gave him a Sum of 300*l.* and so they would infer, because Porter was tampered with to be gone, therefore Goodman was. It was told us further (and I desire I may be informed if I am mistaken) That Clancy said, he came from Sir John Fenwick, and afterwards my Lady Mary Fenwick said she would make good what Clancy had said; and from these Arguments they presume, that Sir John Fenwick knew of it. Give me leave to tell you a Rule I never heard contradicted, That Presumption is to be made in favour of Life; but to presume a Man guilty because Porter was tampered with by another, because he said it was by Sir John Fenwick's Order; shall we presume Sir John Fenwick did it? Is Hearsay to be Evidence? Or is a Man to be had to the Gallows upon Presumption? How often, and with how much Reason have we heard Exclamations against Judgments upon Presumptions, Innuendoes, constructive and accumulative Treason? &c.

Gentlemen, there is some further Evidence; and that is, of what was sworn at Cook's Trial, and some Gentlemen thought fit to have the Record read, and an Examination of what was sworn there. I can never go so far as to think it reasonable, That what Evidence hath been given in one Case should affect another Man; but all this is to be answer'd, by calling it Parliamentary Proceedings. We doubt 'tis no Evidence in the Courts below, but they are mentioned with some kind of Disdain, as very inconsiderable. In this Case, I beg leave to say this in their Vindication, That whatever the Rules in Westminster Hall are, 'tis not therefore Reason because 'tis a Rule; but because 'tis Reason, and Reason approved of by long Experience, therefore 'tis a Rule; and if they make their Rules for that Cause, I hope that is a Cause why we should imitate them: But I would not have those Rules thought Matters of Form, but Substance, or more properly Part of the Law it self.

Upon the whole Matter; if no Gentleman will give us a Reason why this is Evidence, but one Witness, and that not upon Oath; and if we are to come to our Parliamentary Discretion to supply that Defect, the Want of the other, 'tis a Discretion I will disclaim all the Days of my Life. And I hope you will reject the Bill.

Lord Cutts. If, Sir, the Gentleman that spake last had been speaking to Westminster-Hall, I should think that he had shewed a great deal of Reason, and spoke with a great deal of Judgment; but since I think you are here upon a quite different Foot; I shall not follow him (because I will not unnecessarily detain you) to answer every Particular.

I remember, when the Counsel for the Prisoner first spake, they took notice to you, That Precedents were procreative, and one begat another, and they are apt to multiply; therefore I do think, 'tis of the highest Moment to you, what Precedent you make to Night: And if any Gentleman can be satisfied, That the Precedent of passing this Bill, will be of worse Consequence than the Precedent of not passing it, I shall humbly submit. I do think, Sir, the Matter before you is of the highest Importance; and I must confess, 'tis with a great deal of Satisfaction to my self, that I do see Gentlemen seem to apply themselves with a great deal of Seriousness to this Debate. Sir, I shall not pretend to make a particular Answer to what the Counsel for the Prisoner did say; as to the Precedents of Acts of Parliament, I think this Answer is sufficient at present for that, That if we have no Precedent we are under a Necessity of making one. It is told us, That of all the Precedents none will justify us in this Proceeding; but at the same Time it must be considered, That we are in a Case, the like to which never yet happened in England.

The first Thing I shall apply my self to, is the Jurisdiction of Parliaments; and truly, I think, it will be very necessary to say a little upon that. I have heard none call this Power in question, the Thing speaks it self; 'tis the Legislative Power, and the Etymology of the Word tells you what it is: 'Tis a Power that can make Laws, and abolish them; a Power that is superiour to all other Powers whatsoever, and we are part of that Legislative Power; and therefore I shall say no more to that, it being a Matter agreed, That we have a Power to proceed in this Matter. Now I will take leave to observe something as to the particular Case before you.

Though a Gentleman that spoke some Time since, did speak to you of the Nature of the Crime; yet, with Submission, I think there remains something to be added to what he said. The Conspiracy of which Sir John Fenwick to me appears guilty, is not only against the Life of the King, not only to depose the King, not only a Conspiracy to raise a Rebellion, but at the same Time to contrive an Invasion from France, and bring in a foreign Power. I know not what better Expression to tell my Thoughts in, than by using a Term which Physicians use in some desperate rate Cases; they tell you, there is a Complication of Distempers; and I think this is a Complication of Treasons: This is the highest Crime, and it is attended with all the aggravating Circumstances this Crime can admit of. Now, in giving our Opinion, and passing our Judgment upon this Matter, I think there are two Considerations ought to guide us: There is a Consideration we owe to the Prisoner that is brought before us; and another Consideration which we owe to the common Security. As to the First of these, it being a Matter of Blood, wherein the Life of an Englishman, the Life of a Man of his Quality and Figure is at stake, we ought to proceed with all the Calmness that is possible; and I do agree, if there was nothing but Presumption, that ought to be in favour of Life. But pray let us consider how this Matter stands: Let me desire those Gentlemen that are of Opinion we ought to have so much Tenderness for the Prisoner, to lay before them another Scene, and Sort of Consideration, at the same Time. I do consider the Hardship (if I may use that Expression) of passing this Sentence; I do consider what a Condition we had been in, if the Contrivance that was laid had taken Effect; that is the weightiest Part of the Matter before you: And tho' it was disappointed then, I know not how far off 'tis at present; this ought really to weigh with you. And I hope I may take leave, upon this Occasion, to observe to you, what one of the wisest and best of the Romans said upon an Occasion of this Nature; he tells you, That a Man that would consider his Duty aright, must consider the Matter in all its Parts and Circumstances; and when that is done, must act adequate, as well to the Community, as to himself and his Neighbour. I would apply that to the present Case; and would desire those Gentlemen that express so much Tenderness in this Case, to have some for the Government, and themselves.

It was told you, That the Prisoner before you does not stand convicted of any Crime: It was told you at the Bar, That the most we ought to pretend to, is no further than to leave him in the Condition we found him: I think, with Submission, the Prisoner stands convicted of High-Treason, with the highest Conviction upon Earth, and that is, the general Consent of all Mankind; for I will be bold to say, I do verily believe, that there is not one Gentleman within these Walls, nor that walks the Streets, not a living Soul, that doubts of his Crime. But, Sir, I would put this Matter yet further; I am not only satisfied in my own Conscience and Reason, of the Justice of your Proceedings, which ought indeed to be the Foundation of every Man's Opinion; but I am satisfied, that in this Way, there is no Hardship imposed upon Sir John Fenwick, if he will be his own Friend: For I doubt not, upon what hath passed in this Proceeding, that before Things are brought to the last Extremity, if Sir John Fenwick be his own Friend, if he be so much a Penitent and Friend to the Government, and to Posterity, to tell Truth, and leave off his Dissembling, and be plain; I doubt not but he will find Favour. Now, Sir, I would beg leave only to answer one or two Objections; for some Things that have been said against the Passing of this Bill, I do not think material.

One Objection that seems to me to carry the greatest Appearance of Weight, was made by one of the Counsel for the Prisoner: He said, It would look strange in after Ages, that the same Parliament should pass the Bill for regulating of Trials in Treason, and this Bill of Attainder. Sir, I desire you will please to observe how this Matter stands; and in the first Place, as previous to that, I take leave to observe a few Things: 'Tis a Proposition generally agreed to, and not to be denied, that That which is designed for the Preservation of any Creature, ought not to be made use of to their Destruction. Now this Treason-Bill was designed for your Preservation, to screen you against the Danger of arbitrary Power, and the Malice of false Witnesses; and this Bill of Attainder is brought to screen both you and the Government from your Enemies, both abroad and at home. And I think the Treason-Bill is no Objection upon these Considerations: Besides, the Treason-Bill was only made to be a Rule to inferior Courts. The learned Gentleman that spake last, told you, The Rules of Westminster-Hall were not Rules, because they were observed there, but because they were grounded upon Reason. Why, Sir, in answer to that, I will only take leave to tell him, that That which is Reason in Westminster-Hall, does not carry the same Weight here. I think that Matter was so well explained by the learned Gentleman at the Bar, that there need nothing be added to it. He told you very well, 'Tis one Thing what I trust to do by my Servant, and another Thing what I do by my self. It is very obvious to any Man's Understanding, if this Power were lodged in the Judges, what Use they might make of this unlimited Power; but no Gentleman can mistrust any Thing that shall be done by this House.

Another Objection that was made by the Counsel for the Prisoner, was; says he, This is Evidence, or it is no Evidence; if it be Evidence, then, says he, Why do you not try him at Law? If it be no Evidence, Why do you admit it here? Now, Sir, with Submission, this carries the Face and Form of an Argument, but if you take it to pieces, I think there is no convincing Weight in it: For, Sir, the Reason why this Matter comes before you, is, because by the Absence of one of the Witnesses, according to the formal Part of the Law, Sir John Fenwick will be acquitted; but it is generally agreed, that the Consequence of so great a Crime going unpunished, may be dangerous to your Posterity. This Bill of Attainder is brought into the House, that you may supply that Want of Form, you being convinced of the Reality of his Crime.

Another Objection made by the Counsel at the Bar, was as to Capt. Porter, whom he reflected upon; says he, Shall a Man that hath owned himself guilty of such a Villany as the Murder of the King, of a sudden have such Credit as to sway with you? I would take leave upon this Occasion, to repeat to you what my Lord Chief-Justice upon the Bench did observe at Charnock's Trial: This same Thing was urged and pressed home by Charnock; and my Lord Chief-Justice was pleased to take notice, That it consisted with the Wisdom and Justice of all States and Governments to allow of such Evidence, because without it they could never come to the Knowledge of any Treason or Conspiracy: For he added, Whom will you have an Account of these Things from, but the Actors of them?

And therefore when they are penitent, and willing to atone for their Crime, by doing all the

the Service they can to the State, and Justice to Mankind, we ought not only to receive, but encourage them.

When the Danger the Government would be in, if you did not pass this Bill, was urged; it was answered, But what Danger will you and your Posterity run in not passing of it? I think the Matter appears so plain and clear before you, that when all the other Parts of the Question are passed over, I should think it a Reflection upon the House, to enter upon a particular Answer to it. I had not said what I have said, that I think any Part decisive, but to clear my self to the World for the Opinion I am going to give; and perhaps what I have said, may give occasion to some others to say something that may be much more to the purpose; but for the Reasons I have given, I am for the Bill.

Mr. Sloane. Sir, I as little care for meddling in Matters of Blood, as any Man, and should be glad to avoid giving my Opinion in this Case; but I think 'tis incumbent upon every Gentleman that hath the Honour to sit here, in Point of Trust; I think 'tis his Duty to them whom he represents, to the King and Kingdom in general, to give his Opinion when he is clear and satisfied in it; and if I was in the least dissatisfied, I should venture the Displeasure of the House to absent; but upon the whole Case, and the Proof that hath been given, I am very clear that Sir John Fenwick is guilty of this Treason that he is accused of; and that it is Treason without any strain, and well warranted by Precedents.

I would first take notice of what is said to your Jurisdiction in general; I remember it was said this was an Incroachment upon Magna Charta; for by that, no Person is to be tried for his Life, but by the Judgment of his Peers. Those Gentlemen that have made that Objection, have intirely forgot the other part, which is the next Sentence; Nec super ibimus, nec super eum mittimus, nisi per regulare Judicium parium suorum vel per Legem Terræ. What do they make that to be? 'Tis true, in the ordinary Course of Justice, Persons must be tried, a Commoner by a Commoner, and a Peer by a Peer; but there are several sorts of Trials and Laws in the Land: And when you come to consider what is meant by per Legem Terræ, you have the Commons Lex Terræ; you have the Statute Law, and Lex Loci, the Laws of particular Manors: And there are several sorts of Trials besides that by Jury; there are Trials by Battle: The Defendant in Case of Appeal may try it by Battle, and he that is killed loses the Cause. Then there is a Law above all these Laws, and that is the Law of Parliament, which my Lord Coke calls Lex Parliamenti, and Lex Parliamentaria in another Place, which he says is, ab omnibus inquirenda, but a paucis nota; and 'tis not fit it should be known how far they can go (and so 'tis in Chancery) and that is a Law that is unlimited, and that is one of the Laws saved by Magna Charta. I say, therefore, that without any Incroachment upon Magna Charta, or any Law whatsoever, you enter regularly upon his Trial.

I would answer another Thing that was said against a Trial in Parliament; and I must confess, I did wonder to hear it from that Honourable ancient Member, That if he was to be tried, he should rather chuse to be tried in Westminster-Hall. Why, Sir, before I should have given so sudden a Judgment as that, I would have considered what my Case was: If I had had such a Case as Count Conningmark, a bad Cause and a great deal of Money, I would rather be tried there; or if I could be tried as Sir George Wakeman was; but if I had a good Cause, and would use no Corruption, instead of twelve Men that might be corrupted, I had rather be tried by four or five hundred Gentlemen that are beyond it. You see how Trials went below, the Trial of my Lady Lisle, that could neither see nor hear; and there came a Person to her House that was proved to be in Monmouth's Rebellion, and she was burned for it.

Then as to the Case before you, I would offer my Reasons why I believe this Gentleman to be guilty; here is Capt. Porter, he hath positively sworn, that he had another Meeting at Mrs. Mountjoy's, and there they did consult, and agree to send Charnock over to France; and Charnock was directed to go with a Message to invite a foreign Power over here. Now the Question is, Whether he is to be believed? And I would go upon the same Reasons for believing a Witness, as they do in Westminster-Hall; and will go as far along with those Gentlemen, as to the Credibility of a Witness: But if he be to be credited in Westminster-Hall, why is he not so here? And therefore, if they had brought any Testimony against his Credit, as made him guilty of Perjury, or Forgery, it had been an Objection against his Testimony; but it was so far from that, That they did not offer to prove one Word of that; but what was said was said from the Counsel, and that is to go for no Evidence. The Counsel did indeed alledge against his Credit several Things, but did not prove any; and if they had, they would not have taken away his Testimony in Westminster-Hall; That is, that he was concerned in the late intended Assassination, and Treason: This was the same Objection that was made below; and they brought Witnesses to prove that and some other Things, but they did not weigh any Thing; for if it should be an Objection that he was in the Conspiracy, then you can have no Evidence of any Villany, for they will never trust honest Men with it. Therefore I do take it, That Porter stands before you as a very credible good Witness, without any Imputation whatsoever. Then, Sir, say they, he is not upon his Oath; that is an Objection to your Jurisdiction; and though they say they own your Jurisdiction, yet when they say so, they speak against your Jurisdiction; and by the same Reason you can go upon no Impeachment whatsoever; for you can in no Case give an Oath. Then, Sir, they tell you, he is but one Witness, and that 'tis in the Case of Treason, and there ought to be two Witnesses; and therefore tho' you have Jurisdiction to do any Thing whatsoever, yet you have no Jurisdiction to go upon this Cause. Now, Sir, because this seems to be the most formidable Objection that is insisted on against the Proceedings in this Case, I beg your leave that I may fully answer it.

And taking it to be true, that the Fact is proved but by one Witness, I conceive we may proceed in this Cause though they can't in Westminster-Hall; and I do take it, that there is a great deal of difference between one and the other; and I do not take your Proceedings upon this Bill, being there is but one Witness, to be any Strain,

but what you may extend the Legislative to, without going beyond what hath been done. I therefore beg you to consider what the Law originally was as to Treason, and how it came to be altered. Before the Statute of 25 Ed. III. it was certain what was Treason, and what was not; then the Statute came and reduced it, that as to all inferior Courts, these are your Treasons, and no other shall be adjudged so; but the Parliament reserved to themselves a Power, that if any Case should happen like them, they were to determine it themselves. So, Sir, that at that Time, and after that Time, one Witness was good in Case of Treason; as now 'tis at this Day for Robbery, Felony, or any other Fact but Treason. And till 1 Edw. VI. one Witness was good in all Treasons: Then comes two Statutes in Ed. VI's Time, and the first takes notice, That since the 25 Ed. III. by several Statutes Treasons had been made which were unreasonable, and therefore repeals them, and makes several new Treasons: Then comes a Proviso at the end of it; Provided always, that no Person whatsoever, after the First of February then next coming, shall be indicted, arraigned, condemned or convicted for any Offence of Treason, &c. unless the Offender be accused by two sufficient and lawful Witnesses, or shall willingly, without Violence, confess the same. Now that Proviso relates only to the Treasons particularly mentioned in that Statute. Then comes the next Statute 5 Ed. VI. and pursues the same Words: But now this did not mean any Facts whatsoever that were left to the Judgment of the Parliament, because these Facts were not within their Cognizance. They are not parliamentary Words; indicted, arraigned, convicted, but only used by the Courts below. Why, Sir, if it be so that one Witness is sufficient, here you have not only one credible Witness, but he is propt up extremely well by collateral Circumstances; and though I do not allow that below they can proceed upon one Witness with pregnant Circumstances; yet for the Reasons given, considering how this Evidence is propt up, I think it is sufficient before you: For there was another Witness against him, and it hath been proved what that Witness could have said if he was here; and 'tis plain that Men have died upon the same Testimony. I must confess, when I was for reading of Goodman's Examination, &c. I was not for reading them as conclusive Evidence, nor do I think them so in any sort, either the Conviction of Cook, or Goodman's Examination before a Justice of Peace; but it is a stronger Evidence in this Case than any other, because the Witness is not dead, nor is he withdrawn by the means of any Body but the Prisoner, or his Friends; which, as I take it, appears upon the Evidence: and if so, I think it comes to the Case, That if any one gets my Deeds, if he will not produce them, they shall be presumed to be what I say they are. I must confess, the Acting of his Wife or any Agent might not be Evidence, if it appeared they did it officiously without his Knowledge; but being Clancy said he came from Sir John Fenwick, and it was for Sir John Fenwick's Advantage, I will believe it was by his Privy: And for my self, I think it no Strain, if in this Case we take him to be a good Second to Captain Porter, though it ought not to be admitted in Westminster-Hall.

Then 'tis said, That you have no Jurisdiction to proceed by Attainder in this Case, where the Person does appear, and he is in the Hands of the Law, and ready to take his Trial: I quoted you an Instance the other Day, 12 Car. II. where they attainted Persons that were dead, without examining one Witness; and I have viewed all the Books since, and there's nothing appears, but the Bill ordered to be brought in, one Reading, and another, and some Petitions for making of Savings: There is one Rank of People that were dead; a second Rank, which, as you were told from the Bar, were the King's Judges: some of which, it is true, were tried by the Law; but how? Not by the Direction of the Parliament: It was before they came into the Hands of the Parliament; and the Parliament takes notice they had been tried. There was another Sort that was never tried, but absented; and though they might have come into the Hands of the Law and been Out-law'd, the Parliament took cognizance of them, and attainted them of Treason. Sir, I do take notice, that there was a forth Sort of People convicted at that Time (for if we were confined to the Rules of Westminster-Hall, no doubt we could not give a lesser Judgment than that for Treason;) there were the Lord Mounson, Sir John D'anvers, and others; and the Statute recites, That they were concerned in the Murder of the King; yet in regard so many had actually suffered, they did not give them the Judgment of Treason, but to forfeit their Estates, &c.

This is to shew you the Jurisdiction the Parliament have over Offences, and how they can alleviate the Punishment according to the Circumstances as they appear before them; therefore I think this is a plain Proof that we have a Jurisdiction to go on with the Bill; and at the same Time, I say this, I would put it out of the Case, whether the Prisoner be a little Man or a great Man, that is now in Judgment before us; and I would put it out of the Case, what a good Thing his Discovery would be; I do not think that a good Argument; neither do I think it any Argument if this Man escape, what Danger we shall be in: But I do give my Judgment from the Argument of his Guilt, and our Jurisdiction.

Mr. Pelham Sir, the learned Gentleman that speak last, seemed so very clear in his Opinion, when he began to speak, that I was in hopes he would have given me and every Body Satisfaction in this great Point, especially when he began with Magna Charta, which says, That every Man shall be tried by his Peers, or by the Law of the Land: I do take it to be Part of the Law of the Land, that no Man should be condemned for Treason without two Witnesses; but after that he did lay his Finger upon the Sore, he told you, the great Objection was, That the Courts of Westminster-Hall are so govern'd and ty'd down, that they can't pass any Sentence for Treason, but upon two Witnesses; and he told you, they ought to be ty'd so: Indeed he did say we were not ty'd so: But I own to you, he did not give me any satisfactory Reason why he should not be ty'd so. 'Tis said, we are not ty'd, and 'tis impossible we should, for no Act can tie the Legislative Power; and several Gentlemen have said, That though there are several Statutes that declare there shall be two Witnesses in Cases of Treason, yet they do say, that in Case of Attainder by Parliament, one Witness may be sufficient. Why may it not be thought, that these Acts extend to the Legislative, as well as the Statute of Edw. III. by which it is presumed, That the Parliament may proceed upon one Witness? And I take it, That there being no such Hint, 'tis a Presumption that the Lex Terræ does crave an Observation of it by the legislative Power.

I did presume Yesterday to tell you, That Mr. Algernon Sidney did stand upon it as his natural Right, that they could not proceed against him, there being but one Witness: I did not bring his Case as parallel to this, or think that his Authority should influence you; but he was a Man that had that Love to Liberty, and the Good of his Country, that he would not have said so, even to save his Life, if he had thought it inconsistent with either of them: But I have looked upon his Trial since, and there he does declare, That the being condemned by two Witnesses, is the Law of God, and the Law of Man; the just Law that is observed by all Men, and in all Places; 'tis certain he reached even by these Words, the Power of Parliament: When I do say Power, I do not mean, but that when such a Law is passed, all are bound by it; but in some Sense we may say, you cannot do what is not just for you to do: You can do but what is just and agreeable to the Trust reposed in you.

The Gentleman says, he thinks it a strange Opinion of him that said, He had rather be try'd by a Jury than the House of Commons: Indeed, if he could be sure of such a House of Commons as this, he might retract what he had said: But I have seen that done in the House of Commons, which hath not made me extremely fond of that Trial. I have sat here when six or seven Noblemen have been declared Enemies to the Kingdom without any Evidence at all, and the Reason was somewhat like what it is now. The Power of Parliaments was brought in as an Argument then; and it was said, it was only in order to an Impeachment, but no Impeachment followed; yet these Noblemen went with that Brand in their Foreheads; and if any Disturbance had been, they had been exposed to the Fury of the People: And though we are sure of this House of Commons, and may be of all in this Reign, yet I know not how Facts may arise, and what Parliaments we may have, and upon that Account I am very unwilling a Precedent should be made, at least contrary to the Usage in all manner of Courts whatsoever.

Sir Thomas Littleton. Sir, I shall not trouble you long in this Debate, that hath taken up so much of your Time already, in the Consideration of some Matters we have been upon; though I did think your Time not very regularly spent, till this Occasion offered it self: I hope therefore, now it will take up less of your Time. I see the great Matter that was insisted on before, is insisted upon still; and I do think we may say it among our selves, though we would not let the Counsel, That we are ty'd up in this Case by the Rules of Westminster-Hall; but I believe if that was the Case, and the Question was no otherwise, than, Whether or no we are ty'd up by the Rules of Westminster-Hall? I believe it would receive a Determination, that we are not bound up to those Rules.

But I will take leave to tell you what I think is proper for us to ground our Judgment on: I think the great Reason, even of those who are against the Precedent, why they did admit Sir John Fenwick to have Counsel, and to examine Witnesses, if he had any, and to cross-examine the Witnesses, and why they were willing to hear Evidence on both Sides in the Nature of a Trial; the great Reason was, because that in a Case of so great Consequence as this is, they would have the best Information they could obtain. Why did they desire to be informed, but that afterwards they could lay their Hands upon their Hearts, and give their Judgment upon their private Opinion, Whether he was guilty or no? They say, we are not to give our Judgment upon our private Opinion; I always will. (It was not long ago we were not to have our Religion upon our private Opinion neither): And when I am justified in that, I will rely upon it. Whether this be strictly legal Evidence, I do not lay so much Weight upon it, as whether it hath satisfied my Conscience; and I believe there is not a Man in the House but is so (upon what he hath heard) and doth believe that Sir John Fenwick is guilty; and if we believe he is guilty, I would be glad to know by what Rules in the World any Man can give his Vote against this Bill, being of that Belief. And I tell you why I think every Man believes so; because every Man in the Kingdom that hath not heard so much as we have heard, does believe him to be so; and I can't think that their Representatives only should be of another Opinion.

What Evidence have you had? You have had Captain Porter's Evidence, and that would be good even in inferior Courts; and besides that, you have the Evidence of what Goodman did swear before the Grand-Jury; you have heard what he did swear, and the Grand-Jury did believe him; you have heard likewise what he did swear in another Cause to the Petit-Jury, and they believed him, and convicted the Prisoner upon it: And though this be not legal Proof, strictly speaking, will any Body say that I have Reason to disbelieve this Man, and think he hath sworn false?

Ay, but here is but one Witness, Gentlemen tell you. I will put you a Case where I believe this House would attain a Man without any Witnesses. Suppose two Persons had seen Sir John Fenwick kill the King; (I believe we should not have pulled him in Pieces in a barbarous Manner, but he would have had a Trial); and suppose before his Trial they had been conveyed away, if before they had sworn this to a Grand-Jury, and they had found the Bill, I believe this House would have attainted him for it.

Sir, I do not think that we should stand upon these little Niceties, nor be bound by the little formal Proceedings of other Courts, when the Government is at Stake. We are sent hither to take care that the publick Safety do not suffer any Mischief from the Enemies of it: We have had Plot upon Plot; and I have heard so much said on behalf of the Lancashire Plot without Doors, that I wish we do not get an ill Name upon our selves before we have done. We have this Power to exert upon extraordinary Occasions; and here is a Man that hath endeavoured to subvert the Government, and Well-being of them that sent you hither. I hope you will use it now; and if they knew who were not of that Opinion, I believe those that sent them would hardly send them any more.

Mr. How. Sir, as to the Argument, that if it was known how we gave our Opinion, those that are against this Bill, the People would not chuse them again: I am not afraid of that; I have been told so often, and yet I find the People I live live amongst, use me better and better every Day ; and I believe, Sir, they will desire to use me, when they will lay other Men aside. I must in some measure support what seemed to be reflected on an honourable Gentleman, in that he said, he had rather be tried by 12 than 400. I am of his Opinion, and this is my Reason for it ; I have my lawful Challenge in case of the 12 ; and if there be any on the Pannel I have offended, I can desire they may be withdrawn, and that can't be done in any Case here.

But Gentlemen put the Strefs of their Argument upon that which no Body denies, and prove it handsomely ; and well they may ; for it is self-evident, the Power of Parliament they insist on, when no Body pretends but we have a Power to do what we please : But I must say of their Power what Brañton says of the King's Power, Hoc tamen non potest facere, quod non potest jussu facere. It is said, We are not ty'd up to the Rules of Westminster-Hall ; we are not so ; but I beg leave to tell them, That what is Reason and Justice in Westminster-Hall, is so every where. And I do take these particular Points we speak of, to be grounded upon Reason and Justice, and so far we are to pursue them.

Two Evidences was not given as a Restraint upon Westminster-Hall, for fear they should do something that is ill, for they are answerable for every thing they do ill ; but they were allowed to the People of England, that they might have a fair Trial ; and it was thought conformable to the Laws of God, the Law of Reason, and the Law of all Countries, That no Man's Life shall be taken away upon any particular Occasion. And for to say, That a Man's Life may be taken away by two Witnesses in one Place, and by one in another, is to say, That there is no certain Rule to prove a Man guilty of a Crime that may forfeit his Life, which is not admitted in any Country whatever.

But truly, Sir, we are going a little further ; for the Gentleman before told you, there was no need of two Witnesses, one would serve ; but now they go a little further, for they tell you, there needs never a one at all : For I do say, if every Gentleman here is to be guided by his private Opinion, there is no Man but before he heard this Cause did conceive in their Opinion some Judgment of his Guilt. And, Sir, I think no Man but would have told you, that would have been an unjust Judgment.

But they do say, That the Bill of Treason that was made last Sessions of Parliament was to limit Westminster-Hall ; and that I will trust that with my self, which I will not trust with my Servant. Why truly, if I, or my Servant, was to commit an Error, or a great Crime, I had rather my Servant did it, than my self : But I do not think that my Servant should be bound up from doing an unjust Thing, and my self should have the Liberty to do it. Another Thing that Law provided against was, that People should not be hanged without sufficient Evidence, and these Things have been long complained of : But I never thought that the Evidence of one Witness, and no Witness would be supported in these Days.

But, Sir, what have you done ? We have prevented People being executed by an arbitrary Power, and in an unlawful Way in Westminster-Hall ; but if you give this Example, you have brought the same Proceedings into this House, and that they may be perpetually executed here, and so the Subject will be never the safer for the Bill of Treason.

And I do believe likewise, That it is better that a very heinous Fault, or a Mistake, should be committed in Westminster-Hall for ten Years together, than once perpetrated in this House : And my Reason is this, Because Westminster-Hall have a Law to be tried by, if they transgress that Law ; and there is a Way by turning out of Judges, and other Things ; and this House hath no superior Power ; and when they do a Thing, they make it a Law : So that this House (as it hath often been observed) can make this Nation unhappy, because this House can only establish arbitrary Power and Misery upon this Nation by a Law.

Sir, as to the Evidence, to say something to it, since every Body hath spoke to it ; for my Part, I do confess to you, the longer I sit here, and the more I have heard of this Trial, the less I have been convinced within my self, that these Witnesses can know any thing of Sir John Fenwick's Guilt. I have heard Captain Porter give his Evidence ; but that is no sufficient Proof to me : I have heard what Evidence Goodman did give to the Grand-Jury ; but whether they did ask such Questions as I should, if I had been of the Grand-Jury ; or whether they did confront him with Evidence, I can't tell. Therefore tho' the Grand-Jury was convinced by it, it is no Reason to convince us ; because we might not be convinced by the same Evidence.

But to go further : There is very great Reason to believe that Goodman was not then at this Place, and that not one Word that Goodman says is true. I have such Reason for what I say, that if Cook's Trial had been before this House, (not to arraign Westminster-Hall, though I think we are a superior Power, and I may say what I please of that Trial) ; I say, if Cook's Trial had been before this House, and what I have heard be true, I do think they would hardly have found Cook guilty upon Goodman's Evidence : For there were three as positive Evidence as could be, that he was not at the Place when he swore he was. And I observe a little Failure in Captain Porter's Evidence in that Point ; for I don't think it proved by Captain Porter, that Goodman was by when this Discourse was : For he says, he spoke of this Thing at Mrs. Mountjoy's, and dined there.

Members. No, no ; It was at the King's Head.

Mr. Howe. Well, there was but one Place where it was. Now whether Captain Porter heard them talk of it before Goodman came in, or whether Goodman be a good Witness, he having been there but the latter Part of the Time, which seemed to me to be the Time they should have given over their Talk of the Business, they having been so long together before : But it does not appear to me that Goodman can be a good Witness.

But I take it, That it is not just nor reasonable to find a Man guilty upon one Witness, and circumstantial Evidence. I did mention a Case where there was a positive Witness, and a circumstantial Witness, it was in my Lord Delamere's Trial ; and yet that was not thought a convincing Argument by the Lords to find him guilty ; and I hope no Consideration will oblige us to do that, which I am sure we should blame them for doing.

The Consequence of this, Gentlemen say they do not fear. I believe, if Sir John Fenwick had been been told, when he was Major-General of King James's Army, that I should come here to sit upon his Life, he would have laughed at it, and thought it impossible; but the contrary has happened: And I have seen Parties hang one another with such Violence, I pray God we may keep from it: I do not know; we are all concerned in some Measure, it having been the Unhappiness of this Nation, that at one Time or another every Body hath been concerned, that they may have a Proceeding of this Sort against them; and this surmounts all that at present Gentlemen can do; for it extends beyond all Pardons, and will reach beyond the Act of Indemnity. God knows who may be served so, notwithstanding all the Act of Indemnity.

Sir, there is one Thing that is said further, which the Gentlemen at the Bar conclude with as a substantial Argument, That we do not aim at Sir John Fenwick's Blood, (God forbid we should) but at his Confession: You will here read the Bill once, and twice, will commit and pass the Bill, (Sir John Fenwick not confessing) and still this is not to aim at his Blood: But it happens perhaps that this Man knows no more of this Matter; and this Man is racked in a manner to Death, from Reading to Reading, because he does not confess; and at last he comes to be hanged, drawn and quartered (instead of High-Treason) for not confessing it.

This I take to be the dangeroufist Part of all the Arguments that have been urged: For this I must tell you, That according to my private Opinion, I do believe that Sir John Fenwick does know of no more Persons concerned (nor do I believe that he knows all that he says) than he tells you. He hath not been a Man that hath kept Company with Great Men: He hath generally relieved the poor Jacobite Officers: There are Five People, as I take it, he hath told you he did converse with: I would fain know in what Plot any Man converses with above Five of the Plotters? There may be a Plot that may be most dangerous, and yet a Person that knows of this Plot, may not know above two or three others that are concerned in it.

But the great Argument is, Take care of your Government. In the first Place, they must suppose the Safety of the Government depends upon his Execution, or why do they use it as an Argument? But I wish they would shew me the Government would be one Penny the worse, if this Bill does not pass. Do you want Examples of Punishment to deter Men? No; you have had lawful Proof against four or five Persons, and they have been executed: Here are Examples made, that no Body for the future may presume to plot together, and not to be executed.

What is the Reason of this Bill then? Why, there is a Plot going on; Sir John Fenwick hath been imprisoned this six Months or more; and will you hang him because there is a Plot now going on? What Consequence is that? Do you think that he knows any thing of it, or that he can discover it? It hath been started since his Confinement, it may be, and he knows nothing of it: So that as to what is pressed of his Confession, I know no one Thing would be gained by it, that could be useful to the Government; for I believe all hath been discovered already that he knows, and that Plot hath been utterly disappointed, and they have been fain to make a new one. Will you proceed in a Bill of Attainder, unless the Matter be of the greatest Consequence? The Preamble of the Bill for Attainting the Duke of Monmouth, gave a substantial Reason for it: That he was in Arms, and could not be brought to Justice. That implied, That if he could have been brought to Justice, they would not have Attainted him.

VOL. V.

I think I need not give you more Arguments in this Matter; I wish I could hear those that have been given, well answered. I shall say no more; but I know this, that my private Opinion shall never guide me in this Case. 'Tis not the same Thing with the Case my worthy Countryman put: In the Case of Religion, my private Opinion does not affect other Persons; indeed it does the Papists, where they will murder others that are not of that Religion.

Mr. Norris. This is a very solemn Debate, and 'tis upon a very solemn Occasion. 'Tis a Case of Blood; 'tis a Case that in my Life-time, I thank God, I never had to do with yet; and in this Matter wherein I am now to be a Judge, I will use as much Caution as any Gentleman within these Walls.

I am so conscious to my own Inability in what I have to say, that I can't expect to convince any Body; but what I say, is to discharge my own Duty, and satisfy my Conscience in that.

I doubt not, but every Gentleman considers the Station that he is in, and the Trust reposed in him by those that sent him hither: We are intrusted with the Lives, Liberties, and Properties of every Man in England; and we are answerable for them to those that sent us hither, to our Posterity, and to our selves.

In this Matter, many Things of great Weight and Importance are before you; here is the Life of a Man, the Preservation of the King and Government, and the Power of Parliaments to be considered. Sir, as I shall be cautious of taking away the Life of a Man, so I shall be careful of the Preservation of the King and Government, and the Power of Parliaments; and though I do not think it requisite, nor never will give my Consent to support the Government, or Honour of this House, at the Expence of innocent Blood; yet I shall not be afraid of giving my Opinion in this Matter, to bring a Criminal to Punishment: Besides, the Treason he hath committed, he hath Crimes of a Nature almost equal to Treason; and for which, because he hath evaded the Cognizance of Westminster-Hall, he is now brought before you; and there are several Instances, where this House hath taken notice of Offences of a less Nature, and for a less Reason, than this is brought before you.

To quote Precedents, is a little dry Subject; but however, I will instance in one, that (I think) does assert the Power of Parliaments in this Case, which has not been mentioned yet; and that was (as I remember) in the 3 Rich. II. of an Agent that came from Genoua, who was, by a Misfortune, killed upon a Quarrel that happened in the Streets; he that killed him was brought to his Trial; it could not be brought within the Statute of 25 Ed. III. but he was brought to his Trial, and it was found only se defendendo; but he being a Publick Minister, it was thought fit that the Nation should take more Notice of it; and he was Attainted afterwards by Parliament, and there is a Record of it: They did not think fit to make a general Law, but they made an Example of the Man that committed this Fact.

A great many Gentlemen have supposed this, and supposed that, and what ought not to be supposed; but I will make an easy Supposition; I will suppose that we are the Commons of England in Parliament assembled; and if so, Sir, we have a discretionary Power to do whatsoever we see is for the Good of the Kingdom; and if we are to be circumscribed by the Rules of Westminster-Hall, and we are to do nothing but what they would do, to what Purpose do we sit here? If we are entrusted with this Power, and may exert it, I think here is a fit Occasion for you to exert this Authority.

Sir, give me leave to take notice, That the Strain of Argument that was used some Years ago, is very much altered by the same Gentlemen; (I will mention it) I think it was in 78, when the Bill of Exclusion was brought within these Walls; the Arguments ran then (for I have seen them in Print) those that were against that Bill; What will you do? say they; Will you do this Thing? Pass a Judgment against a Man without hearing of him? Hath he been brought to your Bar, to answer what you have to say against him? How do you understand that he is guilty of the Crimes you accuse him of? And they did not use those Arguments against them that were for disinheriting the Duke of York: But the Answer then was, Do you dispute the Power of Parliaments? Is there not a discretionary Power in the Parliament? I do take notice, That those Gentlemen that used that Argument for the Bill of Exclusion, now use it a quite contrary Way. Sir, I think the Power of Parliaments is not to be trifled with.

It hath been urged and said, a little while ago, by a Gentleman, That he does not believe Captain Porter is a good Witness. I will give you a good Reason why I do think he is a very good one, and they at the Bar think so too, because they would have given a great Reward to have taken him off; and for the same Reason, I believe Goodman to be a good Witness too: Sir John Fenwick was satisfied, that Goodman did know how far he was concerned, and he hath been prevailed with to be out of the Way.

Sir, here are a great many Circumstances that agree so well together, that (I think) no Person can doubt of Sir John Fenwick's Guilt; and (I think) 'tis in this Case in the Body politick, as in the Body natural, when a Man is almost past the Cure of Physicians, when a Man hath a Gangrene, a rotten Member, which the Physicians by the ordinary Means can't cure, the Remedy, the College of Physicians themselves in that Case would use, is, they would say, Immedicabile vulnus ense recidendum est.

I am of Opinion, that the Legislative hath this Power, and that this is a proper Occasion to exert it; and to compare small Things with great, 'tis like Thunder and Vengeance in the Hands of Providence, that is not used but upon extraordinary Occasions; and then it ought not to fail, for that makes a Man trifle with and despise that Power that is not effectually able to exert it self; and if the Sword of Justice be drawn, if they find it rusty, and will not cut, they will have a mean Opinion of your Power for the future.

Gentlemen are afraid of Precedents in this Case; for that Reason I am for committing this Bill, because I would make this a Precedent; and I will tell you why; Because it may happen in future Ages, that Ministers of State, and Persons concerned in the Government, may be faulty (I think I may suppose that) and as the Law stands now, he is but a bungling Politician that can't ruin the Government, and yet not come within the Bill of Treason to be hanged for it: And therefore for the keeping an Awe upon Ministers of State, and because I would have this House always have it in their Power to punish future Offenders, as they shall see Cause, as well as this unfortunate Gentleman at the Bar, I am for committing this Bill.

Mr. Finch. Sir, the Question now before you, arises upon a Case wherein you have a Man accused of High-Treason, and for that there is but one Witness, which by the Rules of Westminster-Hall, is confessed by every Gentleman, is not legal Evidence.

I remember the other Day, when this Evidence was offered, and an Objection made to it, the Answer was, That we ought to hear it (though in Westminster-Hall, they could not do it) because we sit here as Judges, and we can distinguish what is legal Evidence, and what is not legal Evidence, and can give its just Weight to every Part of it. I do observe now, in this Debate, some Part of the Evidence, which no Man can say could have been given according to the Rules of Law, is insisted upon, and Weight laid upon it.

And here they have taken into Consideration the Power of Parliaments; and the Method of Parliaments has been insisted upon. As to the Power of Parliament, Whether the Parliament can do it? And whether if the Parliament pleases to do it, they are tied up (as Gentlemen are pleased to express it) to the Rules of Westminster-Hall? That the Parliament can do it, 'tis a hard Matter to gainsay, That any thing is out of the reach of the supreme Power of a Nation; the Legislative Authority can do every thing: Yet, though Gentlemen have said this, and others have observed, That there wanted no Authority to prove this, being self-evident; yet give me leave to instance in some Particulars in this Case, with the Authority of the Judges upon it, where the Parliament have proceeded according to the Rules of Westminster-Hall.

We read in Hen. VIIIth's Time, that the Lord Cromwell, Earl of Essex, was Attainted in Parliament; and History tells us, That he was Attainted by a Law of his own making. Now, says, my Lord Coke, That seems strange; but enquiring of an ancient Person that lived in those Days, he told him the Meaning of it; That Lord had consulted with the Judges, Whether or no, if a Man was Attainted by Parliament, and was not brought to be heard, such Attainder would be good in Law? The Judges started at the Question, but could give no other Answer than this; Truly, if such Attainder be made, we know no Law to find Fault with it, for 'tis done by the Legislative Authority. It fell out, That the Instance of condemning a Person in Parliament (not according to the Rules in Westminster-Hall) fell out to be the Nobleman's Case; for he himself was so Attainted immediately after.

Give me leave to instance in another kind of Authority, the Authority of Parliament touching these Attainders, and what has been the Consequence of them: If you will look into the Record of Rich. II.'s Time, I do not mean the Record that hath been quoted, nor the Case of John Imperiall, for killing the Genoua Ambassador, which was declared Treason in Parliament, Ten Years after the Man had been tried in Westminster-Hall for it; but I mean the 11 Rich. II. how many were attainted by the Proceedings of those Times; I do not mean by Acts of Parliament, but those Attainders were in an extraordinary Manner, not according to the Rules of Westminster-Hall: And 21 Rich. II. the whole Parliament, and its whole Proceedings were reversed, and the Parliament annulled: In that Year were the Prosecutors of the 11th Year themselves attainted: And 21st Year of Rich. II. the Act that repealed that Parliament, repealed the Pardon too; but in order to come to the Attainder of those Persons: That being done, was not enough; for the Lord Arundel had a Pardon the 17th of Rich. II. Upon that they made a Law to repeal his Pardon by Patent, that they might come to the Attainder of that Lord; and that Lord was Attainted by Act of Parliament. But I must observe one Thing a little further, That that very Parliament, that doubtless knew their own Power well enough, and that their Attainders were firm, being made by the Legislative Power, yet they had a little Jealousy themselves of their Proceedings; for they passed an Act to make it capital to go about to reverse any of those Laws; and another Act, that all the Lords and Bishops should be sworn. Now see what fell out after; Rich. II. was deposed, for consenting to those Laws; and Henry IVth, in the first Year of his Reign, abrogated the whole Parliament, and repealed all those Laws. These Turns have been upon these extraordinary Proceedings of Parliaments.

Give me leave to give you another Instance, and that in another Case, as odious as possible could be. In the Murder of Edw. II. there was Roger Mortimer attainted in the first Year of Edward III. and the Record says, That it was notorious to them all: And what then? They adjudged him to be attainted in Parliament. When Time had a little worn off that extraordinary Zeal (which truly was commendable, though it had transported them a little too far beyond the Rules of Justice) and they came to consider what Precedent they had made for Posterity, it had another Face; for in 28 Edw. III. was that Attainder reversed, because he was not brought to answer as he ought to have been. There was also an Act for attainting the Earl of Arundel, which in the same 28 Edw. III. was reversed, because he was not brought to Judgment by due Process of Law.

But now we are told, we are not tied here to the Rules of Westminster-Hall. Gentlemen do not enough distinguish in this Matter; the Forms of Westminster-Hall, say some; the Rules, say others; and others say, there is no Difference between the Form of Proceedings, and the Rules, of Westminster-Hall: But I hope no Gentlemen do think but the Parliament, though they have a Power to act as they think fit (as Instances have been given) yet the Parliament it self are tied by the Rules of common Justice. Now I would have Gentlemen that say we are not tied by the Rules of Westminster-Hall, a little to consider the Matter. Are the Rules of Westminster-Hall no other than what are necessary for the executing of Justice? If they are no other, how can we be said to go according to Justice, when we go beside those Rules? I desire them to consider of the Consequence of this Proceeding; there is no danger, I hope, of this Parliament: But if we shall say, that the Rules of Westminster-Hall are not such as are necessary for the Proceedings in a Course of Justice, we shall shake those Barriers of our Liberty and Property, I am afraid, a little more than Gentlemen think of at present; And shall we declare they are not necessary, when our Ancestors have thought them so, and their Wisdom hath derived them to us, and the Wisdom of the Nation in Parliament hath established these Rules?

I can't say what Consequence may follow upon this. This Parliament can never do any Thing to endanger the Lives of the People of England; but heretofore Parliaments have been damned with several Brands, set upon them by succeeding Parliaments: As for Instance; One, I think, in the 38 H. VI. 39. That Parliament was wholly repealed, as packed, and passing Laws through Rancour and Malice, and having passed no good ones. Now, suppose a Parliament should come, that should not be so tender of the Liberties of the People as this; and they should be so bold as to shake those Laws that are made for the Rules of Justice, if they have so good a Parliament to guide them in it; Will not this be an Inducement to such a Parliament as that, to shake all our Laws and Liberties? But I can't trouble you any longer, my Head will not give me leave. I am against the Bill, and have offered you my Reasons.

Col. Wharton. I hope Gentlemen, in a Matter of this Moment, will have Patience to hear one another; and since every Gentleman is to give his Vote in this Matter, I desire to give my Reasons for my Vote: I am of the Opinion of another Gentleman, That we have not touched the Sore yet; yet I do not think, that the Rules for Westminster-Hall, are Rules for us. The Gentleman that spake last, as he always does, made a very florid and elegant Speech, and brought you several Examples of Attainders that have been condemned from one Parliament to another, in several Reigns: But I do not wonder at that, when the Crown went from one to another. An Instance was given in the Case of the Lord Cromwell, which was spoke too from the Bar; and Sir Thomas Powys laid a great Stress upon it, That this was condemned as a wrong Judgment, because he was not heard: I believe that may be a Reason why many of those Attainders were condemned; perhaps it might be a Custom of our Ancestors to pass Bills of Attainder without hearing the Party. This Person hath been heard, and fully heard; and I believe no Person, that hath been attainted, hath had so fair a Trial; and therefore Parliaments having condemned Bills of Attainder, because the Persons have not been heard, that will be no Reason why any Parliament should condemn us. A Gentleman told you, That the Law of God and Man was not to condemn a Man, but upon two Witnesses; but there are many Instances to the contrary.

It is told you, That Porter, here before you, is not a good Evidence, because he is not sworn; and that you are to go by the Rules of Westminster-Hall. Says the Gentleman that spake last, you are to go by their Rules, but not by their Forms: I must confess there is a great Difference between them two; for a Form is only the Manner and Method by which we proceed in doing of any Thing; but the Rule is the Foundation we are not to err from; but I can't agree we are upon the same Rules as Westminster-Hall is: The Rules of Westminster-Hall are, when a Man is brought upon his Trial, the Jury are all to be upon their Oaths; by which Oath they are to make a true Judgment according to Law. This is not the Case here; if I was a Jury-Man, and was to try a Man, and one Witness swore against this Man, and no other Witness, though I did in my Conscience believe him to be guilty, yet in that Case my Conscience is discharged, and I must find him not guilty: But no Man can say this is the Case here.

What are we now a doing? Here is a Bill to attain Sir John Fenwick of High-Treason: If I reject the Bill, I do declare him not guilty; and if I do think him guilty, I do declare against my own Judgment; for my Judgment here, is not bound up as a Man's Judgment upon a Jury; for his Judgment is bound up to Proof, according to Law; and my Judgment is bound up by my own Belief: This is the Proof I must go by; and I think every Man is bound in Justice and Duty to his Country, as he believes Sir John Fenwick to be guilty, to be for the Commitment of this Bill; and till any Gentleman will convince me, that this is not a Rule I am to go by, I must continue in this Opinion.

Mr. Boyle. The Disorder that worthy Gentleman was in, makes me the more concerned for fear of falling into it my self.

I hope in this Debate, Gentlemen will be very cautious of using it as an Argument, what Application our Votes shall have without Doors, and with those we represent, when we are to give Judgment, as far as in us lies, for the Life and Death of a Man: And therefore I must observe, that the Eagerness that is justifiable upon Impeachments, may not look so well now we are Judges upon a Bill of Attainder. You have gone over the whole Course of the Evidence, and I believe that this Debate will shew you pretty plainly, what is to be the Fate of this Bill; for I believe all the Arguments will now be used that can be: As to what hath been said of extorting a Confession, I take it to be quite out of the Case.

I am sorry to be engaged one way or another: I would not, if I could help it, out of the House, be upon a Jury of Life and Death; yet in that Case, I should know the Law, or be told it by the Judges: But in this Case, we are both Jury-Men, and Judges, and know not what Rules we are to go by; but set up a Court of Equity which hath no Bounds but our own Consciences.

As to Sir John Fenwick, I know him not; as to his Cause, I am sure, I am against it; but how far I think him guilty or not, I think is not the single Point to be considered: I must confess, there have been several People accused of this Conspiracy, and have been named by the Evidence at the Trials; and I believe they are much alike guilty, being upon the same Evidence; but as to all that hath been opened before you, and proved, it can amount to no more than this; There is but one Evidence, which by the Law would not be a good Evidence to convict him in another Place; and therefore I do agree with the Gentleman that spake under the Gallery, that this is a very extraordinary Case; for one Witness is not sufficient at Law to convict him, and the Law would be very different hereof. I am to judge according to my own Opinion, and not by the Rules prescribed by the Law; but though this Proceeding is not strictly according to the Law of the Land, yet if it was such an extraordinary Case that required you to dispense with those Forms, and come to this extraordinary Manner of Proceeding; I think, for my own Part, it might be supported by the Necessity of it; for 'tis impossible that it should be otherwise in Practice: Thus when the Government is at Stake, and nothing will preserve it, but the breaking through the settled Forms, then the Government will break through them; and whatever Rule you prescribe, it will always happen so.

There is a very extraordinary Case, and that was in the Conspiracy of the State of Venice, above a hundred Years ago, I think, set on foot by the Spaniards: Then the State, to get the whole Matter out, promised a Pardon to as many as were concerned in it; and after they had promised it, and treated with them about it, they thought it necessary, for the Preservation of the Whole, to break their Faith, and they were all put to Death. This was upon Point of Preservation of the Government.

But, Sir, as to Precedents, give me leave to say, I do not give that Authority to them unless I know all the Springs and secret Histories and Transactions that were their Guide in making those Precedents; and as to Precedents that have been quoted, when the Parliament has declared what was Treason, and what was not Treason, or have declared Constructive Treason, they may be grounded upon the Statute of 25 Ed. III. But I think there is no Statute upon which they can ground the Condemnation of a Man upon one Witness.

In the Case of my Lord Strafford, upon constructive Treasons, it was there said, That it was a Fire that had lain hid for 240 Years, and that it never broke out before, but to consume him, and his Posterity. It was answered by Pym, If that was the Case, it was not for want of Law to justify such a Proceeding, but all that Time had not produced such an Offender.

I do not doubt, but if any one will consider the late Conspiracy; and if that was the Question, but it was as extraordinary as any Thing can happen; for it was to subject their Country to a foreign Power, which is very extraordinary, and several Persons were concerned in it: But there is one extraordinary Part which I do not remember this Gentleman is accused of; and that is, the Assassination. Treason it self is a very extraordinary Crime; but give me leave to say, that extraordinary Part is not alleged against this Gentleman, and this Bill does not seem to be brought in for that, wherein he is concerned in common with some others, but for the subsequent Matter alleged in the Bill. This Bill is grounded not so much upon that he is guilty, as a great many more are, as upon several Circumstances which have happened to no Body else. Give me leave to instance in a Case, now in my Head (I beg your Pardon that I ramble, 'tis from the Awe I have upon me from this Assembly) in Cataline's Conspiracy; and if that was our Case, no doubt there would be another ther sort of Argument for it; there they consulted what to do with Cetbegus, and the other Conspirators; he was at the Head of an Army, which only expected his Orders to lay Rome in Ashes; the Question was, Whether they should break the Porcian Law; and for the Safety of the Senate they were put to Death before the Assembly rose.

Now to come to this part of it: Though Sir John Fenwick is a great Offender, yet I think his Case is not so extraordinary, as to make you proceed upon this Bill. I do take his living or dying not to be of that Consequence as this Bill of Attainder. I know not how he comes to be so considerable when in Hold; for when he walked about Town, I never heard he was feared or regarded at that Time.

But to come to the Allegations in your Bill, upon which they are to ground your Judgment: The first Part is a new Conspiracy, that is, for intending to create a Jealousy between the King and these noble Persons. As to them, you have already passed a Vote in their Justification; and I think their Actions may justify them to the World, as much as any Vote of the House of Commons; but whatever that may be, I think it was a foolish piece of Conspiracy, as well as an ill one; for one; when he was in danger of being hang'd for one Plot, to venture upon another; and I think, there was at that Time two Witnesses to bring him to his Trial, and that is an Allegation in the Bill. And as to the Protracting of his Trial, 'tis natural, and so justifiable, whether innocent or no, and what every Body attempts; and no Body can wonder at it; but in one Case or the other it can be no sufficient Ground to attain him.

The next Thing that is said is, That he hath been the Occasion of the withdrawing of the Evidence. Now I must observe, that is not alledged in the Bill, and is proved but by Hear-say: But suppose it was true, and alledged; if any Man concerned in Treason shall endeavour, by Friends, or otherwise, to get off an Evidence, can that amount to that which is designed to be punished by this Bill, to High-Treason? 'Tis the Part of those that are intrusted with those Matters, to be in Expectation of such Practices. What are Goals for, but to keep them in Custody? And the People employed in those Businesses are to take care of it. Are we to supply a Defect of what ought to have been done in another Place?

So that I do say, That a Precedent in an extraordinary Case is no Precedent to be used in a little Case. It may be urged, but 'tis but a Pretence, when you have passed this Bill, which is the Record, the Matter will appear no otherwise than are the Suggestions of your Bill. A Man hath aspersed great Persons, which is a great Fault indeed, (for he is not charged with the withdrawing of the Evidence) therefore attain him upon one Evidence. I think by this Bill you will open a Door for a Precedent of all Treasons of the same Nature. Sir, there have been many Precedents mentioned; I will trouble you with none, because most Gentlemen have read the Argument of Mr. St. John's in this Case. I must confess, unless there was that Necessity as is pretended, which I do not see, I do not see how you can justify passing this Bill of Attainder, either by the Law of God or Man, in any Nation allowed.

I must confess, I have no manner of Concern

how this Question goes; what I have said is more to satisfy my own Judgment, than work upon other People. I am not satisfied there is that Necessity that is pretended; and therefore as my Judgment is now informed, I can't give my Vote for Committing of this Bill.

Mr. Smith. Sir, I own my self to be very unfit to speak in this Argument; but since I am to give my Vote in a Matter of this Consequence, I beg leave to give my Reason why I give my Vote, as I intend to do. I know the Matter before us, both in the Nature of the Crime and Punishment, as well as the Consequence of it, requires a very deliberate Consideration; but at the same Time, I do take the Hazard and Danger of this Government to be a Matter of great Consequence too.

Though there have been several Precedents instanced in relation to Attainders; and though I have observed, that most have acknowledged, That they might be justified upon extraordinary Occasions; yet when they have asserted that, they have told you, they were upon a wrong Foundation, and so were laid aside. Now I think it no great Matter to say, That those Attainders that were made in Rancour upon contended Titles, were reversed when the opposite Party got the Power, no more than if any Action, be it never so justifiable, should be reversed when King James comes again, which I hope will never be. Is it any Argument, that when H. IV. came to the Crown, and deposed King Richard, that he reversed all the Attainders in his Time? There might be Reasons might sway with Persons for reversing particular Acts of Parliament, which might be very good, or might be not so, there was such a Change of Government at that Time; but they take notice it was made a particular Article against Richard II. as if when the Power was come to other Hands, they would not have deposed him if they had not had that Argument: Neither do I take that Argument to be of any weight; That Attainders have been reversed, because the People have not been heard; when this Gentleman hath had as full a Hearing as ever any Person had upon any Bill of Attainder, or Impeachment whatsoever; and he hath had the Advantage of Counsel in this Case (which, as has been told you, was excepted out of the late Act of Parliament) and of the most able Counsel too.

'Tis said this is a Matter of no great Consequence, because it concerns Sir John Fenwick's Life singly; and he is not thought to be so considerable, as by his Escape to bring the Publick in danger. Now it hath been always one Principle I have laid down, That if a Plot be discovered, and not thoroughly prosecuted, it strengthens and grows upon you, and ten to one if it does not subvert the Government.

Now, God be thanked, that we have prevented the Design upon the King's Person, and several have been punished for it; but I think we are not got to the Bottom of it, and that we ought to provide against it in a much other Manner. Can any one think that Sir William Parkyns, or Sir John Freind, and the rest that are discovered, were the only Persons concerned in this Conspiracy; I take it, that there have been much greater Men in it; and when I see such a Struggle both to get People out of Gaol, and send People out of the Way, and all Arts used that can be, I must suppose, when such extraordinary Courses are taken, ken, that there is something extraordinary still to be done; and I would not have Men by bribing of Witnesses think to secure themselves: It hath been used as an Argument to lessen the Matter, That this was a little after the Act of Indemnity. Can any Thing aggravate a thing more? Sir, these very Arguments turn against them.

We are told here, that we must not consult our own private Judgments in the Matter; and we are told at the same Time, if there were two Witnesses that we did not believe, we must not find him guilty. We are told of a Judge, that though he knew a Person to be not guilty, yet it was a commendable Action in him, that he condemned the Man: But that hath been very well answered already, and I shall not meddle with it further; only this I will say, that I never will in any Case be a Jury-Man or a Judge, where the Convictions of my own Conscience shall not govern me, but an Evidence that I do not believe. And because that Story was told you, I will tell you another, that I think more commendable: And that was; a Man was try'd for a Murder, and there was positive Evidence against him. The Jury went out, and stay'd a great while: There was Eleven against One for finding him guilty; but at last the One almost starved them, and they brought the Man in not Guilty. The Judge sent for the Gentleman, and desired to know his Reasons for differing with the rest: And at last, upon Assurance that nothing should be done to him, Why, says he, Would you have me find the Man guilty, when I was he that killed the Man, and he was innocent?

Then, Sir, if you take the Evidence as it is; I think, first, here is Capt. Porter; I do not find any Body excepts to him; and his Evidence hath been approved of by several Juries, and several Persons executed upon it, and nothing material hath been objected against it. I will not say, That Sir John Fenwick hath owned a great deal of this himself; he hath given every body Satisfaction how far he stands guilty in his Opinion; but it is brought so far home, that there was Sir John Fenwick's own Letter was to convey him abroad. Here hath been Attempts upon other Persons; you hear what hath been done by the Solicitor. They say, he was not his Solicitor at that Time. Here are very pregnant Circumstances. One Gentleman said, you ought not to make use of Goodman's Evidence here; and yet he could make use of every Thing to disparage him; for he could say, there were three positive Witnesses against him.

Now when 'tis so notorious what Parties there are for King James, and we find Persons plotting in every Part of the Kingdom: When you have an open Invasion before you, and when Designs are laid against the King's Life every Day; if this be not a Time to exert an extraordinary Power, I submit it to you.

Sir Rich. Temple. Sir, I shall not trouble you with any Thing that hath been offered to Day. That which calls me up, is the Danger of the Precedent you are about to make, and the Arguments that have been used to support it; which, I think, are more dangerous than that. I must confess 'tis a new Doctrine to me, That the Laws that are made by the Parliament, are to be no Rule and Guide to this House. Sir, the Birth-right we have is in our Laws; and I did ever think till now, that the Laws were not only made for Westminster Hall, but for all the Subjects of England; and especially, that they were to be a Rule to the Parliament that made them, till they should think fit to alter them.

Here have been great Mistakes between the Power of Parliament and the Jurisdiction of it; the Power of Parliament is to make any Law, but the Jurisdiction of Parliament is to govern it self by the Law; and this, give me leave to say it to you, hath been the Opinion of all your Ancestors, and the Method they ever used. Shall we make a Law here in a particular Case against all the Laws of England? 'Tis ultimum remedium & pessimum; you may use it in a Case of absolute Necessity, but otherwise it may be a Precedent to overturn all.

There are several Things in making this Precedent, that overthrow all the Laws and Liberties of England: First, you are passing Judgment upon a Man upon one Witness. I have heard a strange Debate to Day, That there was but one Witness in Treason, before the Statute of Edw. VI. You know, that in Case of Treason, there was by the Common Law required two Witnesses; for if there was but one, the Party might demand Trial by Battle, and that was the Common Law of England.

There is another Thing that is extraordinary: Here you are going to pass an Act without any Trial at all: For to say this is a Trial before you, the Commons, is a Mistake; you never did assume a Jurisdiction of trying any Person, nor can you: You may for your own Information hear what can be offered, but 'tis not a Trial, where Witnesses are not upon their Oaths. There is no manner of Power or Jurisdiction can be pretended for you to try; in that is a second Thing. All the Bills of Attainder you have had, have been in three Cases, where the Persons have been either dead, or fled, or have been without the Compass of the Law, and could not be brought to answer: And you have had some Bills of Attainder after Trials had in Westminster-Hall; but never a one of those have been called Trials, but they have been generally reversed; and for what? They tell you, That they have been reversed by one Party and another Party: It was in the same King's Reign, in Rich. II.'s Reign, they were forward and backward, as the Court Party or the Country Party were uppermost.

There is another Thing in this, that I think of a most dangerous Consequence; and that is, that you are for making way, for what I know, by this Precedent, for a Rack, for so 'tis said; this is to force a Man to be an Evidence. Why, give me leave to say to you, 'tis a new Way not known in England, that you will hang a Man unless he will confess or give Evidence; but I think 'tis something more than a Rack, for here is hanging, drawing and quartering in the Case; and I do not think this Proceeding will make him an Evidence with any Credit or Reputation to this House; nor am I of Opinion, that he can discover any Thing worth such a Precedent.

Now give me leave to say one Thing as to the Jurisdiction of Parliament. It hath passed here for current, That the Parliament hath a Power to declare what they will Treason, though so by no other Law: 'Tis the greatest Mistake in the World: I heard a great Debate upon this, upon my Lord Clarendon's Case; and 'tis plain, that Statute relates only to Cases brought from inferior our Courts to Parliament; for it says, That if any other Case supposed Treason, which is not in that Statute specified, doth happen before any Justices, the Justices shall tarry, without going to Judgment of the Treason, 'till the Cause be shewed and declared before the King and his Parliament, Whether it ought to be judged Treason, or other Felony. I speak to the Jurisdiction that the Parliament has by that Statute: 'Tis, that if the like Treason (for at Common Law there was a great many Treasons) should fall out, and be brought before inferiour Courts, of which they doubted, whether they were Treasons or no; then they should be brought before the Parliament, to judge whether they were Treasons or Felony: But how shall they judge? By the Laws in being. And who is this Judgment in? Not in the Parliament by Bill, but only in the House of Lords: Much less is it, That you may judge that to be Treason in this House, that was not so by the Common Law before. So that, give me leave to say, therefore there is no such Power reserved to the Parliament, to declare any thing Treason that is not Treason before.

I must say, 'tis of the last Consequence, that we should make a Law in a particular Case, to take away from him all the Liberty that belongs to a Subject. Some Gentlemen talk of the great Favour he hath had at this Bar: I know not what to think of it; I am sure you allowed the King's Counsel such Privileges as I never saw before, and that was to offer that for Evidence that every body acknowledged was not so; and I do not think any body would think it a great Favour to be heard in this manner, especially to Things not in the Bill.

'Tis said, every Man must go according to his private Opinion, 'tis not said Judgment neither; the Instances that have been given are of a quite different Nature: A Man is not to give his Judgment against his Knowledge: I think that Judge ought rather not to have try'd the Cause at all; but if we sit here to judge, we sit to judge him according to the Law of England, and then we must judge him according to legal Proof. Will you sit upon a Judgment that is not only not tied to the Rules of Westminster-Hall, but is not tied to the Laws of the Land; and Attain a Man without a legal Trial, without legal Evidence, and upon One Witness, when the Law says, you shall have Two; and after all, say 'tis a reasonable Proceeding? I know not how it came about, that the Act of Grace was passed; it did not rise from this House: If it hath any ill Consequence, let them answer for it that were the Cause of it.

They say the Government is at stake, because the Plot hath not been found out to the Bottom. That is not our Fault: This Man hath been long enough in Custody; if he hath trifled with the Government, I am sorry he hath imposed upon them; but if it be so, I think there is nothing in this Case, of that Consequence, as to make you make this Precedent.

Sir Will. Strickland. Mr. Speaker, I would not make use of any ill Precedent: And yet if the present Occasion, and the Necessity of the Kingdom required it, I would make a Precedent: I am glad the several ill Precedents are avoided in this Case, and I would be bold to say, whether this Gentleman suffers or no, no Man can say that he hath been hared to Death by Counsel.

Sir, I should be as tender in Point of Blood as any Man; but I do think, if the Safety of the King and Kingdom is concerned, 'tis not one private Man that we must have respect for, so as to let the Publick suffer by it. I do think, that upon this Occasion there have so extraordinary Things happened as have hardly happened in former Ages; that one who is known to be in a Conspiracy to bring over a French Power with a Papish Army, to destroy our Lives and Liberties, after his Trial has been deferred by his Equivocations and Pretences to make a great Discovery; when he comes to make it out, he accuses the best of your Friends; and this is only an Artifice to get Time 'till they could get the Evidence out of the Way; I think, if you do not take notice of it, and let the Legislative supply that Defect, it may be of ill Consequence, and may encourage any one to commit the worst of Mischiefs, upon hopes, that if they can get the Evidence out of the Way, they shall go unpunished.

Sir Francis Winnington. I shall trouble you but a little while, it being late; but Gentlemen saying 'tis an extraordinary Case, I shall give my Reasons why this Bill ought not to be committed; for every Member here now is a Judge; and he must take the Blood of this Gentleman upon him in Judgment, either to condemn or acquit him; and I must confess, I have very much admired, to hear that Doctrine preach'd, That every Man, as he is satisfied in his private Conscience, ought to judge this Man guilty. I desire to know by what Authority we sit here? We sit here and have a Legislative Authority, and 'tis by the King's Command we come together; but at this Time we are judicially trying this Man for his Life; and therefore I humbly conceive, That we ought to proceed secundum allegata & probata; and for any Man in his private Opinion to say he is guilty, he does not act by the Commission he sits here. For to tell you of the Lancashire Plot, or that a Man shall not be chosen hereafter, seems to be Arguments to enflame, but nothing to the Question.

Now, Sir, I will humbly offer to your Consideration, and the Judgment of the House, why I think we cannot judicially condemn this Man; for I think the Question of Commitment to be the same as of his Life and Death.

I do agree upon all the Precedents good and bad that have been cited, and doubt not but in extraordinary Cases, 'tis in the Legislative Power of the Parliament to look after the Safety of the Kingdom; but I shall offer why this does not come to that Case.

I humbly conceive in this Case, for I will not speak to the Rules of Westminster-Hall, but upon the right Reason of the Thing; for if it be Reason in Westminster-Hall, it may be so here, and that ought to overcome every thing; But whereas Gentlemen say you have one Witness, I do not apprehend you have one good Witness, and I will give you my Reason for it; for you must take Capt. Porter upon his Parole, and consider what he says upon his Word; and then I do appeal, if you take what he says upon his Word, whether ever they did know that a Bill of Attainder proceeded against any Man upon bare Affirmation? No; in that Case you should have turned it into an Impeachment, if the Thing looked probable, and then you had the Witness upon Oath; and the ancient Method of Bills of Attainder used to be first by the Impeachment of the Person, and then to turn it into a Bill of Attainder.

Then

Then see what it is that is insisted on by the King's Counsel, and recited in the Bill, That there was a Bill of Indictment found by the Oath of two Witnesses, that is, Porter and Goodman: Under Favour, I think they are not to be counted as Witnesses in the Point; and I offer this as a Reason; and, I think, 'tis natural Justice in all Courts of the World, That if a Man be accused as a Malefactor, he hath the Liberty to cross-examine the Person that accuses him. Now we very well know, that in Case of Bills of Indictment, when they are found by the Grand-Jury, they never admit the Prisoner to put Cross-Questions, because the Bill of Indictment is but the Accusation; and if an Accusation be enough, who can be Innocent? Why, then if it be so, then this Oath that was given to the Grand-Jury, is not such an Oath upon which you can put such a Value.

Then, Sir, go to the Paper of Goodman, which you would read, and consider the Validity of that; Goodman being now absent, the Prisoner hath no Opportunity to cross-examine him; and I beseech the House to consider the ill Consequence of it: Any Minister of State may come and get an Examination before a Justice of Peace, or Secretary of State, and the Man is conveyed away, and a Bill of Attainder is clapp'd upon his Back, and this shall be read as Evidence against him: He is but half a Witness, and a Witness upon an Accusation, not upon a Trial.

Then come to Sir John Fenwick's particular Case; Sir John Fenwick is indicted, Issue is joined, and he hath Notice of his Trial; and one of the Witnesses goes away, no Man can tell upon what Account he went; I may believe why, in my private Opinion, but that is not our judicial Knowledge: Then if that be so, was it ever known, that when any Man was indicted, and Issue joined, because his Trial was deferred, therefore a Bill of Attainder must be brought against him? Here are Plots against the Government, and it may be Forty may be taken up for it; and as to Twenty, there may be two Witnesses, and the others may have the good luck to have but a single Witness against them; will you have Acts of Attainder against all the rest? If this had been an extraordinary Case, wherein the Government had been particularly concerned, it might have weighed with you; for no Man can shew me any Precedent of a Bill of Attainder, but where there was open Act of Hostility, or Men of great Relation and Power were concerned to subvert the Government. But what is Sir John Fenwick's Case? He is in Custody, and the Plot is detected; if he was run away, you might still suppose he was plotting against the Government, because he was fled from Justice. Gentlemen say the Government is concerned; so it is in every Felony and particular Treason; but must there therefore be a Bill of Attainder to punish it? When there is a Bill of Attainder, it must be from an immediate Danger that threatens the Government established, that such a Man is Attainted. But I do not see that Sir John Fenwick hath any of these Circumstances. All Men agree, That this is an extraordinary Way of Proceeding: Then the Question is, Whether Sir John Fenwick's Case be extraordinary? or, Whether he be more than a common Malefactor that is in a wicked Conspiracy? I do not see that this Case of Sir John Fenwick's is so extraordinary, that if he be not hanged, the Government must fail.

And, under Favour, a Precedent, when 'tis once made, I know not what Time may produce from it: It may be, after the Death of his Majesty, that came to restore our Liberties, we may have wicked Members, and Members chosen as in Hen. Vith's Time. It may be the Condition of every Subject in England. The Power of Parliament we must govern by Reason and common Justice; and if there be not so urgent Necessity to use this extraordinary Remedy, because it may be dangerous to Posterity, therefore I am against this Bill.

Sir Tho. Littleton. The worthy Gentleman took notice, That the Lancashire Plot, and some Words I used, were used only to inflame: I can't so well guess at his Thoughts, but I have heard him several Times bring his Wife and Children into his Speeches, to no Purpose at all.

Sir Francis Winnington. I have a Wife and Children, and that Gentleman none; therefore I think I may make use of that Expression.

Sir Tho. Seymour. Mr. Speaker, I have attended your Debate with the best Attention I can; and I have heard a great many Arguments, and some very wild ones too. I hope, how frightful soever Things have been opened, they will not lead your Understanding out of the Methods and Rules of Justice. I will not take upon me to tell you, what is nothing to the Question, as, that Treason is a very great Crime, or, that the Parliament hath an unbounded or unlimited Power, and are not tied to the Rules of Westminster-Hall; I think that is no Part of the Subject Matter before you.

That nothing bounds or can limit the Parliament, is what every Body does admit; but 'tis the right Application of that Power which is now to be considered of: For you may judge the Prisoner, and others will judge you. The World will judge you, if you do not apply that Power aright.

For my part, I shall avoid as much as can be, the saying of any thing that hath been said; and therefore I hope you will believe that my Discourse must be very short: But that which does move me in this Question, is in short this, That I do not give my Judgment to condemn any Man otherwise than the Law directs how, and upon what Terms I must give it. If the Law hath said, That Treason is not to be Treason, unless it be proved by two Witnesses, I am never to give my Judgment in that Case, when there appears but one.

And this I take to be the State of the Case, not to enter into Matters of Precedent of Attainders; for those are only Instances of so many Facts that have been done. And in all those Instances that have been urged and quoted, when Times have been sedate and quiet, Marks have been put upon them, as was hinted by a Gentleman that spake very ingeniously upon this Subject at the beginning of this Debate; I say, Marks have been put upon them for you to avoid, but not to imitate. I take it, that the Law hath determined that there shall be two Witnesses to the Proof of Treason, and there is no Treason that hath not two Witnesses to it. There is but one Attainder that we meet withal in sacred History, and that is the Attainder of Naboth; he was Attainted, and we know what induced that Attainder; he had nothing to object as to the Formality of the Proceedings there was set up against him: And though Jezabel's Letter had disposed the Rulers to deal by him as they did, yet there were two Witnesses that did appear against him.

I take it, that two Witnesses are requisite for the Knowledge of the Truth, that you may make a right Judgment whether they swear right or no. I will give you but one small Instance more; I must tell you, Susannah had been but in a bad Condition, if one Witness or circumstantial Evidence would have made her guilty.

A Gentleman here says, 'tis Apocrypha: But that which weighs with me is, that there may be Inconveniencies on one Side, and there are no Inconveniencies on the other. I know not what may be the Consequence of this Precedent, nor where it may bring you: I know the Consequence, if Sir John Fenwick be not executed upon a Bill of Attainder; for no Body will believe there is a Necessity for this extraordinary Remedy to be applied for an Offence, a Year and half after he hath been indicted and arraigned for it, and they might have proceeded to his Trial; and I know not whether 'tis his Fault that they did not; for it was not in his Power to prevent it: And if you, upon every Occasion, come to supply the Defects of them that are remiss in the Government, it will make them more so.

As to the Matter of Precedents; Why, it may fall out, that by this Precedent an innocent Man may be punished, and then we that make this Precedent are guilty of his Blood; and if he suffer never so remotely, it will be required of us, if they proceed from this Precedent. Now, if Sir John Fenwick be not executed, unless in a legal Way, what is the Consequence of that? Is it that Sir John Fenwick shall go unpunished? Though they are deprived of one Evidence, that would make it Treason, he may be punished for a Misdemeanour, and imprisoned for his Life; and I had much rather he did languish in that Condition, and I am sure it is much safer for you, for no Inconveniency can arise that Way; and I take it, that when those that are our Guides dispute which is the Way, we are to take that which is safest.

The Learned have disputed, Whether this Matter, as now it is charged upon Sir John Fenwick, be Treason: I will not take upon me to determine it; they differ about it; and when they can't determine it, will you by a Question determine it absolutely?

Upon the whole, there hath been so much said by the Counsel for the Prisoner, and so little said by the Counsel against him, and so few Arguments urged against him, that I must still retain the Opinion I had, That there is not Evidence enough for you to proceed upon this Bill of Attainder.

Mr. Boscawen. Sir, I desire to give my Reasons for my Opinion in this Matter. I have no personal Disgust against Sir John Fenwick. The great Argument for Sir John Fenwick against this Bill is, That this is an extraordinary Proceeding, and therefore should be against an extraordinary Person; and in the next Place, that it is against the Rules of Law. The Rule of the Law is, That there must be two living Witnesses: As to that Matter, Gentlemen generally agree, that 'tis within the Law of Parliament to attain People by Bill of Attainder; but they say, they have been often misapplied; which I do easily believe, because some have been attainted, and have not been heard; and some have been in tumultuous Times: But this Gentleman hath had a fair Trial, and a Debate in this House: But I would fain know, though they confess Bills of Attainder may be, how it can possibly be, if the Lawyers at the Bar say true, That it must be upon Oath; and you give no Oath?

To say it may begin in the House of Lords: Under Favour, I take it, that a Bill against a Commoner can't begin in the House of Lords. And if you can't have Witnesses upon Oath, you must have as much Evidence as the Nature of the Thing will afford; that is, you must have Witnesses to convince your Consciences in the Thing; for if all this great Assembly are satisfied in their Consciences, that he is guilty of inviting an Army of French to come into England, I am astonished to think, that you should not pass this Bill against him. I think, as to this Witness Porter, they have not endeavoured to blemish him; but their Argument seems to run more upon Goodman's not being present. I would know, if there are two Witnesses, and I do not believe them in my Conscience, whether I can pass this Bill? But I appeal in this Case, res ipsa loquitur; the Thing is so plain. How many have been attainted and suffered for the same Crime, that have acknowledged Sir John Fenwick to have been present? There were several Members of the House sent to examine Sir John Freind and Sir William Parkyns in Newgate; and they were sent with this Intention, That the House would intercede with the King for a Pardon for them, if they discovered the full of the Plot (it was not the Death of Sir William Parkyns and Sir John Freind that was aimed at, but the Preservation of the Publick); and when they were examined, they did acknowledge, that they were privy to the calling in of the French, and that Sir William Parkyns was to have a Troop of Horse; there was to be 2000 Horse; but he would not redeem his own Life with the Blood of others. Now I do take it, that there is Evidence against Sir John Fenwick sufficient, in a Parliamentary Way, to attain him.

The Gentleman says, the Consequence of throwing out this Bill, would be nothing, and that Sir John Fenwick is a little Man: I agree he is, but 'tis the Consequence of bringing in a French Army that is to be considered. Would you pave the Way for them to come over, and make their Entrance easy? I hope the People of England are concerned in the Case, as well as their Wives and Children. If you let him go, what will be said? I have not heard one say, that he believes he is not guilty; there is none but think him guilty; and yet will you let him escape? What Encouragement will this be to your Enemies? He hath not denied the Matter himself: Nay, he hath not brought one Gentleman to vindicate him, that he is a Man of a Behaviour not to be believed to be guilty of such a Thing, which was done in other Trials.

I desire you would consider what the French King said of his Brother King James; How could he think to bring in Popery with a Protestant Army? I am sure the bringing in of a French Army must be for the Destruction of the People of England, and the Protestant Religion, and will bring your People to go in wooden Shoes. 'Tis the Example of this Thing you are to consider. It was said at the Destruction of Carthage, That the Commonwealth was always to be minded. I think you ought always to be mindful for the Preservation of England; and I believe he is guilty, and I am therefore for the Bill.

Lord Digby. I shall trouble you but with a Word or two. I suppose as long as we act by the known Rules of Justice, and the Laws of our Land, we shall not need to fear any Censure in our own Kingdom, or any where else; but 'tis a very uncertain Thing for Gentlemen to be Judges in the Case of Life and Death, without any Rule to walk by; a great many will not allow us any Rule at all: I always took our Rule to be the Law of the Land, and that even our selves are bound by the Laws our Ancestors have made, 'till we think fit to repeal them; and I am confirmed in this Case by one particular Argument from the Bill of Treason that passed last Sessions, in which there is a Clause, That it should not extend to future Parliaments. The only Argument for exercising of this Power, is the extraordinary Case of this Gentleman. When a Gentleman speaks of the Power of Parliament, I take it to be the just Power of Parliament: I think a Man may say, a Parliament can't do what they can't justly do. But all Gentlemen allow, that this Power ought not to be exercised but in an extraordinary Case, wherein the Government is nearly concerned. I believe very few but think, that if it had not been for the Vindication of some particular Gentlemen, we never had had this Matter before us; and then I will leave it to Gentlemen to consider, if the Government can be in so much Danger if Sir John Fenwick does escape.

Mr. Brotherton. Mr. Speaker, I perceive the Question, whether this Bill shall be committed, arises very much upon a Supposition that seems to be granted, That there is no other Law to try this Person by; and it hath been hinted, That before the Statute of Edw. VI. one Witness was sufficient: Now, if I shew you that here is a Law in being, and hath continued for several hundred Years, whereby a Man may be tried, and that by one Witness, I think it is something that hath not been spoke to yet.

Sir, I ground my Reason and Opinion upon the Authority of the Law, and upon the Historians of all Times, who agree in the Thing, and come down to my Lord Coke, which is printed by Authority; and he is express, That where there is but one Witness, (he treats of what Witnesses are necessary, and he tells you two Witnesses were required by the Common Law for Treason, if the Person was tried by a Jury); but, says he, if there be but one Witness in case of Treason, he shall be tried before the Constable and Marshal. And in treating of the Statute of Hen. VIII. which does appoint how Treason beyond Sea shall be tried; says he, that is only where there are only two Witnesses; but if there is but one Witness, he shall be tried before the Constable and Marshal; because, says he, the Statute of Hen. VIII. does not take away that Trial before the Constable and Marshal; and for that, Sir, there are several Precedents in this Case, of Persons that have been Attainted by a Court-Marshal; and if the Accuser was vanquished, he was to suffer the same Judgment the Defendant was if he was found guilty. I am upon a Gentleman's Life, and never was so before, and desire to be never so again; there have been several Precedents, I say, in this Case, and my Lord Coke is express in the Point; and I desire any Gentleman to shew me any Law that hath repealed this.

In case of Murder; suppose a Man be wounded upon the Land, and die upon the Sea, and I could shew several Cases where the Common Law can't try a Man by Jury, but he shall be tried by the Custom of Merchants before the Statute of Ed. VI. If a Man was wounded in one Country, and died in another, he could not be tried. That which I aim at, is to shew you, that though the Common Law should fail, yet they need not come with a Bill in this Case. If two Englishmen beyond Sea fight, and one kill the other, it can't be tried by the Common Law; How then shall it be tried? It must be tried by the Court-Marshal. It was Sir John Amesley's Case in Rich. II.'s Time; and Wells's Case, and Lord Herbert's Case, in H. VI.'s Time, who (there being but one Witness) was accused before the Constable and Marshal.

Memorandum, [Mr. Brotherton was here interrupted by the great Noise the House made upon the Novelty of the Argument, and did not go on further with it.]

Mr. Paget. Sir, I attended to the Debate of this Day, and have not hitherto troubled you my self, because I did expect to be better informed by this Debate.

I think the Substance of the Debate of this Day hath been, not so much to shew us by what Rule we are to go, as to shew us that we have no Rule to go by but our Judgments. Sir, I never had the Honour to sit in Parliament before this Time, and therefore can't quote Precedents of what hath been done in former Parliaments; others have taken a great deal of Pains to shew you, that it is in the Discretion of Gentlemen, and they are only to be satisfied in their Consciences. I am not fond to hear my self speak, and therefore I hope I shall be favourably heard at this Time, and I do think I have the more Reason to speak at this Time, from something that fell from a very honourable Gentleman at the Bar: If I do misrepeat him, I hope he will excuse me, for I do not do it with an ill Design: But I think his Words were to this Effect; That he did not know, but if it was known in the Country, that Gentlemen did give their Judgment against passing of this Bill, it might hinder their Election in future Parliaments. Sir, since there seems to be so great Strefs upon our Determination in this Matter, I hope I may at this Time shew you my Reasons why I can't come up to agree in this Bill; and I shall submit it to them, whether they will do me the Honour to chuse me again. I must confess, I do think this is as nice a Case as I can pretend to give my Opinion in; and as it is so, I shall desire the best Assurance of the Truth of this Matter, before I give my Opinion for the passing of this Bill.

Sir, you have had before you one Evidence: I will admit him to be as much as a single Evidence can be: As to the Paper of Goodman's Examination, I have heard that and other Matters too, which I shall not repeat. But I do remember, that in the Debate of Yesterday, it was not insisted on to be Evidence: And if not so, I shall only take the Matter as depending before you upon one Evidence only.

Sir, it is true, I believe this House, as to its Legislative Proceeding, is not tied by the Methods of inferior Courts: But I hope I shall be excused, if in the Methods of Prosecution and Conviction of Offenders, after they have been prescribed by the Wisdom of the Parliament, I hope I shall be excused, if I believe this House can't take away any Person's Life upon less Evidence than inferior Courts could do.

And,

And, Sir, I shall not enter into any very long Vindication of my self, and my Zeal and Willingness to serve the Government; I never was employed in any other Government; and I think my Actions have been such, that no Body can instance in any one Thing that hath looked otherwise; and when I have said this, I shall trouble you no further about that: But there hath been so much stress laid upon this Bill, that who-soever speaks against it, seems to speak against the Government; because it is said, the passing of it is so necessary for the Support of the Government. And I was the more willing to offer you my Reasons, because, as the Nature of this Debate has been, I can't satisfy my self where my Judgment and Opinion shall rest: For if it be so, that you are not tied to have as much Evidence as inferior Courts, and, as they say, one Evidence is enough, and my Judgment is to be guided by Papers; then they, without any Evidence, may be enough to satisfy: And if you take up with less Evidence than inferior Courts, I can't come to declare how little Evidence may take away a Man's Life.

As to the Prisoner, I know him not; but I think this Bill is for all that he hath to lose, and is for all the best Englishman can lose upon the like Occasion.

Sir, I shall be very tender in giving my Opinion for the Bill, unless it was very clear to me that it was reasonable. Truly I have heard very little of the whole Plot, or of this Matter that hath been examined, or for which others have been executed; my Life has been generally in the Country, and I have not had the Curiosity to buy the Trials; and as this is the first Person that hath been called before me, to give my Judgment on, I hope I may be excused for taking this Liberty, upon such Evidence as appears before us, to tell you, I can't give my Consent to this Bill.

Sir William Lowther. Sir, you have had a very long Debate in this House, and long Discourse from the Bar; and though the Counsel was directed that they should not dispute the Privileges and Authority of this House, yet, as far as my Judgment carries me, their whole Discourse was against it: And most of the Gentlemen that have spoke against the Bill, it hath been, because it hath not been adequate to the Proceedings in Westminster-Hall, because there hath been but one Witness. Sir, if there had been two Witnesses, this House had not been troubled with it: It is a Case of a very extraordinary Nature, and so required an extraordinary Proceeding.

It hath been questioned by some Gentlemen, Whether one Witness be sufficient in this Case, or no? Which I wonder at, since a great many have been convicted upon his Evidence, and every one of them has confessed; which shews it to be a notorious Truth.

There is another Inference they draw from the Proceedings here; Because a great many of those Precedents of Attainders have been reversed, and those with Notes of Ignominy. If they did consider the Times they were made in, and the Times they were reversed in, there might be a great deal of Cause for it: We find, that it was contrary Factions that reversed them, and that makes it never the worse. And truly, Sir, I do not know but where Circumstances are so notorious, but they are tantamount to a second Witness, as I have heard in Westminster-Hall, and in Cases of Life too. If a Man be murdered, and two in a Room, and one comes out with a bloody Sword, the Law does presume that Man murdered him, though there is no particular Evidence that he murdered him, but only this Circumstance; and yet the Man's Life is concerned in that Case. So that upon the whole, it appears to me that he is guilty, and, I think, nothing can be plainer.

There is another Circumstance, That he fled for it; and that is a Presumption of a Man's Guilt: For a Man loses his Goods, if he flies for Felony.

Mr. Harley. It would be very unreasonable and impertinent to trouble you long after such a Debate; I shall avoid Repetition of what hath been suggested to you much better from other Persons, than would have been from me.

I own 'tis a Case of great Concern, and 'tis my Misfortune that I should ever sit upon a Thing of this Nature; but I will discharge my Conscience always, and give what Arguments occur to me, why I am against this Bill.

Gentlemen have been pleased in their Arguments to enter upon the Debate of your Power and Authority, and have made that a part of their Argument; but I think, with Submission, we need not dispute that at all: It is admitted, that there have been Bills of Attainder passed formerly, and your Authority is not under dispute; for the Legislative in all Nations have a Power lodged in them, for the Safety of the Whole.

But your proper Enquiry is, Whether this is such a Case as you ought to exercise this extraordinary Power; omne regnum sub graviore regno: Though you have this absolute Authority, yet 'tis to be executed by the Rules of Reason, and by the Rules (for such there are) of eternal Justice; and I look upon this as one that is inviolable, That no Man can forfeit his Life, in such a Case as this is, without two Witnesses. I must adhere to that, because I have heard nothing in this Debate that can make me quit that Maxim: And 'tis such an ancient Land-mark, that I will never draw a Curse upon me, and my Posterity, for removing of it. I beg leave that I speak with this Earnestness to you.

Gentlemen have been pleased to make it part of their Arguments, The great Danger the Government is in, if this Bill does not succeed. I will not use many Words; but I think that Argument ought not to be taken in the gross, but to be examined, Whether this Argument, of the Hazard of the Government, is of equal Poize for you to break the eternal Rules of Justice. I won't quote the Case before; every Gentleman knows it, (though there was two Witnesses in that Case to put an innocent Person to Death) where it is urged, the Romans will come and take our State and Nation: But with how much Reason that was urged, every Body knows; and how far the Government is now in Danger. Let us consider, Is this Gentleman out of your Power? Is the Government in Danger of a Man that is your Prisoner? Is he in open Rebellion against you? If this Law does not pass, if you have not your Hands in his Blood, is he not under the Power of the Law? Did not he tell you so himself?

Every Gentleman ought to have a Zeal for the Government, and I wish it was visible in every Thing else; but if that be so, give us leave also to speak with Zeal for our Liberty, and ancient Constitution.

stitution. The Argument is turned two Ways: On one Side you are told, That this probably may make him confess something; and by others, he is to be made an Example of Punishment. This is the first beginning of a Bill of this Nature: But the same Reason that leads you to this, must lead you to all the rest: The same Reason that is urged for this Bill to make him confess, will lead you to bring in a Bill to make him a good Evidence: This every Body must allow to be the Consequence of it.

How does this Bill come before you? It comes before you upon a villainous, scandalous Aspersions of some great Men; though I know them not all, yet I have a great Value for them, and I would make their Case my own: But if they were the nearest Relations I had, I would be against this Bill upon their Account; and let any one examine the Reason of it.

Sir, I won't run into Precedents; but only because it hath been told you, That the Precedents were made in one Reign by one Faction, and then the Attainders were reversed in another Reign by another Faction: There is one occurs to my Mind, which hath been touched at, and is at least of Instruction to me. There was a Case in Ed. III's Time; there was the Deposition of a King, a King barbarously murdered, and his Son upon the Throne; and there was the Notoriety of the Fact, for which a great Man was attainted in his Son's Reign, and no different Title: and four Years after, a Bill was brought in against the Earl of March: And one of the Articles against him was, That he had procured that Attainder of that noble Lord, under Pretence of some Letter, or Paper, that was signed by him; which, if it was so, says the Record, was no Evidence.

I say this before, Gentlemen, to shew them how Things have turned, and Precedents that have been made very unanimously; but in bad Times have been turned to shed the best Blood in England. It grieves me to my Soul to hear of Mr. Cornish, whose Attainder you have reversed, to hear that quoted as a Precedent in this House: 'Tis not whether two Witnesses be the Rule of Westminster-Hall, 'tis the Rule of right Reason; and 'tis a Maxim in your Law, Make what Law you will against the Law of God, 'tis void: And this is the Law of God, and right Reason.

You must provide for the Government; and when you can't do it by Course of Law, then Armies must do it, when the Courts are shut. I hope Gentlemen will not put a hard Construction upon what I have said; I have done it to discharge a good Conscience.

Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer. Sir, I am for the Commitment of this Bill, because in my Conscience I think Sir John Fenwick is guilty; and because I think the Power of Parliaments may interpose in this Matter: And if they have such a Power, I think they may justly exercise it in this Case.

Gentlemen say, they will not dispute the Power of Parliament; and yet in their Arguments they tell us, we are not to proceed otherwise than according to the Forms of inferior Courts. And if the Parliament is not to proceed without two Witnesses in the Case of Treason, give me leave to say, there is no room left for a Bill of Attainder, unless you will take the Business of inferior Courts upon your selves: And I am confident, several Gentlemen, if there were two Witnesses, would use it as an Argument, What have you to do with it? Refer it to the ordinary Courts of Justice; and I am sure that would be very reasonable. But I do think that Parliaments have that Power, and they have always used it; and I believe 'tis for the Advantage of your Constitution. The inferior Courts are to go by the Letter of the Law; and whoever can avoid that, is to escape Punishment there; but the Legislative is not to be dallied with: And if the Offence be of that Nature, that inferior Courts can't reach it, they can go beyond all Forms to preserve the Government. This they have done, and upon that Principle you sit here. Was it by the Forms of common Justice below, that you declared the Throne to be vacant, and King William to be lawful King? Is it upon the ordinary Rules of Westminster-Hall, that his Title does depend? No, it depends upon this Maxim, That the Parliament of England are intrusted for the Whole, and may constitute a Government for the Preservation of the Whole. And upon the same right Principle that I gave my Vote to declare him rightful and lawful King, by the same Principles I declare his Enemies to be Traitors.

You are told here, 'tis according to the Law of God and Nature, that there must be two Witnesses in Cases of Treason: I do not pretend much Skill in other Parts of the World, I think 'tis our particular Happiness to have this Way of Trial: I think in any other Part of the World, if he had dealt thus with the Government, he would have had another manner of Proceeding against him, than to be condemned by King, Lords, and Commons: But that is your Constitution, but it does not hold in other Parts of the World.

Some Gentlemen lay the Strefs of their Argument upon the ill Consequence it may have in another Reign: I would avoid ill Consequences in another Reign as much as I could, but our immediate Care is the preserving of the present Constitution.

But if Gentlemen are apprehensive, that by such an Example, if King James should return, others may be punished; if we may judge what he would do, by what he hath done, he would go another Way to work; if he came to London, he would proceed as his Party did at Dublin, and attain all the Protestants in one common Bill; that is the Precedent he hath set, and he will follow. And therefore in order to prevent that, and in order to punish our Enemies, and to preserve our Constitution and Prerogative of Parliament in all Points; and because I am convinced in my Conscience he is guilty, I shall give my Concurrence for Commitment of this Bill.

Col. Granvil. Sir, I would not presume to trouble you at this Time of Night, was the Debate upon a less Subject than it is; but since you are going to pronounce Judgment in a Case of Life and Death, and that this House is above any Rules, and we have no Precedent for it, but every Gentleman is to find out private Rules to walk by; the Rule that I shall take to is, That I would deal with Sir John Fenwick as I would have Mankind to deal with me, if I was in Sir John Fenwick's Place, and were indicted of High-Treason, and were not allowed any Trial, nor the Benefit of making my Defence, according to the known Laws of the Land; I should think my Blood unjustly spilt, let me be never so guilty.

The Laws are what are set up for the Defence of every Man; and when once we break through them, whatever our End may be at that Time, and tho' it may in some manner seem to justify us, because 'tis to come at an ill Man; yet pray consider, the best of Men may be come at as easily as the worst of Men. And what makes me cautious is, That my Hands are guiltless of Blood yet, and I will take care how I begin to dip them in it. And that which will make me cautious in any Case of this Nature is, what I read in the Story of the late Time, That when once a Set of People had begun to dip their Hands in the Blood of my Lord Strafford, nothing would quiet them till they had stained their Hands with Royal Blood. The Laws are the common Defence between the King and the People; but the King is safest when the Laws are most strictly observed.

I shall not pretend to talk of your Power, which hath no other Bounds but your Justice and Discretion; and what you think so, will, I hope, meet with Approbation abroad. And in this Case I shall always be against what is called a Trial to Day: But I do not think it any; for I do think we are an unfit Court to determine this Matter. We sit in so many Capacities, 'tis hard to distinguish in what Capacity we are here: Some are accused; 'tis hard to be accused, and to be a Judge at the same Time. I am sure I am as much concerned as if I was accused my self; and 'tis for my Innocence and Honour that I think my self bound to speak against this Bill. For as no Resentment shall make me do any Thing that is unjust, so I fear nothing that he can say; and I will never go about to stop his Evidence, by cramming a Bill of Attainder down his Throat.

Besides, 'tis an unfit Thing for any Gentleman who is obliged to be of Counsel for the King; 'tis hard for him to be so, and sit here as a Judge: I think also to proceed in this Manner, is a disrespectful Thing to the King himself; for in this Case you turn the Throne of Mercy into the Seat of Judgment. The King, who should have all the Ways to ingratiate himself with his Subjects; you make him, by this Proceeding, to pronounce the Sentence himself upon the Life of a Subject; and 'tis hard to offer a Bill to the King in such a Manner, by which you oblige him either to reject it (which was always look'd upon as an Hardship) or to pass Sentence upon this Gentleman, which perhaps his gracious Temper, and his Mercy make him averse to.

Sir, 'tis too late to give you other Arguments; you have heard a great many better than I can give: But I think this Bill is unjust in it self, and dangerous in its Consequence; and therefore I hope you will not commit it.

Sir Herbert Crofts. Sir, I did not think to trouble you in this Debate, but only for the Arguments that have been used by some that spake lately, who seem to lay a great Load upon Men, according as they give their Vote in this Matter, because 'tis in relation to the Blood of a Man. I have considered the Point, I hope, with as much Caution as any Man within these Walls, and hope to act with as strict a Conscience as any Man whatsoever; and shall be glad to be informed from those Gentlemen, that have laid the Stress so hard upon Religion, how they can shew me, that I do not as strictly, as to all Points of Religion, give my Vote for passing of this Bill, as they would excuse themselves from it. I must agree with those Gentlemen, That you are no ways bound or limited to the Rules of Westminster-Hall; and therefore what was said upon that, I did not think worth taking notice of; but when we are told, we are bound up by the Laws of Nature and Religion, and the Law of God, in this Matter, this touches me so nearly, that I must desire those Gentlemen to shew me in Scripture the Law that they quote.

If it be the Law of Nature, and the Law of God, that every Man that dies must be convicted by two Witnesses, as an honourable Person observed, I wonder it is not observed by all Christian Nations and Governments, That they are not all governed by this Law; if there be any Direction from the Law of God, that no Man is to die for Treason without two Witnesses, but he may suffer for Murder and Felony with one Witness. Now, I say, I must desire the Gentleman that asserts it, that he would be pleased to shew me it in Scripture, and I will be entirely of his Opinion: But till I hear that very plainly proved, 'tis not within my Reading or Remembrance, and therefore I desire it may have no weight. And now I am up, I shall give my Reasons, why I shall give my Vote for this Bill.

The Reason that governs me, is the Preservation of the Government, and the Commonwealth under which I live; and which I think I am in the Station wherein I stand bound to preserve, by all the Rules of Justice imaginable. Now if your Law hath bounded inferior Courts, but hath not bounded you in this Matter, though you have said inferior Courts shall not determine and give Judgment in such a Case; yet, I think, you are not bound up so here: But if the Matter be proved to my Satisfaction, I may give my Judgment according to the Evidence that comes before me, without that Restriction.

But, Sir, this ought not to be done, 'tis said, but upon extraordinary Occasions. You were told, some Time since, of the Case of the Duke of Monmouth; but it was said, that he was attainted because he was in Arms, and could not be come at otherwise: But I think this is a parallel Case to that, if not much stronger: for here is a Person that hath been accused, and fully proved to have been in Rebellion, and in treasonable Practices with your Enemies, to bring an Invasion upon you, and to subvert your Government; and tho' he hath not been proved to have been in that single Act of the Assassination, yet there is such a Correspondency between one and the other, that I do look upon him as equally guilty of both. Therefore this having been so fully proved, and the Person that stands accused being out of the reach of the common Course of the Law; what Remedy have you, but to fly to your Legislative Power, to attain him upon the Grounds and Allegations of your Bill, that one Witness is withdrawn? And I am very well satisfied, and I think we may presume 'tis by his own, or his Friends Encouragement and Procurement. And I do take this to be as reasonable a Ground for your Bill, as any Thing in the other Case; and I know not what is an extraordinary Case, if this be not one: Is it not an extraordinary Case, for a Plot to be laid for the total Subversion of this Constitution, and our Religion for ever, and we can't come at it to punish it another Way? But it hath been said, the Safety of the Government does does not depend upon him : If we acquit him, we are to acquit every one alike : I hope the Government does not depend upon him alone ; but if you clear him, there is the same Right to clear any Criminal whatsoever. Sir, since I am brought up upon giving my Judgment in this Matter, (though I come as unwillingly as any body to it) I must go according to my Conscience ; and till I can see something of the Law of God, that has been hinted at, made out, I must go according to the Law of my Reason ; and that is, that I must be for the Bill.

Lord Norreys. I will not pretend to tell you what the Authority of this House is, 'tis what they please to make it ; but I am sure they will ground it upon good Reason ; but I think the Reason chiefly given for the Commitment of this Bill, leaves you a Latitude to do what you please, and give no Reason at all ; for it is only to say, I am convinced in my Conscience this Man is guilty ; no matter upon what Proof, no matter whether any Proof or not, you may believe it from his Life and Conversation, and the Company he keeps, or from his Interest ; and that may be Argument enough to find a Man guilty. But till I know a Reason better grounded than this, I cannot be for the Commitment of this Bill.

Sir Christopher Musgrave. I am sure at this Time of Night I am unfit to speak in so great a Matter : I must confess I should not have troubled you, if it had not been in the Case of Blood.

You have had a great Debate before you of the Power of Parliaments, and that hath been sufficiently argued ; and I have not Learning enough to give you any Precedents that have not been already quoted : But every body does agree in this, That what Power you have of this kind, is not to be exercised but upon extraordinary Occasions. Now I would be glad to know, What this extraordinary Occasion is ?

Every body allows, That Treason is the greatest Crime a Man can be guilty of ; and the Charge of this Gentleman is High-Treason : But therefore in this Case, must you exercise this Authority ? Pray wherein does this Case differ from any other Case of High-Treason, that any other Person will be practising against the Government ? All the Difference I can make of it, consists in two Points ; the one is, that he hath prevaricated with the Government ; and the other, That Gentlemen say he hath been a Means of Procrastinating his Trial, in which Time an Evidence hath made his Escape. I will allow you, that 'tis a very great Crime for any one to asperse so great Men as he hath done ; but I would be glad to know, whether there being such an Ingredient, it be sufficient to attain him upon High-Treason upon that Account.

Then as to that of a Witness being gone, Gentlemen have said, They are apt to believe, and there is great Presumption that he hath been the Occasion of this Witness being gone. Is that an Ingredient sufficient, though at present it hath not been proved to you ? But if it had been proved, I should not however think that is Treason. Then if this be the only Difference between this Gentleman, and any other Person that shall be practising to subvert the Government, I would know, if there be but one Witness against any Man, for Conspiring against the King, if they may not have recourse to this Precedent, to proceed against him by a Bill of Attainder ? For the Argument is, Whosoever is endeavouring to subvert the Government, provided there be but one Witness, you are obliged, by virtue of your Legislative Power, to bring a Bill of Attainder against him. And what then ? Of what Use is the great Care and Wisdom of your Ancestors, and your selves, that where a Crime is so great, and the Punishment so great, there should be two Witnesses ?

I was mightily surprized to hear Gentlemen tell you, That two Witnesses is a Form in your Law, and a Form in inferiour Courts. I never could believe that was a Form ; for according to your Law, no Man shall be declared guilty of Treason, unless there be two Witnesses against him ; so that it gives, in a manner, a Determination to the Crime ; that I take to be the Case.

A Gentleman told you, That he was fully satisfied by the Proof, that this Gentleman is guilty : But how can a Man satisfy his own Conscience, to condemn any Man by a Law that is subsequent to the Fact ? For that is the Case ; and pray see the Danger of Precedents : It now will appear upon your Journals, that you have caused to be read a Deposition of a Person that was absent, taken before a Justice of Peace, when the Person accused had no Opportunity to interrogate him ; and likewise, that you have heard a Witness as to what a Man swore in the Trial of another Man : All this will appear upon your Books.

And truly, I would be glad to know, if another Age may not be apt to think, that you took these to make good the Defect of another Witness ; and then I must appeal to you, if you have not admitted of a Testimony, which according to no Law is admitted.

They say you are not tied to the Rules of Westminster-Hall, not their Forms. Is there any Law in being, that says, a Judge may hear a Witness as to what was sworn upon the Trial of another Person, to condemn him that was not Party to that Trial ? If there be no such Law, then the Rule is founded upon Justice and common Right, that nothing shall be brought against a Man when a Man was not a Party when the Oath was made, and he had no Opportunity to examine him.

I thought it my Duty to tell you, That when you have made this Precedent, if any Person shall be accused of Treason but by one Witness, there will be the same Reason to proceed thus against him.

Then (being a little before Eleven a-Clock at Night) the Question was put, Whether the Bill should be Committed? And the House divided :

Ayes, 182.

Noes, 128.

So it passed in the Affirmative, and the Bill was committed to a Committee of the whole House.

Veneris 20 die Novembris, 1696.

The House resolved into a Committee of the whole House upon the said Bill, and several Words being offered as an Amendment to the said Bill, to import Sir John Fenwick's being Guilty ; at last the Words that were agreed on, were these [Of which Treason the said Sir John Fenwick is

is guilty): It was also proposed to the Consideration of the said Committee, Whether the Lords Spiritual should stand in the enacting Part? But upon looking into the several Acts of Attainder, it appeared they were unconcerned in all those Acts of Attainder, in the enacting Part; and so the Committee was satisfied in that Point, and they were left to stand in the Bill by general Consent; and the Bill was ordered to be reported to the House; and afterwards, upon the Report, the House agreed with the Committee in the afore-said Amendment of the Words, importing Sir John Fenwick's being guilty.

Mercurii 25 die Novembris, 1696.

The said Bill against Sir John Fenwick was read the third Time.

Mr. Metbuen. Mr. Speaker, I have not troubled you in any of this long Debate, and do it unwillingly now; but I do think it every Man's Duty, in a Case of this great Importance, freely to own his Opinion, and give his Reasons for it.

The greatest part of the Debate hath run upon two Things; The Inconveniency of Bills of Attainder, and the having them too frequent; that it is necessary to have them sometimes, that any Person might not think they are not out of reach, if they could evade the Laws that were made to protect the People.

I think, in general, that this Bill, as every other, ought to have its Fate upon the particular Circumstances before you; and whoever gives his Affirmative to this Bill, ought to be convinced, That Sir John Fenwick is guilty of High-Treason; and also, That there are extraordinary Reasons why the Nation does prosecute him in so extraordinary Manner; and I do think one of these is not sufficient alone.

If between the Indictment and Arraignment, or Trial, Goodman should have died, and there had been no other Reason for Attainting Sir John Fenwick, only the Defect of his Evidence, I should not have thought it a sufficient Reason, though we should have had an Opportunity of being informed of his particular Evidence, and believed him guilty; and if Sir John Fenwick does not appear guilty, I do not think any Reason of State, though he hath prevaricated, and behaved himself to the Dissatisfaction of every Body; therefore, I think, there must be both these.

You have heard the Evidence; I shall not repeat it, but rather come to these Things that distinguish Sir John Fenwick's Case; only thus, you have received the Evidence against Sir John Fenwick, and given him Liberty to make his Defence, and have fully heard him; which I think hath altered the Reason of a great many Precedents cited from my Lord Coke, and other Authors.

That which distinguishes this Case, is, the great Danger the Nation was in from this Conspiracy, and the Sense the Nation hath had of it; and I find, by the general Opinion of all Persons, this Danger is not at an end.

There seems likewise to be an Opinion as general, That Sir John Fenwick could have contributed to your Safety by a Discovery.

The next Circumstance, That Sir John Fenwick knowing of this, and the Expectation the Nation had from him, for that he could have contributed to your Safety, hath made use of that to put off his Trial; and at last, has made such a Paper, as does shew an Inclination to do you all the Prejudice he can, and tended to the creating of new Dangers; and by this Means Sir John Fenwick, against whom there was two Witnesses when he was indicted, hath delayed his Trial, so that now there is but one; and there is a violent Presumption, That this Person is withdrawn by the Practice of Sir John Fenwick's Friends.

There remains yet with me as great a Consideration as any of these; the publick Resentment of the Nation for such his Behaviour, is the only Means his Practice has left you; and it seems necessary for your Safety, to come the next best Way to what he could have done.

Against the Evidence that hath been given there have been great Doubts raised; not so much whether it be such Evidence as may incline us to believe him to be guilty; but whether it be such as you should hear in the Capacity you are in; and, whether after it is found, such as it is, that is not such as would convict him upon another Trial. Whether you ought to credit it, and that should influence you to give your Vote for this Bill of Attainder; this is a Doubt that I find weighs generally with them that differ from me in Opinion about this Bill; and therefore I desire leave to speak to that Particular.

'Tis said, That you are trying of Sir John Fenwick; that you are Judges; and that you are both Judges and Jury; and that you are obliged to proceed according to the same Rule, though not the Methods, of Westminster-Hall; Secundum allegata & probata.

But the State of the Matter, as it appears to me, is, That you are here in your Legislative Power, making a new Law for the Attainting of Sir John Fenwick; and for exempting his particular Case, and trying of it (if you will use that Word, though improperly); in which Case the Methods differ from what the Law requires in other Cases; for this is never to be a Law for any other afterwards.

Methinks this being the State of the Case, it quite puts us out of the Method of Trials, and all the Laws that are for limiting Rules for Evidence at Trials in Westminster-Hall, and other Judicatures; for it must be agreed, the same Rule of Evidence must be observed in other Places as well as Westminster-Hall, I mean in Impeachments, and it has always been so taken.

This Notion of two Witnesses has so much gained upon some Gentlemen, that we have had some Gentlemen say, That this is required by the Law of Nature, the universal Law of Nature, nay, by the Law of God: And, I think, if it was so, there would be no doubt but it will oblige us.

But therefore I go to the Bottom of the Matter: That any Man deserves to be punished, is because he is Criminal: That this or that Man deserves it, is because he is guilty of a Crime, let his Crime be made evident any Way whatsoever; for whatsoever makes the Truth evident, is, and is accounted in all Laws to be Evidence.

Now

Now as to the Rules for examining any Person, whether he is guilty or not, and the Evidence that is allowed in all Nations, no two Nations agree in the same Evidence for the Trial of Criminals, nor in the Manner of giving the Evidence against them.

Your Trials differ from all other Nations; not only that you are tried by a Jury, which is particular to you, but that the Witnesses are to be produced Face to Face before the Offender; and you have made Laws, that there shall be two Witnesses in Cases of High-Treason; and herein you are the Envy of all other Nations.

Sir, the Evidence that is to be given against Criminals, differs in the same Nation where the Offences differ; there is a Difference between the Evidence that will convict a Man of Felony, and the Evidence that is to convict a Man of Treason; and the Evidence to convict a Man of the same Crime, hath been different in the same Nation, according to the Reason of the Law. No doubt, by the Common Law of England, that Evidence was sufficient, which was sufficient to incline the Jury to believe the Person guilty. This before the Statute of Edward VI. though that was made upon great Reason, and appears to be for the publick Good, by the general Approbation it hath received; but I don't think in your Proceedings here, you are bound by it.

But, Sir, it is said, Shall we that are the Supreme Authority (as we are part of it) go upon less Evidence to satisfy our selves of Sir John Fenwick's Guilt, than the other Courts? And shall we resort to this extraordinary Way in this Case?

Truly, if it did shake the Manner of Trials below, I should be very unwilling to do it; but I do take it clearly, that it cannot; but on the contrary, I think there is no stronger Argument for your resorting to this extraordinary Way, like to that of the Caution which your Law hath provided for the Innocency of all Persons. For if we consider all those Laws that have been made, 'tis plain it must be in the View of our Ancestors, that Criminals might not escape; and the Laws are made for your ordinary Trials, and for those Things that happen usually; and your Government hath this Advantage, That they can keep to that which others cannot: For in a very wise Government (as was observed by a Person that sat in this House the last Time this was debated) the Ways of punishing Crimes of this Nature are extraordinary, when Persons are condemned: They are not only unheard, but they are condemned before they are accused; and that is thought necessary there, which will not be endured here; and yet that Government hath continued so long, and no Endeavours have been to alter it, though so many noble Families have suffered by it, because they are convinced, as to their Constitution, 'tis necessary.

The next Argument is from the Precedent we are about to make; and whatever the other Precedents have been, what you do now will be a Precedent for you and your Posterity; and whilst that is used to make you cautious, and tends to make you consider well, whether it is according to the Duty to your Country to pass this Vote (which no doubt is the only Question before you) 'tis a good Argument.

Sir, if this Precedent shall appear to Posterity to be a Precedent concerning an innocent Man, or a Person whose Guilt was doubted of, or one whose Guilt did not appear, and this Bill should be carried by a prevailing Party, I do agree it was a very ill Precedent: But if the Case be, that this Precedent will appear to Posterity, upon the Truth of the Thing, to be a Precedent made of a Man notoriously guilty; of a Man that had deserved this extraordinary Way of Proceeding, this extraordinary Repentment of the Nation; and that nothing could have hindered this Man from the common Justice of the Nation, but his having endeavoured to elude it in this Matter; and if it appears, that you would not be put off so, but made an Example of this Man, I shall not be sorry it should appear to Posterity; but I believe Posterity will (as I think they ought) thank you for it.

Sir, I do say for my own Particular, while I am Innocent, I should not think my Life in danger to be judged by 400 English Gentlemen, and the Peerage of England, with the Royal Assent; and when I reflect, I can't be of Opinion, That the Government could have procured a Parliament to have passed a Bill of Attainder against my Lord Ruffel, or Mr. Cornish, or Mr. Colledge, I don't think all the Power of the Government could have prevailed with the Parliament to have done it; and here I see that a great many Gentlemen have opposed every Step of this Bill, for fear of making an ill Precedent; yet those Gentlemen do believe in their own private Consciences, that he is guilty; and I can't think that any Person can be in danger by such a Bill, when Gentlemen oppose this Bill only upon the prudential Part, though they still confess him to be guilty.

All the Conclusion I make to my self is, That I do believe, I am convinced in my Conscience (which I think is sufficient, when I act in the Capacity I now do) that Sir John Fenwick is guilty: But there are Reasons so extraordinary to support this Bill of Attainder, that I do not see how any Person, that is so convinced, can refuse to give his Affirmative to this Bill.

Sir Godfrey Copley. Sir, I am very sensible a great deal hath been said upon this Subject; but I think there is something in Duty incumbent upon every Man, especially upon me, who can't concur with the general Sense of the House, to give my Reasons for my Disagreement; and I will make no use of Arguments but such as I can't answer my self. A great deal hath been said upon this Debate by Gentlemen learned in the Law; and many of these, though they have said they would not speak as to the Power of Parliaments, yet the greatest Part of their Arguments have touched upon your Method of Proceedings, and to shew you how they interfere with the Rules of Westminster-Hall; so great is the Force of Custom and Education: But I acknowledge some have brought us Arguments quite of another strain.

This is a Matter of so extraordinary Importance, that I think it proper to consider what Rules we have to go by; but I take the Punishment of Offenders and Criminals to be the necessary Support of all Governments whatsoever, without which no Government can continue; but all Societies of Men have supposed to themselves some Rules, whereby it may be known, whether Offenders are guilty or no.

It is the Custom of our Nation, to have two positive Witnesses to prove Treason. Now it may be imagined, that I make use of this as an Argument, that we are tied up to these Rules: No, I am not of that Opinion, that we are bound by the Rules of any Society whatsoever. The Parliament have a Power to abrogate all Laws that they have passed, if they think good; and so certainly cannot be tied up by any Rules now in being. But, Sir, there are the eternal Rules of Equity, and Justice, and Right Reason, and Conscience; and these, I think, are unalterable, and never to be swerv'd from; and therefore I shall take the Liberty to see how far agreeable our Proceedings are to these Rules.

Sir, I do look upon it, that 'tis a Rule agreeable to what I speak of, That no Man shall be accused by he knows not whom; and that no Man shall be accused, but that the Evidence against him, and he, should be confronted, and brought Face to Face.

I am one of those that believe Sir John Fenwick to be guilty; and there is clear Proof of it by one Witness; and you have added to this an Indictment that is found: But I must needs own, that I think that to be so far from giving any Addition or Strength to the Evidence, that when that is brought in, I look upon the Scales to be lighter than they were before; for if any Record or Writing that is sworn to behind a Man's Back, shall be brought here to supply another Part of the Evidence (and if not so, why is it brought here?) And if that be to be interpreted to make up a Part of the Evidence, I do, by parallel Reason, argue, that the like may make up the Whole at one Time or another; and may be so far made use of, that any profligate Knave, that gives Information before a Justice of Peace, or a Secretary of State, this may rise against any Man whatsoever, when he is obnoxious to the Government; or a Person may be accused for his good Service in this Reign, and this may be set up against him, and he run the Hazard of his Life.

Then, Sir, as to the Necessity of this Matter, I must confess, that those that brought this Matter before us, are much wiser than I; and therefore I will not examine what Reason they had to do it: But it is so little agreeable to me, I wish it had not come here. But is it to be supposed, that your Government is in hazard of any Man that is fast in Newgate? Can any Man think, that Sir John Fenwick can do any Thing in his Condition to hazard it? Can you expect that a Man that hath been Six Months in Prison, and no Body came at him, that he may make such a Discovery as may be worth your while? But suppose you had a Man of Invention and Practice, what a Spur do you put to it? May not a Man of Parts, when he hath no other Way to save himself, may not he frame such a Plot, as may make the best Subjects in England tremble?

Why then, Sir, I do say, by this you are in a very dangerous Way to suffer by the Invention of any Man: And suppose he should be so ignorant, as to know nothing; or so great a Blockhead, to be able to invent nothing, would you hang him either for Ignorance or Insufficiency? I must confess, I dread the Consequence of this for the Nation in general, and for our Posterity. 'Tis not Sir John Fenwick's Life I argue for; I do not think it worth a Debate in this House, nor the Consideration of so great an Assembly; but I do say, if this Method of Proceeding be warranted by an English Parliament, there is an End to the Defence of any Man living, be he never so innocent.

Sir, I remember I heard it mentioned on the other Side of the Way, by an honourable Person, who never lets any Argument want its Weight; That King James attainted a great Number of Persons in a Catalogue, in a Lump. Sir, I am not afraid of what arbitrary Princes do, nor an Irish Parliament; but I am afraid of what shall be done here: I am concerned for the Honour of your Proceedings, that it may not be a Precedent to a future Parliament in an ill Reign, which I am satisfied you would not do. I had some other Thoughts, which I cannot recollect, &c.

Mr. Foley, the Speaker's Son. Sir, the worthy Gentleman that spake first upon this Debate, calls me up: He said, that he thought in this Matter, every one ought to give the Reasons of his Opinion: And in giving the Reasons of my Opinion, I do solemnly protest, I do it with the same Sincerity as I would do, if I was upon my Oath, and of a Jury.

The worthy Gentleman said, That if there could be any Danger from this Precedent, that an innocent Man might lose his Life, he would not be for it. I desire that he would consider, whether there be almost any Instances of any innocent Men that have lost their Lives, but what has proceeded from Precedents that have begun upon guilty Men. The same Gentleman told you, that if we did not believe Sir John Fenwick to be guilty, no other Consideration ought to move us to be for this Bill.

Now the Reason I am against this Bill is, because it does not appear to me, from the Evidence that hath been given at the Bar, that Sir John Fenwick is guilty. And I do think, that which is not legal Evidence is no Evidence; and I do think, that all the Lawyers that have spoke in this Matter, have allowed it to be no legal Evidence. And I desire Gentlemen will consider, if it has not been thought reasonable, that Men should be convicted upon such Evidence, why now it should be said to be necessary? I think the Saying of my Lord Strafford upon his Trial was this: If the Pilot was to direct a Ship in a dangerous Sea, and there was no Buoy to direct his Course, if he there split his Ship, it was excusable; but if there was a Buoy up, then he was accountable for it.

Now, comparing our Government to the Sea, there have been many Rocks and Sands, and many Men have lost their Lives by them; but the Treason Bill seems to be set as a Buoy to avoid that Mischief for the future. Now if we split upon these Rocks, I shall think we are but ill Pilots.

Upon a former Debate we were told, we are not tied up to the Rules of Westminster-Hall, and it was sufficient to justify a Man in giving his Vote for this Bill, that he was satisfied that Sir John Fenwick was guilty: See the Consequence of that, in Things that I have as much believed as I do this, I have found my self mistaken.

When a Jury acts according to legal Evidence, that they have no Reason to mistrust: When a Jury finds according to legal Evidence, they are in no manner of blame: And if this Man be innocent, when you have taken away his Life, and his Estate, and ruined his Family, all that you have to say for it, is, That you have acted according to the best of your own Understandings, guided by your own private Opinion.

Were this the Case of Sir John Fenwick only, and I not to give my Vote, I reckon him so despicable, and because I believe him to be a Traitor, and I think the worse of him for the Part he hath acted since he was in Custody, I should not concern my self about it. But when I speak against this Bill, I speak on the Behalf of all those that may hereafter suffer by such a Precedent as this. Those Precedents that have been urged, don't come near this Point. And though the Power of the Parliament is above that of other Courts, yet there hath been no Precedent that comes up to this, That we should pass a Bill to attain Sir John Fenwick, because he will not give Evidence, or there is no Evidence against him. If Sir John Fenwick be to be hanged, because there is but one Evidence against him, any Man in the World may; and then I think every Man's Life depends upon it, whether this House do like him or not. Consider what a Reverse of Opinion this will be, to what former Parliaments have given in Cases of the like Nature. I think if this Bill does pass, every Man's Life will be as precarious as his Election.

We have been told, how much Danger the Government will be in, if this Bill does not pass. I have as much Zeal for this Government as any Man; but all the Government is concerned, is, That a Man that you think a Traitor should live. And I do think the Government is no more concerned in this Life, than in the Living of any Jacobite in England. But on the other hand, I think the Lives and Liberties of the Subjects of England are concerned; and, by this Bill, you will make all their Lives and Liberties precarious.

I am not for bringing the Blood of Sir John Fenwick upon me, or my Posterity; nor can I consent for to make a Precedent, that a Man may be hanged without Evidence.

Lord Cutts. The worthy Member that spake last but one, told you, That he thought the Life of Sir John Fenwick was not worth the Consideration of this Assembly: I do differ from him in that. If the Scripture tells us, That the most insignificant Creature does not fall without God Almighty's Consideration, I think the Life of a Gentleman may be thought worth ours.

The worthy Gentleman that spake last, told us, That he did believe in his Conscience Sir John Fenwick to be guilty: But because he hath found himself mistaken formerly, when he believed Things with the same appearing Certainty, therefore he may be mistaken now. I hope Gentlemen will not press an Argument upon our Judgments, from Precedents that are only Mistakes: I do agree, That any Man may be mistaken in a Thing which at that Time he thinks himself most certain of; but till that Mistake appears, I say, it ought not to make him doubt of any Thing that he does clearly and distinctly perceive: If otherwise, there is an End of all Religion and Law; and it shakes the Foundation of the most certain Belief a Man can entertain.

As it appears to me, some Gentlemen seem to lay a greater Stress on some Things than they deserve, and are not pleased to answer some Arguments; and therefore I desire leave to speak to two or three Points in short. I shall not say any Thing of the Authority of Parliaments, it speaks itself; nor of the different Consideration of our Proceedings, and that of inferior Courts; that seems to be agreed: But I shall apply myself particularly to mention some Things upon Sir John Fenwick's Case, and in that take Care, as near as I can, not to trouble you with any Thing I have said upon this Subject.

I can't but observe, That every Gentleman that speaks against this Bill, begins with an Introduction, that he believes him Criminal; which does somewhat astonish me: I hope they will explain themselves a little. But to the Point: As to Sir John Fenwick's Case, I did take the Liberty in a former Debate to observe, That it was not only a Conspiracy against the lawful King of England, and had such Parts in it, but also in bringing in a tyrannical and foreign Power upon you. But there is one Consideration I did not mention then, because I thought what I said carried so great weight, it needed it not; I do say, not only as a Christian, as an Englishman, and as a Subject of this Government, against which he hath committed a Crime of the highest Nature; but I will say, as a Man of Honour, that he hath acted contrary to the Rules of Honour. I think Sir John Fenwick had made a much better Figure, if he had appeared in Arms in Flanders, where he might have charged this Prince at the Head of his Troops, than basely have contrived his Death in this Manner.

Sir, I have only one Thing more that I desire to speak to; for what I say is more for my own Information than to desire any Man's Opinion further than he agrees with it: I say, most Gentlemen have likewise owned, That if they thought this an extraordinary Case, they would be for this Bill. I do say, as it appears to me, I do think, if ever there was an extraordinary Case, this is one; and if ever any Government was in Danger, this is, or may be, upon your Resolution to Day. A great deal of Stress hath been laid upon this Argument, That Sir John Fenwick is in Hold: I take that to be nothing, for they keep a Combination together still. 'Tis by Rewards and Punishments that all Governments are supported. Robberies, that were so common in France, that you could not walk after it was dark, by Punishments they have been brought to that, that you may ride from one end of it to another with a Purse of Gold in your hand. And if you think it a trifling Matter, that wicked Men that have such Inclinations should escape, I don't doubt but you may have Plots every Day.

I don't doubt but this Gentleman knows a great deal that he hath never laid before you. I would not be thought to press it as an Argument that he should be condemned, because he won't confess; but I will be bold to say, if he does know of a great many Persons that have been concerned in this Business; if he knows of a Rising that was designed, when this Conspiracy was to be executed (and it may be executed still, if Things shall be ripe for it); I say, though you keep him in Hold, it will be an Encouragement to them to go on in the Cabals, in buying of Arms, &c. I think the Matter before you is no less than the Fate of England, and the Fate of Europe, and of all your Posterity; I am sure it is: And give me leave to say to you one Thing that is Matter of Fact, There are those Stories insinuated abroad, and those Matters of Fact asserted, with relation to a Conspiracy, and reviling this House, that are not fit for me to repeat. But your Enemies last Year, before the breaking out of this Conspiracy, had the same sort of Meetings, and the same sort of Discourse, as they have now. I will end with protesting to you, That I deal with Sir John Fenwick with the same Candour and and Honour, as I shall always desire to be dealt with my self.

Sir Godfrey Copley. That noble Lord misunderstood what I said, as to the small Value I put upon Sir John Fenwick: I did say, That Sir John Fenwick, considered in his single Capacity, I did not think it was worth the while of this House to act in their Legislative Capacity upon him.

Sir Charles Cartwright. I think this Bill is of very great Moment, and ought well to be considered before it passes; for when it is passed, it will be too late to retrieve the ill Consequence which may attend it: There is so much Roguery in the World, I think it a hard Matter to arrive at the Truth. 'Tis not long ago there was a Plot contrived by one Young, and others, against the Bishop of Rocheſter; and so cunningly contrived, That if a Bill of Attainder had been brought in against the Bishop of Rocheſter, before the Truth had been discovered, I do not know what might have been the Consequence of it. I suppose no body questions the Truth of this Plot; but God forbid that every body that hath been named for it should be guilty. It may be true, That there was such a Meeting that Sir John Fenwick is accused of being at, and yet Sir John Fenwick might not be there; and I do not think it sufficiently proved, and therefore I can't give my Consent to this Bill.

Mr. Manley. Sir, I have, as well as I could, attended to this Debate in this Matter; and I did not trouble you in the last Debate, because I was willing to take all the Opportunities I could to inform my self.

'Tis to me an extraordinary Thing, not only for the Matter, but Manner of your Proceedings; which, considering all Circumstances, appears to me to be not only not common but unprecedented; and as we are all in this Matter Judges, so I hope we shall apply our selves to consider of it with that Temper, as may lead us to give a right Judgment. And if I had never so great Obligations upon me, and Dependencies, though from the Crown, I would lay them by, at least they should not influence my Judgment in this Matter. We are to pass Judgment in a Matter of Life and Death upon this Person; and 'tis urged we should do it, because the common Course of Justice will not reach him for the Crime objected against him, which is High-Treason; and the Species of that Treason, as it is laid in the Indictment, is, &c.

Sir, the Evidence that hath been given to support it, hath been the Affirmation of a single Witness at the Bar: Indeed other Things have been alledged in the Bill; but, as hath been said in Westminster-Hall upon another Occasion, They look like Pepper and Salt to me; for in themselves they are not Crimes (I speak with Submission to your Judgments) at least to bear Company with an Accusation of High-Treason.

As to the Evidence; first, Captain Porter tells you, That Sir John Fenwick was at a Meeting at the King's Head, and at Mrs. Mounſiey's afterwards, when there were treasonable Discourses amongst them, and Charnock was directed to go into France; but the End of that is not proved; for the Witnesses that told you of those Meetings, did not tell you, as I observed, that Charnock did go to France; and what he said upon other Occasions, is no Evidence to me. And though we are not tied up to the Rules of Westminster-Hall, I am so young a Member, I know not what Methods are observed in Parliament, that I may in some measure make them a Rule to me.

The Law of England requires two Witnesses upon the greatest Reason; and 'tis not only the Policy of England, but the general Consent (in this Case) of the whole World, and it is grounded upon the Law of God. It was objected by an honourable Gentleman the other Day, to a Gentleman, that he said the Law of God required two Witnesses. A Gentleman who is very near allied to one, from whom he might have early informed himself, made us a Challenge, to shew him where it was to be found: If he will look into Numbers and Deuteronomy, there are three particular Texts very plain in it. The Reason of this is illustrated in the Story of Safannab; her Safety depended upon it: And the Jews, when they prosecuted our Saviour, though they wanted no Malice, nor nothing to animate them, to put him to Death, yet St. Matthew tells us, at last there was two Witnesses found against him: And this being the Law of the Land, and the Law of God, must be my Rule; I must have this Matter proved against Sir John Fenwick, as full as the Law of the Land, and the Law of God requires. The other Evidence brought to maintain this Bill, is what is sworn by Goodman before a Justice of Peace, and the Account of the Evidence given by Goodman to the Grand-Jury, which I must confess I declare I am very far from being convinced ought to have weight with us: But, I think, they must lay a great weight upon it, who give their Vote for this Bill; or otherwise they must give their Vote upon the Testimony of one Witness.

The Reason for this extraordinary Proceeding is, 'tis urged, There is a Necessity for it; the Plot will be lost else, say some; Sir John Fenwick, says others, will escape else. As for the Plot, I wish to God there was no such Thing; but 'tis probable the best Way of ending this Plot would be, if his Majesty in his Wisdom thought fit to interpose with his Mercy and Grace at this Time; and better than for the Legislative Power, in an extraordinary Manner, to take off a Person against whom there is not a legal Evidence. Gentlemen say, they are convinced in their Consciences; but I will appeal to their Consciences, whether there be legal Proof against him; and shall we then interpose, in an extraordinary Manner, to take away his Life?

No Man pretends to answer, but that this Proceeding may be dangerous to Posterity: If he had any Security this might be done without that Danger, it might be some Encouragement to Gentlemen to come into it; but since it may be dangerous, are not we, who are intrusted by the People, to have an equal Care of the Liberty of the People? We are to take Care of his Majesty's Life and Government; and the Reason is, because upon him, and his Government, the publick Safety does depend. 'Tis Salus Populi, is the great Reason that the Law takes such Care of the King; and as we are to do nothing to the Detriment of the King, so we are to do nothing for the King, that may be of Detriment to the People.

An honourable Lord hath been pleased to say, We are not yet out of Danger: I am sorry to hear it, and could not think it, when so noble a Lord is so near the King, and hath so great a Share in taking Care of the publick Safety. But sure, nothing can happen from this Person; there hath been Care taken he should have no Conversation with any body: If I thought there was a Hazard to the Government, or to the King, and no Way to secure us, but taking away this Gentleman's Life; such a Reason as that would make me go counter to my own Reason and Judgment. But I can't be of Opinion, that a Man of Sir John Fenwick's size, who in his best Circumstances indeed, is a Gentleman by Birth, and hath a Gentleman's Fortune, but is now in a great measure without his Estate; so his Fortune can't do any hurt, and his Alliance I suppose is not considerable enough to do any neither.

Then as his Circumstances do not make him so considerable as to do us any hurt, let us take care, that we do not in any case, by his Blood, wound our selves.

Gentlemen lay but little Strefs upon the Dangerfulness of the Precedent; I do lay more; and 'tis chiefly upon that Reason I can't come up to be for this Bill. I would not that so good a Parliament should lay the Foundation of any, by which, in after Ages, the best Men in England may suffer. 'Tis said, an ill Parliament will not want a Precedent, but will make use of their Power; but they will fall sooner into, if led by a good Parliament.

Sir, This is a Matter I would not have presumed to have troubled you in; for I can't think any Thing I can say, will have any weight with any one that is not of my Opinion: But as an Englishman, and as I have the Honour to be of this House, when a Thing of this Nature comes before us, and I am to give my Opinion as a Judge in it, I was willing to give my Reasons for my Opinion. I think this Bill is unprecedented; and you will give me leave to say, it appears to me to be unreasonable, I think it contrary to the fundamental Rules of Reason and Justice; I doubt it may be dangerous to our Constitution; and I fear future Ages may have Reason to repent what we do; and therefore I am against this Bill, and I hope it will not pass.

Sir William Strickland. Sir, I do assure you I shall not in any Thing of this Bill, or any Thing else, run counter to my Conscience or Judgment; but I do think, and I think few deny it, I do think in my Conscience that Sir John Fenwick is guilty; and thinking so, I ought to condemn him. I do think, if we should spare this Gentleman for want of Form, as they call it, now we are in our Legislative Capacity, and there should be any ill Effects of it; and other People, by thinking they might avoid Punishment by the Forms of Westminster-Hall, should have the like Imaginations against his Majesty, and they should take Effect; I should think my self in a great measure guilty of that Misfortune. I think the Kingdom is concerned, and the King's Preservation, in this Bill; and I hope you will pass it.

Mr. Dolben. Mr. Speaker, I am against passing of this Bill; and I shall, with as much brevity as I can, lay before you my Reasons, why I am against it; and probably I should not have troubled the House with them, but that I think it necessary to justify my Opinion in a Case of this importance.

I do admit that the Fact that is charged upon Sir John Fenwick is an Overt-Act of High-Treason, within the 25th of Edw. III. though I must take leave to say, That a Judgment upon a Case, at least as strong as this, has lately been very much arraigned and controverted: But 'tis not my intent to dispute the Nature of this Fact; for I am persuaded, That to consult how to procure an Invasion of this Kingdom with foreign Forces, is an Overt-Act of Compassing the Death of the King; and I do think this Charge does amount to such an Overt-Act. But I beg leave to reflect, How far Overt-Acts of this Nature, which fall directly within any Species of Treason mentioned in the 25th of Edw. III. how far such Treasons are cognizable in Parliament, and within the Intention of that Statute: Indeed, that they are cognizable by the absolute Power of Parliament, there is no doubt.

Sir, That Statute doth first enumerate several Species or Branches of Facts, which it says shall be adjudged Treason, that is, in the Courts of Judicature; and then afterwards it goes on, and says, If any other Case, supposed Treason; not specified in that Act, doth happen before any Justice, the Justices shall tarry without any going to Judgment of the Treason, till the Cause be shewed and declared before the King and his Parliament, whether it ought to be judged Treason or Felony. Now, Sir, with Submission, this is a great Argument, that the Intention of those that made this Law, was, That these Treasons, which were directly under any of these Particulars enumerated by the Statute, that they should be left and be appropriated to the Decision of the inferior Courts; but that Facts of another Nature, which did not come under the Particulars enumerated in the Act, as extraordinary Offences, and Misbehaviour of Magistrates and great Men, and the like; these indeed should be reserved for the Consideration and Judgment of the Parliament, who are only a Match for powerful Offenders, whom the common Justice of the Kingdom can't grapple with. And as this seems to be the Intention of the Makers of the Act, so I think the Instances generally have been pursuant to that Institution; for I know of but one single Instance of any one that ever was attainted by Bill for any Treason that is contained under any Species enumerated in the 25th Edw. III. 'Tis true, where Persons have been out of the reach of the Law, in open Rebellion, or fled from Justice; in these Cases the Parliament have thought fit to attain them; as in the Case of Sir John Mortimer, and others who made an Escape out of the Tower; and the Case of the Regicides; and likewise the Case of the Duke of Monmouth, who was in open Rebellion. But I say, that I have not found in my Reading, upon the best Search I could make, where any that were in Custody were attainted by Bill for any Treason within 25 Edw. III. and that was the Case of Ferham; but I think there is no Precedent of any Man, who is not only in Custody, but hath been indicted, arraigned, and Issue joined, and he hath put himself upon his Country for his Trial; and the Person accused, was to be convicted, or acquitted, by the Verdict of twelve Men; I never heard of any Instance, when after all this Proceeding a Person was taken off from this Trial, and debarr'd the Benefit of the Judgment of his Peers, and the Benefit of his Challenges, and destroyed, and cut off extrajudicially by an Act made on purpose, ex post facto: I never met with any Instance like it, unless it be that of my Lord Strafford; and I believe no body will cite that, if they reflect upon the Preamble of the Act for reversing his Attainder: For in the Preamble, 'tis said, That the turbulent Party did attempt the procuring of that Act, on purpose to condemn him. This shews the Opinion of our Predecessors in relation to Proceedings of this sort; they esteem it contrary to the fundamental Rules of Justice and Right, which Parliaments, as well as other Courts, must be governed by.

Roger Mortimer was attainted, and afterwards his Attainder was reversed; and the Reason declared, because he was attainted against the good Laws and Customs of the Kingdom.

Ferbam's, that I mentioned before; and declared for the future, That it should be, &c.

Another Attainder there was of Sir Thomas Huxey; but that was reversed, and declared to be against all Law. Then there are the Attainders of H. VIII's Time; I shall not particularize them; but besides that, all the History of those Times, and Law-Books, condemned them, as Proceedings against all Law and Justice. There is the Statute of 1 Ed. VI. c. 12. seems directly levelled against those Attainders in the preceding Reign; for it says, That the Proceedings in King H. VIII's Time, were grounded upon Laws that were extreme and terrible; and therefore, that there might be no Proceedings of that kind for the future, it reduces all Treasons to the ancient Standard of 25 Edw. III. and goes on, and enacts, That no Man shall be convicted or condemned for Treason, but upon the Testimony of two lawful Witnesses.

Now I take that to be a general Law, and to extend to all Convictions and Condemnations for Treason; and can't but declare my Opinion of it, That it must extend to Bills of Attainder, since these are the principal and most powerful Convictions and Condemnations; and if that Statute does extend to Bills of Attainder, then pray consider, whether this Bill of Attainder now be supported by such Evidence as the Statute requires? There was indeed one lawful Witness produced; but instead of the other, they have only produced a Record between Parties not concerned in this Bill, and the Depositions of a Person, whether living or dead non constat; and I believe no Body will say these Depositions will be equivalent to a second Witness.

I do believe a great many Gentlemen are of Opinion, That those Rules of Evidence are not to guide you here: But I beg Pardon that I can't possibly be of that Opinion; I rather incline to my Lord Chief-Justice Vaughan's Notion, That though we are not bound by the Forms of Law, yet we are bound by the Rules of Law; every Body allows we are bound as to the Nature of the Fact; every Body will take himself bound by the Statute of 25 Edw. III. to form his Judgment as to the Fact: Why are not we then bound by these Acts? Likewise as to the Evidence, and the Proof of the Fact; if 25 Edw. III. be binding to us, so as to prescribe us a Rule to judge the Fact by, Why are not the Statutes of Edw. VI. binding to us as to the Evidence of that Fact?

But say some Gentlemen, if there be not two Witnesses, that is from Sir John Fenwick or his Agents. Sir, no Gentlemen will say, that there hath been any Proof of that; the very Bill does not charge him with it: But taking it for granted, what shall follow upon that? Shall it therefore follow, that Sir John Fenwick shall immediately be put to Death? No, God forbid! I think there is no Parity between the Crime of seducing away a Witness, and the Judgment of Death: But I think this a more reasonable and natural Inference to be made, That because Sir John Fenwick hath seduced away a Witness, therefore it is just to make a Law, that the Depositions of that Witness should be of as good Force and Effect, as if Goodman was here, to give it viva voce; for then you will not take from him the Benefit of his Trial, nor the Benefit of his Challenges, which is the Birth-right of every Englishman.

And one Thing I will say further: These Bills of Attainder are like Sisyphus's Stone, they have rolled back upon those that have been the Promoters of them. 'Tis known, that my Lord Cromwell was the first Man that promoted them in H. VIII's Time; and the Advice that he gave his Master for the Ruin of others, proved fatal to himself.

Sir, this is the last Time we shall have the Opportunity of considering this Matter: I must take leave to declare, That my Opinion is, That if I consent to the passing of this Bill against Sir John Fenwick's Life, upon any other Grounds than such as are entirely agreeable, and justifiable by the Laws of God and Man, I am guilty of the Death of Sir John Fenwick. I am not satisfied that I can give my Consent to this Bill upon those Grounds, and therefore I beg leave to be against it.

Sir Edw. Seymour. Mr. Speaker, you all know I have born my Testimony against this Bill, being not persuaded that it is just: Now we are come to the finishing Part of it; and I shall lay before you those Reasons that prevail with me, and submit them to the Judgment of the House; and if I am more tedious than I used to be, I hope the Occasion is such, that you will pardon me; for I will endeavour to contract my self into as near a Compass as I can.

I shall not trouble you with any Arguments that have been laid before you already; nor shall I enter into the Examination of Precedents; a great many have been laid before you, and a great many of them have been reversed, most of them; and the Reasons why they have been reversed, because the Persons condemned have not had the due Benefit of the Law: And if that be a good Reason for reversing of such an Attainder, 'tis a good Reason why you should not do it.

I can't but take Notice, That the Beginning of this Bill in the House of Commons is the first Step of this kind, that hath been made in Parliament, except that of the Duke of Monmouth; and the Reason of it, I take to be this, because you hear not upon Oath; you condemn not upon Oath: You, nor the Party under Accusation have that Advantage against a forsworn Evidence, as there is in the other House; the Method has been to pass such Bills in the House of Lords, and transmit them hither, upon which you then judge.

I think, in this Case you have no Evidence; and instead of two Witnesses, you have no Witness at all; for as to Goodman, De non apparentibus & non existentibus eadem est ratio. As to Porter, he hath been examined: But when you consider, that he was a Person engaged in this Conspiracy, and that he had no Repentance of his Crime till he was discovered, and then he comes to be an Evidence; how far that shall sway, every Man must allow, that I must submit to you: But thus much I may say, every Man must allow me, that in far less Cases no Man that does swear for himself, or upon his own Account, is to be admitted as an Evidence. If a Robbery be committed in an Hundred, though a Man be but to pay a Groat towards it, he shall not be an Evidence; how much more then in a Case, when a Man comes to swear to take away another Man's Life to save his own; for he is not in the Condition of a Freeman, who gives his Evidence without check or controule, but he is drudging on for his Pardon, as the Counsel told you, which depends according to the Evidence he does give or not give.

For my Part, I can't go so far as some Gentlemen have done, to say Sir John Fenwick is guilty: For where there is no Law, there is no Transgression; a Man that is guilty, must be guilty according to the Law: And the Law hath required and said, That there shall be no Treason but what is proved by two Witnesses, and here it appears that you have not one. The same Law that calls it Treason, says it shall be so proved: Then if you pass this Bill, you make that Treason which before was not Treason.

Sir, the Law does require two Witnesses, and there is divine Authority for it too: It hath been hinted at, the Place in Numbers, No Man is to die upon single Evidence; and it says, These are the Statutes you shall observe throughout your Generations and Dwellings. But I will go a little further, because a worthy Gentleman declared, there was no such Law of God. He will find in the 19th of Deuteronomy, a Case just as 'tis here; for the Case of High-Treason was Idolatry at that Time; and the Law says, Whoever shall set up Idols, shall be stoned to Death; but it says, No Man shall be condemned to die by the Mouth of one Witness, but by two or three Witnesses he shall suffer: I think this is positive enough. I shall not trouble you with more Instances, though I could repeat several.

Sir, the Law enjoins Forms strictly, even to the least Circumstance: If a Man be condemned to die, and after he is condemned to die, another take away the Life of that Man, 'tis Murder. I will go further: If the Officer that is to do Execution, if a Man be condemned to be hanged, drawn and quartered; if the Officer shot him, it is Murder in him; so that Men are not left to a discretionary Power to act according to their Consciences.

I take the Reason by which this Bill is supported, to be destructive to all human Society; for if that be admitted, that a Man shall act according to his Conscience, and not according to the Rules that are prescribed him, I know not who is safe; For how can an innocent Man make his Defence upon that Principle? It is a safe Consideration for them that take upon them that Way of judging, because they are bound by no Rules; but what hath not that done almost within Memory; Felton, that killed the Duke of Buckingham, what was his Justification, but he was persuaded in Conscience he did well in so doing. Ravillac, that killed H. IV. in France, he justified the same by his Conscience, and said he had done a good Thing; and I may say this Argument of Conscience hath acted all the Villainy of the last Age, and I am afraid hath gone a great Way to disturb the Happiness of this.

For if this be a Rule to this House, How is the King bound? I thought he had been bound by Law; but if this shall be admitted as an Argument, 'tis enough to say, if this House be arbitrary, the King is. I do not reflect upon this Reign; but it will be enough to say, tho' he act against Law, and turn twenty Colleges out of Doors, his Conscience persuades him to it. We see how unbounded Liberty the Lords take, is, they are become Masters of all our Estates; and I would be very loath for my Estate to depend upon the feeble Tenure of a Lord's Conscience.

If then this be the Case, as it is, according to this Method, I desire to know into what Condition we shall bring our selves?

You have been told, it is expected from you by your Country, that you should exert this Authority and Power: Sir, I would have been glad that in Cases more reasonable we had exerted this Authority and Power of Parliament; I wish it had gone to the preventing the debasing and abusing your Coin; I wish it could be exerted, that we might not see our selves cheated under Countenance of an Act of Parliament; but contrary to that, you are fond of being sprinkled with the Blood of Sir John Fenwick. As long as the Government is not in danger, I believe the Country would be glad that their Blood might run secure in their Veins, and not be tapt upon every Occasion to serve a Turn; for if you break the Laws, what Man can promise himself Security?

We know the Consequence, if this Bill does not pass; Sir John Fenwick may live in Misery all his Time.

But what this Precedent may make, no Man can foresee. This Bill is against the Law of God; against the Law of the Land; it does contribute to the Subversion of the Constitution, and to the Subversion of all Government; for if there be Rules to be observed in all Governments, and no Government can be without them, if you subvert those Rules, you destroy the Government; and therefore for these Considerations, no Body will think it strange, if I give my Negative to this Bill.

Mr. Chancel. of the Excheq. Sir, the Gentleman that spake last, hath carried the Reason against this Bill a little further than some others; for it seems now, we are not to reject the Bill for want of one Witness that is legal in Westminster-Hall, but it seems there is no Evidence at all; and by Capt. Porter's not being pardoned, and yet drudging for his Pardon; as to all that have been condemned upon his Testimony, he hath arraigned the Evidence as not sufficient, and hopes that will be the Judgment of the House upon this Bill. I think if the House reject this Bill upon that Argument, it will go further than many mean that oppose it.

Another Thing he says, He compares the Convictions that I have upon my Judgment, and of every Body else that speaks from the Proofs that are made, that he is guilty, to the Whimsy of two or three mad Men; whereas we go according to the Evidence brought at the Bar; we don't go upon the Whimsies of Ravillac nor Felton, but upon the Proofs that have been made here; and though there are not two Witnesses, yet upon what appears in Proof, I am convinced that he is guilty; and upon that Conviction, I think, according to the Duty I owe my Country, and the Constitution of England, when a Bill does come to punish the Man whom I think guilty, I think I ought to be for the Bill. As to what is said out of Deuteronomy, That the Law of God was against it, if you will argue à Fortiori, 'tis literally true in the Case of Murder; but whether Murder or Treason, there is the Life of a Man concerned; and 'tis not the Punishment, whether to be hanged, or hanged, drawn, and quartered, that makes any great Difference; and give me leave to say, if you go to make Precedents from the Jewish Law, then I say, the Law of England is against that Law, in Case of Murder; and by the same Reason you may desire leave to bring in a Bill to repeal all those Laws.

Sir, if this was the eternal Law of God and Man, where was this eternal Law in England before Edward VIth Time? If it be the eternal Law, that there must be two Witnesses, why does it not hold in England even in some Cases of Treason to this Day; I mean the Treason of Clipping and Coining? So that if Gentlemen will argue, the Nature of these Faults are what the Law of every Country ordains, and that is the Law.

And the Way of Evidence and Proof too differs in every Country; and I may affirm, That there never was any Government in which there was not a Power lodged somewhere to be exerted upon extraordinary Occasions, beyond the legal Way of Prosecution.

I don't care to travel into the several Countries to see how their Constitution is, but I believe there is not one Place in Europe in which it is strictly necessary there should be two Witnesses to take away the Life of a Man; but it is generally so as it is here in all ordinary Cases, but in this very Law; this last Law does not go upon two Witnesses, but you have a Proviso in it does absolutely exempt Proceedings in Parliament: I do not infer from thence, that you should not have two Witnesses, if you proceed by way of Impeachment, I think you ought; and so for having Witnesses upon Oath, &c. When these Proceedings are in Parliament, there is a direct Proviso, by which the Parliament is exempted from those Rules. Upon the whole Matter, I think this Man is guilty; I think the Precedent would be more fatal, to say, that a Parliament can't proceed in such a Case, than that a guilty Man should suffer. I think this Bill comes before you with more Circumstances and Reason to justify it, than any that hath been brought here before; here is a Bill found against him by his Country, the Evidence of his Friends having tampered with one of the Witnesses, confirmed by a Jury, &c.

A learned Gentleman says, He would come up to make this Paper Evidence; but can't come up to make such a Law, by which every Man that is concerned in that Deposition would be affected: But here is something particular in this Case, a Man that hath been abroad, and hath not used the like Artifice, I think you ought not to use the like Power to punish him that is not guilty of the like Crime. And therefore I shall conclude; but I must take notice of one Thing: It was said, That this was the first Precedent of this kind begun in this House, but that of the Duke of Monmouth: But I believe, if this Bill of Attainder is not to be begun in this House, 'tis not to be brought in at all; for I believe there is a Statute, That the Life of a Commoner is never to be meddled with by the Lords originally. I will not trouble you any further: I do in my Conscience think that Sir John Fenwick is guilty, and therefore I am for this Bill.

Mr. Pelham. I did not think to have troubled you this Day: I did rather intend to have left it to others that can speak better, or have not spoken upon this Subject; but that which hath been mentioned by several, as if they did think that we who mentioned the Law of God upon this Occasion, did it as if we did think the Law of God was binding to you at this Day: I never thought any such Thing otherwise than as to the Morality of it, so far forth as it is grounded upon Reason and Justice, and tends to the clearing of an innocent Man; and so far we and all Mankind are bound by it; and that Law having been afterwards confirmed in the New-Testament by our Saviour and his Apostles, at least approved of by them; and this having been confirmed by the Law of England likewise; I do not think this a fit Occasion for you to pass by so fundamental a Law as that is: And I conclude with this, That I can't satisfy my self in my Conscience, and should think some Misfortune might follow me and my Posterity, if I passed Sentence upon Sir John Fenwick's Life, upon less Evidence than the Law of England requires.

Sir H. Crofts. I shall endeavour as much as I can, to give you little trouble in this Matter: But because it hath been hinted and remarked so particularly upon me, I must beg leave to discharge my Duty, as well as my Conscience, as to what I said here the other Day.

Sir, I do very much forget my self, if I did assert, That there was no such Place in Scripture that required two Witnesses: The Thing that I said, was this, That if any Gentleman could shew me any Rule from Scripture that required two Witnesses, more in the Case of Treason than in the Case of Murder and Felony, I should be glad to see it. I do say that the Scripture shall be a Rule to me, as far as the Scripture requires; but I do take the Jewish Law not to be so absolutely literally binding upon us here. And as to the Text out of Numbers, that very Text of Scripture is particularly and literally applicable to Murder; and if that be binding now, we have been very much misguided by our Predecessors; and I think we are bound to take it in hand, to repeal all Laws that are against it.

Sir, he is pleased to deny us, in some measure, the Liberty of being guided by our Consciences: Truly, I don't know what he would have Gentlemen go by: Truly, let him go by what Rules he pleases, I will go by the Rule of my Conscience, and will not do any thing against it upon any Consideration or Consequence whatsoever; nor will I part from the Liberty and Power of Parliaments, for any Rule or Law of inferior Courts whatsoever.

Sir, you are told, You ought to be guided by the Rules of Law, that is not the Forms of Law, but the Rules of Law. Sir, I say, if these Rules were made to bind Parliaments, it was reasonable they should be bound by them; but if they were made only to bind inferior Courts, they were far enough from being intended to put a Cramp upon the Proceedings of Parliament; and if you shall subject your selves to them, you give the Lawyers such a Power, that I don't doubt, but their Books will be of greater Authority than your Journals: Therefore in Consideration of that, and because I would leave that which is the Right of Parliaments to my Successors, I shall not submit to that.

Therefore, I say, I come clear to the Point, Whether Sir John Fenwick be guilty or not; only I must observe a little back, That as to those Instances that the worthy Member was pleased to make use of, of Ravillac, and of Felton; shall those extraordinary Cases, that which Men did in heat of Blood and private Malice, shall these be brought to bear a Parallel with what is done in Parliament for the Justice of the Nation? I don't doubt but there are Men enough, in their Consciences, at least with pretence of it, will justify the Destruction of your Government and Religion, and every Thing Thing else: All those Men that deny the Right of your Government, have Conscience and Justice enough to subvert it, if they could; and therefore I do not so much wonder, that many Men without Doors have argued in that Nature.

But I say, my Conscience is the Rule I must go by; and to me the Question is, only whether Sir John Fenwick be guilty, or not guilty, and am called to give my Judgment in it; and I think I am bound by the Law of Nature, by the Law of the Nation, and I see nothing in the Law of God that prohibits me, to give my Judgment according to the Evidence, and the Opinion I have in my Conscience of the Truth of it.

If there be no such Rule, that requires two Witnesses binding upon me; if I may go upon one Witness, if I believe he speaks true, and that the Person is guilty; then I am bound to act for the Preservation of the Nation, and all our Posterity: They that made this Attempt, made it upon you and your Posterity for ever: 'Tis not so small a Matter as some represent it; 'tis not the Person, so much as the Nature of the Fact we are to consider; and we are not to let Men escape Punishment according to their Greatness or their Smallness, but according to the Nature of the Fact, and their Guilt. I think I have that Freedom, and I am so little bound by those Rules that have been urged, that if both Witnesses were here, and gave Testimony against him, if I did not believe him to be guilty, I would lose my Life rather than vote him so; but on the contrary, if here be sufficient Evidence to convince me, though not according to the Rules of inferior Courts, I will not subject the Freedom of Parliaments to those Rules.

Sir, you have been told formerly, and I think it a Matter of that Weight, I beg leave to urge it again, because 'tis a great Reason that guides me in this Matter; if you lay it down for a Doctrine in this House (for a Resolution here taken is as much a Rule as a Law, for it shall be brought as a Precedent); and therefore, if it shall be laid down as a Rule here, that you will never attaint any Man, or find him guilty, but upon two Witnesses, I think the Government, and all you have, stands upon a tottering Foundation: He must be a very ordinary Statesman, that can't lay his Plot so, as you shan't reach him by two Witnesses.

Therefore, I say, I think it becomes the Wisdom of Parliament, not to declare themselves bound in that respect; I would have them bound by Justice, but not by the common Rule of the Law.

Sir Robert Cotton. Sir, I do find that Gentlemen do very much insist in this Case, That if a Gentleman does believe that Sir John Fenwick is guilty, he must give his Vote for the passing of this Bill: If that be so, I am glad that Opinion did not take Place in the last Reign; if it had, I am of Opinion I should not have been here now, and I believe my Lord Warrington, who was very instrumental in promoting this Revolution, would not have died in his Bed. My Lord and I were accused of a Crime, which I believe, if proved by two Witnesses, had been Treason. I have heard some Gentlemen say in this House, they did believe my Lord Warrington was guilty (though he was not guilty of the Fact as it was laid.) There was a Man sworn, &c. and there was some corroborating Evidence; but as to Mr. Fley, and my self, there was none but this particular Person, and they indicted us of Misdemeanor; though it would have been Treason, if there had been two Witnesses. Now if the same Fact was Treason when proved by two Witnesses, and but Misdemeanor when proved by one, methinks we are doing an extraordinary Thing; we are going, after the Fact committed, to make that which is but a Misdemeanor, to be Treason. And for these and other Reasons, I can't agree to the passing of this Bill.

Lord Norreys. Sir, though I had always an Apprehension of the ill Consequence of this Bill, yet never so much as now; for this Gentleman hath given Arguments that shake me more than all that I have heard before; for he says, there are a great many Men, if they may proceed according to their Consciences, will subvert this Government, and bring in King James and arbitrary Power: And he tells you, that every Precedent in this House, is equal to a Law, and will justify the like for the future. I am sure I am very unwilling to make a Precedent that shall justify Men in such ill Actions, in saying their Consciences prompted them to it.

Then a Question was put for bringing in Candles; which passed in the Affirmative, and they were brought in.

Mr. Hamond. I don't think the Power of Parliaments in Question in this Case; but then, as all other Powers, it must be founded upon Justice, and never used but upon extraordinary Occasions, and when Criminals are not to be met with otherwise. The Power of Parliament is not lessened, if this Bill does not pass: But the Question is, Whether this Power shall be exerted in this Case? What Gentlemen say of being guided by Conscience, hath no Weight with me, further than that is governed by the Law of the Land: If it be to be admitted in the Case of Life and Blood, why not in Meum & Tuum? Why was he brought to the Bar then, if, according to our private Judgment, we are to determine this Matter? No Man thought but he was guilty.

I beg leave to mention one Thing that is come to my Knowledge: After the Trial and Condemnation of Mr. Cook, I had an Order sent me, that I might see him; and I went to him by Virtue of that Order; and the greatest Part of the Time I spent with him, he took up in declaring against the Evidence of Goodman, and that he would receive the Sacrament upon it, and give it in Writing, as his dying Words. I saw also three positive Witnesses confront him at his Trial; and when I heard him say this, it weighed so much with me, that I have very great Ground of Suspicion, that Goodman was perjured in the Case of Cook.

Here hath been popular Expressions of Plots, and Jacobites, that no Man can apply to this particular Case, or say, this is a Case wherein we ought to use this extraordinary Power: He was in the Hands of the Law, and no Body can say, that the Government must sink, if he does not die. If we go from the Rules of Justice, I believe it will give a great Blow to the Government.

Mr. Vernon. Sir, I rise up only upon what that worthy Gentleman hath offered unto you; for I did not think to trouble you with any Thing of that Nature. But if you will give me leave to acquaint you with what I believe, who have been later with him him than this Gentleman, and much oftner. Sir, he does tell me, that he is very far from denying what hath been sworn against Sir John Fenwick and himself, concerning the Consultation to bring over the French; for he hath a very particular Remembrance of it: And if that Gentleman was to speak with him now, he would satisfy him, I believe, in that Point. And since I am up, I think every Man that speaks upon this Occasion, should likewise give some Account of himself, in what Manner, and for what Reason, he discharges his Conscience here: I hope I may use that Word, since Gentlemen make use of Conscience for his Acquittal; and a Man ought to have a very good Conscience for his Condemnation.

As to Sir John Fenwick's Innocence, I wish he had given no Occasion to have it called in question: And since he did fall under this Accusation, I wish he, or his Counsel for him, would have taken some Pains to have made his Innocency appear: But I don't find the Question is, Whether Sir John Fenwick is guilty? But whether there be any Evidence of his Guilt? And I shall tell you, in short, my Opinion of that: I take the Proof of the Fact to be, in general, such a Demonstration, as the Nature of the Thing is capable of; and that is sufficient, and capable to convince a reasonable, honest, unprejudiced Man, of the Truth of what is asserted. And there is no manner of Doubt left, Whether it is so or no; nor Appearance of any Possibility, that it could be otherwise. I think there hath been that Proof in this Case, and nothing attempted to disprove it, and nothing hath been proved on Sir John Fenwick's Behalf, that any Wrong hath been done him: And therefore in short, my Sense is, That whereas some Gentlemen think him guilty, but the Matter not proved, I think him guilty, because 'tis proved; and there hath been no Offer made to disprove it.

Mr. Bromley Warr. Some Gentlemen have spoke of the Power of Parliaments; but I shall say nothing to their Power, which, I have learned from my Lord Coke, is so transcendent and absolute, that it cannot be confined within any Bounds: But the more Just and Honourable it ought to be in its Proceedings, to give an Example to inferior Courts. And though their Power cannot be deny'd, yet the Exercise of it, hath been often censured and condemned; and Acts that have passed in one Parliament, have been in the same Reign repealed, and sometimes severely branded, Id possumus, quod jure possumus. 'Tis certain, here is a Defect of legal Evidence: We are not tied here to the Forms of Westminster-Hall; but certainly, with Submission, we ought to tie our selves up to the Rules of Westminster-Hall, especially when they are founded upon common Justice, which is the same, is not mutable, and ought to be universal.

By the Law of the Land, no Person ought to be convicted in Cases of Treason, but upon two Witnesses; the Law of God is the same. However, if you will pass this Bill, all Persons must acquiesce; and there is no disputing of your Power afterwards. It hath been an Argument used to Day, That the Security of the Government requires the Passing of this Bill; which I think to be a good one too, if they can make it appear, that unless you proceed in this Way, the Government is in Danger: Though I must observe, it was not that Consideration, but the Vin-dication of an honourable Person's Reputation, that brought this Matter first before you.

It does not appear to me, that Sir John Fenwick's Life or Death can endanger the Government. You have been told of a Design that he hath been engaged in, and is carried on at this Time; That an Invasion from France seems to threaten us: The former Design hath been happily discovered and defeated; and 'tis not probable, that Sir John Fenwick should have any great Share in any that is carrying on at present: And as far as I can learn, he is not so considerable a Man, in his own Person or Interest, that we need fear him.

An honourable Person said, If we do not pass this Bill, they that sent us here, would give us no Thanks. 'Tis not a good Way of arguing; but, I believe, if those look forward, they will thank us. Sir, in the Act for declaring the Rights and Liberties of the People, you have it said, That the late King James, by the Assistance of divers evil Counsellors, &c. How comes it to pass, that we have never Attainted any of them? And if we are for proceeding in this Way of Attainder, because it pleases them that sent us hither, I dare say, the Attainting one of those Men, would gratify those that sent us hither, more than the Attainting twenty such as Sir John Fenwick. It was pretty well known what Share some Gentlemen had in bringing in of Popery and Arbitrary Power; and I will take the Liberty to say, That there is never a Gentleman in this House, but believes them to be the worst of Criminals.

Upon the whole Matter, I do not think you have any Occasion to exert a Power, that no body denies: I see no Security this will be to the Government, and consequently, no Necessity of it. I think you are making a most dangerous Precedent, and that it will be of ill Consequence to you; and therefore I am against this Bill.

Mr. Smith. Sir, I will be as short as I can; and if it had not been for something in this Day's Debate, I should not have troubled you. As to what was said by the Gentleman that spake last, of making Examples of some that had been Criminal in the last Reign: How that came to happen, that no such Examples were made, I shall not now entertain you; but I believe most of the Gentlemen in the House know pretty well.

But I take the Matter before you is, What Evidence you have to prove Sir John Fenwick to be guilty? and Whether there be not an extraordinary Occasion at this Time to exert the Legislative Power.

I shall not enter into the Matter of Precedents, those are out of my Province, but I have read some: However, it shall not pass upon me for a Rule, because some Bills have been reversed, no others shall be brought in; it is possible, that the reversing of them, may be worse than the first bringing of them in.

But to apply my self to the Evidence; I cannot but observe one Thing, that seems this Day extraordinary: We are told by some Gentlemen, they are against our Proceeding upon this Bill, because it does not quadrate to the Rules of Westminster-Hall; and at the same Time, Gentlemen take Liberty to make Exceptions here against that Evidence that Westminster-Hall has allowed: That they should take Exceptions to that Evidence which the Law of England allows to be good! For it is notorious, it hath been admitted in Westminster-Hall; and Gentlemen might as well have told you, That those Men that suffered, died innocent, as to have denied it. And I think there is a further strengthening of his Evidence; for there is not one Man, who hath died upon his Evidence, but hath acknowledged himself guilty of what he hath charged him with.

As to the Matter of the other Evidence, Sir, I do not say, that it is Evidence that will come at Westminster-Hall; but at the same time, give me leave to tell you, they seem to lay a little stress upon it, when they tell you, they believe it was false Evidence, and instance in what Cook said to a Gentleman of this House, after his Condemnation; but I think thus far I may say, That when you sent some of your Members to examine Sir John Freind, he did own all those Persons to be at that Place; and that is a much better Argument for the Validity of Goodman's Testimony. But as to the Matter before you, some Gentlemen have made it a Question, Whether Sir John Fenwick be so considerable a Man, as you should proceed in this extraordinary Manner with: Though they all say, you may do it, yet at the same Time they tell you, this was never put in Execution, but they were in the Wrong that did it.

Now, Sir, the Question is, Whether you should make use of this Power at this Time? Say some, The Plot is over: I wish it was: But when a Conspiracy hath been laid so deep and general as this was, 'tis not the hanging of one or two that will make us safe; when 'tis apparent to you, here is all the Artifice in the World, all the Endeavours in the World, by Sir John Fenwick's Friends, to remove Goodman out of the Way; 'tis some Argument that he had something to say to him: And when we see Prisons broke open daily; we have known Persons murdered in the Streets for giving Evidence. Very notorious is the Case of Dodsworth: You have Plots all about you; and yet can you think there is no Occasion to make use of this extraordinary Power?

I would have as great a Conviction upon my Conscience as I could; but 'tis very hard a Man must throw his Conscience aside in the Case: 'Tis very hard to believe, That if there be two Witnesses produced, though I don't believe the Witnesses, yet I am safe if I condemn the Man; and if there be but one Witness, I am to acquit the Man, though I believe him to be guilty.

And though they go to Scripture, to tell you there must be two Witnesses, yet they don't go so far as to tell you there have been very extraordinary Things done, even by God himself, for the preserving a Community.

And there is the Reason of it, that one Witness may take away a Man's Life in one Case, and not in another. There was a Thing said, that was one Thing that occasioned my standing up: A Gentleman said, truly, it seemed to him to be a better Way to put an End to the Plot, to have an Act of Indemnity, than the Conviction of Sir John Fenwick would be. Sir, there seems very little Reason for Acts of Indemnity, when we have seen an Act passed so lately, which has not restrained Persons, nor brought them to a Sense of their Duty; and we have heard Persons own at your Bar, That the Fact was committed just after the Act of Indemnity. Sir, I do heartily, according to my Conscience, vote for this Bill.

Mr. Harcourt. Sir, I am sensible it is very difficult to say any thing, and not seem tedious at this Time of Night; but I take it to be my Duty not to be silent in this Matter.

All the Arguments, that I remember have been made use of in any former Debate, or in this Day's, may be reduced, in short, to these two Heads; The Danger of the Government, and Gentlemen's private Opinion.

Sir, as to the Danger of the Government, if any Body will convince me there is such Danger, (I promise him, if it be worth his while so to do) I will be his Profelyte, and vote for this Bill: But, to tell me the Government is in Danger, and that the Fate of England and Europe depends upon this Bill, is certainly rather offered to amuse, than to convince.

It hath been asked, Can the Circumstances that Sir John Fenwick is in admit of any Danger to the Government, which hath Power over his Liberty every Day, and may restrain him of his Liberty during his Life? A Man, by the Account I have had of him, of little Interest, not worth Ninepence. (I have no Acquaintance with him, and so I may easily mistake his Circumstances.) But, Sir, whatever his Circumstances are, he is in safe Custody, and no doubt there he will be kept; and to say the Government is in Danger by such a Man, sure, that cannot be thought by any Man living: And God forbid this should be the Case of the Government, that it cannot support it self without taking away this unfortunate Gentleman's Life, contrary to the Rules of Law!

For the Argument of private Opinion, 'tis almost as dangerous as the Precedent you are making. I will not argue it from the Case of the People, Enthusiasts and Madmen; but I will urge it in the Case of Men that sat in Judgment. If Opinion is to justify the Condemning of a Man, let us never more call the Verdicts against Mr. Cornish, Mr. Sidney, Lord Russel, and others, Murders. Ask the Jury, no doubt none of them are so silly, but in his Opinion, they were guilty. But if Opinion may condemn a Man without Proof, why not acquit him as well, where there is Proof? Such a Practice, I am sure, would never be endured.

The properest Method, I think, was proposed by the Gentleman that began the Debate; and I beg Leave to follow the same Steps, to consider his Guilt, how it appears to us, and whether there be any Reason for this extraordinary Manner of Proceeding.

The Recital of that Bill are the Arguments for it; and those we send up to the House of Lords for the Passing of this Bill: And first, it says, That Sir John Fenwick was indicted by the Testimony of Porter and Goodman, &c. It says, that several Days were appointed for his Trial; and at one of those Days the Trial had come on, if it had not been for the Discovery that he pretended to make; but it does not say it was put off at any other Days or Times, for that Reason: But it goes on, and says, He hath made several Reflections, &c. instead of making an ingenuous Discovery; and then it recites how that Goodman is withdrawn.

I would beg leave to put Gentlemen in mind of what was a great Inducement to bring this Bill in: It was said, That Sir John Fenwick and his Relations had done it; that they would prove that Goodman was withdrawn by his Means. Give me leave to say, That there was no Proof of it, unless the Hearsay of Clancy, and the Actions of my Lady Fenwick, are to be Evidence, contrary to the known Laws of England, to effect this unhappy Gentleman in the Case of his Life: I say, if any Gentleman had been of another Opinion, no doubt, he would have offered that Amendment to the Committee.

As to the Discovery that Sir John Fenwick hath made, it does not appear to me, whether it be true or false: It is one Thing to give a Vote to clear a Gentleman's Reputation, and another Thing to carry it so far, as to give Judgment, That the Person that made those Reflections shall die, and that before any Proof of their Falshood.

Here is an Indictment found, and here is an Evidence withdrawn; that is all I am satisfied in: And supposing the Person guilty, it is no manner of Inducement from these Arguments, to proceed in this extraordinary Manner.

But I would consider the Matter of the Amendment made at the Committee [Of which Treasons he the said Sir John Fenwick is guilty.] I can't say that; and therefore I can't vote for the Bill. If he be guilty, it does not appear so by legal Evidence; and therefore I am to judge him, as he appears to me, an innocent Man. The Law requires two Witnesses to convict a Man of this Crime. 'Tis the greatest Crime, and the Law is so merciful, that it won't expose a Man to such great Penalties, without demonstrative Evidence.

The first Act of Parliament that requires two Witnesses is, 1 Edward VI. The next is 5 Edward VI. And upon that Act, give me leave to takenote, that Act goes a little further than the first; for the 5 Edward VI. does not only say there shall be two Witnesses, but it goes on, and says, — which two Witnesses (they are there called Accusers, but mean the same Thing) shall be produced in Person before the Party at his Arraignment, and shall there, before his Face, maintain and avow what they have to say. So the Parliament particularly provided, That there should not only be two Witnesses, but that they should appear in proper Person, in open Court.

I beg leave to observe, That after the making of the first Act, in the 2 or 3 Year of Edward VI. there was an Attainder of Sir Thomas Seymour, in Parliament, without hearing of him; and that very self-same Parliament, within two Years afterwards, seems so to have repented that Matter, that they made that Provision, I have mentioned, in the 5 Edward VI. and to secure, that that ill Precedent should do no harm, they put in that Clause. If this Act pass, I wish we do not repent it in less Time than that Parliament did the Attainder of Sir Thomas Seymour. Let us be guided by the Reason, the Justice, and the Discretion of that Act, though we are not bound in our Legislative Capacity, by the Power of it. I can't but observe, that from the making of that Act, no Person has been attainted in any other manner, till the Duke of Monmouth: So great a Veneration has that Law always had in all Reigns, though a multitude of Conspiracies have happened in them all. I do not think it so material, that there should be two Witnesses, as that these Witnesses should be heard Face to Face, and cross-examined. It hath been told you, That 'tis natural Justice and Reason that there should be two Witnesses. A Gentleman asked you, where that natural Justice was before the Statute of Ed. VI.? Sir, the Statute of 25 Ed. III. says, That every Person that is attainted, shall be Provablement attaint; and somewhat may be from thence infer'd more than that the Crime should be prov'd, for so must every Crime. But as to the Proof required by that Act, and the Acts of Ed. VI. all those Acts, by very learned Opinions, have been thought declarative of the Common Law: But that's scarce worth the Enquiry, since 'tis certain how the Law stands at this Day.

An honourable Gentleman took notice, That such Evidence as we have had, and such Proceedings as these, would not be reasonable in Case of Impeachment; but distinguished between that Proceeding and this. But certainly, the Reason is the same. 'Tis true, the same Persons that accuse in one Case, give their Judgment in the other; but in each Case, such Privileges as are just and reasonable, ought to be allowed to the Party accused.

I shall add no more, but that we are making a Precedent, which can't be made without breaking through all the Fences of the Law; and when 'tis made, we know not who may suffer by it.

Sir Rich. Temple. As to the Evidence you have before you, I appeal to any Man, Whether at the Common Law, if there was but one Witness against a Man, whether he was not at Liberty of demanding Trial by Battle? Those Acts that have been made since, are made certainly to provide, That in no Case whatsoever, a Man should be so much as accused without two Witnesses of the Treason.

As to what hath been said of the particular Evidence before you; what hath been observed here, is a good Objection in the Courts below. I do not say it does disable a Man from being an Evidence, because he is not pardoned; but he is not so good an Evidence as if he was pardoned: But that I stand upon is this: Shall you come here, and make a Precedent in this Place to condemn a Man to the highest Penalties, upon less Evidence than you will allow any Body else to do it? That is what was never done in Parliament before. Will you make a Precedent in Parliament, that at any Time they may bring in a Bill here, and judge a Man to Death for Treason upon no Evidence?

As to this Bill it self, consider what a Precedent you will make: There is nothing that any Bill was condemned for in Parliament, that is not in this Bill. All Mankind must perceive, that you have but one Evidence, and such a one as I have told you: And whatever any Man's private Persuasion is, 'tis the Proof must govern you. Then this is a Law ex post Facto, and that hath always been condemned; you make that Evidence, that was not so before. Sir, this is, besides making a Law in a particular Case, against the Common Law of England, and the Right that every Subject has: It is making a Law to hang a Man without a Trial; 'tis making a Law here, that was introduced here upon a Pretence to make him an Evidence. Every one said, That they did not seek his Blood; and if that be the secret Inducement in this Case, 'tis a dangerous Precedent. The Earl of Exeter, when he brought the Rack into the Tower, every Body knows the Fate that came upon him afterwards.

Let any body shew me there was any Reason for reverſing any Act of Parliament; they are all againſt this Bill.

Then to the Neceſſity of it; I can't imagine any Thing that hath been ſaid to you upon that, is a ground for this Bill. Pray conſider firſt how this Matter came before you; it was for an honourable Perſon's Vindication, and it was not tranſmitted to you by the King, but by the honourable Secretary: He told you, That if you had a mind to ſee theſe Papers, and required it, he had Leave to let you have them; but if it had been a Thing of this conſequence, that the Government had been in the utmoſt Danger, would it have been tranſmitted only at the Requeſt of a private Gentleman, and left unto you, whether you would proceed upon it or no?

But 'tis obſerved, That the Plot may go on ſtill: Pray if this Gentleman be cut off, does that cure it? You are ſecure of him now, that he can't act in it; ſo that I have not heard the leaſt Ground to convince me, that the Government would be in leſs Danger if this Gentleman was cut off.

Sir, we are told here of going according to our Conſciences; give me leave to ſay to you what was inſtanced in the other Day; That in the worſt of Times, when they did not ſtick at murdering of the King, yet they ſtuck at this; they would not allow any Man to ſuffer upon one Witneſs; and they did not admit of Depoſitions againſt my Lord Mordaunt, and my Lord Mordaunt ſaved his Life by it.

You have depoſed King James for breaking in upon the Law; and did any body believe that Mr. Hampden was not guilty of the Treason he was charged with? He owned it before this Houſe; and yet he was tried only for Miſdemeanor, there being but one Witneſs againſt him; and they that ſtrained all other Laws, ſtuck at this, and would not violate this Law; ſo that I think there is no Neceſſity for making ſuch a Precedent, and I think it would be the worſt of Precedents.

Mr Boscawen. I have obſerved upon this Debate, that ſome Perſons deny that 'tis juſtifiable at any Time, to proceed upon Bills of Attainder, and yet they don't diſpute the Power of Parliaments; but at the ſame Time ſay, they ought to go according to the Rules of Weſtmiſter-Hall.

Another ſays, it is the ſame Thing whether we proceed by Way of Impeachment, or Bill of Attainder: I think him much out of the Way; for in that Caſe, the Lords only are Judges, and you are the Proſecutors; and you don't uſe your Legiſlative Power in that.

A worthy Friend of mine ſaid, He had often been miſtaken in his own Conſcience, when he thought himſelf very much in the Right. That might be ſo; and if there was any room rationally to ſuppoſe, that Sir John Fenwick was not guilty, I ſhould be of Opinion to be of the more favourable Side; but I take it, there is no room for any Man to believe but he is guilty.

Now I would examine what Grounds we have to believe him guilty. Upon Trials, when they charge a Jury with a Priſoner, one Part of their Charge is to enquire, whether he fled for it or no. 'Tis notorious, that Sir John Fenwick fled for this, which is no ſmall Argument of his Guilt. Another is, that he was hear at the Bar, and did not deny the Fact; if he had confeſſed it, no doubt but you would have concluded him guilty; and when he does not deny it, this is next door to it.

It hath been told you, many Bills of Attainder have been reverſed as unjuſt; it hath been as notorious, that the Verdicts of twelve Men, and when Men have been tried by their Peers, have been reverſed too. I will inſtance in two or three. The firſt I begin with, was that of the Duke of Somerſet; but no body could ſay but he was guilty of the Fact, for he confeſſed it; but there was a powerful Enemy, the Duke of Northumberland. The next is, the Duke of Norfolk, who was attainted in Queen Elizabeth's Time; and they were not by Parliament, and yet both were reverſed. And I think, as this Matter ſtands now, ſome Gentlemen are of Opinion, by the Evidence they have heard, that he is guilty; but I think no body hath ſaid, that it appears to him, by the Evidence he hath heard, that he is innocent. Now I deſire to know, whether every Man muſt not uſe his Conſcience to judge, whether there be ſufficient Evidence? I acknowledge there is not ſufficient Evidence to convict him in Weſtmiſter-Hall; but there is more to ſatisfy my Conſcience, and the World abroad, than if Goodman was here; beſides his not denying it, you have the Evidence of the Perſons that died, who owned the ſame Thing: And I mention that the rather, becauſe they confeſſed it to Perſons ſent from this Houſe; and did not only confeſs themſelves to be guilty, but acknowledged, that there was ſuch a Conſpiracy; and Sir William Parkyns acknowledg'd in particular, that he was to raiſe a Troop of Horſe, and that the French were to be invited over: Is this nothing for the Legiſlative Power, that is to ſecure the Peace and Welfare of the Government?

Gentlemen ſay, there is a great deal of Danger in this Matter: Some, if you acquit him; others, if you condemn him. If you are ſatisfy'd he is guilty, by this Bill you ſet up a Land-mark, that others may take Care they do not come into this Predicament: On the other hand, if you reject this Bill, you will give Advantage to your Enemies; when they ſhall ſee a Man that is ſo notoriously concerned in calling in a French Army, the worſt of your Enemies, to be Scot-free. If he be guilty, what Danger is there of the Precedent? When a Perſon in the like Nature, that hath fled for it, that does not deny it; when living Perſons confeſs it, and dying Perſons confirm it, then there will be Danger in ſuch a Perſon.

Upon the whole Matter, I think there is no Man that ever I heard, that does not believe him to be guilty; and 'tis ſtrange you ſhould want Evidence, and yet every one think him guilty; and I think no Man muſt be acquitted or condemned, but according to a Man's Conſcience.

An honourable Perſon ſaid, Porter was no good Witneſs: If Goodman was here, he would not be ſo much; and yet we muſt acquit him becauſe Goodman is not here: And therefore, upon the whole, I think you will give your Enemies a great Advantage, if you acquit him; and if you condemn him, you will do your ſelves Right.

Mr. Cowper. Sir, being concerned in Proſecutions of this Nature without Doors, I have hitherto declined concerning my ſelf in any Debate of this Evidence, though unconcern'd in the Conduct of the Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick; but being to give my Opinion and Vote as a Judge, I ſhall crave Leave to give my Senſe of this Matter.

I would beg Leave, in the firſt Place, to make uſe of a Diſtinction, which, I think, will ſerve to anſwer ſeveral of the Arguments that have been made uſe of: I think there are two Things to be conſider'd; Firſt, his Crime and the Proof of that that Crime, and then the other Matters done by him subsequent, &c.

The Crime and Proof of it that hath been given against him at your Bar, is the Ground by which, I think, before God and Man I ought to give my Affirmative to this Bill, by which you judge him to die. What he hath done subsequent, convinces me in my Judgment, that we are here in a proper Method and Course of Proceeding against him; therefore let no Man say, That you have condemned him because he hath protracted his Trial: No, you have condemned him for having been guilty of High-Treason, manifestly proved against him: Then let them not say on the other hand, Will you condemn any Man that is at any Time guilty of High-Treason? No; but when a Man is guilty of the worst of Treasons, and this would have been manifestly proved against him in the ordinary Course of Proceedings, but that he undertaking to atone for his Crime, and serve his Country, hath protracted his Trial till one of the Evidences is gone; and then, though he pretended to have a Reserve, which he would make known to the King's Person, yet when he thinks he is out of the ordinary Reach of Justice, he sets the Justice of his Country at defiance. These are Grounds, not why he is to die, but to justify our Proceeding in this Manner.

Sir, I would beg leave, in a few Words, to take notice of a few Things said in this Matter: Gentlemen are afraid, that this will be made use of by Posterity to the Disadvantage of honest Men: And you have been told, That Precedents have begun with the Punishment of the Guilty, and then have been carried on to the Punishment of those that have not been so. 'Tis true, there hath been a very bad use made of very just Acts in relation to the Publick: But what do Gentlemen infer from that? Must we have no such Thing as Justice? Must not the Guilty be punished, because the same Methods may be made use of for the punishing of honest Men?

I am not afraid of what use Posterity will make of it; if there come Times of Violence when there are no Parliaments, they will not want this Precedent; there are others that have been cited, that will much more justify those Proceedings; nay, this may protect the Innocent. If a Bill come to be proceeded in against another, he may say, Sir John Fenwick was heard personally, and by his Counsel; that the Evidence was produced before him, and confronted with him. An innocent Man may say, There was that extraordinary in his Crime, which is not in mine; he would have introduced a foreign Army, and afterwards have aggravated his Crime, by endeavouring to abuse the King, and creating a Jealousy between the King and his Ministers.

Sir, in the next place it is said, That here is not legal Evidence; which I think is a Mistake: And, say some, Though here is an Evidence, that really convinces them in their Consciences (I am not ashamed to make use of that Word) yet they are not for passing this Bill, because there is not a legal Evidence. With submission, that is a Mistake; before 1 Ed. VI. one Witness was a good Evidence in High-Treason; but there was Variety of Opinions touching Treason before that Time; but neither the 1st nor 5th Ed. VI. in the penning or wording of them, nor in the Reason of them, were intended to extend to the High Court of Parliament; so that, for ought that hath been said, though one Witness corroborated by Circumstances, as this Case is, and the Confession of the Party, would not be legal Evidence below; yet, with submission, it is a legal Evidence in Parliament, even according to the strict Rules of Law; because no Law hath made two Witnesses requisite in this Case; so that 'tis a convincing Evidence: I think it may be justified to be a legal Evidence; and as it convinces me, that I can't resist the Belief of it, I must be for this Bill, notwithstanding what some Gentlemen have said, by way of endeavouring to explode Conscience as a Rule not to walk by in this Case. One Instance given against it was, because a Hangman has not a discretionary Power to execute a Man according to his Conscience, and put him to what sort of Death he pleases; as if we had not a better, and more legal, and discretionary Power in the High Court of Parliament than the Hangman has.

But we are told of several Instances, where mad, and hair-brain'd Men have made use of their Conscience to palliate their Extravagancies. No doubt it hath; and let me tell you, Religion hath been made use of as a pretence to the worst of Villanies in all Ages; and yet I hope they will not argue, that there ought to be no Religion neither, for a Guide to Mens Actions.

When Men come to be Judges, I would know what Rule they can have better than a sedate, well-informed Conscience? Below, when a legal Evidence is given, yet the Jury are not bound to go by that legal Evidence; they are, when they have heard it, Judges of the Fact, and are to go by no other Rule, than what is ridiculed here, even the Rule of their own Conscience.

It was said early in the Debate by a Member of great Reputation, that this (except Monmouth's Case) is the first Precedent of a Bill of Attainder that began in this House. It seems the ancient Way was, for the Lords to give the Witnesses their Oaths, and when they thought fit, they sent down a Bill, and the Commons were to proceed upon it: But I think, with submission, this is a much better Way; and I had much rather give my Consent upon hearing convincing Evidence, and that the Party has nothing to say for himself, than upon any Bill transmitted from the Lords, and no other Evidence, than that they thought fit to pass it.

Some Gentlemen have set a great Weight, or rather mistaken the Argument: Say they, Sir John Fenwick is not a Man so considerable as to endanger the Government. Admit that those that have spoke for the Bill, have not made that use of the Argument; but this is that I lay my Finger upon in particular; 'tis plain he was to be General, and knew a great many of the Officers. I am satisfied he hath not made that Attonement to his injured Country, that he ought to have done. I am satisfied, that unless this Bill proceed steadily against him, you will have none of that Discovery —

[Here he was interrupted by the Noise of some Gentlemen, shewing Dissatisfaction at that Way of arguing.]

Mr. Cowper proceeds. Don't let Gentlemen pervert this Argument, and say, Will you hang a Man if he don't confess? No; but when I have heard Proof, that he is guilty of the worst of Treasons, and hath aggravated his Crime in that manner which he hath done, he deserves to die; unless unless he will merit his Life by a Discovery of what he knows. I think it of the highest Importance to you, that can be, that you should come to the further Knowledge of the other Branch of the Conspiracy; the Meeting of the French King's Forces in England. I think you are in a proper Method, and perhaps may have a better Issue of this Bill than his Death: But if not, he will but pay the Debt, which he owes to the Justice of his Country.

Mr. Paget. Sir, I can't believe but I shall be heard, as to the little I have to say, with some uneasiness, after so long a Debate. But, Sir, since I did take the Liberty to give my Opinion, why I was against this Bill before; I think it as reasonable to give you my Reasons, why I don't stand convinced by the Arguments I have yet heard. And that I may the better give you my Reasons, I shall, as well as I can remember, repeat some of the Arguments that have been urged for the Passing of it.

If I mistake not, some of the Arguments have run upon the Power and Prerogative of Parliaments; some upon what was proper Evidence in this High Court of Parliament, other than what would be in other Places; others upon the Extraordinariness of the Occasion.

As to the first of these Arguments; since Gentlemen much more experienced in Rules of Parliament, do not think fit to deliver their private Opinion, what Rules Parliaments may in Reason be supposed to have, I shall not say any Thing to that.

As to the Arguments, of what Evidence shall be sufficient to adjudge a Man to Death in this House; I confess, I shall at all Times be very careful, how I give my Opinion in Matters of Life and Death; because I think the greatest Caution is to be used in that Case: And for this Reason, I can't consent to give my Opinion in one Case, that I shall think fit to retract in any Case afterwards.

If I understand the Meaning of the House, 'tis not in favour to Sir John Fenwick himself, that Gentlemen oppose this Bill, but for fear of ushering in a Precedent, that may be made use of against a better Man.

I confess, here is a worthy Member that spake last, said something in his Argument that hath some Weight with me. I did apprehend by the general Debate of the House, That the Parliament had no Rules at all, but what they would fix to themselves; but I have a great Regard for his Opinion: But if he says true, the Evidence before you is not legal Evidence in Westminster-Hall; but 'tis legal Evidence according to the Rules of Proceeding in the High Court of Parliament: But I think, truly, if they may be presumed to have any Rules to go by, nothing is so plain to me, as that a Rule of their own of so late Date, as the Act for regulating Trials in Cases of Treason, should be a Rule to them: And 'tis said in that Act, That after such a Day no Person shall be brought to Trial in any Case of Treason, &c. but he shall be condemned upon the Evidence of two Witnesses; and I must needs say, that Act that was passed last Sessions, is so much for the Liberty of the People of England, that I think it will be very hard to repeal that substantial Part of the Law so soon after it was made.

As to the Extraordinariness of the Case, I am sensible what Strefs hath been laid on that Argument, as if the Strength of this Government did in some measure depend upon your Disposal of this Matter one Way or the other: And since that is the Case, I shall speak tenderly of it; for I do as much abhor Acts of Treason against the Government, as any Man that hath spoke for this Bill: I think, as the Crime is to be distinguished from all others, as being a more than ordinary Crime; so I think the Person that is concerned, must be extraordinary: And I think, with submission, there is some difference between Principals and Seconds in an Act of Treason. When you can't come at a Man being at the Head of a Rebellion, it may be reasonable to proceed by Bill of Attainder; but I think 'tis not to be used upon all Occasions, or when you may come at a Person another Way; which, I think, is the Case of this Gentleman. I am of Opinion, that there does not depend more upon Sir John Fenwick now, than when he was first taken. Why he was not tried, I shall not examine the Reason; I suppose it was because he gave some Assurance of his Confession: Truly, I have heard no other Reason for proceeding against him now, but those Papers which have been adjudged scandalous, and are so to all Intents and Purposes, I do think truly: But the Liberty of the People of England is very much concerned in the Revocation of that Act, which was promoted for the Liberty of the People; and none of the Arguments that have been used can convince me, That I ought to give Judgment upon less Evidence than is provided by that Act.

Mr. Sloane. Sir, I hardly thought I should have needed to have troubled you with my Thoughts in this Matter, but that this honourable Gentleman that spake last, has gone so far in his Reason, as to speak to Matter of Law: He seems to extenuate the Fault of Sir John Fenwick; and gives it as a Reason why he should not be attainted by this Bill, for that he was none of the Principals, but only an Accessary: There is no Gentleman of the Gown but will tell you, that there is no Accessaries in Cases of Treason, but they are all Principals, and equally guilty; and there is no Evidence in this Case to make him Accessary, but he is either Principal or nothing.

When I have made this Observation, give me leave to tell you my own Thoughts: As every Man is to be saved by his own Faith, so may my Salvation depend upon my Opinion, according to my Conscience in this Matter, which is for passing this Bill.

The last Time, I gave you my Reasons why I was for this Bill; and yet I have not heard them answered, though a Gentleman said I answered myself: But I will state the Case, and desire him to reply to me. I did say then, Sir, and do so again, That I do not think those scandalous Papers any Reason to provoke you to pass this Bill; and I do think, if he should be threaten'd, it would be a Blemish upon his Confession. Another Thing I put out of the Case, That he is a Man so dangerous to the Government, that if he escape, we are all undone. I do take him, that in his Person, Interest and Friends, he is not so; and would not have that be a Motive for the passing of this Bill: But take it upon the Evidence that is before us, and in the Nature of our Proceedings; then I will say, we have great Reason to proceed upon this Bill, for the Preservation of the Government, and for this Reason; Whereas it is insisted on one side, that here are the Laws and Liberties of England at stake, and no Body knows whose whose Case it may be next. Sir, if we don't go upon good Grounds and Reasons, that we don't fear any Body's following, God forbid we should make this a Precedent! But pray turn the Tables on the other side, and see what the Case will be; that here is a Gentleman that every Body of the House does believe guilty; that he hath been in a Conspiracy to bring in the French, and depose the King; and the Man came before us, and we had no Power to reach him; What will be the Precedent on the other Side? It will be easy to take off one of the Witnesses by Men of great Estates, and then there is no coming at them, even by the Parliament themselves: This Parliament was of Opinion, That they could not come at Sir John Fenwick, though they were of Opinion that he was guilty.

But now, Sir, to that which is the Question: 'Tis allowed by every Body, you may do what you please; but without straining your Legislative Power, I shall offer my Thoughts and Reasons for it, upon these three Points; That the Fact is Treason; That he is plainly guilty; and That we have a plain Jurisdiction in this Case, in the ordinary Methods and Proceedings of Parliament.

Sir, the Fact is Treason, the Meeting at several Times, and conspiring, and consulting to bring in a French Power to depose the King. You have been told by several Persons, and the Counsel at the Bar, That such Meetings without some other Overt-Act, is not Treason; but I affirm the contrary, for that is an Overt-Act of compassing the Death of the King: And Sir Bartolomew Shower, who did insist upon it at the Bar, did otherwise act his Part upon it at the Trial of Mr. Cook; for he offered it at first, but afterwards he deserted, it as a Thing he could not stand upon; for 'tis the Opinion of all the Judges, upon a late Resolution.

Then, Sir, the Fact being Treason, is no Act ex post facto. We are not making that Treason which was not so, but we are only judging of the Fact that was Treason before; though if it was a Doubt whether it was Treason or no, the Parliament hath a Power, by 25 Edw. III. to judge that Treason, that the Courts below have no Power of.

The next Thing is, Whether there be sufficient Evidence of his Treason before us? I will put it out of the Case, as no conclusive Evidence at all, what Goodman hath said upon his Oath (further than that there was such a Witness that did and could swear such a Thing, and that he was examined before the Jury); and this I will take upon me to say (and I will give my Reason for my Opinion) That the Parliament is not obliged to Two Witnesses by any Law now in being.

It hath been told you, That from the Time of Ed. III. one Witness was sufficient till the Statute of Ed. VI. Now I will prove to you, from the Statute of Phil. and Mary, That by the Common Law, and all the Time between the Reign of Ed. III. and Ed. VI. one Witness was sufficient for this Treason. For that Statute of Phil. and Mary does say, that any Person that shall bring from beyond Sea, any false and counterfeit Coin, or be accused or impeached of any Offence concerning the Impairing, Counterfeiting, or Forging of any Coin current within this Realm, shall, and may be indicted, arraigned, convicted, or attainted by such like Evidence, and in such-like Manner as was accustomed before the first Year of K.

Ed. VI. Now, what was the Reason of that Statute before the Statute of Ed. VI.? Those Counterfeits were to be tried by one Witness; and therefore at this Day all the Counterfeiters, and Utterers of false Coin, have been Attainted by one Witness.

'Tis said again, That there is the Law of Nations, and the Law of God, to the contrary. Gentlemen have said several times already, That in Murder and Felony, one Witness is sufficient; which, saving some little Parts of the Judgment as to the Forfeiture and Attainting of the Blood, is the same Penalties. We are not in the Land where that Law was in Force; for by that Law, as to common Felons, there was a Restitution only: But I would put a Gentleman that sits by the Bar this Case; By the same Law of Deuteronomy and Numbers, that he hath quoted, Adultery is Death: Will you be contented that that should be so here? They are either all of them in Force, or none of them in Force.

I do say, That by the Statute of Ed. III. and ever after, till the Statute of Ed. VI. one Witness was sufficient to convict any Man of Treason. And I do say, That the Statutes of Ed. VI. do not preclude the Parliament from any Method of Proceedings.

The Statute says, That no Man shall be indicted, &c. nor shall they proceed upon such Indictment. From which Words in the Statute, I do plainly make it appear to any Gentleman that will read it, 'tis confined only to the Courts of Westminster-Hall: For certainly, you can't call a Bill of Attainder, to be a Proceeding upon an Indictment. What I say, is only to discharge my own Conscience, and to salve the tender Consciences of them that hear me; and therefore, I desire them never to say, That there ought to be two Witnesses, before they answer what I have said upon that Statute.

Then, Sir, you have need but of one Witness, and you have had Captain Porter before you; who, I think, notwithstanding all that hath been said, is a credible Witness. A Gentleman made some Objections to his Credit, and told you, he was not to be believed, because he was in the same Conspiracy, and had been in such a villainous Action: But, Sir, the same Gentleman hath often confined you to the Rules of Westminster-Hall; and he hath told you, 'Tis a wrong Place here, and that a Man has not so good a Trial here, as in Westminster-Hall. Why? the Thing that was spoke of, of his being concerned in the Assassination, and of his being a Fellow-Conspirator with them, which is now urged as an Objection before you, is no Objection in Westminster-Hall.

I would only take notice of another Objection this Gentleman made to the Witness, which he said he had from the Bar; which was, That Captain Porter was not pardoned, and he was now drudging for his Pardon: But that is so far from what ought to be quoted, that he that said it, ought to be reprimanded for it.

He made another Objection against his being a good Witness, and compared it to the Case of an Hundredor; but he did not remember, that the Man that was robbed is a good Witness; and the Reason is, because of the Necessity of the Thing, and that no others can be; and the Defendant in an Hundred can't be a Witness, because there may be others; and that is the Reason of this Case.

And for the Precedents in Richard III's and Henry IV'th's Time, no Gentleman can insist upon them, considering the Differences of the Crown, and the one Attainted the other; and they were not reversed upon the Point of Jurisdiction, but because of the different Rights of the Kings; and no body had pretended to answer the Case of the Regicides; they were not left to the Law, I mean such as were actually tried before the Parliament; but the Parliament passed different Judgments on them; and some of them were in Custody. What was told you of Cromwell's Case and others, they go upon the same Reason, that they were not heard, though they were in Custody.

Col. Wharton. A Gentleman lately told you, We had lately passed an Act for Trials in Cases of Treason, and how we are in this Proceeding, about doing something that is contrary to it: That is a Thing that would stick with me, if I could not answer it; but I appeal to every Gentleman in this House, whether that Act hath any sort of relation to Trials in Parliament; for that is only to direct the Courts in Westminster-Hall.

I have only this to say; I think the Evidence very full before you. I think you have had one very good Witness, and the Counsel for the Prisoner had Liberty to confront him: If he had not been guilty, the Prisoner at the Bar would have deny'd it: I am convinced of the Truth of it, and my Conscience is to make a Judgment upon it, and that is all we can go by here.

Mr. Jefferys. A worthy Gentleman of the Long Robe hath taken Pains to find out Precedents to justify our Proceedings; and another says, there is no Act to circumscribe our Proceedings. But since Gentlemen differ so much, it gives me a great deal of Caution: This I know, there is a Law of the Land, by which Persons ought to be governed: I take this to be an extraordinary Method of Proceeding, and I hope the Lords will take more Care of the Matter than the Commons.

Mr. Edward Harley. Sir, I can't satisfy my self to be for this Bill; and in a few Words, I shall give my Reason for it. It hath been said, That the Parliament is unlimited. I do agree, that we are not tied to the Rules of Westminster-Hall. I shall only mention the Reason why two Witnesses are required in Cases of High-Treason. If any will look into the History of England, they will find it hath been often the Design of the Crown to trump up Plots upon the Subject; and therefore these Acts took particular Care there should be two Witnesses to prove the Fact: This is the Reason of the Law, and, I think, upon it the Liberty of the Subject is founded; and therefore I can't be for this Bill.

Then the Question for passing this Bill was put, and the House divided.

Vic. Com. Lond. & Midx. de executione faciend. John Fenwick, Bar. auctoritate Parl. Attinct. CHUTE.

All the Punishment being remitted but Beheading, he was brought to a Scaffold erected on Tower-Hill, where he delivered this Paper to the Sheriffs.

Speaking nor Writing was never my Talent: I shall therefore give a very short, but faithful Account, first, of my Religion, and next, what I suffer most innocently for, to avoid the Calumnies I may reasonably expect my Enemies will cast upon me when dead; since they have most falsely and maliciously aspersed me, whilst under my Misfortunes.

As for my Religion, I was brought up in the Church of England, as it is establish'd by Law, and have ever professed it; though I confess I have been an unworthy Member of it, in not living up to the strict and excellent Rules thereof; for which I take Shame to my self, and humbly ask Forgiveness of God. I come now to die in that Communion, trusting, as an humble and hearty Penitent, to be receiv'd by the Mercy of God, through the Merits of Jesus Christ my Saviour.

My Religion taught me my Loyalty, which I bless God is untainted; and I have ever endeavoured in the Station wherein I have been placed, to the utmost of my Power, to support the Crown of England in the true and lineal Course of Descent, without Interruption.

As for what I am now to die, I call God to witness, I went not to that Meeting in Leaden-ball-street with any such Intention as to invite King James by Force to invade this Nation; nor was I my self provided with either Horse or Arms, or engaged for any Number of Men, or gave particular Consent for any such Invasion, as is most falsely sworn against me.

I do also declare, in the Presence of God, That I knew nothing of King James's coming to Calais, nor of any Invasion intended from thence, till it was publicly known: And the only Notion I had, that something might be attempted, was from the Tboulon Fleet coming to Brest.

I also call God to witness that I receiv'd the Knowledge of what is contain'd in those Papers that I gave to a great Man, that came to me in the Tower, both from Letters and Messages that came from France; and he told me, when I read them to him, that the Prince of Orange had been acquainted with most of those Things before.

I might have expected Mercy from that Prince, because I was Instrumental in saving his Life: For when, about April, 1695, an Attempt form'd against him came to my Knowledge, I did, partly by Diffusions, and partly by Delays, prevent that Design; which, I suppose, was the Reason that the last villainous Project was concealed from me.

If there be any Persons whom I have injur'd in Word or Deed, I heartily pray their Pardon, and beg of God to pardon those who have injur'd me; particularly those who with great Zeal have fought my Life, and brought the Guilt of my innocent Blood upon this Nation, no Treason being proved upon me.

I return my most hearty Thanks to those noble and worthy Persons who gave me their Assistance, by opposing this Bill of Attainder, without which, it had been impossible I could have fallen under the Sentence of Death. God bless them and their Posterity; though I am fully satisfy'd they pleaded their own Cause, while they defended mine.

I pray God to bless my true and lawful Sovereign King James, the Queen, and Prince of Wales, and restore him and his Posterity to this Throne again, for the Peace and Prosperity of this Nation; which is impossible to prosper till the Government is settled upon a right Foot.

And now, O God! I do with all humble Devotion commend my Soul into thy Hands, the great Maker and Preserver of Men, and Lover of Souls; beseeching thee that it may be always dear and precious in thy Sight, through the Merits of my Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

JOHN FENWICK.

Then he submitted to the Block, and the Executioner sever'd his Head from his Body.

CLXIV. The TRIAL of Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, before the House of Lords, for the Murder of Richard Coote, Esq; March 28, 1699. 11 Will. III.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock the Lords came from their own House into the Court erected in Westminster-Hall, for the Trials of Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, and Charles Lord Mounbun, in the Manner following.

The Lord High Steward's Gentlemen Attendants, two and two.

The Clerks of the House of Lords, with two Clerks of the Crown in the Courts of Chancery and King's Bench.

The Masters in Chancery, two and two.

Then the Judges.

The Peers eldest Sons, and Peers Minors, two and two.

Four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, two and two.

The Yeoman Usher of the House.

Then the Peers, two and two, beginning with the youngest Barons.

Then four Serjeants at Arms, with their Maces.

Then one of the Heralds, attending in the Room of Garter, who by Reason of his Infirmary could not be present.

And the Gentleman Usher of the Black-Rod, carrying the White-Staff before the Lord High Steward.

Then the Lord Chancellor, Lord High Steward of England alone.

When the Lords were seated on their proper Benches, and the Lord High Steward upon the Wooll-Pack;

The two Clerks of the Crown in the Courts of Chancery and King's Bench, standing before the Clerk's Table with their Faces towards the State;

Vol. V.

The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery having his Majesty's Commission to the Lord High Steward in his Hands, made three Reverences towards the Lord High Steward, and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on his Knees presented the Commission to the Lord High Steward, who delivered it to the Clerk of the Crown in the King's Bench, (then likewise kneeling before his Grace) in order to be opened and read; and then the two Clerks of the Crown making three Reverences, went down to the Table; and the Clerk of the Crown in the Court of King's Bench commanded the Serjeant at Arms to make Proclamation of Silence; which he did in this Manner.

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, My Lord High Steward his Grace does straitly charge and command all manner of Persons here present, to keep Silence, and hear the King's Majesty's Commission to his Grace my Lord High Steward of England directed, openly read, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Lord High Steward stood up, and spoke to the Peers.

Lord High Steward.* Your Lordships will be pleased to stand up, and be uncovered, while the King's Commission is reading.

* Lord Somers.

All the Peers stood up, and were uncovered, while the Commission was read.

Serjeant at Arms. God save the King.

Then the Herald and the Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod, after three Reverences, kneeling, presented the White Staff to his Grace, and his Grace removed from the Wooll-pack to the Chair, which was placed upon an Ascent just before the uppermost Step of the Throne, and seated himself in the Chair.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Lord High Steward. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that the Judges may be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Judges put on their Caps.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. O yes, O yes, O yes, chief Governor of the Tower of London, bring forth the Body of Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, your Prisoner, forthwith, on Pain and Peril will tall thereon.

[Then the Earl of Warwick was brought to the Bar by the Deputy-Governor of the Tower of London, having the Ax carried before him by the Gentleman Jaylor, who stood with it at the Bar, on the Right Hand of the Prisoner, turning the Edge from him; the Prisoner at his Approach to the Bar making three Bows, one to his Grace the Lord High Steward, the other to the Peers on each Hand; and his Grace and the Peers returned the Salute.]

Lord High Steward. My Lord of Warwick, your Lordship is brought before this great Judicature, in order to your Trial. You stand indicted by the grand Inquest for the County of Middlesex, as guilty of the Murder of one of the King's Subjects, for whose Blood Justice requires a strict Inquisition should be made.

Your Lordship is call'd to answer this Charge before the whole Body of the House of Peers assembled in Parliament. It is a great Misfortune to be accused of so heinous an Offence, and it is an Addition to that Misfortune, to be brought to answer as a Criminal before such an Assembly, in Defence of your Estate, your Life, and Honour. But it ought to be a Support to your Mind, sufficient to keep you from sinking under the Weight of such an Accusation, that you are to be try'd before so noble, discerning, and equal Judges, that nothing but your own Guilt can hurt you. No Evidence will be received, but what is warranted by Law; no Weight will be laid upon the Evidence, but what is agreeable to Justice; no Advantage will be taken of your Lordship's little Experience in Proceedings of this Nature; nor will it turn to your Prejudice, that you have not the Assistance of Counsel in your Defence, as to the Fact, (which cannot be allowed by Law) and their Lordships have already assigned you Counsel, if any Matters of Law should arise.

Your Lordship, throughout your whole Trial, may assuredly promise your self, to find all the Candor and Compassion which is consistent with impartial Justice; beyond that nothing is to be expected: Their Lordships can never so far forget themselves, as to depart from what is right, and to draw the Guilt of Blood upon their own Heads; but if your Lordship is innocent you are safe.

My Lord, It will be requisite for you to recollect yourself upon this Occasion, in the best manner you can. You ought to hear with Temper, what the King's Counsel have to say, without interrupting them, and to hearken carefully to the Witnesses produced against you, that you may be ready to cross-examine them if you find Cause, and to make your Observations upon the Evidence when the proper Time comes for your Lordship to make your Defence; of which I will not fail to give you Notice; and when that Time does come, your Lordship may be assured, your self and your Witnesses will be heard with great Patience and Attention; and when my Lords have heard and considered the whole Matter, the Judgment will unquestionably be according to the Rules of Justice, and such as will become the Honour of this high Court.

Read the Indictment to my Lord.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I beg I may have the Use of Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Lord High Steward. Will your Lordships please to allow my Lord Warwick Pen, Ink, and Paper?

Lords.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Lord High Steward. Carry Pen, Ink, and Paper to my Lord. (Which was done by the Clerk.)

Lord High Steward. My Lord, your Lordship will do well to give Attention while the Indictment is read to you. Read it to my Lord in English.

Clerk of the Crown. Your Lordship stands indicted by the Name of Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, late of the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields in the County of Middlesex; for that your Lordship, together with Charles Lord Mohun, Baron Mohun of Oakehampton in the County of Devon, late of the Parish aforesaid in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, Richard French, late of the Parish aforesaid in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, Gent. Roger James, of the Parish aforesaid in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, Gent. and George Dockwra, late of the Parish aforesaid in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, Gent. not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the 30th Day of October, in the tenth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. with Force and Arms, &c. at the Parish aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, in and upon one Richard Coote, Esq; in the Peace of God, and of our said Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice afore-thought, did make an Assault; and that your Lordship, the said Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, with a certain Sword made of Iron and Steel of the Value of Five Shillings, which you the said Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, in your Right Hand then and there had and held drawn, the aforesaid Richard Coote, in and upon the left Part of the Breast of him the said Richard Coote, near the Collar Bone of him the said Richard Coote, then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice afore-thought, did strike, stab, and thrust in, giving to the said Richard Coote, then and there with the Sword drawn aforesaid, in and upon the left Part of the Breast of him the said Richard Coote, near the Collar Bone of him the said Richard Coote, one mortal Wound of the Breadth of half an Inch, and of the Depth of five Inches, of which said mortal Wound the aforesaid Richard Coote then and there instantly died: And that the aforesaid Charles Lord Mohun, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of their Malice aforethought, were present, aiding, abetting, comforting, assisting, and maintaining you the said Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, the said Richard Coote, in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice afore-thought, to kill and murder; and so you the said Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, and the said Charles Lord Mohun, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, the aforesaid Richard Coote, in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought, did kill and murder, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

How say you, Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, are you guilty of this Felony and Murder whereof you stand indicted, or not guilty?

Earl of Warwick. Not guilty.

Clerk of the Crown. Culprit, How will your Lordship be tried?

Earl of Warwick. By God, and my Peers.

Clerk of the Crown. God send your Lordship a good Deliverance.

Then at the Motion of some Lords who sat towards the upper End of the House, and by Reason of the Distance could not distinctly hear the Clerk, the Indictment was read again, the Clerk standing near the upper End of the House.

C. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make an O Yes.

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, If any one will give Evidence on behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, against Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, let them come forth, and they shall be heard; for now he stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

L. H. St. Will your Lordships give me leave to go down to the Wooll-pack, that I may hear the better.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then his Grace removed to the Woolpack, and delivered the White Staff to be held by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, who during the whole Trial always received and delivered back the White Staff upon his Knees.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, are you ready to proceed?

* Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. St. Then begin, Sir.

* Sir Thomas Trevor.

Mr. Serj. Wright. May it please your Lordships.

L. H. St. Pray, Mr. Serjeant, raise your Voice as much as possible you can, that my Lords towards the upper end of the House may hear.

Mr. Serj. Wright. May it please your Lordships, this noble Lord Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted for the felonious Killing and Murder of one Richard Coote, Esq; and the Indictment sets forth, That upon the 30th Day of October, in the tenth Year of his Majesty's Reign, at the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, the Prisoner at the Bar, the Earl of Warwick, together with Charles Lord Mohun Baron of Oakehampton, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, Gent. feloniously, voluntarily, and of their Malice afore-thought, did make an Assault upon the said Richard Coote, in the Indictment named; and the Indictment chargeth, that the Earl of Warwick, at the same Time and Place, with a Sword, feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought, did give unto the said Richard Coote, in or upon the left Part of the Breast of him the said Richard Coote, near his Collar Bone, one mortal Wound of the Breadth of half an Inch, and of the Depth of five Inches, of which said Wound the said Richard Coote then and there instantly died; and the Indictment further charges, that the said Charles Lord Mohun, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, the Earl of Warwick, to commit the Felony and Murder aforesaid, were then and there aiding, assisting, comforting, and abetting; and so the Jurors charge, that he the said Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, Charles Lord Mohun, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, the said Richard Coote, feloniously, voluntarily, and of their Malice afore-thought, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, aforesaid, did kill and murder, against the Peace of our sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Indictment this noble Lord the Prisoner at the Bar, Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, has pleaded not guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon my noble Lords his Peers here present: We shall call our Evidence, and if we prove this Fact for the King, we do not doubt but your Lordships will give such Judgment for the same as shall be just.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordships, I am of Counsel in this Cause for the King against this noble Lord Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, the Prisoner at the Bar, who stands indicted by the grand Jury of the County of Middlesex, has been arraigned, and is now to be tried before your Lordships for the felonious killing and murdering of Mr. Coote, in the Indictment named; the Evidence to make good this Charge against this noble Lord, it comes to my turn to open to your Lordships.

My Lords, the Case, as to the Fact, according to my Instructions, is this: Upon Saturday the 29th of October last, at Night, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, Mr. French, Mr. Dockwra, and Mr. Coote, the unfortunate Gentleman who was killed, met together at one Locket's, who kept the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, and there they stayed till it was very late; about twelve of the Clock at Night, or thereabouts, a Messenger was sent by the Company to fetch another Gentleman, Mr. James; and Mr. James coming to them, in what Condition your Lordships will be told by the Witnesses; about one of the Clock in the Morning, on Sunday the 30th of October, they all came down out of the Room where they had been so late, to the Bar of the House, and there, as the Witnesses will tell your Lordships, Swords were drawn, and Chairs were called for, and two Chairs which were nearest at hand came, and two of the Company went into those Chairs; who they were, and what past at that Time, the Witnesses will tell your Lordships; those that got into those Chairs came out again, and more Chairs were called for. But I must acquaint your Lordships, that my Lord Mobun, when the two Gentlemen that went into the Chairs ordered the Chairmen to take them up, and carry them away, spoke to them to stop and go no further, for there should be no quarreling that Night, and that he would fend for the Guards and secure them; and after this they came out of the Chairs again; it will appear there were Swords drawn amongst all of them, and some Wounds given: More Chairs being called for, and brought, this noble Lord that is here at the Bar, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and the other four Gentlemen, went all into the Chairs, and gave the Chairmen Directions whither they should carry them, at leastwise the Foremost had Directions given them, and the rest were to follow them; it was a very dark Night, but at last they came all to Leicester Square; and they were set down a little on this Side the Rails of the Square, and when the Chairmen had set them down they went away; but immediately some of them heard my Lord of Warwick calling for a Chair again, who came towards the Rails, and there they found two of the Gentlemen that had been carried in some of the other Chairs, holding up Mr. Coote between them, and would have had the Chairmen carried him away to a Surgeon's, but they found he was dying, and so would not meddle with him; afterwards my Lord of Warwick and Mr. French were carried by two of the Chairs to Mr. Amy's, the Surgeon at the Bagnio in Long-acre, where Mr. French being wounded, was taken care of particularly by the Recommendation of my Lord of Warwick, and the Master of the House was called up, it being very late, Mr. Coote's Sword was brought to that Place, but by whom it was brought we cannot exactly say. While my Lord of Warwick and Capt. French were there, and my Lord of Warwick had given Orders for the denying of himself, and forbid the opening of the Door; there came the other two Gentlemen, Mr. James and Mr. Dockwra, and upon their knocking at the Door they were let in by my Lord's Order, after he had discovered who they were, looking through the Wicket. Mr. James had his Sword drawn, but it was broken. - My Lord of Warwick's Hand was slightly wounded, and his Sword bloody up to the Hilt when he came in, as will be proved by the Testimony of the Servants in the House. There was a Discourse between my Lord, Mr. James, and Mr. Dockwra, about going into the Country; but before they went, the Swords were all called for to be brought to them, and upon Enquiry, there was no Blood found upon Mr. French's Sword, but a great deal upon my Lord of Warwick's, of which great notice was taken at that Time. Mr. Coote, who was killed, had received one Wound in the left Side of his Breast, half an Inch wide, and five deep, near the Collar Bone; he had likewise another Wound upon the left Side of his Body; both which your Lordships will hear, in the Judgment of the Surgeon, were mortal Wounds, and the Evidence will declare the Nature of them.

My Lords, the Evidence does chiefly consist of, and depend on Circumstances, the Fact being done in the Night, and none but the Parties concerned being present at it; we shall lay the Evidence before your Lordships, as it is, for your Judgment, and call what Witnesses we have on behalf of the King, against this noble Peer the Prisoner at the Bar, and take up your Lordships Time no further in opening; and we shall begin with Samuel Cawthorne; he is a Drawer at the Tavern where those Lords and Gentlemen were together, and he'll give you an Account of the Time they came there, how long they staid, what happen'd in the House during their being there, and what Time they went away.

L. H. St. Give him his Oath. (Which the Clerk did.)

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I doubt the Witness is so far off, that it will be difficult for him to hear the Questions that we are to ask him, unless we could have him nearer to us.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, My Lords seem to be of Opinion, that it will be more for your Advantage and theirs, that the Witnesses stand at the Distance they do; which will oblige you to raise your Voice so loud, that they may hear the Witnesses and you too.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is your Name Samuel Cawthorne? Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where do you live?

Cawthorne. With Mr. Locket at Charing-Cross.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you live with him at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand the latter End of October last?

Cawthorne. Yes, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, pray will you acquaint my Lords with the Time when my Lord of Warwick,
my

my Lord Mobun and Mr. Coote were at that House, how long they stayed, what happen'd while they were there, and when they went away?

Cawthorne. It was Saturday Night the 29th of October last.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray tell my Lords the whole of your Knowledge in the Matter.

Cawthorne. There came my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, Capt. Coote, Capt. French, and Capt. Dockwra, the 29th of October last, in the Evening, to my Master's House at the Grey-bound Tavern in the Strand.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long were they there, and what time of Night came they in?

Cawthorne. About Eight a Clock at Night, my Lord Warwick, my Lord Mobun, Capt. French, and Capt. Coote, came in.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Day do you say it was?

Cawthorne. Saturday, the nine and twentieth Day of October last.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did they continue there?

Cawthorne. It was between One and Two the next Morning before they went away.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was any Body sent for to come to them there?

Cawthorne. Yes, Mr. James.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time was that?

Cawthorne. About Twelve of the Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he stay with them till they went away?

Cawthorne. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you observe past in the Company while they were there?

Cawthorne. I did not observe any Thing of Quarrel, not so much as an angry Word amongst them, till they came down to the Bar and were going away; when they came down to the Bar they order'd me to call them Chairs, or Coaches, and there were no Coaches to be had, and so I went for Chairs, and two Chairs came; for the Porter that went to call the Coaches was a great while before he came back; and as I said, I going for Chairs, there came two, but that they said was not enough; so more Chairs were called for, and at length there were more Chairs gotten; in the first three Chairs, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Capt. Coote went away in; and my Lord Warwick and my Lord Mobun bid the Chairmen carry them home.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there then any other Chairs at the Door?

Cawthorne. There were two more Chairs at the Door, and another was called for.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear any Directions given where they should carry them?

Cawthorne. My Lord Warwick and my Lord Mobun bid them carry them home.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Warwick or my Lord Mobun particularly, and which, say whither they would be carried?

Cawthorne. I did hear my Lord Mobun say Capt. Coote should go and lie with him, or he would go and lie with Capt. Coote that Night, for there should be no quarrelling.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they upon that go away?

Cawthorne. Mr. French and Mr. Coote were in Chairs before my Lord Mobun or my Lord Warwick, or any of the rest.

Mr. Att. Gen. What then happen'd upon their going into the Chairs?

Cawthorne. My Lord Mobun came out to them and swore there should be no Quarrel that Night, but he would send for the Guards and secure them.

Mr. Att. Gen. What happen'd then?

Cawthorne. Upon that, both of them came out of their Chairs and came into the House, and there they came to the Bar, three of them in the Passage by the Bar, and three of them behind that Passage.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you tell what did really pass throughout the whole Transaction? What was done after they came in again into the House?

Cawthorne. After that, I was bid to call for six Chairs, if I could get no Coaches, and so I did, and when I had brought what Chairs I could get, and returned to the Bar, I heard the Swords clath; when the Swords were drawn, I cannot say, nor by whom, it might be by all the six, for ought I know, because I was in the Street to call the Chairs, and when I came back to the House, I was in hopes all had been quieted, for their Swords were putting up: And when they went away in the Chairs, I did hope they went away friendly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray how did they go away, who went together?

Cawthorne. My Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Capt. Coote went in the first three Chairs, them three together, and bid the Chair-men go home; the sixth Chair was not then come.

Mr. Att. Gen. When that Chair came, pray what Directions were given to it?

Cawthorne. I did not hear them give the Chair-men any Directions at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing more that was done after this Time?

Cawthorne. No, my Lord, not after they went away; after I return'd with the Chairs, it was in two Minutes time that they went away.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I suppose he knows no more of the matter.

L. H. St. Will you then ask him no more Questions, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lords, unless this noble Lord shall ask him any Questions, upon which we shall have occasion to examine him.

L. H. St. My Lord, has your Lordship any Questions to ask this Witness? For now is your Time, the King's Counsel having done examining him.

E. of War. I desire to ask him whether I did not bid the Chair-men go home?

L. H. St. If your Lordship please to propose your Question to me, I will require an Answer to it from the Witness, and it will be the better heard by my Lords.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I desire to know of this Man, whether, when I went away in the Chair from his Master's House, I did not bid the Chair-men go home.

L. H. St. Witness, you hear my Lord's Question, What say you to it?

Cawthorne. Yes: My Lord of Warwick did bid the Chair-men go home.

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I have another Question to ask him, Whether he knows of any Quarrel there was between me and Mr. Coote at that Time, or any other Time, because we both used to frequent that House?

Cawthorne. No, my Lords, I never heard any angry Words between my Lord Warwick and Mr. Coote in my Life.

[Then the Lords towards the upper End of the House complaining that they did not hear his Grace, the Lord High Steward was pleased to repeat the Question thus:]

L. H. St. When my Lord of Warwick bid the Chairmen go home, or at any other time, did you observe that there had been any Quarrel between his Lordship and Mr. Coote?

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, since we both used that House, Whether that Night when I went away, or before or after, I had any Quarrel with Mr. Coote?

L. H. St. The Question my Lord desires you that are the Witnesses to answer, is, Whether you did hear any quarrelling or angry Words to pass between my Lord Warwick and Mr. Coote that Night before or after they came down, or when they went away, or at any other time?

Cawthorne. No, my Lord, I never heard any angry Words pass between them then, nor ever at any time before in all my Life, but I always looked upon them to be very good Friends.

E. of Warwick. I desire he may be asked, Whether Mr. Coote did not come to that House in my Company, and whether he did not frequently come to that House?

Cawthorne. Yes, they used to be there every Day almost, and they came that Night together in Company.

E. of Warwick. I desire he may be asked, Whether I have not been frequently in his Company there?

Cawthorne. Yes, I say very frequently, every Day almost, sometimes twice a Day.

L. H. St. Would your Lordship ask him any other Question?

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I desire he may be asked this Question, Whether he knows of any particular Kindness between Mr. Coote and me?

L. H. St. Do you know of any particular Kindness between my Lord Warwick and Mr. Coote, the Gentleman that was killed?

Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord, there was always a great Kindness between them as I observed, it ever was so, and I never heard angry Words pass between them, but they were very good Friends constantly; I waited upon them generally when they were at my Master's House, which was every Day almost.

E. of Warwick. I desire to know of this Witness, Whether he does not remember, or can name some particular Kindnesses that passed between Mr. Coote and me?

L. H. St. Can you specify any particular Instances of Kindness that passed between my Lord Warwick and Mr. Coote?

Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord of Warwick used generally to pay the Reckoning for Mr. Coote, and he did so at this Time.

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, between whom he apprehended the Quarrel to be at this Time.

L. H. St. You say, Friend, there were Swords drawn, and a Quarrelling at the Bar; Can you tell between whom the Quarrel was?

Cawthorne. My Lord Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Capt. Coote, were all on one Side, and the other three were on the other Side.

E. of Warwick. Who were the two Persons that it was apprehended the Quarrel was between? I desire he may be asked.

L. H. St. You say, there were Three on the one Side, and Three on the other; pray, between whom did you apprehend the Quarrel to be?

Cawthorne. I believe the Quarrel was between Mr. Coote and Mr. French.

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I desire to know of this Witness, what Words he heard Mr. Coote say, after he and Mr. French returned into the House and came out of the Chairs.

L. H. St. What do you say to the Question my Lord proposes?

Cawthorne. I heard Mr. Coote say, He would laugh when he pleased, and he would frown when he pleased, God damn him.

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I desire to know who he thinks those Words were addressed to.

L. H. St. To whom did Mr. Coote speak these Words?

Cawthorne. Whether he spoke them particularly to Mr. French, or to the other two Gentlemen who were on the other Side of the Bar, I cannot directly tell.

E. of Warwick. I desire to know of him, Whether Mr. Coote was not One of the Three that was on the outside of the Bar?

Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Capt. Coote, were of the outside of the Bar.

E. of Warwick. Was Capt. Coote with me in the beginning of the Night at that House?

Cawthorne. Yes, he came at the beginning of the Night with my Lord of Warwick.

E. of Peterb. My Lords, I desire to ask this Witness one Question.

L. H. St. I think it is proper, my Lords, in Point of Method, to let both Sides have done before any Questions be asked by any of my noble Lords.

E. of Peterb. I did apprehend my Lord of Warwick had done.

L. H. St. No, my Lord, not as yet? pray, my Lord Warwick, what other Questions has your Lordship to ask of this Witness?

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I desire he may be asked particularly this Question, Whether he perceived any Quarrel particularly between me and Capt. Coote when we went out of the House?

L. H. St. You hear the Question, Did you perceive any Quarrel between my Lord Warwick and Mr. Coote before they went out of the House?

Cawthorne. No, I did not, nor ever saw any Quarrel between them in my Life.

E. of Warwick. I desire to know who paid the Reckoning that Night?

Cawthorne. The Reckoning was called for before I came in to take it; and tho' I think my Lord of Warwick paid for Mr. Coote, yet I cannot so directly tell, because it was collected before I came into the Room to receive it.

L. H. St. My Lord, have you any Thing more to ask this Witness?

E. of Warwick. No, my Lord, at present, that I think of.

L. H. St. My Lord Peterborough, your Lordship desired to ask a Question, will you please to propose it now?

E. of Peterb. My Lord, this Witness seems to take notice of two Sides, who were on the one Side, and who were on the other, and that Mr. Coote and my Lord of Warwick were on one Side; I desire to know one Thing of him, what reason he had to apprehend that they two were of a Side?

L. H. St. Friend, you hear that noble Lord's Question; you seem to say, there were three and three of a Side. What reason had you to apprehend, that my Lord Warwick and Mr. Coote were of one Side? You must explain to my Lords how you come to make that Judgment, what Reason you had to think so.

Cawthorne. They three my Lord Mobun, my Lord Warwick, and Mr. Coote, were on the one Side of the Bar; and Capt. James, Capt. French, and Capt. Dockwra, were on the other Side of the Bar.

L. H. St. So you said before; but the Question which my noble Lord desires to be satisfied in, is this, How you come to speak as if there was a Quarrel between three and three? What Reason had you to think, that three were on one Side, and three on the other?

Cawthorne. Their Swords were all drawn, and they stood three on one Side of the Bar, and three on the other.

E. of Rochester. My Lords, I desire to ask this Witness one Question; I think he told your Lordships at first, that he did not perceive any angry Words among them; afterwards he comes to talk of Swords drawn amongst them all, three on the outside, and three on the inside of the Bar; I desire to know what was the Occasion of those Swords being drawn on the one Side or the other?

Cawthorne. Whatsoever Quarrel there was, was amongst themselves above Stairs, and I know no angry Words that passed between them when they came down to the Bar.

L. H. St. See what you say? How consistent one Part of it is with another! You said at first, you did not hear of any angry Words that passed between them, and yet you say, all their Swords were drawn, and three were on the one Side and three on the other: And when you were examined upon the Motion of that noble Lord, what you meant by three on the one Side, and three on the other, you said, my Lord Mobun, my Lord Warwick, and Mr. Coote, were on the one Side; Mr. James, Mr. French, and Mr. Dockwra, were on the other Side: How could there be two Sides, unless there was a Quarrel?

Cawthorne. I said, I did not hear any angry Words pass between them before they came to the Bar, or while they were above Stairs; but there were three on the one Side of the Bar, and three on the other.

L. H. St. But you have not given a satisfactory Answer to that Question which the noble Lord, my Lord Peterborough, asked you, What Reason you had to apprehend, that the noble Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, and Capt. Coote were of a Side?

Cawthorne. My Lord Mobun came to the Chair side, when Capt. Coote and Capt. French were got into the two first Chairs, and told Capt. Coote, that there should be no Quarrel that Night, but that they three, my Lord Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and he, should go home together; and I took them three to be of a Side, because they were on the outside of the Bar together, and when they all went away, their three Chairs went away first, all three together.

L. H. St. Is that all the Reason you can give why you say, they were three and three of a Side?

Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord, I did apprehend it so.

VOL. V.

Mr. Att. Gen. If my noble Lords have done with their Questions, I desire to ask this Witness another Question; my Lords, I think this Person says, That there was a Quarrel at the Bar of the House, and Swords drawn, and as he apprehended, three were on the one Side, and three on the other; but if I take him right, I do not see that he has given your Lordships any Manner of Satisfaction, what Reason he had to apprehend there were three and three of a Side, or, which will be very material in this Case, if your Lordships can get to the Knowledge of it, which three were on the one Side, and which three were on the other; or indeed, whether there were three and three of a Side, as your Lordships will have reason by and by to enquire a little further into that Matter. My Lords I desire he may be asked this plain Question, What Words or other Passages he did perceive, that made him apprehend there was a Quarrel between them, and they were three and three of a Side?

Cawthorne. I apprehended it from the Words that Mr. Coote said, That he would laugh when he pleased, and frown when he pleased.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, I desire he may be asked, Who those Words were spoke to, and who they were applied to?

Cawthorne. They were spoke to Mr. James, Mr. French, and Mr. Dockwra, who were within side of the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he apply those Words to all those particular Persons?

Cawthorne. Yes, as I thought, for they three were within the Bar; my Lord Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Mr. Coote, were without the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, I desire he may be asked this Question, Was that before the Swords were drawn, or afterwards?

Cawthorne. It was before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then I desire he may be asked, Whether the Swords were drawn upon those Words?

Cawthorne. No, my Lord, the Time of drawing the Swords was when I went out to call Chairs and Coaches; and I know not who drew the Swords first, or when they were drawn; but when I came back I found them all drawn, and I heard them clashing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon the Oath you have taken, Was those Words that you speak of Mr. Coote's, That he would laugh when he pleased, and frown when he pleased, before the Swords were drawn, or after the Swords were drawn?

Cawthorne. Before the Swords were drawn; for I did not see the Swords drawn till I came back.

L. H. St. Does either Side desire to ask this Witness any Questions; if not, then you may withdraw, and you may proceed, Mr. Attorney, to examine some other Witness.

Lord Wharton. My Lord, there was a Question asked at the Bar about the Hindring of the Quarrel, and my Lord Mobun's Desire to part them, and make them Friends; I desire the Witness, before he goes away, may be asked what he knows of that Matter.

L. H. St. It has been observed by my Lord, that you said, when they came down to the Bar, and the Quarrel happened, some Body would have prevented it; pray repeat that Matter again, Did you observe any of the Company were disposed to take up the Quarrel, and make them Friends, and who they were?

Cawthorne. My Lord Mobun and my Lord Warwick said they would send for a File of Musqueteers, and my Lord Mobun did all he could to quiet and pacify them till the Quarrel was over; and my Lord Mobun particularly had his Finger prick'd with endeavouring to cross their Swords, and keeping them from fighting; which was all he got by it.

L. H. St. Do you know that of your own Knowledge?

Cawthorne. His Hand was bloody and he said so at the Bar; but I was just coming in again when I heard him say so; but I cannot say that I saw him hurt, for I was without the House at the Time when that was done.

Lord Godolphin. My Lords, I desire to ask this Witness on Question; I observe he has told my Lords, there was not an angry Word pass'd between them before they came down to the Bar; I would fain ask him this Question, Whether he was in the Room all the Time till they did come down to the Bar?

Cawthorne. I received the Reckoning just before they came down to the Bar.

Lord Godolphin. And I desire he may be asked, How long he staid in the Room when he received the Reckoning?

Cawthorne. It was about two or three Minutes that I staid in the Room, and not longer.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, this Witness that has been examined, told you, That when we first came down to the Bar there were two Chairs call'd for; and when they came, Mr. Coote and the other Gentleman, Mr. French, went into the Chairs, and afterwards they came out again, and Mr. Coote said some Words; I desire the Witness may be asked again, when it was Mr. Coote spoke those Words; whether it was before or after the Time that he came out of the Chair; for I take it to be very material.

Cawthorne. It was after Mr. Coote came out of the Chair, for the Chairmen heard the Words as I verily believe.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire he may be ask'd, Was there any Reply made to those Words by any of those Persons he says he apprehends were on the other Side?

Cawthorne. No, not one Word that I know of.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I must beg the Favour to have the Question asked again of him, Whether I did not at that Time endeavour to prevent any Quarrelling, and did not say I would call for the Guard if they did?

Cawthorne. Yes; my Lord of Warwick did say so, and so did my Lord Mobun, and so I think did Mr. James.

L. H. St. How came you not to say so when you were asked that Question particularly before? Then you said my Lord Mobun endeavoured to prevent the Quarrelling, and make them Friends.

Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord Warwick did so, and so did Mr. James.

L. H. St. I cannot tell whether any Body else desires to ask him any Questions.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he speaks of what this noble Lord, my Lord of Warwick said; but he does not tell you the particular Expressions, nor the Time when my Lord said them.

L. H. St. You say, my Lord the Prisoner at the Bar, endeavoured to pacify the Quarrel between them; but you do not tell my Lords who the Quarrel was between, nor when the Endeavour was made by my Lord Warwick to pacify it.

Cawthorne. My Lord of Warwick did say he would have the Guards sent for.

L. H. St. What Time was that, before or after my Lord Mobun said so?

Cawthorne. Truly, my Lord, I do not know but that it was at the same Time.

L. H. St. Was it when the Swords were drawn, or before?

Cawthorne. They spoke it both before and after the Swords were drawn, as I remember; for the Swords were not drawn while I was in the House, till I came back.

L. H. St. Were the Swords drawn when my Lord Warwick spoke of sending for the Guards?

Cawthorne. Surely, my Lord, it was before the Swords were drawn, when I was sent for the Chairs.

L. H. St. You said there was no angry Words or Quarrel between them.

Cawthorne. Not above Stairs, my Lord: But I apprehended when they came down to the Bar, there were three on one Side, and three on the other.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let him be asked this Question, Was it after they were three on the one Side, and three on the other, that my Lord Mobun and my Lord Warwick spoke those Words?

Cawthorne. I apprehend the Words were spoke by Mr. Coote, That he would laugh when he pleased, and frown when he pleased, before the Swords were drawn.

L. H. St. But that which my Lords desire to know is, What the Time was when my Lord Warwick and my Lord Mobun declared their Desire to part them and make them Friends; whether before or after the Swords drawn?

Cawthorne. Before and after; for I was absent when the Swords were drawn.

Earl Rivers. He says, That after my Lord Mobun and my Lord Warwick threaten'd to send for the Musqueteers, they promised to be quiet: I desire to know who he means by they.

Cawthorne. Mr. James call'd to me and said, I need not go and call for the Guards, for the Quarrel was over. There is one Thing more that I forgot, my Lord: After my Lord Mobun and my Lord Warwick were gone away in their Chairs, and Mr. Coote, I heard Mr. Dockwra say to Captain James and Captain French, they did not care a Farthing for them, they would fight them at any Time.

L. H. St. Who were together then?

Cawthorne. Captain James, Mr. French, and Mr. Dockwra, after my Lord Mobun and my Lord Warwick were gone with Captain Coote.

L. H. St. Then Mr. French was with them, Mr. Dockwra said so?

Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord.

Lord Wharton. If I apprehend him aright, as to what he says now, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Captain Coote, were gone away at that Time.

Cawthorne. Yes, they were gone away in the three first Chairs, which my Lord Mobun bid go home.

Lord Wharton. Who does he say spoke those Words?

L. H. St. You hear my noble Lord's Question, Who spoke those Words? Repeat them again.

Caw-

Cawthorne. When my Lord Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Captain Coote were gone, I heard Mr. Dockwra say to Mr. French and Mr. James, we don't care a Farthing for them, we will fight them at any time.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire to know whether this Witness testified any Thing of this Matter, when he was examined before the Coroner?

Cawthorne. No, I forgot those Words when I was examined before the Coroner.

Mr. Att. Gen. How soon after your Examination did you recollect yourself as to what you now speak?

Cawthorne. The next Day after.

Mr. Att. Gen. I pray my Lords, that he may be asked, Whether he did in general give the same Evidence before the Coroner that he now does?

Cawthorne. Yes, as to all but only those Words of Mr. Dockwra's declaring he did not care a Farthing for them, they would fight them at any time.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I beg he may be ask'd how long it was after the Fact was done, that he was examined before the Coroner.

Cawthorne. It was the next Day in the Afternoon.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then I have this Question further to ask, if your Lordships please, Was he at the Trial of Mr. Dockwra, Mr. James, and Mr. French?

Cawthorne. Yes, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he then give any Evidence of those Words of Mr. Dockwra's, after when my Lord Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Captain Coote were gone?

Cawthorne. No, I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I have one Question to ask him then more, How he came not to swear this Matter at that Trial?

Cawthorne. It was out of my Mind at that Time, and I had like to have forgot it now.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord we have done with this Witness: Is it your Lordships Pleasure that we go on to call our other Witnesses?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then our next Witnesses, my Lords, will be the Chairmen that carried my Lord Mobun, my Lord of Warwick, and Captain Coote: We shall begin with Thomas Browne and John Gibson, one of them carried Mr. Coote, the other my Lord of Warwick.

[Thomas Browne was sworn.]

L. H. St. What Question do you ask this Witness, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. That he would acquaint your Lordships, whether he carried Mr. Richard Coote, the Person that was slain, upon the 29th or 30th of October, from the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, and to what Place he carried him?

L. H. St. You hear the Question; pray speak so loud that my Lords may all hear what you say.

Browne. My Lords, I was between the Hours of One and Two in the Morning, on Sunday the 30th of October last, with my Fellow and our Chair, at the Butcher's-Head Tavern at Charing-Cross, and I heard some People at Locket's, at the Greyhound in the Strand, calling Coach, Coach, a pretty while; but there were no Coaches in the Street, nor that came to them; when they could not get Coaches, then they called out for Chairs; and we coming to the Door with our Chair, there were four other Chairs there, and six Gentlemen stood in the Passage; and then it was said, There was not Chairs enough, and there wanted one more, and they stood discoursing; and the first Man came into my Chair, who was Captain Coote; and my Lord of Warwick he got into another: When the Door of the Chair was shut up, we asked them whither we should go; but my Lord Mobun came and bid open the Chair again, and we did so, and he returned into the House, and there was some Discourse between them standing at the Bar in the Entry. Mr. Coote came out again and came into my Chair, and my Lord Mobun and my Lord of Warwick went into two others; Mr. Coote bid me carry him into Leicester-fields, and to make all the haste I could; my Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mobun being in the next Chairs, ask'd him, Whither are you a going, and called out twice, and he said, To Leicester-fields; Pray do not, says my Lord of Warwick, but come along with us, and let it alone till To-morrow; but he bid us go on; and as we were turning up St. Martin's-lane, by the Cross-Keys Tavern, my Lord Mobun, and my Lord Warwick called out to us to stop, and their Chairs came up to the Back-door of the Cross-Keys Tavern, and there all the three Chairs were set on a-brest in St. Martin's-lane, and while they were talking together, there came by three Chairs of the other Side of the Way; and Mr. Coote bid us take up and make all the haste we could before them into Leicester-fields; so taking up the Chair again, Mr. Coote bid us make haste, and if we could go no faster, he swore, Damn him, he would run his Sword in one of our Bodies: There were two Chairs before me, and my Lord Mobun and my Lord Warwick followed in two Chairs after me; and when we came to the Corner of Leicester-fields at Green-street end, all the three Chairs were set down a-brest again, and Mr. Coote put his Hand in his Pocket, and took out half a Guinea to pay, and said he had no Silver; and my Lord of Warwick spoke to my Lord Mobun, who took out three Shillings out of his Pocket, who said there was for my Lord Warwick, Capt. Coote, and himself; and when they were gone out, I took my Box and my Pipe, and filled my Pipe, and took the Lanthorn and lighted it, and by that time I had lighted my Pipe, I heard a calling out, Chair, Chair, again, towards the upper End of the Square; so I took my Chair, and there was one of the Chairs that was not gone; and so we came up to the upper End of the Fields, and they called to us to bring the Chairs over the Rails; we told them we did not know how to do that, for we should not be able to get them back again; at last we did get over the Rails, and made up close to the Place where we heard the Noise, for we could see nothing, it being a very dark Night; and when we came up close to them, by our Lanthorn there were two Gentlemen holding up Mr. Coote under their Arms, and crying out, My dear Coote, My dear Coote!

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray who were those two Gentlemen?

Browne. I did not know them, one was in Red Cloaths, and the other had Gold Lace, and they would have had me have taken Mr. Coote into my Chair; but seeing him bloody, and not able to help himself, I said I would not spoil my Chair, and so would not meddle with him; but they said they would make me any Satisfaction for my Chair, and desired me to take him in, but he gave himself a spring from them, and we found he was too heavy heavy for us to lift over the Rails, and all we could do could not make him sit in the Chair, but the Chair was broken with endeavouring to place him there; and they said, if we would carry him to a Surgeon's, they would give us a Hundred Pound Security; but we finding it impossible, the Watch was called for, but no Body would come near, for they said it was out of their Ward, and so they would not come anigh me; and I staid about half an Hour with my Chair broken, and afterwards I was laid hold upon, both I and my Partner, and we were kept till next Night Eleven a Clock; and that is all the Satisfaction that I have had for my Chair and every Thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, I desire he may recollect himself; for we do apprehend it is very material, who it was that desired to take Mr. Coote into the Chair.

Browne. I cannot tell who they were, it was so very dark I could only see their Cloaths.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see the Earl of Warwick there?

Browne. No, Sir, he was not there; one of them, I tell you, had Officers Cloaths on, Red lined with Blue, and the other had Gold Lace on; there was no Body there that held him up but them two.

M. of Norm. He says he saw two Persons holding up Mr. Coote; it would be very well to have that Matter very well settled, who those two Persons were; I desire to know how he is sure my Lord of Warwick was not one of them two?

Browne. I know my Lord of Warwick very well, and I am sure he was neither of the two.

D. of Leeds. I would know what Light he had to discern it so well by, that he can be sure my Lord of Warwick was not there; for he says, it was a very dark Night, and yet he describes the particular Persons that held Mr. Coote up.

Browne. Yes, my Lord, I am sure my Lord of Warwick was none of them.

D. of Leeds. How could you distinguish in so dark a Night, the Colours of People's Cloaths?

Browne. With the Candle that I had lighted in my Lanthorn.

D. of Leeds. He could not know any of the Persons unless he held a Lanthorn to their Faces, or knew them very well before.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, Will your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I desire he may be ask'd, Whether I did not bid him stop at St. Martins-lane end, and do all that I could to hinder Mr. Coote from going any further, but to go home?

Browne. The Earl of Warwick, and my Lord Mobun, as they turned up the Lane, asked Mr. Coote, Whither he was going? and when he said to Leicester-fields, they desired him to let it alone till To-morrow; and my Lord Mobun said he should go home with him; but the other bid us go on, and said he would not go to his Lodgings, but that they would make an End of it that Night; still they called to him again, dear Coote, let's speak a Word with you; and as the Chairs came to the Back-door of the Cross-keys Tavern, there they stood all of a-breast, and they both of them spoke to him, and stood a pretty while there, and in the mean time three Chairs passed by on the other Side; he commanded us to take up, and carry him away to Leicester-fields immediately, and overtake the other Chairs, or he would run one of us into the Body.

L. H. St. Would your Lordship ask him any more Questions?

E. of Warwick. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I observe, he says they discoursed some Time together while they stopped in St. Martins-lane; I desire that he may be asked, whether he can tell what that Discourse was.

Browne. I could not well hear, they whispered together, but I could hear my Lord Mobun, and my Lord of Warwick, desire Captain Coote to go home and let the Business alone till another Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire he may explain himself, what that Business was that they would have put off till To-morrow.

Browne. I know not what it was, I heard of no Anger betwixt them, but they were as good Friends for any Thing I know to the contrary, as ever they were in their Lives, or as ever I see any Men.

L. Jefferys. He says there were Two went into Chairs at the Door of the House, and afterwards went out again, and went into the House, and there was Discourse at the Bar of the House, I would desire to know what that was?

Browne. I did not hear the Discourse that was in the House, I was at the Door of the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witness is William Crippes. (who was sworn.)

L. H. St. What do you ask this Man, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you give my Lords here an Account who you carried to Leicester-fields the 29th or 30th of October, and what happened in your Knowledge at that Time?

Crippes. Captain Coote was the first Man that went into the Chair when we came to the Greyhound Tavern, afterwards he came out again, and when we took him up the second Time, he was the first Man that set out; and he bid us carry him to Leicester-fields; and when he came to the Corner of St. Martins-lane, we turned up that Way; and my Lord of Warwick, and my Lord Mobun, called to us, being in Chairs behind, to know whither we were going, and desired to speak with Captain Coote, and he said he was going to Leicester-fields; and when they ask'd, What to do? he said, to end the Business: They desired him to put it off till To-morrow; and while they were discoursing about it in St. Martins-lane, there pass'd by other three Chairs, which, when Captain Coote saw, he bid us take up and overtake them, and go faster, or he would run one of us into the Body: So we went on, and at the lower End of Leicester-fields we set him down; and the other two Gentlemen, my Lord Warwick, and my Lord Mobun, were there set down, and went lovingly together, for any thing that I saw, up the Pavement of the Square, towards the upper End; and in a little time we heard a Noise of calling for Chairs towards the upper End, and when we came there with the Chair, we were bid to lift over the Chair within the Rails; and when we said it was hard to be done, they insisted upon it, and we did come in; and when we came there we saw two Gentlemen holding up Captain Coote, and would have had us taken him into the Chair; we saw there was a great deal of Blood, but I never heard how it came, and they would have had us carried him to a French Surgeon's, and proffer'd any Money.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire to know, who they were that desired him to be carried to the Surgeon.

L. H. St. You hear the Question, What say you?

Crippes. I cannot tell, my Lord; one of them had something of Lace upon him, but it was so dark that I could hardly see my Hand, and therefore I cannot tell who they were; and when there was an Objection made, that the Chairs would be spoiled, they said, We need not question our Chair, they would give us 100*l.* Security to answer any Damages, if we would but carry him; so we endeavoured to put him into the Chair, but could not; and so we called out to the Watch, to have had some help, but they said it was none of their Ward, and so they would not come to us; so the Gentlemen went away, and we left them, and went and called a Surgeon, who, when he came, said, he was a dead Man, and we were secured till the next Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, I desire he may be asked, Were there not other Chairs in that Place at that Time?

Crippes. There was one in the Field besides, and no more that I could see, they all went away but us two.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Distance of Time was there between their setting down in Leicester-fields, and their calling the Chairs again?

Crippes. Not a quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of the three Chairs that passed by you in St. Martins-lane?

Crippes. They got before us; but what became of them afterwards I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they come from the same Place, the Tavern in the Strand that you were at?

Crippes. Yes, I believe they did, my Lord, for Captain Coote bid us follow them, and threatened us if we did not make greater haste.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know my Lord of Warwick?

Crippes. Yes, he had whitish Cloaths on, and none but he had such Cloaths on as those were.

L. H. St. Will your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, Whether I did not bid him stop? and, whether I did not say, they should not go to quarrel that Night?

Crippes. Yes, both he and my Lord Mobun would not have had Captain Coote gone any where, but home to his Lodgings.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire to know of him, directly and downright, Whether my Lord of Warwick was not one of them that held him when he was within the Rails in the Fields?

Crippes. No, he was not, he was neither of them, for the one of them was too big for him, and the other was too little for my Lord Mobun?

Mr. Att. Gen. Now we shall call the Chairman that carried the Earl of Warwick into Leicester-fields, James Crattle. (He was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you tell my Lords what you know of any Person that you carried the 29th or 30th of October last, from the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, and who it was, and whither you carried him?

Crattle. I was going along Charing-Cross, between One and Two in the Morning the 30th of October last, and I heard a Chair called for at Locket's at the Dog Tavern, and thither I and my Partner went, and we took up the Gentleman, and carried him to Leicester-fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was that Gentleman?

Crattle. It was my Lord of Warwick.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time of Night do you say it was?

Crattle. It was about One or Two in the Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Crattle. It was Saturday Night and Sunday Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither did you carry him?

Crattle. Into Green-freet, towards the lower end of Leicester-square.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Chairs were there more there?

Crattle. There was one that Captain Coote was in, and another that my Lord Mobun was in, and we went away all together.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there no other Chairs?

Crattle. I did not know who went in the other Chairs, but there were three other Chairs that passed by us at St. Martins-lane, and we followed after them to Leicester-fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what became of you after you had set down your Fare?

Crattle. We were discharged and paid; the other three went up towards my Lord of Leicester's, but we were coming away, and in a little Time we heard the Noise of calling Chairs, Chairs, again, and there were two Chairs did come up, Thomas Browne's and ours; my Lord of Warwick called our Chair, and we took him into it, and he bid us carry him to the Bagnio in Long-Acre, and when we came there we knocked at the Door, and his Hand was bloody, and he asked us if we had any Handkerchief to bind up his Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any other Chairs at the Door of the Bagnio, at the same Time when you came there?

Crattle. Yes, there was another Chair there at the Door at the same Time, and we set down both together.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray whence came that Chair?

Crattle. Indeed I do not know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were the Chair-men that carried that Chair?

Crattle. Indeed my Lord Mobun, and my Lord Warwick, were the only Persons that I knew of all the Company.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Sort of Gentleman was the other that went out of the other Chair into the House?

Crattle. He was a pretty tall Man; when he was in we went away; I only can say I saw my Lord of Warwick go into the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you take any Notice of any Sword that my Lord of Warwick had in his Hand at that Time?

Crattle. No, I cannot say I did take any Notice of any Sword, only that there was a Handkerchief desired.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did you hear no Noise at all in the Field, till you heard Chairs called for again?

Crattle. No, I cannot say I heard any Noise in the Field.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you apprehend there was any Fighting?

Crattle. No, I knew nothing at all of it, but upon the calling of Chairs again, and my Lord Warwick coming along, we took him in, and he bid us go to the Bagnio, and thither we went.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with this Witness.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, our next Witness is John Gibson, he was another of those Chairmen that carried my Lord of Warwick to the Bagnio afterwards. Pray will you give my Lords an Account what you know, who you carried the 29th and 30th of October last, and whither you carried them? (who was sworn.)

Gibson. My Lord, I was at Charing-Cross with my Partner the 29th of October last, at Night, and about One or Two a Clock in the Morning Chairs were called for to the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand; and when we came there, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Mr. Coote, got into the three first Chairs, and we got my Lord Warwick into our Chair; and when we had him there, we were bid to go towards Leicester-fields, as I apprehended, for thither the Chairs that went first was to go; and indeed my Lord Mobun, and my Lord Warwick, did call to stop at the End of St. Martins-lane, and asked Mr. Coote whither he was going? and he said he was going to make an End of the Business, and they said it should not be To-night; but presently after three other Chairs coming along, and passing before us, the Chair that Captain Coote was in, was bid to go on, and we were ordered to follow, which was done accordingly; just at the Turning of Green-street we set down our three Chairs, and, I think, just about the Turning of Green-street End we stayed till there came another Chair again, and we and the other Chair, upon my Lord Warwick's coming into us, went away from thence, and carried him to the Bagnio in Long-acre.

Mr. Att. Gen. You talk of another Chair, pray, Whose Chair was that?

Gibson. There was another Chair that was got there just before us, but indeed I do not know whose it was, nor indeed can I say who it was that was in it; but this I am sure, we went to the same Place, and we met and lit just at the same Time, and my Lord of Warwick asked for a Handkerchief to bind about his Hand, which was bloody, which was given him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not know who was in the other Chair at that time?

Gibson. No, indeed, I did not know, I will assure you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did you not know where that other Chair took the other Gentleman up?

Gibson. No, indeed, Sir, I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, What Time of the Night was it?

Gibson. It was between One and Two of the Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. You talk of his Hand being hurt, and that he called for a Handkerchief. Did you see his Hand bleed? and, pray, in what Nature was his Wound?

Gibson. My Lord, all I can say is, there was Blood, and he wanted a Handkerchief, and had one, for he said his Hand was hurt, but in truth I did not take any Notice what that Hurt was, I did not see it, if my Partner took Notice of it, so, but else I can say nothing to it, but the Handkerchief was afterwards asked again, and could not be had.

L. H. St. Would my Lord of Warwick ask this Witness any Questions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, our next Witnesses are Robert Applegate, and Peter Catro, who will give your Lordship an Account who they carried at this Time.

L. H. St. Whom do you call first?

Mr. Att. Gen. Robert Applegate. (who was sworn.)

L. H. St. What Questions do you ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire that he would acquaint your Lordship, what he knows of what passed at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand the 29th of October last, whom he carried, and whither he carried them?

Applegate. My Lord, about One or Two a Clock in the Morning, a Sunday Morning, the 29th or 30th of October last, I was going home with my Partner and my Chair, and I heard them calling at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, Mr. Locket's, for Coaches and Chairs; there was no Coach to be had that could be heard of, but coming up to the Door, they said they wanted six Chairs, and when we were there at the Door, there came out first my Lord Warwick, Captain Coote, and my Lord Mobun; Captain Coote got into the first Chair, and what Directions he gave them I cannot tell; my Lord of Warwick got into the next; and into ours, which was the Third, my Lord Mobun came in, and bid us take him up and carry him towards Westminster, and he ordered us to follow the Chairs before: Just as they turned at St. Martins-lane, my Lord Mobun called out, and desired to stop, and at the Cross-Keys-Tavern Back-door, all the three Chairs came up together, and then my Lord of Warwick, and Captain Coote, and my Lord Mobun talked together, and I could hear my Lord Mobun and my Lord of Warwick desire Captain Coote to defer it, and put it by till another Day; what it was, indeed I cannot tell: But while they were talking there, three Chairs more came up on the other Side of the Way, and Captain Coote would needs go forward, and my Lord Mobun and my Lord of Warwick went with him, and so they were all set down at the lower End of Leicester-fields at Green-street End. But in Truth I did not see where the other three Chairs set down those they carried.

Mr. Att. Gen. What then happened afterwards, can you tell?

Applegate. I cannot tell whether I had lighted my Pipe, or just lighting it, when I heard Chairs called again; upon which we run up with our Chair towards the upper End of the Fields, and there I did see my Lord of Warwick within the Rails, who bid us put over our Chair into the Fields; but we told him, if we did, we could not get it over again, and so we went with our Chair to the Corner of the Fields, and when we came there, there came out Captain French, who bid us open our Chair, and let him in, for he did believe he was a dead Man; and upon that we did take him in, and he bid us carry him with all the Speed we could to the Bagnio in Long-acre, and my Lord of Warwick got into another Chair behind; so we went to Long-acre, and when we came to the Door of the Bagnio, and Captain French came out of the Chair, he was so weak that he fell down upon his Knees; and when he came out, I asked who should pay me, and desired to be discharged; and the Earl of Warwick said, Damn ye, call for your Money to Morrow; so they both went in at the Bagnio Door together.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, who called for the Chair first, Captain French, or my Lord of Warwick, in the Fields?

Applegate. I cannot tell, but when I brought up my Chair, I first saw my Lord of Warwick, and he would have had me lifted the Chair over the Rails, and I told him we could not get it over again, and so went up to the upper End of the Fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you first spoke with my Lord of Warwick, why did you not carry my Lord of Warwick?

Applegate. Indeed I cannot tell, but I suppose it was because he did not come so soon out of the Fields as Captain French, or did not come the same Way.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, do you remember any Thing that happened just at their carrying Capt. French away?

Applegate. Before he went into the Chair, he stopped, and would have pulled off his Cloaths, but we would not let him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see any Sword Captain French had?

Applegate. I did see no Sword that I can say directly was a Sword; but Captain French had something in his Hand, but what it was I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was it that he said to you, when he first went into the Chair?

Applegate. He desired to be carried to the Bagnio; for he said he believ'd he was a dead Man.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Friend, recollect yourself, if you heard him say any Thing at all when he first went into the Chair at the Greyhound Tavern?

Applegate. I did not hear him mention any Thing at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what did you hear my Lord of Warwick say at that Time?

Applegate. Truly, I cannot say I heard him mention any Thing at all neither; but I did hear my Lord Mobun say, when he could not prevail, in St. Martins-lane, with Captain Coote to go home, that if they did go he would go and see it.

Mr. Att. Gen. If they did go; who did he mean by they?

Applegate. My Lord Warwick and Captain Coote that were in the other Chairs; there was no Body else to speak to.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any talk of Fighting or Quarrelling?

Applegate. No indeed, I do not know of any Difference there was between them.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, Will your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, Whether I did not endeavour to put off the going into Leicester-fields, and to have all Things let alone till To-morrow.

Applegate. My Lord, I cannot say any Thing of that; but I did hear my Lord Mobun beg heartily of Captain Coote to go home, and let the Business alone till another Time; and indeed I think, I never heard a Man beg more heartily for an Alms at a Door, than he did, that they might not go into the Fields then; but I cannot say that I heard any Thing that my Lord of Warwick said about it.

L. H. St. Will your Lordship ask him any other Questions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Did my Lord of Warwick express any Inclination to go on?

Applegate. Indeed I know not any Thing one Way or other.

VOL. V.

L. Jeffreys. My Lords, if I am not mistaken, he did say, that he did not see any Thing of Inclination in my Lord of Warwick to go on; but I desire, if your Lordships please, that he may be asked this Question, Whether he did see any Thing in my Lord of Warwick that shewed any Inclination to the contrary.

Applegate. All that I can say is, I heard my Lord Mobun say, Pray let's go home and lie all together, and let us put off this Business to another Time; but indeed I do not remember that my Lord of Warwick said one Word of going any Way backward or forward.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, who did my Lord Mobun speak these Words to?

Applegate. My Lord Mobun spoke them to my Lord of Warwick and Captain Coote, both.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, who is your next Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. Peter Catro. (Who was sworn.)

L. H. St. What do you ask him, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. He was the other Chair-man that carried my Lord Mobun; Pray, will you give my Lords an Account what you know passed at the Time when you carried my Lord Mobun to Leicester-fields?

Catro. I and my Fellow carried my Lord Mobun from the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, till we came to the Turning up of St. Martins-lane, where my Lord Mobun desired that our three Chairs might stop, and that they might go down to Westminster, and that my Lord Warwick and Capt. Coote would go thither, and he would wait upon them to their Lodging; Capt. Coote made Answer again something, but what I cannot tell, and his Chair went on; and my Lord Mobun did say, if they went forward, he would follow them, and see what would come of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you see happen while you were in St. Martins-lane?

Catro. There were other three Chairs that went by while we stood at the Cross-Keys Tavern Door, and Captain Coote's Chair going forward, we followed and went to the End of Leicester-fields, at Green-street End; and there all three went out of their Chairs and walked up the paved Stones of the Square; my Lord of Warwick asked my Lord Mobun if he had any Silver, and three Shillings were given for the three Chairs, and they went from us, and bid us go about our Business; and in a little while after we heard a Noise from the upper End of the Fields, calling Chairs, again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe any Thing of Quarrel or Difference between them, or any clashing of Swords?

Catro. Indeed I heard nothing of any Quarrel, for we were at the lower End of the Square, at Green-street End; and when we heard them call for Chairs again, we went up towards the upper End of the Fields; and when we came there, we heard one bid us bring up the Chair over the Rails.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was that?

Catro. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot tell, for I was behind the Chair, and could not see who it was; but we saying that we could not get it over again if we did, we went up to the upper End of the Fields, and there was Captain French, I think it was, for I did not perfectly see him, being at the hind-part of the Chair; and we went on to the Bagnio in Long-Acre; and I did see my Lord Warwick come out of his Chair at the Bagnio Door, for there they were set down.

X

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say you saw my Lord of Warwick at the Bagnio Door; Did you see any Sword as my Lord of Warwick had, or Captain French?

Castro. No, I did not see any Sword at all of either of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of Captain French his declaring he was wounded?

Castro. I think it was either when he went into the Chair, or in Newport-street End, he called out to have the Chair opened; for, says he, I think I am a dead Man, and would have pulled off his Cloaths; and when we were at the Bagnio Door, we tarried a pretty while till they got them up to let them in; and asking if we should wait, my Lord of Warwick bid us come to that House To-morrow Morning for our Money; and they went in together into the House, but I never heard any one Word of Quarrel or Dissatisfaction passed between them.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Witness speaks to the same Purpose as the other did; and I think we need not trouble your Lordship any further as to that.

L. H. St. Would my Lord of Warwick ask him any Questions?

E. of Warwick. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then our next Witness is one John Palmer. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you give my Lords an Account, who it was you did carry in your Chair the 29th or 30th of October last, and whither you carried him?

Palmer. About one a Clock in the Morning, the 30th of October, we were called to the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand to Mr. Locket's, and there we took up a Gentleman, one Captain French.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither did you carry him?

Palmer. He bid us go to Leicester-fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he particularly say to you?

Palmer. There were three other Chairs that were just gone before from the same Door, and he bid us get before all those Chairs; and just as we came to St. Martins-lane End, we saw there were three other Chairs set down before us over-against the Cross-keys Tavern Back-door.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, what did you do then?

Palmer. So we went before, according as we were bid, unto Leicester-fields, and at the upper End of the Fields, by Leicester-house, we opened the Door, and Captain French came out, and he gave us a Shilling, and we went away about our Business.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any more Chairs there that went with you?

Palmer. There were two more Chairs that set down two other Gentlemen by Leicester-house, and we came away when we were paid; that is all I know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see any other Chairs besides your three when you came down again, or any other Gentlemen?

Palmer. We did see some Gentlemen walking up about the Middle of the Square when we came down, but we made what Haste we could away home, it being late, on Sunday Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe any Fighting when you were in the Field?

Palmer. I did not hear or discern any Fighting while I was there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear of any Quarrel, or any Thing between any of them, and whom before?

Palmer. No, I did not know of any Quarrel, or hear of any Thing at all, I do assure you.

Mr. Att. Gen. All that he says then, my Lord, is, That he carried Captain French to the upper End of Leicester-fields, and there he left him.

L. H. St. Would my Lord Warwick ask this Witness any Questions?

E. of Warwick. I desire he may be asked, whether he knows who were in the Chairs that were in St. Martins-lane, when they passed by?

L. H. St. You hear the Questions, What say you to it?

Palmer. There were three Chairs, but who they were that were in them I cannot tell directly; but as they said, when they set them down at Leicester-fields, they were my Lord Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Mr. Coote.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was it that said so?

Palmer. Some of the other Chair-men when I came by.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, who is your next Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall call next the Chair-men that carried Mr. Dockwra and Mr. James: Call Jackson the Chair-man. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. This Man carried Cap. James: Pray acquaint my Lords, who you did take up at Locket's in the Strand on the 29th or 30th of October last, and whither you carried him.

Jackson. I carried Captain James from Locket's in the Strand into Leicester-fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many Chairs were you that went?

Jackson. There were two more that went when I went, there were six in all that took up Gentlemen there, and we were the last but one.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell who were in the other three first Chairs?

Jackson. I do not know who were in the other Chairs, but I heard my Lord Mobun at the Door of the House desire, That the Business might be deferred till To-morrow Morning: There were six Gentlemen at the Door, but truly who they all were I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who did my Lord Mobun spake that to?

Jackson. Indeed, I do not know who he spoke it to.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Answer was made to my Lord Mobun?

Jackson. Truly, there was no Answer that I heard, but we all went away soon after that, and we were bid to go to Leicester-fields to follow the other Chairs, and when we came to the other End of Leicester-fields, we set down Captain James by the Standard Tavern, and he gave us a Shilling, and bid us go our Ways; so we went our Way, and I heard nothing afterwards, but came away down the Fields, and there were three Chairs that stood at the Bottom of the Fields; and we asked them, what they stayed there for? And they said, To fill a Pipe of Tobacco: And presently after, we heard call Chairs again; but it was late, and it was Sunday Morning, and my Partner said, Let us go away home, and we did so, we went directly home.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you carry no Body back?

Jackson. No, we carried no Body back.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with this Witness, our next Witness is one Richard Edwards, and he was one of the Chairmen that carried Mr. Dockwra. (He was sworn.)

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you acquaint my Lords, Whether you carried any Body from Lockett's the 29th of October, and who it was, and whither you carried him?

Edwards. I do not know who I carried, but they were calling Coaches at the Greybound Tavern in the Strand, and no Coaches coming, they called for Chairs, and so our Chair was brought up.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you came there, who did you see there?

Edwards. Indeed I did not know my Lord of Warwick, nor my Lord Mobun, nor any of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, What do you know? Tell my Lords what happened.

Edwards. When we were there, there went two into two Chairs; and my Lord Mobun said, or another Gentleman, I cannot tell which, that the Chairs should not go away, that they would kill any Man that should go away; and they went out of the Chairs, and went into the House again.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what happened after they went into the House again?

Edwards. After they went out of the Chairs into the House again, as I was told, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Mr. Coote, went into three Chairs, and went away from the Door; and there were three Chairs of us that went last.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither did you go with your Chair?

Edwards. We went to the Standard Tavern at the End of Leicester-fields, and when we came to the Tavern Door, we asked him if we should knock at the Door; he said no, but he gave us a Shilling, and bid us go about our Business; and so we did, for we went sheer away to Charing-Cross.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray can you tell who were in the other Chairs?

Edwards. Truly I cannot tell any Man that was in our three Chairs, for I was the hind-Chairman, and did not know any of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire to know what he means by hind-Chairman.

Edwards. My Lord, ours was the last Chair that went to Leicester-fields, and I was behind the Chair, and never could see any of them, it being so very dark after they took the Chairs, till we came to Charing-Cross, at St. Martins-lane; and then I could not see who the particular Persons were that were in the Chairs; nor indeed, whose the Chairs were that carried them.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Hour was it?

Edwards. It was very late, between one and two in the Morning; it was past one before we were called out.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say you went to the upper End of Leicester-fields, with two other Chairs; Pray did you see any other Chairs afterwards, and where?

Edwards. We saw three Chairs at the lower End of the Square, as we came down by Green-street End, and we asked them, What they stay'd there for, and they said, to light a Pipe of Tobacco.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Who had been carried in those Chairs, Can you tell?

Edwards. I did not see them set down any Body, and I cannot tell who they carried; and as for the Person that we carried, I did not so much as see him to know him, nor know who he was; but we went away as soon as ever we were paid.

Mr. Att. Gen. I have one Question more to ask you; you say, That my Lord of Warwick at the Tavern Door bid you stay, and that none should go away, and swore he would run any Man thro' that should go away?

Edwards. It was my Lord Mobun; and then two that had gone into the Chairs, went into the House again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you say, that there was some Talk of going to Westminster?

Edwards. My Lord Mobun did talk of going to Westminster, when they went into the Chairs the second time; and I think I heard Mr. Coote say, he would make an end of it then, and he would kill any Man that would not go forwards to Leicester-fields.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, will you ask this Witness any more Questions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, have you any more Evidence to call?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the next Piece of Evidence that we should apply our selves to, will be to what happened at the Bagnio in Long-acre, after my Lord Warwick and Captain French came there: And the Witness that we shall call is Pomfret, and he is a Servant at the Bagnio in Long-acre, and he will acquaint your Lordships who came thither the 30th of October last, and what happened there.

L. H. St. What is his Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. Henry Pomfret.

L. H. St. Is he sworn?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. St. What is it that you examine him about? What Questions do you ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Who came to his Master's House; and at what Time they came.

Pomfret. My Lord, on Sunday the 30th of October last, between Two and Three in the Morning, there came to my Master's Door the Earl of Warwick, and knocked at the Door, and there was Captain French with him; and when they were let in, my Lord of Warwick told me that Captain French was wounded, and he himself had a Wound, and he desired that my Master might be called up for to dress the Wounds; especially, because Captain French was very much wounded, which accordingly was done in about a quarter of an Hour after they were brought in.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he desire to be concealed when he was come in?

L. H. St. Of whom do you speak, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord of Warwick.

Pomfret. He did desire, that if any Body asked for him, it should be said he was not there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray in what Condition did my Lord of Warwick seem to be in at that Time?

Pomfret. He seemed to be very much concerned at that Time, and his Right Hand, in which he had his Sword, and which was drawn, was very much bloody.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was the Sword bloody that he had in his Hand?

Pomfret. The Blade was bloody; but whether it was all over bloody, I cannot tell; there was besides some Blood upon the Shell; it was very near all over bloody, as I remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Friend, consider what you swore at the Coroner's Inquest about the Blood upon the Sword.

Pomfret. Indeed I cannot say it was bloody all along the Blade; but there was Blood upon the Shell, and there was Blood upon the Inside, it was so to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Condition was Mr. French's Sword in?

Pomfret. He had a drawn Sword in his Hand, but I did not perceive it had any Blood upon it: it was a large Blade.

Mr. Att. Gen. How do you know what Sort of Sword Mr. French's was, and in what Condition it was?

Pomfret. He desired me to take Notice of it next Morning, and I did so; and there was no Blood upon it.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to be desired to take Notice of what passed there about the Swords?

Pomfret. My Lord, there was three of them the next Day, and one, it was said, was Mr. Coote's, and another of them was my Lord of Warwick's, which I do believe was bloody from the Point upwards, very near; but I cannot directly say but that was afterwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who brought in that Sword that you say was Mr. Coote's?

Pomfret. To the best of my Remembrance Captain Dockwra brought it in; it was almost half an Hour after my Lord Warwick and Captain French came into the House, when they came thither.

Mr. Att. Gen. They, Who do you mean?

Pomfret. Captain James and he.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were they let in presently?

Pomfret. No, My Lord of Warwick had desired that they might be private there; but when they knocked at the Door, my Lord of Warwick desired to know who they were; and when it was understood that they were Mr. James and Mr. Dockwra, they were let in by my Lord's Order.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, which of all the Four brought in any Sword in a Scabbard?

Pomfret. It was Captain Dockwra.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did they appear to be all of a Party?

Pomfret. They were glad to see one another; and they talked a pretty while together, but indeed I cannot say I heard what they talked.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, do you remember my Lord of Warwick's Sword, and what there was upon it?

Pomfret. It was a Steel Sword, Water-gilt, and as near as I can remember, there was Blood upon it for the most Part from the Point upward.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what did appear upon Mr. French's Sword?

Pomfret. There was Water and Dirt, but there was no Blood at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did they stay there?

Pomfret. They all continued about half an Hour, and then went away, all but Mr. French, who staid there.

Mr. Att. Gen. What then became of the others?

Pomfret. Mr. James, Mr. Dockwra, and my Lord of Warwick, went away; and my Lord of Warwick desired particularly, that we would all take care of Mr. French, for he was his particular Friend; and Mr. French continued there till Sunday about One of the Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Discourse at that Time about Mr. Coote?

Pomfret. Not, that I heard of, one Word.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Notice taken of any Quarrel that happened between any Body, and who?

Pomfret. No, indeed, I did not hear them take Notice of any Quarrel at all between any Body.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say Mr. French, when he came into your House, was wounded, and there was Care particularly taken of him because he was wounded.

Pomfret. Yes, my Lord of Warwick desired to take care of him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then pray, was there no Discourse how he came to be wounded?

Pomfret. Indeed I do not know how he came to be wounded; nor did I hear one Word of Discourse about it; indeed I cannot say any thing who wounded him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you recollect yourself, and tell my Lords what sort of Handle had my Lord of Warwick's Sword when you saw it.

Pomfret. It had a Steel Handle.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray can you tell whether the Shell was open or close?

Pomfret. I cannot tell justly; I saw it, and that was all.

Mr. Att. Gen. If I apprehend you, you say my Lord had a Wound in his Hand.

Pomfret. Yes, my Lord, he had so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, in what Hand was it that he was wounded?

Pomfret. To the best of my Remembrance, it was in his Right Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did there appear much Blood there?

Pomfret. Yes, my Lord, indeed there did.

Mr. Serj. Wright. You talk of Mr. James and Mr. Dockwra's Swords; pray in what Condition were they?

Pomfret. Mr. Dockwra's Sword was by his Side, and not drawn.

Mr. Serj. Wright. What did you observe of Captain James's Sword?

Pomfret. His Sword was naked, and he had lost his Scabbard; but how that came I cannot tell; and there was Dirt on one Side of the Sword; and he said he had left his Scabbard behind him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Blood upon his Sword?

Pomfret. No, there was no Blood that I did see upon it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did you see any Blood upon Mr. Dockwra's Sword?

Pomfret. No, indeed, I did not see Mr. Dockwra's Sword, it was in the Scabbard by his Side.

D. of Leeds. My Lords, there has been Notice here taken of several Swords that this Witness saw; and he takes so far Notice of my Lord of Warwick's Sword, that he tells you what Sort of Hilt it had, and how it was bloody from the Point to the Hilt; I desire he would give you an Account of the Length and Breadth of the other Mens Swords, Mr. French, Mr. James, and Mr. Dockwra's.

L. H. St. You said just now, that you took Notice of my Lord of Warwick's Sword, that it was bloody from the Point to the Hilt; What sort of Sword was it?

Pomfret. It was a pretty broad Sword.

L. H. St. Did you take Notice of the other Swords, what Breadth or Length they were of?

Pomfret. No, my Lord, I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which was that Sword that was dirty, as you say?

Pomfret. That was Captain French's.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that a broad Sword or not?

Pomfret. No, it was not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray was it over Night or next Morning that you saw the Swords?

Pomfret. It was in the Morning about Three a Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. What time did my Lord of Warwick, and Mr. James, and Mr. Dockwra go away?

Pomfret. My Lord of Warwick and they were gone several Hours before Mr. French; and to the best of my Remembrance, Mr. James broke his Sword upon the Floor after he came in.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what Swords were there in all that you saw there?

Pomfret. There was Captain French's, Captain James's, my Lord of Warwick's, and one Mr. Coote's, as Mr. French said when it was brought in.

L. H. St. Have you done with this Witness, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, we have.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, Will you ask him any Questions?

E. of Warwick. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Then, Mr. Attorney, call your next Witness.

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witness is Thomas Goodall, who is a Servant at the Bagnio in Long-Acre, as well as this Man that was last. (He was sworn.)

L. H. St. What Questions do you ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire he would acquaint your Lordships, what Time it was my Lord of Warwick and Capt. French came to his Master's House?

Goodall. It was between One and Two of the Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire he would acquaint your Lordships what he saw and knows, that passed at that Time?

Goodall. All that I can say is, That I did see my Lord of Warwick's Sword bloody, and it was naked in his Hand, and I did see a Wound on his Hand: Indeed I did not see him when he first came in, for he had been there a pretty while before I saw him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, in what Condition was my Lord when you saw him?

Goodall. He had his Sword in one Hand, and it was bloody at the Blade, and at the Hilt; but whether it was bloody all over, indeed I did not take notice of it, and so cannot give an Account.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what sort of Sword was it?

Goodall. Indeed I cannot give an Account what sort of Sword it was, but it was either Steel or Silver gilt, as I remember; but I did take notice that there was Blood upon the Hilt, that is, upon the Shell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it an open Shell, or a close one?

Goodall. I think it was a close one.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did my Lord of Warwick give any Order to be denied in the House, or for any Concealment there?

Goodall. Indeed I did not hear of any Orders given for Concealing of any Body there; but my Lord walk'd up and down very much concerned.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not Mr. French come in with him?

Goodall. I do believe he might: But I cannot say I saw him when he came in.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell when Mr. James and Mr. Dockwra came in? How long was that after my Lord of Warwick was there, and Mr. French?

Goodall, to the best of my Remembrance and Knowledge, it was half an Hour after my Lord of Warwick and Mr. French came, that Mr. James and Mr. Dockwra came: I am sure it was so before I saw them in the House; but indeed I cannot say directly when they came in, or when they went out.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, which Hand of my Lord of Warwick was it that was hurt, the Right or the Left?

Goodall. Indeed, I cannot positively say; but I think it was the Right Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. You talk of my Lord of Warwick's Sword; Did you take any notice of Mr. French's Sword?

Goodall. No, indeed; I was busy about the Affairs of the House; I did see my Lord of Warwick's Sword, but that was by Chance, and it was bloody at the Hilt, and upon the Blade; but whether it were all over bloody, indeed I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire to ask him, Whether he can tell who brought in Mr. Coote's Sword thither?

Goodall. Indeed I cannot.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney General, Have you any more Questions to ask him?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, not I.

L. H. St. My Lord of Warwick, Will you ask him any Questions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, Who is your next Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, our next Witness is Mrs. A. Goodall, this Man's Wife, (Who was sworn)

L. H. St. What Questions do you ask this Gentlewoman?

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire that she would acquaint your Lordships, Whether she was at the Bagnio in Long-acre when my Lord of Warwick and Captain French came in?

A. Goodall. I was there when my Lord of Warwick came in.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was Captain French with him?

A. Goodall. Yes, Captain French was with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. About what a Clock was it that they came there?

A. Goodall. It was about Two a Clock, as near as I can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. In what Condition were they when they came in, pray?

A. Goodall. Mr. French was very much wounded.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, how was my Lord of Warwick?

A. Goodall. My Lord had his Sword in his Hand, and it was very bloody, both at the Hilt, and upon the Blade.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe any Wound that my Lord had?

A. Goodall. I think, to the best of my Remembrance, my Lord had his Hand wrapped up in a Handkerchief, which was bloody; but I was busy up and down in the House, and I cannot so well tell what Hand it was; I was indeed up and down there while they were there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know of any Orders that were given by my Lord of Warwick to be concealed while he was there?

A. Goodall. He did desire the Door might not be opened to any Body that asked for him, and that it might not be said that he was there; and when the other two Gentlemen came to the Door, he went to the Door himself, and when he saw who they were, he ordered them to be let in.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Occasion of his going to the Door himself?

A. Goodall. There was a knocking at the Door, and he had a mind to know who it was; and when it did appear it was Mr. James and Mr. Dockwra, he himself ordered them to be let in.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came the Door to be open to them?

A. Goodall. Indeed I think he opened it himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long was that after he and Capt. French came in?

A. Goodall. It was about half an Hour.

Mr. Att. Gen. When they first came in, what Posture were they in? Had they any Swords in their Hands?

A. Goodall. I did not positively take notice, whether they had any Swords in their Hands, nor what they had when they came in.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of them afterwards?

A. Goodall. My Lord of Warwick, Mr. James, and Mr. Dockwra, went away within a little while, and my Lord of Warwick ordered particular Care to be taken of Mr. French, as his Friend, and he was put to Bed after his Wounds were dressed; but I cannot tell what afterwards became of my Lord Warwick, and the other Gentlemen.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think you were saying, that my Lord of Warwick was wounded in the Hand; which Hand was it?

A. Goodall. I cannot positively say, whether it was the Right or the Left.

L. H. St. Will you who are of the King's Counsel, ask this Witness any further Questions?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, we shall ask her no other Questions.

E. of Warwick. No, my Lord, nor I.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then our next Witness is Henry Amy, who is a Surgeon, and lives at the Bagnio in Long-acre; and he will give your Lordship an Account what passed within his Knowledge at this time within his House, and who came thither wounded, and what particular Care was ordered to be taken of Mr. French, and by whom.

(Mr. Amy was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire you will give an Account to my Lords what happened at your House early in the Morning, the 30th of October last.

Amy. The 30th of October last, about Two of the Clock, I was knock'd up out of my Bed to attend two Gentlemen, my Lord Warwick and Captain French, who came then into my House.

Mr. Att. Gen. In what Condition were they?

Amy. They were both wounded; Mr. French very much, and my Lord of Warwick in his Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see any Swords?

Amy. Yes; they had both Swords in their Hands, and my Lord of Warwick's Sword was very bloody.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, Sir, when they came into your House, what Directions was given by my Lord Warwick?

Amy. He gave Directions, if any Body should ask for him, they should say he was not there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did any Body come and ask for him?

Amy. While we were taking care of Mr. French, and dressing his Wound, there were some Persons came and knocked at the Door, and my Lord of Warwick did order, that no Body should be let in; but he himself went to the Door, and when he found that it was Mr. Dockwra and Mr. James, my Lord Warwick ordered that they should be let in.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray tell my Lords what followed after that?

Amy. After we had dressed Mr. French—

Mr. Att. Gen. By the Way, was there any particular Directions, and by whom, to take care of Mr. French?

Amy. Yes, my Lord Warwick desired me to take care of him, as his particular Friend.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well then, after you had dressed Mr. French's Wound, what happened?

Amy. I dressed my Lord Warwick's Wound.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, whereabouts was my Lord of Warwick's Wound?

Amy. It was near the first Joint of his Forefinger.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray how long did they stay there?

Amy. After Mr. Dockwra and Mr. James came in, and my Lord's Hand was dressed, they stayed a little while, and they Three went away.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was said when they went away?

Amy. My Lord of Warwick desired to have great care taken of Mr. French; and they said, Now let us go away, and they went away.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what Time did they stay in your House?

Amy. When they went away, I think it was about half an Hour after they first came in.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you take notice of no Sword but my Lord of Warwick's?

Amy. No, not then.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you afterwards?

Amy. Afterwards in the Morning, Mr. French called for his Sword, and I looked upon it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, in what Condition was his Sword? Was it bloody?

Amy. It was without Blood, only a little dirty.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did you observe that they talked of any Quarrel that had been between Captain French and my Lord, when they came in?

Amy. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ask them any Questions about it, the one or the other of them?

Amy. No, I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear them say, how they came by their Wounds?

Amy. No, I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear them talk of any Body being killed, particularly Mr. Coote?

Amy. I did not know of any Body being killed till next Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you take any notice of James's and Dockwra's Swords?

Amy. Truly, I took no notice of any Swords but my Lord Warwick's, while my Lord Warwick was there in the House; but the next Morning Mr. French gave me his Sword, and there was another Sword there, which Mr. French told me was Capt. Coote's Sword.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was that; how long after my Lord of Warwick, and James, and Dockwra, were gone away?

Amy. It was some Hours after.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did you hear of Mr. Coote's being killed?

Amy. About Nine a Clock next Morning I heard of Mr. Coote's being killed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whom did you hear it from?

Amy. From Pomfret my Servant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear no Discourse between my Lord of Warwick, Capt. French, Mr. James, and Mr. Dockwra about it?

Amy. No, I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they not talk how those Wounds came they had, nor did not you ask who gave them?

Amy. No, I did ask no Question of either of them: And in half an Hour after they came in, my Lord of Warwick and the other two Gentlemen went away.

Mr. Att. Gen. When they left French there, what Orders were left about him?

Amy. Only to take care of him, my Lord of Warwick desired that.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Reason did my Lord give for that?

Amy. I heard nothing of Reason, only that he was his particular Friend.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear them talk any Thing, whither they would go, when they went away.

Amy. I did hear some Talk about going into the Country.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know whither they went, when they went away from your House?

Amy. No, indeed I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with him.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, Will your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

Earl of Warwick. I desire to have him asked, Whether I was not wounded in the Hand.

Amy. His Hand was very bloody, the Handkerchief that was about it was wet with the Blood.

Earl of Warwick. I desire to ask him, when it was that he saw Capt. French's Sword?

Amy. It was not before the Morning; it was about Nine a Clock, as I remember.

M. of Norm. Before this Witness goes away, I desire he may be asked one Question, Whether he can tell the Size of Mr. French's Sword?

L. H. St. Here is a noble Lord that desires to know, if you can tell about Capt. French's Sword, what sort of Sword it was?

Amy. As to the Blade, it was a middle-fiz'd Sword.

M. of Norm. Was it a broad Blade or no?

Amy. No, my Lord, it was not a broad Blade.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, Who is your next Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. Capt. Loftus Duckinfield. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. This Gentleman will acquaint your Lordships what Discourse past between these Gentlemen the next Day; pray Sir, acquaint my Lords what you heard about Mr. Coote's Death, and when, and where.

Capt. Duck. Early in the Morning I was told of this Accident.

Mr. Att. Gen. By whom?

Capt. Duck. One of the Company, I cannot tell who, I think they were all together then, my Lord of Warwick, Captain James, Captain Dockwra, and no Body else.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was their Discourse?

Capt. Duck. They said, they believed Captain Coote was killed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they tell you by whom?

Capt. Duck. By Mr. French, every Body did say he was his Adversary.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Account was given of the Action?

Capt. Duck. They said it was done in the Dark, and Capt. French was his Adversary.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any notice taken of any Duel?

Capt. Duck. Yes, there was, between those two, and the other Persons on both Sides; and it was said my Lord of Warwick was Friend to Mr. Coote, and my Lord Mobun.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were on the other Side?

Capt. Duck. Mr. Dockwra and Mr. James.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Discourse, who actually fought?

Capt. Duck. It was said, that Captain French fought with Captain Coote, as they believed, and Mr. James with my Lord of Warwick.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see my Lord of Warwick's Sword?

Capt. Duck. Some Time of the Day I did, but I cannot tell whether it was in the Morning, or no.

Mr. Att. Gen. In what Condition was it, was it bloody or not?

Capt. Duck. It was a Steel Sword.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did they stay with you?

Capt. Duck. About half an Hour.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they come publickly?

Capt. Duck. We went away in a Hackney Coach together.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what Discourse was there about consulting to go into the Country together?

Capt. Duck. That might be discoursed, but by whom I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord of Warwick talk of going into the Country?

Capt. Duck. Whether the Company talked of it, or my Lord of Warwick in particular, and the rest assented to it, I cannot well tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither did they go?

Capt. Duck. I cannot directly tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time of the Day was it?

Capt. Duck. It was about six of the Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. Cannot you tell whither they went?

Capt. Duck. Capt. James, and Capt. Dockwra went to the Ship and Castle in Cornhill about five a Clock or six, as near as I can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell what Time my Lord of Warwick went away?

Capt. Duck. No, I cannot tell what Time he went away, not directly.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell of any Agreement amongst them, whither they were to go?

Capt. Duck. No, I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse or Concern did you observe past between them, concerning Captain Coote?

Capt. Duck. My Lord of Warwick shewed a great deal of Concern for his Friend Mr. Coote.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Notice of Mr. Coote's Death amongst you?

Capt. Duck. We had Notice before we went away, but I cannot tell whether it was before my Lord of Warwick was gone.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it after the Discourse of going into the Country, or before?

Capt. Duck. Indeed, I cannot directly say when it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what Reason was there for their going into the Country before he was dead?

Capt. Duck. They believed he was dead.

Mr. Att. Gen. Cannot you tell the Reason why they would go into the Country?

Capt. Duck. No, indeed, I cannot tell the Reason.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe my Lord of Warwick's Sword? Was there any Blood upon it?

Capt. Duck. I cannot say his Sword was bloody at the Point; the whole Blade and Shell was bloody to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Sort of Sword was it?

Capt. Duck. It was a pretty broad Blade, a hollow Blade, and a hollow open Shell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Discourse concerning Captain French?

Capt. Duck. Yes, they thought he was very ill wounded.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any, and what Discourse, who should give my Lord of Warwick his Wound?

Capt. Duck. It was said, they believed Capt. James gave my Lord his Wound.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, was there any Blood upon Mr. James's Sword, or was he wounded?

Capt. Duck. I saw no Wound upon Capt. James, that I know of.

L. H. St. Do you believe that my Lord Warwick's Sword was bloodied with the Hurt of his own Hand, or any otherwife?

Capt. Duck. I cannot tell; it was a Cut-shell, and the Outside bloody as well as the In.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, Will your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, if you have any other Witnesses, pray call them.

Another Witness was produced, that belonged to the Ship and Castle in Cornhill.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Man will give you an Account what passed at his House at that Time, and between whom; Pray will you tell my Lords who was at your House the 30th of October last, and what past there then?

Witness. My Lord of Warwick, Capt. James, and Captain Dockwra; and when my Lord of Warwick came in, I thought my Lord was in a very great Concern, and called for Pen, Ink, and Paper, and I feared there was some Quarrel in hand, but they said no, the Quarrel was over, and says my Lord of Warwick, I am afraid poor Coote is killed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe any Desire to be private?

Witness. No indeed, I cannot tell that.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did they continue there?

Witness. About six a Clock my Lord of Warwick, and Capt. James, and Capt. Dockwra, and Captain Duckinfield went away.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell who went with my Lord Warwick?

Witness. No indeed, I cannot tell who went with my Lord Warwick; there came in a Gentleman in black, whom I knew to be my Lord of Warwick's Steward, and he came and spoke some Words to my Lord of Warwick, about a Quarter of an Hour after they came in, and then they went away, for after that I did not hear any farther Discourse.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of the rest of the Company?

Witness. They went away; I do not know what became of them, nor whither they went; some of them went in and out of one Room into another several Times, two or three Times, and came out again.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with this Witness.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, Will you ask him any Questions?

E. of Warw. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, who is your next Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Salmon the Surgeon, who by the Coroner's Order searched the Wound. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, was you ordered by the Coroner to view the Body of Mr. Coote?

Salm. Yes, I was ordered by the Coroner to inspect the Body of Capt. Coote, and to give the Jury an Account of the Nature of the Wounds.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, upon the View of the Body, what Wounds had he?

Salm. There was two Wounds; one on the Breast near the Collar-bone, running downwards very Deep.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what Part of the Breast was it, and how deep was it?

Salm. It was on the left Part of the Breast near the Collar-bone, and it penetrated four or five Inches.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you guess at what Sort of Sword it was that made the Wound?

Salm. No indeed, Sir, I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it a broad Sword, or a little Sword?

Salm. The Orifice was about the length of half an Inch, and about the depth of five Inches.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that made with a broad Sword, or with a narrow Sword?

Salm. Indeed, I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say he had another Wound; where was that?

Salm. That was on his left Side too, near unto the short Ribs, under the last Rib; which was about the length of an Inch, and of the depth of six Inches, and it run through the Diaphragma.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you take one of those Wounds, or both of them to be mortal?

Salm. I did look upon either of them to be mortal, and to be the Occasion of his Death.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell, whether they were both made with one and the same Sword?

Salm.

Salm. Indeed I cannot tell that, whether they were made with one Sword, or two.

Mr. Att. Gen. Cannot you tell how they appeared to be? I suppose you probed them.

Salm. Yes, I probed them both; one was quite through the Diaphragma.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time was it that you viewed the Body by the Order of the Coroner?

Salm. I saw the Body at Seven a-Clock on Sunday Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. If my Lord of Warwick desire to ask him any Questions, he may.

E. of Warw. My Lord, I desire to ask him, whether any of the Wounds were large enough to be made by a Sword run up to the Hilt?

Salm. No, my Lord, sure they were not.

E. of Warw. My Lord, I desire to know of him, whether both these Wounds were given before or behind?

Salm. I can only tell you the Length and Depth by following of the Probe: the one was downwards, and the other upwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you suppose both those Wounds were given when the Person was standing, backward or forward?

Salm. 'Tis impossible to tell how they were given, because of the Variety of the Postures of the Body in the divers Capacities thereby of receiving the Wounds?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, can you tell whether they were given by one and the same Sword or no?

Salm. Indeed I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any Thing to the contrary?

Salm. I cannot say any Thing for it, or against it.

E. of Kingston. My Lords, this Witness, if I apprehend him right, says, the Wound on his Side was a large Wound.

Salm. Yes, a very large Wound, of the Length of about three quarters of an Inch at the Orifice, and five or six Inches deep.

E. of Kingston. I desire he may tell whether that Wound could be given by any other than a broad Sword?

Salm. I cannot tell that.

E. of Rochester. Indeed, my Lords, I would have him asked this Question again; I know not whether he can answer it or no; but I cannot but think it is proper to have some Account of this Matter. In all Enquiries before the Coroner, there is a Judgment to be made of the Nature of the Wound, in order to form the Indictments, and that the Jury may know with what sort of Weapon it was made; and it is his Profession, as a Surgeon, to know such Matters.

L. H. St. Mr. Salmon, you hear what is required of you by my noble Lords, and the Observation which is made. You are the Surgeon sent for by the Coroner on Purpose to inspect this Body; and when you did so, it was incumbent upon you to consider and give Information, as well with what sort of Instrument the Wound was given, as the Length and Depth of the Wound, that the Jury might consider upon all the Circumstances of the Occasion, and Manner of the Party's Death: And my Lords would know, whether by the Orifices of the Wounds, when you inspected them, you can make a Judgment, if they were made by several Swords, or the same Sword.

Salm. I cannot say that I saw any Difference between the Orifices, as to the Nature of the Instrument they were given with, nor whether they were made by one and the same Sword or no; only the one Orifice was bigger than the other; that of the Side was bigger than that at the Collar-bone.

L. H. St. Then so far we have Light (if I apprehend you rightly) the Orifice of the upper Wound was not near so wide as that of the lower; but it seems to be much, in one of your Profession, not to be able to judge whether the Wounds were given with the same sort of Sword, when there was such a Difference in the Orifices.

Salm. That below was a deeper Wound; and there was a considerable Difference between the Largeness of one and the other.

Lord Audley. My Lords, I desire he may tell your Lordships how far backward the Wound in the Side lay.

Salm. It was directly on the left Side, immediately under the two last Ribs, and past through the Diaphragma.

M. of Normanby. Pray, my Lords, let him point with his Finger whereabouts it was.

L. H. St. My Lords would have you shew them with your Finger whereabouts it was. (Which he did.)

E. of Warw. It is a very material Question for me, that he should answer, whether he did believe that one and the same Sword might not give both Wounds.

Salm. I cannot say any Thing of it one Way or other; but one Wound went much further than the other, because it was in a fleshy Part; and in such a Case, the further the Sword goes in, it makes the Wound larger.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then our next Witness is Stephen Turner, who was Mr. Coote's Man; and he will give you an Account what Sword his Master had, and where he found it.

[He was sworn, a Sword was shewn him.]

Turner. This was my Master's Sword, Mr. Coote's, and I never saw it after he went out in the Morning, till I saw it in the Hands of the Constable, and afterwards before the Coroner.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time did you hear of your Master's Death?

Turner. It was about nine a Clock next Morning that I heard he was dead.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was your Master's Body?

Turner. It was in St. Martin's-Lane.

Earl of Tankerville. I would desire he might be asked one Question, Whether his Master used his Left-hand or his Right?

Turner. I do believe he was a right-handed Man. I did never see him fence. It was on the Sunday Morning that I went to the Round-house, where I found my Master dead.

Earl of Warwick. I desire he may be asked, Whether he has not observed a particular Kindness and Friendship between his Master and me?

Turner. Yes, my Lord: I have several Times waited upon my Master, when my Lord and he was together, and they were always very civil and kind one to another; and I never heard one Word of any Unkindness between them.

Earl of Warwick. Whether he knows of any Quarrel that was between us?

Turner. No, I never did.

Earl of Warwick. I desire he may be asked, Whether he did not use to lie at my Lodgings sometimes?

L. H. St. You hear my Lord's Question; What say you, Did your Master use to lie at my Lord of Warwick's Lodgings at any Time?

Turner. Yes; very often.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray call Pomfret again, and let him see the Sword.

[Then he came in, and two Swords were shewn him.]

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire he may acquaint your Lordships what he knows of those two Swords.

Pomfret. These two Swords were brought in by some of the Company that came to my Master's House, and when they were shewn to Captain French in the Morning, he owned this to be his, and the other to be Mr. Coote's; and he desired that Notice might be taken that his Sword was dirty, but not bloody; and there was some Blood upon the other.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who brought in Mr. Coote's Sword?

Pomfret. Indeed I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then our last Piece of Evidence, my Lord, will be that of Mr. White the Coroner.

(Who was sworn.)

L. H. St. What do you ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. From whom had he these Swords?

(The Swords were shewn him.)

White. May it please your Grace, these Swords were delivered to me by the Constable.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, Whether, upon his View of the Body, he looked upon the Wounds; and, Whether he did apprehend they were given by one and the same Sword.

White. May it please your Grace, when I had sworn my Inquest, I sent for the Surgeon that was here before, and gave him Order to probe the Wounds, that the Jury might know the Nature of them, in order to the drawing up the Inquisition; and I did expressly ask him, Whether he found any such Distinction between them, that they were given by one and the same Weapon, or different Weapons: He said, as he says now, That he could not tell, Whether the Wounds were given by two Swords, or by one; but he did apprehend there was a great Difference between them, and so did I; but generally the Orifice of a Wound does close up when the Body is cold: One of the Wounds were nearer the Left Side than the other; to the best of my Remembrance, it was almost behind him.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have done with our Evidence, until we hear what my Lord of Warwick says to it.

L. H. St. My Lord of Warwick, will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Make Proclamation for Silence.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O yes, O yes, O yes, His Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, does strictly charge and command all Manner of Persons here present, to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

L. H. St. My Lord of Warwick, the King's Counsel have made an End of giving Evidence for the King; now is the proper Time for you to enter upon your Defence.

E. of Warwick. May it please your Grace, and you my noble Lords, my Peers,

I stand here before your Lordships, accused of the Murder of Mr. Coote, of which I am so innocent, that I came and voluntarily surrender'd my self, so soon as I heard your Lordships might be at leisure to try me; and had sooner done it, but that the King was not then here, nor your Lordships sitting, and had no Mind to undergo a long Confinement; and now I think I might well submit it to your Lordships Judgment, even on the Evidence that has been offered against me, whether there hath been any Thing proved of Malice propensity, or my being any Actor therein, so as to adjudge me guilty. And I think I may with humble Submission to your Lordships say, that my Innocence appeareth even from several of the Witnesses who have been examined against me, which I will not trouble your Lordships to repeat, but submit to your Memory and Observation.

But, my Lords, the Safety of my Life does not so much concern me in this Case, as the Vindication of my Honour and Reputation, from the false Reflections to which the Prosecutor has endeavoured to expose me; and I shall therefore beg your Lordships Patience to give a fair and full Account of this Matter; In which the Duty I owe to your Lordships, and to Justice in general, and the Right I owe to my own Cause in particular, do so oblige me, that I will not in the least prevaricate, neither will I conceal or deny any Thing that is true.

My Lords, I must confess I was there when this unfortunate Accident happen'd, which must be a great Misfortune in any Case, but was more so to me in this, because Mr. Coote was my particular Friend, and I did all I could to hinder it, as your Lordships may observe by the whole Proceedings.

It was on the Saturday Night when my Lord Mobun and I, and several other Gentlemen, met at Locket's, where the same Company used often to meet; and in some Time after several of us had been there, Mr. Coote came unexpectedly, and for some time he and we were very friendly, and in good Humour, as we used to be with each other; But then there happen'd some reflecting Expressions from Mr. Coote to Mr. French, who thereupon called for the Reckoning; and it being paid, we left the upper Room, and I propos'd to send three Bottles of Wine to my own Lodging, and to carry him thither to prevent the Quarrel. But while the Company stop'd to call for a Glass of Ale at the Bar below, Mr. Coote (whose unfortunate Humour was sometimes to be quarrellsome) did again provoke Mr. French to such Degree, that they there drew their Swords, but we then prevented them of doing any Mischief; then Mr. Coote still insisting to quarrel further with Mr. French, my Lord Mobun and I propos'd to send for the Guards to prevent them: But they had got Chairs to go towards Leicester-fields, and my Lord Mobun and I, as Friends to Mr. Coote, and intending to prevent any hurt to him, did follow him in two other Chairs, and as he was going up St. Martins Lane, stop'd stop'd him, and I extreamly there pressed him to return and be Friends with Mr. French, or at least defer it, for that the Night was very dark and wet; and while we were so perswading of him, Mr. French in one Chair, and Mr. James and Mr. Dockwra in two other Chairs past by us, (which we guess'd to be them) on which Mr. Coote made his Chairmen take him up again, and because the Chairmen would not follow Mr. French faster, threaten'd to prick him behind, and when we were got to Green-street, and got out of our Chairs, Mr. Coote offered half a Guinea to be changed to pay for all our three Chairs, but they not having Change, he desired Lord Mobun to pay the three Shillings, which he did. And in a few Minutes after, Mr. Coote and Mr. French engaged in the Fields, whither I went for the Assistance and in Defence of Mr. Coote, and received a very ill Wound in my right Hand; and there this fatal Accident befel Mr. Coote from Mr. French, whom Mr. Coote had dangerously wounded, and I must account it a great Unhappinefs to us all who were there: But so far was I from encouraging of it, that I will prove to your Lordships that I did my utmost Endeavours to prevent it; so far from any Design upon him, that I expos'd my own Life to save his; so far from propense Malice, that I will by many Witnesses of good Quality and Credit, prove to your Lordships a constant good and uninterrupted Friendship, from the first of our Acquaintance to the Time of his Death; which will appear by many Instances of my frequent Company and Correspondence with him, often lending him Money, and paying his Reckonings, and about two Months before his Death lent him an hundred Guineas towards buying him an Ensign's Place in the Guards, and often, and even two Nights before this, he lodged with me, and that very Night I paid his Reckoning.

And when I have proved these Things, and answered what has been said about the Sword, and what other Objections they have made, I doubt not but that I shall be acquitted to the entire Satisfaction of your Lordships, and all the World that hear it.

Before I go upon my Evidence, I will crave leave further to observe to your Lordships, that at the Old Baily, when I was absent, Mr. French, James and Dockwra, have been all tried on the same Indictment now before your Lordships, and it was then opened and attempted, as now it is, to prove it upon me also; and by most of them the same Witnesses who have now appeared; and they were thereupon convicted only of Manslaughter, which could not have been, if I had been guilty of Murder. And on that Trial it plainly appeared that Mr. French was the Person with whom he quarrelled, and who killed him. And now I will call my Witnesses.

L. H. St. Will your Lordship please to go on to call your Witnesses, for the Proof of what you have said; that is the Method, and then you are to make such Observations as you please.

E. of War. My first Witness is Captain Edmund Keeting, who was with me at Locket's, but went away before Captain Coote or any of them came; and he will tell you I was with him a while.

Then Captain Keeting stood up.

L. H. St. Captain Keeting, you are not upon your Oath, because the Law will not allow it. In Cases of this Nature the Witnesses for the Prisoner are not to be upon Oath; but you are to consider that you speak in God's Presence, who does require the Truth should be testified in all Causes before Courts of Judicature, and their Lordships do expect that in what Evidence you give here, you should speak with the same Regard to Truth as if you were upon Oath; you hear to what it is my Lord of Warwick desires to have you examined, what say you to it?

Vol. V.

Captain Keeting. My Lord, I will-tell your Lordship all the Matter I know of it. I met with my Lord of Warwick that Evening at Tom's Coffee-House, and we continued there till about eight at Night; I went away to see for a Gentleman that owed me Money, and afterwards I went to Locket's, and while I was there, the Drawer came up and told me my Lord of Warwick desired to speak with me, and when he came up into the Room, he said he was to meet with my Lord Mobun there and Captain Coote, and he asked me if I knew where Captain French and Capt. James were; I told him I dined with Capt. Coote at Shuttleworth's; and in a while after Capt. Coote came in, and about an Hour and an half, I think, I continued there, and Capt. French came in; Captain Dockwra and we drank together for an Hour and an half, and they admired about ten a-Clock that my Lord Mobun was not come, and I payed my Reckoning, not being very well, and away I went home; Mr. James came in just before I went away, but there was no Quarrelling, nor any Thing like it before I went away.

E. of Warw. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, Whether we did not usually meet there as Friends, especially Capt. Coote and I.

Capt. Keeting. Captain Coote and my Lord of Warwick used to be almost every Day together at that Place.

E. of Warw. Pray, did he ever know or observe any Difference or Quarrel between Captain Coote and me?

Capt. Keeting. No, my Lord, I never saw any Thing but the greatest Friendship between my Lord of Warwick and Captain Coote that could be; I was with them and saw them together almost every Day.

L. H. St. Have you any Thing further to examine this Witness to?

E. of War. No, my Lord, I have no other Question to ask him.

L. H. St. Who is your next Witness, my Lord?

E. of War. My Lord, I suppose I shall not need to trouble you to examine the Chairmen over again; your Lordships have heard what they can say: I desire Colonel Stanhope may be called.

Who it seems stood by the Chair of State, and it was some while before he could get round to come to the Place where the Witnesses were to stand.

L. H. St. While this Witness gets round, if your Lordship has any other Witness ready to stand up, pray let him be called.

E. of Warwick. To prove the Kindness between Captain Coote and me, I desire Colonel Blisset may be called.

Who stood up.

L. H. St. What is it your Lordship asks this Witness, or calls him to?

E. of Warw. To testify what he knows of any Kindness or Unkindness between Captain Coote and me; whether he has not been often in our Company?

L. H. St. Have you been often in Company with my Lord of Warwick and Captain Coote?

Col. Blisset. Yes, my Lord, I was very well acquainted with both of them for a Twelve-month past before this Accident, and I have often been in their Company, and I always observed that there was a great deal of Friendship and Kindness between them.

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I desire he may tell any particular Instance that he knows or can remember.

Col. Blisset. I remember when Captain Coote had his Commission in the Regiment of Guards, he was complaining of the Streightness of his Circumstances; he was to pay for his Commission 400 Guineas, and said he had but 300 for to pay for it, and my Lord of Warwick did then say to him, do not trouble your self about that; or let not that disturb you, for I'll take care you shall have 100 Guineas, and he said he would give Order to his Steward to pay him so much; and I was told afterwards that he did so.

E. of War. I desire he may tell, if he knows of any other particular Instances of my Friendship to Mr. Coote.

Col. Blisset. Once when he was arrested by his Taylor for 13*l.* my Lord lent him five Guineas, and used very frequently to pay his Reckoning for him.

E. of Warw. I desire he may tell, if he knows any Thing else; and whether he has not lain at my Lodgings, and particularly but some small Time before this Accident happened.

Col. Blisset. About ten Days before this unhappy Accident happened, I was at my Lord of Warwick's Lodgings, and when I came there I found Captain Coote there a dressing himself; and I asked him how that came to pass, and he told me they had been up late together, and that he had sent home for his Man to dress himself there; upon which I did observe that they had been a rambling together over Night; and there was a very great Familiarity between them.

E. of Warw. Did you observe any Quarrel between us?

Col. Blisset. No; None at all; I never knew of any Quarrel between my Lord of Warwick and Captain Coote, but I observed there was a particular Kindness between them, and a great deal of Friendship I know my Lord of Warwick shewed to him, in paying of Reckonings for him, and lending him Money when he wanted.

E. of War. My Lord, I desire he may be asked whether he does not know that Captain Coote was straitened for Money.

Col. Blisset. I did hear Captain Coote say, That he had not received any Thing from his Father for thirteen Months, and his Father was angry with him, and would not send him any Supply, because he would not consent to cut off the Entail, and settle two or three hundred Pounds upon a Whore he had.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you consider with your self, and though you are not upon your Oath, answer the Questions truly, for you are obliged to speak the Truth, though you are not sworn, whenever you come to give your Testimony in a Court of Judicature; Pray acquaint my noble Lords here, Whether you did never hear my Lord Warwick complain of Capt. Coote?

Col. Blisset. No, I never did hear him complain of him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you never hear the least Word of any Quarrel between them.

Col. Blisset. No, indeed, I did never hear of any Quarrel between them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you never hear of any Unkindness at all?

Col. Blisset. No, indeed, my Lord, not I: I never so much as heard of the least Unkindness whatsoever.

L. H. St. Well then, my Lord, who do you call next?

Earl of Warwick. Now Colonel Stanhope is here, I desire he may be asked the same Question, Whether he does not know the particular Friendship that was between Captain Coote and me, and what Instances he can give of it?

L. H. St. You are to consider, Sir, though you are not upon your Oath, you are in a great Court, and under no less strict Obligation to testify the Truth, and nothing but the Truth: You hear what my noble Lord asks you.

Col. Stanhope. My Lord, I have known my Lord of Warwick and Captain Coote for about a Twelvemonth, and I did perceive that they did always profess a great Kindness for one another.

Earl of Warwick. I desire to know of him, Whether he observed any particular Friendship between Capt. Coote and me, much about the Time of this Business.

Col. Stanhope. About eight or ten Days before this unhappy Accident, I went to wait upon my Lord of Warwick twice at his Lodgings: Once I found Captain Coote there, one of them was in Bed, and the other was dressing of himself; I thought they were very good Friends that were so familiar, and I had good Reason to think so, because of that Familiarity: Both the Times that I was there, when I found them together, was within eight Days before the Accident happened.

Earl of Warwick. The next Witness I shall call will be Mr. Disney.

Mr. Att. Gen. But before Colonel Stanhope goes, I desire to ask him this Question, Whether he did never hear or know of any Unkindness between my Lord of Warwick and Capt. Coote?

Col. Stanhope. No, indeed I did not, I always thought them to be very good Friends.

L. H. St. Will your Lordship go on to your next Witness.

Earl of Warwick. Yes, my Lord, there he is, Mr. Disney; I desire he may be asked what he knows of any Expressions of Kindness and Friendship between me and Capt. Coote.

Mr. Disney. About the Time that Captain Coote was to have his Commission in the Guards, my Lord of Warwick received a Letter from him, wherein he desired him to lend him the 100 Guineas, according to his Offer, for he had but 300 by him, and he said his Father was unkind to him, and he could have no Money from him, and he would be honest to him, and pay it again as soon as he could; my Lord sent for his Steward, and ordered him to provide 100 Guineas for Captain Coote.

Coote while I was there; and all the Times that ever I saw them together, which was very frequently, there was the greatest Kindness between them that could be; and several Times I have seen my Lord of Warwick pay Captain Coote's Reckoning for him, and lent him Money when he wanted Money.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire to ask you, Sir, this Question, though you are not upon Oath, yet you are obliged to speak the Truth in a Court of Justice as much as if you were upon Oath: Did you not know or hear any Thing of a Misunderstanding or Quarrel about the Time that this Business happen'd?

Mr. Disney. No, indeed: I was with them together but the Day before, and frequently, and I heard nothing of any Unkindness between them in my Life, nor never knew of any Quarrel between them, or any Reason for it.

L. H. St. My Lord, who is it you call next.

Earl of Warwick. Colonel Whiteman. (Who stood up.)

L. H. St. What do you call this Gentleman for?

Earl of Warwick. It is to the same Effect, to acquaint your Lordships with what he knows of the Conversation between Captain Coote and me.

Col. Whiteman. My Lord, I know my Lord of Warwick and Captain Coote were constant Companions together; they dined together almost every Day for half a Year's Time almost; and as to this Time, when this Business had happened, I went to my Lord of Warwick, being sent for by him, and found him at a private Lodging, where he expressed a great deal of Concern for the Death of his dear Friend Mr. Coote, and he shewed me the Wound he had received in his Hand, and he desired he might be private, and he told me he believed People would make worse of it than it was, because he did not appear; but he did but intend to keep himself out of the Way till he could be tried; and I took what Care I could to get him a Convenience to go to France.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, What Reason did he give for his going away?

Col. Whiteman. The King being at that Time out of England, and so the Parliament not Sitting, he said he did not love Confinement, and had rather be in France till the Parliament should meet, and he might have a fair Trial, which he thought he should best have in this House.

Mr. Att. Gen. But pray, Sir, consider, You are bound to tell Truth, and the whole Truth, in such a Case as this: Are you sure there was no Unkindness or Quarrel, between my Lord Warwick and Captain Coote about this Time?

Col. Whiteman. No, I never knew of any Quarrel or Unkindness between them in all my Life.

L. H. St. My Lord, Have you any more Witnesses?

Earl of Warwick. I have a great many Witnesses more to the same Purpose, but I think I need not trouble your Lordship with them; only I would call a Person that has been mentioned, that is my Steward.

L. H. St. What is his Name?

Earl of Warwick. Edmund Raymund. (Who stood up.)

L. H. St. What Questions do you ask him?

Earl of Warwick. I desire he may tell what he knows of any Friendship between Captain Coote and me, and what particular Instances he can give of it.

Raymund. My Lord, I know that my Lord sent for me, and said Captain Coote had Occasion for 100 Guineas to pay for a Commission in the Guards, which he had not Money to make up, and I know that they were constant Companions every Day, did eat together, and often did lie together, and I did provide the 100 Guineas for him; and I always did observe that there was a very great Friendship between them.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, the next Witness I shall call will be Mr. French, who, I hope, having been tried, and had his Clergy allowed him, will be a good Witness; I should be sorry to interpose any thing that would be a Hindrance to your Lordships giving Judgment in this Case presently; he is able to give your Lordships an Account of the whole Matter; and though, I hope, I have no need of calling him as a Witness, yet I humbly offer it to your Lordships.

L. H. St. What say the Counsel on the other Side?

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I do not insist upon it; I think I have no need of it.

L. H. St. Your Lordship must judge for your self how far it is for your Advantage, to desire that this Matter should be debated.

Earl of Warwick. I do not desire to take up your Lordship's Time, though I am very well advised, that he is a good Witness in Law.

Earl of Roch. I apprehended it the Duty of the King's Counsel to make Objection against any Witness that should be produced by the Prisoner; I am loth to give your Lordships any unnecessary Trouble, yet I own, that I am not satisfied that a Witness should be offered and rejected, though the Objection be not made and argued, by my Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar: If a Witness be offered, and they think they have an Objection against him, if they do insist upon it, it will occasion a Debate, and then we must adjourn into the House of Lords.

L. H. St. It is not insisted upon by my Lord, as I apprehend. My Lord of Warwick, Have you any other Witness you would have called?

Earl of Warwick. I desire to ask Mrs. Amy a Question or two.

Then she stood up.

L. H. St. What does your Lordship ask her?

Earl of Warwick. What she remembers passed at her House about my Sword, or any Thing.

Mrs. Amy. My Lord, when I came into the Room where my Lord of Warwick and Captain French were, in our House, I stood by Capt. French while his Wounds was dressing, and I saw my Lord of Warwick's Sword, and looked upon it, and the Hilt and all the Shell was full of Blood, and it ran down to the Bottom of the Sword Blade.

Earl of Warwick. I desire she may be asked, how soon that was after my coming in?

Mrs. Amy. It was a Quarter of an Hour after my Lord came in.

Earl of Warwick. I desire she may speak what Sort of Sword it was at the Hilt, whether it were open or close?

Mrs. Amy. Indeed, I cannot say; but the Hilt was full of Blood, the Shell of it, and it ran down to the Bottom of the Blade.

L. H. St. Has your Lordship done?

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I will only take notice, that the three Gentlemen that were on the other other Side, were tried at the Old-Baily, and found guilty only of Manſlaughter; but now I being on his Side, and not having any Malice to him, but always a great deal of Friendſhip, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, whether I can be thought any Ways guilty of his Death; and I humbly hope your Lordſhips will hear my Counſel, if you make any doubt of that.

L. H. St. What is it your Lordſhip would have Counſel heard to?

E. of War. To this Caſe, my Lord, Whether there being ſix Perſons, Three of a Side, one is killed, and I being engaged on the Side of him that was killed, the three on the other Side have been tried for the Death of that Man; whether I, who was of his Side be equally guilty with them, who were on the other Side, eſpecially, I engaging particularly with another of the three, that were of the other Side: That Queſtion I deſire my Counſel may argue, whether I be equally guilty with them that were on the other Side, and who, notwithstanding Death happened in the Caſe, yet were found gaily only of Manſlaughter.

L. Godolphin. My Lords, it has been moved by my noble Lord at the Bar, that his Counſel ſhould be heard about Mr. French's being Witneſs, whether he ſhould be a Witneſs or no; I think it would be much for the clearing of the Fact one Way or other, if the Evidence of that Witneſs could be heard; but whether he can be heard, or not, according to Law, is a Queſtion that muſt be debated amongſt your Lordſhips, after your Lordſhips have heard the Counſel on both Sides, and perhaps the Opinion of the Judges upon their Arguments; and therefore I think we muſt adjourn, to conſider whether this Matter ſhall be argued or no.

L. H. St. What ſay you to this Matter, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I ſhould agree with the Motion that is made, if there were any Thing inſiſted upon by the Priſoner at the Bar, that would bear a Queſtion or Argument; but my Lord of Warwick himſelf has waved the Objection, and ſo I think there is no need for any Argument on our Side.

L. Godol. I would agree with the Motion that was made for adjourning, in order to debate, but I deſire to be thus underſtood, if he thinks it for his Advantage, that this Witneſs ſhould be heard for him, which he knows beſt, whether it be or be not; then I do ſuppoſe your Lordſhips will adjourn, to conſider of it in your own Houſe amongſt your ſelves; it will not be proper to enter into the Debate here, nor there neither, till you know what Objection the Counſel for the King make againſt this Man's being an Evidence, and therefore we would know, it is fit to be known, whether my Lord's waving, or not inſiſting upon this Man's Teſtimony, be free and voluntary, and abſolute; or whether it be only in reſpect to the Trouble it may put the Houſe to for the Debate.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, ſome of my noble Lords obſerve you have deſired Mr. French ſhould be examined, and that your Counſel may be heard to that Point, whether he be by law a Witneſs, or not; ſeveral of my Lords think it reaſonable, Counſel ſhould be heard, Whether he be a Witneſs or not; or at leaſt, that that Queſtion ſhould be conſidered amongſt themſelves, if inſiſted upon; therefore your Lordſhip is to declare, whether you do inſiſt upon it, or deſire to wave it.

E. of War. I wholly ſubmit my ſelf to your Lordſhips; but as I am adviſed by my Counſel, I hope he is a good Witneſs, and I deſire my Counſel may be heard to that Point.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, in Truth I acknowledge, according to the Method of Law, the Objection ought to come of our Side, for I think we have very good Reaſon to oppoſe that Gentleman's being a Witneſs in this Caſe, even upon that Objection which my Lord has made himſelf, upon the Conſideration, that he has been found guilty of Manſlaughter, for the Death of this very Perſon. It is true, upon his Prayer, Clergy was allow'd him, but the burning of the Hand was reſpited, and he was not burnt in the Hand, and he is not pardoned; and how far can he be a Witneſs in this Caſe, is the Objection; If a Man convicted of Felony, that is within Clergy, prays his Clergy, and it is allowed him, but he is not burned in the Hand, nor pardoned, we apprehend he is no Witneſs; and that is the Objection we make againſt his Teſtimony to your Lordſhips.

L. H. St. My Lord of Warwick, you hear what is ſaid by way of Objection againſt this Man's being a Witneſs. What ſay you to it?

E. of Warw. For Matter of Law, my Lords, I am not capable of ſpeaking to it, but I deſire my Counſel may.

L. H. St. That which Mr. Attorney propoſes by way of Objection is Matter of Fact, and the Matter of Law does not ariſe till the Fact be ſettled, which muſt fall within your Lordſhip's own Knowledge, who produce him as a Witneſs, and therefore you muſt answer to that Fact your ſelf.

E. of Warw. I deſire to know of your Lordſhips, if a Man be convicted of Felony that is within Clergy, and prays his Clergy, and it is allowed him, but the burning of the Hand is reſpited, and there is a Warrant for his Pardon; whether he cannot be a good Witneſs: That his Clergy was allowed, and the burning of the Hand reſpited, I have the Record here to ſhew.

L. H. St. My Lords, my noble Lord at the Bar, inſiſting upon a Warrant for a Pardon, I muſt acquaint you with ſomething that happened during your Lordſhips ſitting here this Day; ſince I came hither a privy Seal was delivered to me, in order to paſs a Pardon for the burning in the Hand of Mr. French, for the Manſlaughter for which he was convicted at the Old-Baily; ſo far I can acquaint your Lordſhips as to Matter of Fact.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord I am adviſed by my Counſel, that he is a good Witneſs without a Pardon, or without burning in the Hand.

L. H. St. What ſay you, Mr. Attorney, to the Law? Now you underſtand what the Fact truly is.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord; and I do apprehend, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhips Judgment, That a Man convicted of Felony, who he prays his Clergy, and has it allowed him, but is not burnt in the Hand, nor has any Pardon, can be no Witneſs.

L. H. St. That is the Caſe upon which you are to form your Objections: Here is a Man produced as a Witneſs, who has been convicted of Felony, within the Benefit of Clergy, has craved his Clergy, has had it allowed, but has not been burnt in the Hand, nor pardoned.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lords, with humble Submission, upon the Matter of Fact so stated, I make this Objection, That he is no Witness in Point of Law: He has been convicted, in one respect, for the very Offence for which the noble Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted: Tho' not in the same Degree as the Indictment sets it forth, yet it is for the same Fact. Upon this Indictment Mr. French was indicted at the Sessions at the Old-Baily, and there he was found guilty of Man-slaughter, upon which, he pray'd the Benefit of his Clergy, which was allow'd him, but he was not burnt in the Hand: Thus stands the Case in Fact. Now, my Lords, the Allowance of Clergy of it self, does not discharge the Party from the Offence, so far as to set him Reſtus in Curia, and make him in all respects a Person fit to have the Benefit and Privileges of a Probus & legalis Homo, till he has passed through those Methods of setting himself Right in the Eye of the Law, that the Law hath prescribed; and in order to set this Matter in its true Light before your Lordships, it will be necessary for me to open to your Lordships, as far as I can, the Nature of this Benefit of Clergy, and what Advantage did accrue to the Party, by having that Benefit allow'd him, and likewise what Benefit he had by the Act that enacted the Burning in the Hand, which was the Statute of the 4th of H. VII. And by that Act the Burning in the Hand was to be of no more Effect, but only to shew that he had had his Clergy allowed him; and that unless he were within Orders he should have it no more than once. Before that Act of Parliament, a Person might have had the Benefit of Clergy several Times, but that Act limits it as to Time, that it shall be but once: And therefore, in order to the having of it known, whether a Man once had his Clergy allow'd him, that did not produce his Orders, that Act provides there shall be a Mark set upon him at the Time of the Allowance of this Clergy, as a Token that it was allowed him, and he was never to have it allowed afterwards, but even at that Time he was to be delivered over to the Ordinary to make his Purgation; but since that Act, several Statutes have been made about this Matter. I shall mention one that relates to your Lordships, and that is the Statute of Edward the VIth, which indeed does Enact, That in case where a Peer is convicted of Felony within the Benefit of Clergy, he shall be discharged without being burnt in the Hand, but then and thus the Law stood till the Statute of 18 Eliz. cap. 7. by which 'tis Enacted, That after the Burning in the Hand the Prisoner shall be delivered to the Ordinary, but he shall be discharged; by Virtue of which Act, after burning in the Hand, the Prisoner hath made full Satisfaction to the Law, without that Sort of Purgation which was before requisite to be made, but till he be burnt in the Hand, or has his Pardon, he is not to be discharged; it may be he may be bailed out by the Judge, in order to get a Pardon, but still he remains in statu quo, as to his being a Witness, or any Thing of that Nature; his Credit is gone till it be restored by the King's Pardon, or his undergoing the Punishment that the Law requires; and no Man would say, that where one lies under a Conviction of Felony undischarged by burning in the Hand, or Pardon, that he can be a Witness; he remains just as he was before, the Conviction remains upon him, which disabled him to be a Witness; and that we submit to your Lordships as the Case of this Person, Captain French.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, if your Lordships please to spare me one Word of the same Side: Sure at common Law there would be no difficulty at all, that a Person convicted of Felony within the Benefit of Clergy, unpardoned, and undischarged, could be no Witness; and since those several Statutes that have been mentioned by Mr. Attorney, unless there be an actual Burning in the Hand, or a Pardon for that Burning in the Hand, sure it cannot be pretended, that one convicted of Felony can be admitted as a Witness. If my Lord of Warwick does insist upon his Evidence as Matter of Right, we, for the King, do insist upon it, that there is no Right at all in the Case; for French must be taken to be one convicted of Felony, and not discharged without either Burning in the Hand, or pardon, and then we are sure it cannot be pretended in Law that he can be a Witness.

L. H. St. My Lords, the King's Counsel have stated their Objection, what is your Pleasure to have done it?

Earl of Rivers. I suppose, my Lords, that it will be necessary to hear what Answer my Lord of Warwick gives to this Objection.

L. H. St. Is it your Lordships Pleasure then, that the Counsel assigned for my Lord Warwick be heard what they have to say to this Matter?

Lords. Ay, ay, ay.

[Then Sir Thomas Powys came to the Bar, and stood by the Earl of Warwick, and spoke thus.]

Sir T. Powys. May it please your Lordships, I am by the Order of this Honourable House, assigned of Counsel for this noble Lord at the Bar, in point of Law; and, my Lords, as to the present Question that has been spoken to by the King's Counsel, I am a little surprized to hear it should be wondered at, that my Lord of Warwick should insist upon it, that this Gentleman should be examined for him as a Witness, because, with humble Submission to your Lordships, I think the Authorities of Law will make for the Opinion on the other Side. Mr. Attorney General says true, the first Statute that was made for Burning in the Hand, was that in 4 H. VII. before that Time the Benefit of Clergy, even for Murder, was used to be allowed upon the Prayer of the Party, and he was thereupon delivered over to the Ordinary to make his Purgation, and that not only once, but toties quoties, let him demand it as often as he would, and as often as he offended it was allowed: This was thought such a Privilege as ought to be restrained; that Statute of the 4th of Hen. VII. takes notice that an ill Use was made of it, and therefore does Ordain, That it should be allow'd no more than once, unless to Persons within Orders: And as a Means to know, Whether it had been before allowed, or not, the Act does direct, That the Party convicted shall be burnt in the Hand, that is all the Act does appoint, it does no otherwise alter the Case; it does not impose it upon the Party as a Punishment for the Offence, but only as a Mark of Distinction, that if ever he came again before the Court, and being convicted of the like Offence, should pray the Benefit of Clergy, then upon Inspection it might be known whether before he had been allowed his Clergy or not; and so stood the Law without Alteration as to the Manner of Delivery of the Cri-

Criminal over to the Ordinary to make his Purgation, with which the temporal Law, in the Manner of doing thereof, did not intermeddle; and therein consisted, with respect to this Matter, the Benefit of Clergy. Afterwards, by the Statute of Edward the VIth, the Peers were exempted from the Burning in the Hand; and then comes the Act that we rely upon, which is, that of the 18th of Eliz. that takes notice of the former Act of the 4th of H. VII. which only ordered the Burning of the Hand for the Purposes aforesaid, but left the Party to be delivered over to the Ordinary to make his Purgation; which was found to be a Matter attended with many Abuses, and upon the Reformation thought fit to be abolished, and taken away, because it was only an outward Appearance and Shew of Purgation, and was often the Occasion of very great Perjuries, therefore it is taken totally away, and by this Act the Party shall have the Benefit of Clergy without making Purgation, as fully as if he had actually made it. But, say they, There is still left something that the Law requires, which is, that he should be first burnt in the Hand, and if he be not burnt in the Hand, or at least pardoned, he is not in that Condition that the Law calls for in such a Case, to set him Reatus in Curia: If he be burnt in the Hand, or pardoned by the King, they agree on the other Side, that he may be a very good Witness. My Lords, that Act of Parliament of Queen Eliz. does impower the Court that tries the Criminal, and before whom he is convicted, not only to burn him in the Hand, pursuant to the Act of Hen. VII. but also to detain him in Prison for a Year after; but yet I think that doth not signify any Thing one Way or other to restore him, or not restore him to his Credit; for I think the Burning in the Hand, which is a Mark of Infamy, was never intended as a Means, any more than Imprisonment for a Year, of restoring a Man to his Credit; it was only to shew he had his Clergy once, and should have it no more. The Allowance of Clergy by the Statute of Eliz. operates as a Pardon; only, saith the Statue, he shall not be delivered out of Prison before he is burnt in the Hand, according to the Statute of Hen. VII. No body can say, that the Continuing in Prison for a Year, which the Court may order, though burnt in the Hand, would, as to restoring of Credit, have operated one Way or other: But that we insist upon is, That the Allowance of Clergy sets him right in Court, since Purgation is abolished, and is the same Thing as if he had undergone the ceremonial Parts of a formal Purgation. It is the Allowance of Clergy that makes the Alteration or Operation in this Case, by Virtue of this last Act of the 18th of Eliz. for we take it, that he is to have the same Benefit of his Clergy, as if he had been delivered to the Ordinary, and Purgation had been made; and now the Allowance of Clergy by this Act, gives the same Benefit to the Party, as Purgation would have done before the Act, and he is in the same State and Condition as he would have been in Case of a Purgation, or of a Pardon by the King. The Authorities are all with us. There is a Case that is very well known among the Men of the Law in the fourth Report of my Lord Coke, Holcroft's Case, who was indicted and convicted of Manslaughter, and he prayed the Benefit of his Clergy; the Judges thought fit to respite their Judgment therein, but his Prayer was enter'd upon Record; and then an Appeal being brought against him, it came to be a Question, How far he had had his Clergy: For by the Statute of the 3d of Hen. VII. an Appeal will lie notwithstanding a Conviction, if the Party have not had his Clergy; and in this Case it was adjudged, That the Party having prayed his Clergy, he should have the same Benefit as if the Court had ordered every Thing to be actually executed, which ought thereupon to be done: And surely then it can be no Question, Whether a Man shall be a Witness or no, who has had his Clergy allowed. It is so entred upon Record, That the Book was administered to him, and that he read as a Clerk; for the Party has done as much as he can, prayed the Benefit of his Clergy, and had it allowed, and so it is enter'd upon Record. The Respite of the Burning of the Hand till the King's Pardon be obtained, shall not, sure, put him in a worse Condition than he would have been, if he had actually been burnt in the Hand. My Lords, I have in my Hand a Book which is of very great Esteem, and that is, The Reports of my Lord Chief Justice Hobbart, wherein he declares his Opinion in this Point, and for whose Opinion every one of our Gown ever hath testified a very great Veneration and Respect; the Case is that of Searle and Williams, wherein my Lord Hobbart has spoken so fully to this Matter, that I think it ought to put an End to the Question: He says, the Statute of Eliz. appointing the Burning in the Hand without Purgation, does operate as a Statute-Pardon to all Intents and Purposes, and the Party having now the Benefit of his Clergy allowed, is in all Respects in the same Condition as if he had been acquitted: That is the Opinion that he holds throughout that Case: I need not trouble your Lordships with reading all the particular Words that he uses, but only those which relate to the Thing now in Question, immediately before your Lordships. He delivers his Opinion, That whosoever speaks Words of Accusation, reflecting upon a Man for any Offence for which he was indicted and convicted, and had had his Clergy allowed, an Action lies as if he had been totally acquitted from it; 'tis not the Burning in the Hand, but the Allowance of Clergy, that sets him right in his Credit in the Eye of the Law, and he is thereby in the same Condition in that Respect, that he would have been, if he never had had any Conviction upon him. Towards the End of the Case his very Words are these, Though the Statute saith, after burning in the Hand according to the Statute in that behalf made, he shall be discharged, and there is no Burning in the Hand, that makes nothing; for though it be a Case where the Hand ought to be burnt, yet it is not so essential but a Man may have the Benefit of the Statute, tho' he be not burnt; the King may pardon the Burning, for the Burning, even in an Appeal, is no part of the Judgment, nor so much as in the Nature of Punishment, but rather a Mark to notify that he may have his Clergy but once. These are his very Words in this Case; so that the Statute of Queen Elizabeth doth abolish Purgation, but gives the Party all the Benefit thereof, as if he had gone through it, and instead of delivering the Party to the Ordinary to make his Purgation, it says, he shall be deliver'd out of Prison; but lest it might seem to repeal the Statute of Hen. VII. as to Burning in the Hand, it adds, Being burnt in the Hand, according to the Statute in that behalf provided: By the Statute of Hen. VII. he was first to be burnt in the Hand, and then delivered to the Ordinary to make his Purgation; but by the Statute of Eliz. he is first pardoned his Crime by being allowed the Benefit of his Clergy, without making his Purgation, and afterwards to be burnt in the Hand before he be delivered out of Prison; so that the Burning in the Hand is only a Condition precedent to his getting out of Prison, not to his being restored to his Credit: The King may pardon the Burning in the Hand undoubtedly, and he has gone a great Way in this Case, for he hath given a Pardon as far as the Privy-Seal, and that is sufficient to shew his gracious Intention of pardoning it throughout; and if there be need, we hope it may pass yet forward. What we insist on, is not only the Opinion of my Lord Chief Justice Hobart, but he is followed therein by the Opinion of a Man of very great Authority, one no less eminent than he in his Profession, and that is my Lord Chief Justice Hale, in a Book of his that is intituled, His Pleas of the Crown, which is but an Abridgment of what he intended upon that Subject under the Title of Clergy: When he comes to treat of the Consequences of the Allowance of Clergy, and what the several Effects of Clergy allow'd, shall be, he says, it gives him a Capacity to purchase Goods, and retain the Profits of his Lands, and restores him to his Credit, according to the Case I have mentioned before in Hobart, of Searle and Williams; for that Case is particularly in that Book mentioned and referred to: Therefore I hope your Lordships will make no Difficulty of hearing this Witness; for we think the having his Clergy allow'd him, is that which restores him to his Credit. If they have any other Objections against him, I hope we shall hear it from the King's Counsel: But if this be stood upon in Point of Law as an Objection, That though Clergy was allowed, he was not burnt in the Hand, nor pardoned; I would have observed to your Lordships, That my Lord High Steward has told you it is so far gone towards the Pardon, that the King has shewn his Intention to pardon by the Privy-Seal; and we hope your Lordships will not let this noble Lord at the Bar suffer any Prejudice, by the not perfecting of the Pardon by actual passing of the Great Seal.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney General, what say you to the Matters which have been urged?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have stated our Objection; we think there is nothing given as an Answer to it, and we submit it to your Lordship's Judgment.

Marq. of Hallifax. My Lords, I desire that the Question that is to be decided before your Lordships, may be settled truly, what it is.

L. H. St. If there be six in Company, and one of them is killed, the other five are afterwards indicted, and three are tried, and found guilty of Manslaughter, and upon their Prayers have their Clergy allowed, and the Burning in the Hand is respited, but not pardoned; Whether any of the three can be a Witness upon the Trial of either of the other two.

Sir T. Powis. My Lords, with Submission, though he were convicted of the Felony, yet upon Prayer of his Clergy, that being allowed him, that restores him to all the Capacities, we say, that he had before the Conviction, and particularly to his Credit; and for that we submit ourselves to your Lordships Judgment.

Marq. of Hallifax. I suppose your Lordships will have the Opinion of the Judges upon this Point; and that must be in the Presence of the Prisoner.

L. H. St. It must certainly be in the Presence of the Prisoner, if you ask the Judges Opinions.

Marq. of Hallifax. But in these Cases, my Lords, it is usual to hear the King's Counsel to make a Reply: I desire to hear what they would say to what has been offered by the Counsel for the noble Lord the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Serj. Wright. My Lords, I did apprehend that the very stating of the Objection would have set this Matter in its true Light: For in the first Place, it is agreed on all hands, That this Mr. French, that is desired to be a Witness, does stand convicted of Felony, and by the Law of England, while that Conviction remains upon him, till he be either purged or pardoned, he cannot be a Witness: By the Conviction his Credit is lost; and till he be restored to his first Condition, he stands not so clear in the Eye of the Law that he can be an Evidence. The Counsel for the Prisoner have objected, That if he either be pardoned, or Clergy allowed, he is put in the same Condition as if he had been acquitted.

My Lords, I must admit a Pardon restores to Credit; and I must likewise admit, That Allowance of the Benefit of Clergy, and Burning in the Hand upon it, amounts in Law to a Pardon, or is equivalent to a Pardon in this Matter: But the Fact here is not so; for here is neither actual Pardon, nor any Burning in the Hand: the Benefit of Clergy was prayed, and allowed; but that alone is not sufficient; there must be an actual Burning in the Hand, or a Pardon of that Burning in the Hand, otherwise it cannot be a Satisfaction in Law, such as should put him in the same Condition as if he were acquitted. Your Lordships have heard what was said by his Grace my Lord High Steward, That as to the Burning in the Hand, the King has been pleased to proceed so far as to grant a Privy Seal for the Pardon of the Burning in the Hand: But your Lordships very well know, and it cannot be insisted on to the contrary, by the Counsel on the other Side, That it is no Pardon until it be past under the Great Seal of England: So that here is no actual Pardon; nor is the bare Allowance of Clergy, without Burning in the Hand, equivalent to a Pardon. My Lords, it must be agreed, That at the Common Law, Persons that were convicted of Felony, were not restored to their Credit merely by allowing the Benefit of Clergy to them; there was something further to be done to regain Credit; the Party convicted must undergo another Trial before the Ordinary, which was commonly called Purgation; when any Man was convicted of Felony, he was, upon his Prayer of the Benefit of Clergy, to have it allowed to him, and if he could read as a Clerk, his Life was saved. He was not discharged of the Felony, and therefore was delivered over to the Ordinary to be kept in Prison until he had, by a Sort of Trial before the Ordinary, made his Innocence appear, and purged himself of the Fact charged upon him; and if he could not make his Purgation, he was to lie perpetually in Prison; and notwithstanding the Allowance of Clergy, and Delivery over to the Ordinary, yet was not the Credit restored, nor his former Capacities; he was not a legal Witness until he had purged himself of the Crime: It was the clearing themselves of the Guilt, that restored such Persons to their Reputation and Credit, not the bare Allowance of Clergy: Some Criminals were delivered to the Ordinary generally; those might make their Purgation: Others were specially delivered, or delivered with a special Charge to the Ordinary, not to admit them to Purgation, Absque purgatione facienda: These latter could never be restored to Credit, except by the King's Pardon; for the Liberty of Purgation, which was the Means of regaining their Credit, was taken from them; their Guilt occasioned their loss of Credit; taking away that Guilt doth consequentially restore Credit again; and this Benefit of Clergy was to be allowed as often as any Man had Occasion for it.

Thus the Matter of Benefit of Clergy stood in Common Law, in respect of Purgation and restoring of Credit, till the Statute of 18 Eliz. c. 7. which was cited on the other Side by Sir Thomas Povey; by which Statute Purgation is absolutely taken away and set aside: and the Party being burnt in the Hand, according to the Statute of 4 H. VII. is appointed by this Statute 18 Eliz. to be discharged, and not to be delivered over to the Ordinary, as was before that time used. The delivering over to the Ordinary was in Order to Purgation, and that by the last Statute is quite taken away, and the Party is to have the same Benefit by the having the Benefit of his Clergy and Burning in the Hand, as if he had made his Purgation; he shall be discharged: It is not his reading as a Clerk, and that pronounced by the Ordinary, that gives him the Benefit of a Discharge, as if he had been purged of the Crime; but there must be the Burning in the Hand, that is the very Terms of the Statute upon which he is to be discharged; that must actually be done before he can be put into the same Condition that he was in before the Conviction, and consequently make him capable of being a Witness. As for the Case of Searle and Williams, that was cited by Sir Thomas Povey, that Case doth not oppose in this Matter; there it was not needful to burn the Person convicted; he was a Clerk in holy Orders, and by Law exempt from Burning in the Hand: so it was not needful to burn him, the Statute of 18 Eliz. not requiring any Person to be burned in the Hand that were not so liable before then. The most that is said in that Case by the Chief Justice Hobart is, That in Case where the Hand ought to be burnt, it is not essential; but the Party may have the Benefit of the Statute, i. e. be discharged with out Burning, and the King may pardon the Burning; and no doubt if the King pardons the Burning, it is as good and effectual as if the Hand had been actually burnt. The King might pardon the whole, and consequently any Part; the Pardon of the Punishment supplies the Effect of it; no Question but a Pardon may supply the want of Burning in the Hand. Chief Justice Hales in his Book of Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 240. which I have here, says expressly, That Burning in the Hand is now, since the Statute, 18 Eliz. the Consequent upon the Allowance of Clergy, which hath this Effect: First, It enables the Judges to deliver him. Secondly, It restores him to former Capacities. Thirdly, It restores him to his Credit, and so it puts him in the same Condition as if he were acquitted. What is it that hath this Effect? The Allowance of Clergy, and Burning in the Hand: There is not to be a Delivery of the Criminal till all be done which is required by Law: The Law requires that the Party be burnt in the Hand, or that the King do pardon the Burning in the Hand, before the Party be discharged; and, with humble Submission, it was never yet pretended, that any Person could have the full Advantage of the Benefit of Clergy, since the Statute of 4 H. VII. till he was burnt in the Hand, or the Burning in the Hand was pardoned. Now, my Lords to apply this to the Case in Question; it is on all Hands admitted, That Mr. French was convicted of Felony and Manslaughter, and is neither burnt in the Hand, nor pardoned; but he has prayed the Benefit of the Clergy, and has had the Book given to him, to try if he can read, and he certify'd he can read; this is all that is done. I think it cannot be pretended he ought to be discharged until he is burned in the Hand, or that Burning pardoned, as the Act requires; and if the Reading as a Clerk without Burning in the Hand, or Pardon of it, be not sufficient in Law to entitle him to be discharged, why should it be sufficient to restore his Credit? The whole together works the Discharge and restores the Party. In the Case of Burroughs and Holcroft that has been cited, there a Man was convicted of Manslaughter, and prayed his Clergy; the Court did not allow his Clergy, but did advise upon it. This was held sufficient to bar an Appeal; for if Clergy had been allowed, it had clearly been a good Bar; and the Act of the Court in advising upon the Prayer, and not allowing Clergy where it ought to be, shall not prejudice the Party convicted, but he shall be in the same State as if the Clergy had been actually allowed: But that has no likeness to the Case now before your Lordships; for here it is not pretended that Mr. French ever desired to be burnt in the Hand, but that was respite in Favour to him, which was done with Intention, it seems, to get the King's Pardon for the Burning of the Hand, which is not yet obtained, and consequently I take it he is not entitled to that Benefit which the Law would give him, if he was either pardoned or burned in the Hand; he is not fully discharged of the Conviction, and therefore I think he ought not to be admitted as a Witness.

L. H. St. What is the Resolution your Lordships please to take upon this Matter? Is it your Lordships Pleasure to have the Opinion of my Lords the Judges, who are here present, upon this Point?

Lords. Ay, ay, by all Means have the Judges Opinions.

L. C. J. Treby. Two Things have been mentioned at the Bar, which, I think, ought to be laid out of the Question.

1. The Consideration of a Peer, with respect to burning in the Hand.

I suppose it is not (I am sure it ought not to be) insinuated, that, if any of your Lordships Degree should have the Misfortune to fall into the like Condition as the Gentleman now produced, viz. to be once convicted of a clergyable Felony, there could be any Doubt of receiving such Peer, as a Witness, without his having been burnt in the Hand. Certainly there could not; For the Statute of 1 E. VI. exempts the Peers from such Penalty, and virtually repeals the Statute of 4 H. VII. as to so much. And the Statute of 18 Eliz. requires burning in the Hand only, according to the Statute in that Behalf (before) provided. And there being no Statute then or now in Force, to subject Peers to such Brand; there are, in such Case, upon upon the allowing the Benefit of the said Statute of E. VI. which is as much as Clergy without reading or burning) freed from Discredit and other Penalties of the Felony, as much as Commons are by having Clergy formally allowed and being burnt.

2. Here hath been Mention of a Pardon of the burning this Gentleman in the Hand; and, it seems, the Proceeding hath been so far as to pass the Privy-Seal. I do not question the King's pardoning of the Burning's being as effectual as the Party's undergoing it. But, I say, Here is no Pardon (though great Preparation for one.) For, the Sign Manual, the Signet, the Privy Seal, are but Warrants in such Cases, and countermandable. But, it is the great Seal that speaks the King's last and irrevocable Intent, and passeth the Pardon (or other like Thing) to be granted. And that hath not been obtained here.

Now the Question is cleared, I take it to be this; Whether this Commoner, being convicted of Felony, and having his Clergy allowed, but being unburnt and unpardoned, shall be received and allowed to be a Witness?

I am of Opinion he ought not.

For (whatever Quality or Credit he might personally be of) he is, by being and remaining a Felon convicted, render'd infamous in the Eye of the Law. Upon the Conviction, he lost, by the Intendment of Law, that Credit which is necessary to a Witness; and is not restored to it by the bare allowing of Clergy; but is in the State as a Felon convicted would have been, before Purgation, at Common Law.

Clergy or (more properly called) Benefit of Clergy, is an antient Privilege, whereby a Clerk charged with Felony was dismissed from the Temporal Judge, and delivered in Custody to his Ordinary, before whom he was to purge himself, if he could, of the Offence; and if he failed in his Purgation, he was to remain in the Ordinary's Prison.

I mean generally; and I think it not proper to this Occasion, to discourse of the special Cases wherein the Delivery to the Ordinary was absque Purgatione.

This Privilege took its Root originally from a Constitution of the Pope, exempting the Persons of the Clergy from the secular Jurisdiction. This the Canon-Law is full in. But that Law was not thoroughly received here in England. And this Matter was moulded, ordered, and altered by our Common and Statute-Law.

For Instance. The Canon-Law gives the Privilege only to Men in holy Orders: Our Law, in favour to Learning, and the Desire of the English Bishop, extended it to Lay-Clerks, as an old Statute calls them, i. e. any Layman, that, by Reason of his Ability to read, was (other Circumstances concurring) in a Possibility of being made a Priest. On the other Side; That Law would not suffer the Clergy to be tried before secular Judges: But, ours hath, for several hundred Years, subjected them to such Trial.

But the Common Law was ever clear in this, That when a Man was convicted of Felony, though by the allowing of Clergy, his Life, Land, and Blood were saved, yet, That Conviction laid him under divers Penalties and Forfeitures, some absolute, others limited and determinable.

He forfeited all his Goods and Chattels, which he had at the Time of his Conviction, Absolutely; not to be restored by Purgation or Pardon.

He also forfeited and lost, 1. His Liberty, being to continue a Prisoner. 2. His Capacity of purchasing more Goods or Chattels, and of taking and retaining the Issues and Profits of his Freehold Land to his own Use. 3. His Credit, so as not to be a Witness, Juror, &c. Under these three Penalties he remained till his Purgation: But, by that, they were determined. As soon as he had made his Purgation, he was restored to his Liberty, Capacities, and Credit.

Purgation was the Convict's clearing himself of the Crime, by his own Oath, and the Oaths or Verdict of an Inquest of twelve Clerks (as Compurgators.) The Proceeding was before the Ordinary. And, for the Manner of it, old Books speak of their making Proclamation for Persons to come in against his Purgation, and of their enquiring into his Life, Conversation, and Fame, and of other Formalities. In all which, several other Statutes say, there were great Abuses. But it is certain, that, upon his Acquittal, the Ordinary pronounced him innocent, and absolved from Infamy. And thereupon he was discharged from the Imprisonment, Incapacities, and Discredit incident to the Felony.

The Statute 4 H. VII. brings in a new Thing, appointing that every Person convicted of Felony, should be marked in the Hand by the Goaler in open Court, before he should be delivered to the Ordinary. And this was partly that they might taste of Corporal Punishment; but, principally, to notify that they had had their Clergy. For, the same Statute, taking notice that Men were emboldned to commit Murder, Rape, Robbery, and other Felonies, because they had the Benefit of Clergy toties quoties, ordains that no Person, who was once admitted to that Benefit, should ever have it again for a following Offence, unless he were within Orders, and produced his Letters of his Orders, or a Certificate of them.

For this Act, Perkin Warbeck in his Declaration against H. VII. brands him as an execrable Breaker of the Liberties and Franchises of holy Church.

Then comes the Statute 13 Eliz. c. VII. which, for so much as concerns this Question, I desire to read.

It is in these Words,

For the avoiding of sundry Perjuries and other Abuses in and about the Purgation of Clerks Convict, delivered to the Ordinaries, Be it enacted, that every Person which shall be admitted and allowed to have the Benefit or Privilege of his Clergy, shall not thereupon be delivered to the Ordinary, as hath been accustomed, but after such Clergy allowed, and burning in the Hand according to the Statute in that behalf provided [meaning that of 4 Hen. VII.] shall forthwith be enlarged and delivered out of Prison by the Justices before whom such Clergy shall be granted, that Clause notwithstanding.

Then there follows a Proviso to this Effect,

Provided nevertheless, and be it enacted, that the Justices before whom any such Allowance of Clergy shall be had, may for the further Correction of such Persons, detain and keep them in Prison for such convenient Time as the same Justices in their Discretions shall think convenient, so as the same do not exceed one Year's Imprisonment.

This Statute refers to that of H. VII. and follows the Order of it; As that appointed that the Convict should be burnt before he should be delivered to the Ordinary to have the Benefit of Purgation, So this of 18 Eliz. appoints that he should be burnt before he shall be discharged by the Justices, and have the Benefit thereby intended (instead of Purgation.)

The Counsel for the noble Lord at the Bar say, that the Allowance of Clergy by virtue of this Act, freeth this Man, and makes him Reftus in Curia; as if he had made his Purgation: and that by this Statute he is first pardoned his Crime, by being allowed the Benefit of Clergy, without making his Purgation; and afterwards to be burnt in the Hand before he be delivered out of Prison; and so the Burning is a Condition precedent to his getting out of Prison, not to his being restored to his Credit.

But I am to seek for any Ground for this Notion in this Statute. It doth not require Clergy to be allowed, nor give any new Virtue or Operation to it, when allowed. It supposeth such a Thing to be by virtue of the Common Law: But there it leaves it, if there be nothing more done. It is one Clause consisting of two Parts; 1. Negative; He that is allowed his Clergy, shall not be delivered to the Ordinary. 2. Affirmative; But after that, and burning in the Hand, shall be delivered by the Justices.

Now, If it had stopped at the first Part, it had been so far from pardoning or restoring any Clerk Convict, that it had put all into the same Condition that those were who were without Purgation, viz. to be perpetually imprisoned, and infamous. Indeed, it had not been reasonable to take away such a Privilege from the Subjects, without some Recompence; and therefore it did not stop there: But proceeds to the 2d Part, and provides that those who before were delivered to, and by the Ordinary, shall now be delivered by the Justices. But withal, it declares when, and upon what Terms, viz. After Clergy allowed, and burning in the Hand. And this is a Satisfaction to be given to the Law, before they shall have the Benefit of it.

I agree, if this Convict had made that Satisfaction to the Law, he might have been a Witness; for, in that Case, he would have been freed from his Discredit by virtue of the last Words of the said Clause. 'Tis true; the Words are only [shall forthwith be enlarged and delivered out of Prison by the Justices] which literally import nothing but restoring his Liberty. But under this prime Instance, are implied and intended all other Particulars which a Convict might be discharged of by means of Purgation. It was never the Intent of the Statute merely to set him at large, and leave him a Felon Convict. But when it is said delivered, 'tis meant delivered free, freed from all incident further Penalties, as he might have been if delivered upon Purgation. This is a reasonable Construction; to a Man that observes the Opposition in the Words, the Sense will appear to be as if the Law-makers had said, that instead of being discharged a Culpa & Pena by the Ordinary upon a tedious Proceeding to Purgation, he shall now be so discharged by the Justices, forthwith.

And this also is necessary to vindicate the Justice of this Law; for, since it takes from him the Means he had of regaining his Credit, it is but just it should restore to him by this Way.

'Tis objected, that it may as well be said that he shall not be restored to Credit till he have suffered Imprisonment, not exceeding a Year, as that he shall not be restored till burnt. But that receives an easy Answer; for, if it were so, it would not avail this Person. But, I take it to be otherwise. A Convict is discharged from Imprisonment and all other Penalties incident to the Conviction, forthwith upon the burning in the Hand: But if there be a Commitment made by virtue of the Proviso, it is a collateral and a new Thing, and the Party is not then in Prison by virtue of his Conviction, but by a fresh express Order of the Judges, made upon the Heinousness of the Circumstances appearing on the Evidence. They may, and generally do, forbear to commit at all: And when they do, it may be for a Month or two, at their Discretion. The Proviso calls it a further Correction.

As to the Manner in which this Statute works this full Discharge, it hath been disputed whether it be by Supply of Purgation, or rather by a kind of Statute-Pardon. But, I think, that by Force of the Statute the Party is purged and freed of the Felony, and all Penalties incident to it, in Nature of a Pardon.

In what Manner soever the Statute works it, 'tis manifest that it doth it not but upon a Condition precedent, viz. After Clergy allowed, and burning in the Hand. Now, this Person hath his Clergy allowed, but is not burnt in the Hand, (nor has any Pardon for it) and therefore is not yet intitled to the Benefit of this Statute. My Lord's Counsel say he is, because he hath his Clergy allowed. But, that is claiming the Advantage upon the performing of one Part of a joint Condition, which ought not to be had but upon performing both. They might as well have pretended to it before the Performance of either; The Statute says, after both Clergy and Burning. They say also, that this Burning is no Part of the Judgment, as hath been held in the Case of an Appeal. Be it so: But, I say, 'tis a Part of the Condition in this Statute.

There is no Case in our Books against this Opinion. (But, on the contrary, there are Authorities for it.)

Holcroft's Case is in no sort applicable to this Case; as was truly observed by the King's Serjeant.

The Opinion of my Lord Chief Justice Hobart in Searl and Williams's Case, rightly considered, confirms this. I have borrowed the Book from the Gent. at the Bar, and read it. He saith expressly, that where a Convict is liable to be burnt in the Hand, he is not discharged and restored without it; because the Statute says, After Burning: But from thenceforth the Statute frees him from all further Punishment. But, he saith, that where he is not liable to Burning, he shall have the same Benefit immediately upon the Allowance of Clergy only. So it was in the Case before him; which was that of a Clerk in Orders: For, Searl was a Clergyman, Parson of Heydon German in Essex, and convicted of Manslaughter. So it is, he says, in case where the King pardons the Burning. And the last Words in the Case clearly shew his Meaning, viz. where the Statute says, after Burning, it imports where Burning ought to be, &c.

To me the Law is evident. A Peer shall have this Benefit, without either Clergy or Burning.

A Clerk in Orders, upon Clergy alone without Burning. A Lay-Clerk, not without both.

As I remember, there hath been but one Authority more mentioned, and that is of my Lord Chief Justice Hale, in his Summary of the Pleas of the Crown; I have got hither that Book also. To my Understanding, he plainly declares the same Opinion, and cites the beforementioned Case of Searl for Proof of it. His Words (so far as they relate to this Matter) are these;

What the Effect of Clergy allowed?

In ancient Time the Consequent was Delivery to the Ordinary, either to make Purgation, or absque Purgatione, as the Case required.

But by Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7. Now only burnt in the Hand, which hath these Effects,

1. It enables the Judge to deliver him out of Prison.
2. It gives him a Capacity to purchase Goods, and retain the Profits of his Lands. Foxley's Case, 5th Report.
3. It restores him to his Credit. Hob. Searl's Case.

The Word [which] used here (whatever else it do, or do not refer to) doth certainly refer to the next Antecedent, that is, Burning in the Hand; and the two Books which this most learned Judge cites, are full Authorities that 'tis this Burning which enables the Court to deliver him, and that that Delivering which is then due to him is, by good Construction, in lieu of a Pardon, which restores him to his said Capacity and Credit.

To conclude: This Condition precedent, upon which the Restitution of this Person's Credit depends, is not performed (by his undergoing the said Punishment) nor discharged (by the King's pardoning it;) and therefore he is not a legal Witness.

Earl of Rochester. If the rest of my Lords, the Judges, be of the same Opinion, so; and I hope you will not oblige them to deliver their Opinions at large, to take up your Lordships Time with Arguments of any length; for the Matter has been, I think, sufficiently debated.

Lord Chief Baron*. My Lords, I

* Sir Edward am of the same Opinion.

Ward.

Mr. Justice Nevill. And so am I.

L. H. St. My Lord of Warwick,

Have you any Thing more to say to this Question?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Then what is your Lordships Pleasure? Is this Man to be admitted a Witness, or not?

Lords. No, no; we think, by Law, he can't be a Witness.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, my Lords are of Opinion, That this Person cannot be admitted as a Witness for you.

Earl of Warwick. My Lords, I submit to your Lordships Judgment in the Matter.

Earl of Nottingham. My Lords, I am very glad your Lordships have had this Matter debated by the Counsel, that so it might be settled: All my Lords the Judges that are here, it seems, are of Opinion, that this Man can be no Witness, and therefore his Testimony must be rejected. But there is another Proposal that I have to make to your Lordships, of a Point that I think ought to be considered of: My noble Lord at the Bar did suppose that he had proved before your Lordships, that he went into the Field to fight on the Side of the Party that was killed, but not on the other Side; and indeed, that he went not to fight, but to prevent a Quarrel; and thereupon he did start a Question, Whether it should not be a Presumption in Point of Fact and Law, that he, being on the Side of the Party that was killed, should not be reputed innocent of his Death? Now, I confess, upon the Starting of this Objection, I doubted of it, Whether if any one were present at the Killing of a Man, where several People were engaged in fighting, on what Side soever such a Person were, either on the Side of the Party that was killed, or on the other Side, yet whatsoever Crime it was in those that killed him, it was the same Crime in those that were present at the Action. My Lord of Warwick did desire, that his Counsel might be heard upon that Point; if there be any Question with your Lordships in that Case, and my Lord desires his Counsel may be heard to that Matter, it may occasion a Matter of Debate, which cannot be in this Place openly, but must be between your Lordships among yourselves: Indeed, I think it reasonable, that Counsel should be heard upon the Case.

L. H. St. My Lords, I think you are not arrived at that Question yet; you are not to take for granted any Part of the Fact, but are to debate among yourselves, after the Proof is over, what that Proof does amount to.

Earl of Rochester. Indeed, my Lords, I hope you will not suppose any Thing, and so take it for granted, that may occasion any Debate, because that is not to be done here in this Place, but we must adjourn to another Place for it: The bare putting of a Case by a Prisoner at the Bar, does not make that to be the Case truly in Point of Fact; for as far as I heard and understood the noble Lord's Proposal at the Bar, what he desired to have his Counsel heard to, was, That he being One of Six that went into the Field, but going with a Design to part them, and not with any Intention to promote the Quarrel, could not be in equal Degree of Guilt with those that were on the other side, who killed the Party; but now my Lords, I take it, it is far from being granted on the other Side, that that is the State of the Fact; nay, my Lord himself owns that he was in the Field, and that he was engaged in the Combat with Mr. James; and then the Question must be that is to be debated, Whether a Party that is concerned in a Quarrel where a Person is killed, is in equal Degree guilty with those that were on the other Side against the Person that was killed? And then the Question would be far different from what it would be otherwise, and as his Lordship did propose it; and if there be a doubt in Matter of Fact, that ought to be settled here in this Place, that afterwards it may be considered in another.

Earl of Nottingham. My Lords, I cannot but agree with that noble Lord, That the Matter of Fact ought to be settled, and then if any Debate arises thereupon, your Lordships are to return to your own House, and there to debate what is your Judgment upon that Matter of Fact: But whatsoever Motion is made by the noble Lord at the Bar, wherein he desires to have his Counsel heard that I suppose may be considered here; and this Point

Point having been started by my noble Lord at the Bar, as a Point of Law, and not of Fact, I desire to remind him of it, to know whether he does insist upon it; if he does not move to have the Matter argued, then there is an End.

L. H. St. My Lords, I do not think you will hear Counsel upon a Matter of Fact, and therefore it is not ripe (till the Fact be settled) for you to hear Counsel.

Earl of Warwick. My Lords, I humbly pray That you will hear my Counsel as to that Point.

L. H. St. My Lord, this is a Matter of Fact undetermin'd, and not a Matter of Law: What Opinion their Lordships will be of, when they have considered the Proofs as to the Fact, is one Step; when that is over, it will be the proper Time, if any Doubt be remaining with their Lordships, in Point of Law, to hear Counsel; but upon bare Matter of Fact Counsel is not to be allowed.

Earl of Rochester. My Lords, if there be any Debate among the Lords, Whether it be a Matter of Fact, or a Matter of Law, we must go up to our own House; but upon any Point of Law, where Counsel is to be heard, it must be in this Place, in the Presence of the Prisoner, and afterwards your Lordships will debate it among yourselves.

Earl of Nottingham. I hope, my Lords, the Counsel would not state the Case otherwise than as it is really in Point of Fact; nor can this noble Lord hope, that any Thing will make an Impression upon my Lords, but what from the Fact rightly stated, is supported from the Evidence; and that which my Lord proposes, is to have his Counsel heard to a Matter of Law, which your Lordships will be Judges of after you have heard it, whether there be any Weight in that which he supposes to be his Case, That a Person assisting in a Combat on the Side of him that is killed, is in equal Degree of Guilt with them that are on the other Side; that possibly, if the Fact be agreed, may be a Point fit to hear Counsel to, before your Lordships go to debate it among yourselves.

Duke of Devonshire. If I am not mistaken, my Lord of Warwick owns his being one of them that fought, for he has offered Witnesses to prove, That he received a Wound in his Hand by fighting: If my Lord of Warwick thinks, that there is a Difference between his being on Mr. Coote's Side, and theirs that were on the other Side, and would have his Counsel heard, how far it will difference his Guilt, and the Nature of the Crime, from what it was with them on the other Side, I cannot think that can be to any great Purpose to have that argued; but if your Lordships please, you may hear his Counsel what they have to say to that Matter; but otherwise, I cannot think, but that his Lordship will acknowledge the Matter of Fact, that he was engaged in the Quarrel.

Earl of Peterborough. My Lords, I desire, if this be a Point, that my Lords Counsel should be heard to, that it should be stated as a Point of Law, and then your Lordships will consider of it.

L. H. St. As well as I could apprehend it, as it was offered by my Lord of Warwick, this was what he desired to have his Counsel heard to: Tho' the Persons engaged in the Quarrel on the opposite Party to Mr. Coote have been tried, and found guilty of Manlaughter, yet he is not in equal degree of Guilt with them, he being engaged on Mr. Coote's

Side, and therefore his Lordship's Case differs from theirs who fought against Mr. Coote. This Point he would have argued by his Counsel before your Lordships, as a Matter of Law founded upon the Fact; now the Fact of the Case must arise from the Evidence as it has been given, which has not yet been debated or settled by your Lordships, and till that be agreed to be the Case, no Question of Law does properly arise.

Duke of Leeds. My Lords, if possible, I would put this Matter into its true Method; for indeed I think we have been all this while out of the Way. The noble Lord at the Bar has desired to have his Counsel heard; this House has allow'd him Counsel in Matters of Law; I would desire that the Counsel would state the Case so to your Lordships, that it may appear to be a Case fit to be argued, that so it may receive your Lordships Judgment thereupon. My Lords own bare proposing of such a Thing, will not be enough to encline your Lordships to be of Opinion, perhaps, one Way or other; but I would pray your Lordships, That you would direct the Counsel that are assign'd for my noble Lord at the Bar, to propose that to your Lordships as a Point of Law that he ought to insist upon. I think it is apparent to every Body, that no Point of Law can arise but upon Matter of Fact, which is agreed to be proved in any Case; now the Proofs of the Fact we have heard; now, that which I would propose to your Lordships is, That instead of hearing his Counsel to argue in point of Fact, what is not yet agreed upon to be the Fact, they should state such a Point of Law as they would argue upon; and then whether you would think it a Point of Law, or not a Point of Law, we must go into another Place, where it may be debated, whether it be such a Point of Law as that Counsel should be heard to it.

Earl of Peterborough. My Lords, I hope you will forgive me for interposing in this Matter, but that which I have to say to it is this: I am far from giving any Opinion as yet, as to the Matter of Fact, whether my Lord of Warwick was Mr. Coote's Friend or his Enemy; I know it is not a proper Place for that Matter to be debated in: But my noble Lord at the Bar desires to have his Counsel heard upon that Point, as if the Fact was agreed: Truly, till the Fact be agreed, I question whether we can give any Judgment or Opinion one way or other. If I observed aright, the Evidence for the King aimed at somewhat else: I shall not say what my Opinion now is, till we come to debate it among ourselves; but here is a Desire of having Counsel heard, but there is no Question of Law stated, but it depends upon a Matter of Fact which is not yet determined by your Lordships, before whom the Consideration of both Fact and Law doth lie, Whether a Person that is engaged on the Side of the Party that's kill'd in a Quarrel, where several Persons on both Sides are concerned, be as much guilty as those that are concerned on the other Side.

Marq. of Norm. My Lords, I do suppose that you may hear the Counsel to state the Question, without your determining any Thing upon it, as to your Opinion one Way or other; for your hearing of Counsel, is only in order to prepare your Lordships for the Debate among yourselves, if there remains any Doubt with you. It seems my noble Lord at the Bar has proposed that his Counsel should be heard: If the Counsel will state the Point to be argued upon, your Lordships may here con-consider, Whether it be such a one as it is fit to hear Counsel to; then, no doubt, you will hear Counsel to it. This, I suppose, you will hear from them, or otherwise your Lordships will not think fit to give your selves the Trouble to go and debate that which is no settled Question to be debated of.

Earl of Rocheſter. My Lords, I am afraid, of Neceſſity, you muſt adjourn to your own Houſe, for I find my Lords are here arguing one with another; ſome are of Opinion, That the Counſel ſhould ſtate the Queſtion, that they ſhould be heard upon; others of my Lords are of Opinion, That it is only a Matter of Fact, not a Matter of Law, upon which Counſel ſhould be heard; then it muſt be debated between your Lordſhips, which is not proper for to do here; therefore I would humbly move your Lordſhips, that you would adjourn to your own Houſe.

Earl of Peterborough. I ſuppoſe your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to enquire of the Counſel, Whether they do inſiſt upon this Point.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, if your Lordſhip inſiſt that your Counſel ſhould be heard upon the Point which you have offered, it ſeems there is ſuch a Difference of Opinion among my Lords, that for the Debating of what ſhall be done in the Caſe, my Lords muſt adjourn; but if you do not inſiſt upon it, they will go in the ordinary Method, to conſider of the Evidence that has been given, after it is ſum'd up on both Sides; for if you have no more Evidence to offer, you are to make your Obſervations upon the Evidence that has been given.

Earl of Warwick. I ſubmit it, upon the whole Matter, to your Lordſhips, Whether my Counſel can be heard, or not, to that Point; how far, I being of Mr. Coote's Side, can be guilty of his Death.

L. H. St. That is a Matter of Fact which is not yet determin'd, and therefore the Queſtion which you ſuppoſe to ariſe upon it, is not yet ripe to be reſolved. If you have no other Witneſſes to produce, that which remains, for I think I may properly acquaint you with the Method of Proceeding, is, That you are now on your Part to ſum up the Evidence that has been given, which is your own Work, as not being allow'd Counſel as to Matter of Fact; you are at Liberty to make ſuch Obſervations as you may think for your Advantage upon the Evidence, and ſo to cloſe your Defence.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I ſubmit it upon the whole Matter to your Lordſhips.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney General, my Lord of Warwick ſubmits the Matter, as it has been prov'd, to their Lordſhips, without any ſumming up of the Evidence; you who are of the King's Counſel, if you think fit, will ſum up the Evidence on yours, in order to their Lordſhips Conſideration of it: This you know is the Time for doing it. Make Proclamation for Silence.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, my Lord High Steward of England, his Grace, does ſtraitly charge and command all manner of Perſons here preſent, to keep ſilence, upon Pain of Imprifonment.

L. H. St. Gentlemen, you that are of the King's Counſel, now is your Time to ſum up the Evidence for the King.

Then Mr. Solicitor ^a began to ſum up the Evidence, but his Voice was ſo low, that he could not be heard by the Lords that ſat at the upper End of the Houſe. ^a Sir John Hawles.

D. of Leeds. My Lords, I think it of ſo great Importance to have a true State of the Fact and Evidence laid before us, and that we may hear what the King's Counſel do ſay at the Summing up of the Evidence, that if my Lords be of my Opinion, we ſhall be very defective to know what Judgment we give when we come to give Judgment, unleſs we are thoroughly apprized of the Matter of Fact and the Proofs. I confeſs I am going to move that, which is a Thing not according to the Orders of the Houſe, but much without the Rules of the Houſe, That the Counſel ſhould be heard in any other Place but where they are, at the Bar of the Houſe; this is contrary indeed, I acknowledge, to the Orders of the Houſe, and ſo my Motion is irregular; but yet, in order to our Satisfaction, that we may be enabled to hear what the King's Counſel do ſay to us, eſpecially in ſumming up the Evidence, I cannot but offer this to your Lordſhips; for we can no more hear the Counſel here, than if we were quite out of the Houſe: Whether therefore your Lordſhips will pleaſe to order, that any Perſon that has a ſtronger Voice ſhould ſum up the Evidence; or whether you will diſpenſe with the Orders of the Houſe ſo far, as that Mr. Solicitor may come to the Clerk's Table, or ſome other Place within the Houſe, with he may be heard by all, I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips. It would be a great Satisfaction for us to hear him, in order to our Judgment; but I acknowledge in this I do make an irregular Motion, as to the Orders that are uſually obſerved by your Lordſhips: But I know not how to help it, in regard without hearing, it is impoſſible for us to form our Judgment.

E. of Rocheſter. My Lords, I have a very great Reſpect for every Motion that that noble Lord who ſpoke laſt does make, and I am of his Opinion, That it will mightily tend to the Satisfaction of my Lords who are to give their Judgment in this Caſe, to hear both the Evidence and the Counſel, and what Obſervations are made on both Sides; and that it is a great Diſadvantage that the Counſel ſhould have ſo low a Voice, that all my Lords ſhould not be able to hear him; but yet I hope that may be remedied ſome other Way than what is propoſed by that noble Lord; for if what he deſires were done, it will be obvious, that in Point of Precedent many Inconveniencies will occur upon breaking the Orders of the Houſe, to comply with a Motion which is acknowledged by the noble Lord himſelf to be irregular; for it would be impoſſible to hear any Body, if it be permitted to make ſuch a great Noiſe without; and it is that which renders the Difficulty of hearing the greater. If that were quieted, your Lordſhips might hear this Gentleman as well as thoſe of the other Counſel: Or, if this Gentleman's Voice will not ſo well reach your Hearing, then there are other Gentlemen of the King's Counſel that have ſtronger Voices; and if any of them would ſum up the Evidence, I believe it would be better heard and conſequently better apprehended by your Lordſhips; for I had rather any Expedient ſhould be found out to comply with the Orders of the Houſe, and preſerve them, than that any irregular Thing ſhould be done for the breaking the Orders

Orders of the House, upon any Account whatsoever.

L. H. St. Make another Proclamation for Silence.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, my Lord High Steward of England, his Grace, does straitly charge and command all manner of Persons here present to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

E. of Bridgewater. Truly, my Lords, the Noise about the Court is so great, that we who sit much nearer to the Bar, than the noble Lord who made the Motion for the Removal of the Counsel into another Place, cannot hear Mr. Solicitor what he says; and therefore I think some of the Guard should be sent out to clear all the Passages about the Court, that there may be no Noise; for it is the Noise of the People without, that makes it so difficult to hear the King's Counsel.

L. H. St. Let some of the Guard without take care that there be not that Noise made; and whoever does make a Noise, let him be taken into Custody.

Then another Proclamation was made for Silence; upon which there was a greater Quietness in the Hall.

L. H. St. Mr. Solicitor, There is hopes now, since there is not so great Noise as there was, that you may be heard by my Lords: You must use the best Endeavours you can, that you may be heard.

E. of Roch. If that Gentleman cannot speak out so well that he can be heard, those of the King's Counsel that have better Voices, must sum up the Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I speak as loud as I can.

E. of Roch. There are others of the King's Counsel, pray let them do it then; Mr. Attorney, he being nearer and within the Bar.

L. H. St. I know not whether Mr. Attorney be prepared for the summing up of the Evidence, because he examined the Witnesses, and the King's Counsel usually allot to themselves the particular Parts which they intend to take.

E. of Roch. Then let Mr. Solicitor go on.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I would shortly observe to your Lordships what Evidence hath been given to you on Behalf of the King in this Case, against that noble Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, for the Offence for which he stands indicted. The first Witness that was produced was the Drawer at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, where this Quarrel, that was the Occasion of the Death of this Person that was slain, happen'd; and he tells you, that that Night there was at his Master's House my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, Capt. French, Captain Coote the Person that was kill'd, and Mr. Dockwra; and after they had been there some time, that other Person, that was the Sixth concerned in the Scuffle, Mr. James, was sent for, and he came in when it was pretty late; there they continued till One or Two a Clock, and then they came down to the Bar, and Orders was given for to call Coaches, but it being so late, and Sunday Morning, they could not find Coaches, and then there was Orders for the getting of Chairs; when some Chairs were brought, Mr. Coote and Mr. French went into two of the Chairs, but my Lord Mobun interposed, and said there should be nothing done that Night, and that if they went away he would call for a File of Musqueteers from the Guard, and secure them; and thereupon they came out of the Chairs, and went into the House, and there was the Noise of Swords clashing heard at the Bar; Captain Coote said he would laugh when he pleas'd, and frown when he pleas'd, and they parted; three were on one Side, and three on the other of the Bar; my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Captain Coote, were on one Side; Captain French, Captain James, and Mr. Dockwra, were on the other Side. Indeed he says my Lord Mobun and my Lord of Warwick did what they could to pacify them, and threaten'd to send for the Guards; but away they went. The next Witness was Thomas Browne, and he was the Chairman that carried Mr. Coote, and he says, that there was an Endeavour by my Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mobun, to put off the Business at that Time, and that they did what they could to have put it off, and that even after they were in their Chairs, when they were turned up St. Martins Lane, there they stop'd at the back Door of the Cross-Keys Tavern, and that while they stood there with their three Chairs, three other Chairs came by, and then Captain Coote bid them put up, and follow after those Chairs as fast as they could to Leicester-Fields.

The next Witness is William Crippes, who was the other Chairman that carried Captain Coote, and he gives your Lordships much the same Account that Browne gave before, and his Evidence was just to the same Purpose, That my Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mobun endeavoured to pacify the Matter, and that there should be an End of the Business for that Night, and let it alone till another Time; and that my Lord Mobun threaten'd to send for the Guards, and secure them, and would have had them gone home, that is, Mr. Coote either with him to his Lodging, or he would go to Mr. Coote's, but he could not prevail. Then my Lord Mobun said, If he would go on, his Lordship would go and see an End of the Business.

The next Witness was one Crattle, who was one of the Chairmen that carried my Lord of Warwick, and he says, That my Lord Mobun and my Lord of Warwick did endeavour what they could to put off the Matter till the next Morning, but that they could not prevail; that afterwards, when he carried my Lord from Leicester-Fields to the Bagnio, my Lord borrowed a Handkerchief of him to wrap his Hand in, for he said he was wounded, but by whom that Wound was given does not appear, nor how he came by that Wound any otherwise than as his Lordship himself says, that it was given him by Mr. James.

The next was the other Chairman that carried my Lord of Warwick, which was John Gibson, and his Testimony need not be repeated, because it did not differ from the others. The next Witness was Robert Applegate, who was the Chairman that carried my Lord Mobun; and he says, that there was an Endeavour used by my Lord upon his setting down in St. Martins Lane, to quiet Captain Coote, and prevent any Quarrel at that Time; but he says, when they would go on, my Lord Mobun said, he would go and see the End of it; and thereupon they went on towards Leicester-fields to the End of Green-street, which is at the lower End of the Square.

The next Witness was Palmer, who was one of the Chairmen that carried Mr. French to the Bagnio in Long-Acre; and he tells your Lordships what happen'd upon his carrying him thither, how immediately after his coming there, my Lord of Warwick came thither, and they knock'd at the Door at the same time, and that Captain French was very much wounded, and they went into the House together, and that French would have had them pull off his Cloaths to see his Wounds, for he believed he was a dead Man.

The next Witness was the Chairman which carried Mr. James, and he only tells your Lordships, that he carried a Gentleman into Leicester-fields; that my Lord Mobun endeavoured to put off the Business for that Night; but who the Person was that he carried he cannot so well tell, nor give an Account of; but when he had set him down at the further End of the Square, there he left him, and he knows no further.

Then there was the Surgeon at the Bagnio in Long-Acre, who gives your Lordships an Account, that about Two of the Clock in the Morning on the Sunday, my Lord of Warwick and Captain French came in there; Captain French was wounded in the Body, and my Lord Warwick was wounded in the Hand, and my Lord Warwick did take extraordinary Care of Captain French, and would not have the Door open'd to any Body, nor his Lordship known to be there; that afterwards Captain James and Mr. Dockwra came to the Door, and my Lord came to the Door himself, and when he saw who they were, he order'd them to be let in; and that there was a Discourse about going into the Country, and that there was a Fear that Coote was kill'd. This is the Effect of the Testimony both of the Surgeon and his Servants; and it is to be observed, that when Captain French came in, his Sword was not bloody, but my Lord of Warwick's Sword was bloody almost all over, and that was taken notice of the next Day, and there are several Witnesses both Men and Women of that House that give your Lordships an Account much to the same purpose; then there was Captain Duckinfield, who says, that my Lord of Warwick came to his Lodgings, and they went in a Coach together to the Tavern in Cornhill, and then there was a Discourse of going into the Country, and my Lord said that he was afraid his Friend Coote was kill'd, but that they had no absolute News of his being kill'd at that Time; for it should seem my Lord of Warwick forsook the Field as soon as the fatal Stroke was given, which, by whom it was given, is left to your Lordships Consideration. Indeed it is pretended by my Lord, that the Wound that he had in his Hand was given him by Mr. James, but nothing of that is made apparent to your Lordships upon the Proofs.

Then we came to give your Lordships an Account of the Nature of the Wounds that Mr. Coote had in his Body; and for that we produced both the Surgeon that did probe the Wounds by the Order of the Coroner, and the Coroner himself. Indeed we could not get a positive Answer from either the Surgeon or the Coroner, whether the Wounds were given by one and the same Sword, or by different Swords; but then your Lordships have the Testimony of Mr. Turner, who was Captain Coote's Servant, and who knows his Master's Sword, and it hath been shewn to him, and he says, that is his Master's Sword that he went out with; and it can be easily judged whether he could give himself those Wounds by that Sword.

And your Lordships have likewise had brought before you another Sword, which was left at the Bagnio in Long-Acre, that was Captain French's that had no Blood at all upon it, but my Lord of Warwick's, it seems by all the Evidence, had a great deal of Blood upon it.

Then came the Witnesses for the Prisoner at the Bar, this noble Lord, my Lord Warwick; and the Sum of the Testimonies that they have given, is of a great deal of Kindness between my Lord Warwick and Captain Coote; that my Lord lent him a hundred Guineas to purchase his Commission in the Guards, when he had but three of four hundred Guineas which was necessary to make the Purchase; and there are several of them that do testify, that they always look'd upon Captain Coote and my Lord of Warwick to be very good Friends, and that there never was any Quarrel between them; and that is the Sum of what the Evidence on that Side did testify. And this, my Lords, I take to be the Sum of the Evidence that has been given on either Side; and when I have laid it thus before your Lordships, I must submit it to your Lordships Judgment, what Opinion you will be of upon the whole Matter; only there is this one Observation that I would make to your Lordships upon this Evidence, That there is not one Witness that has given you an Account satisfactory by whose Hand these Wounds were given to Mr. Coote; and therefore, tho' it is apparent my Lord of Warwick was in the Place where the mortal Wound was given, yet by whose Hand it was given is not yet known; until that can be known, every Person that was there must remain under the Imputation of the same Guilt, as having a Hand, and contributing to his Death; it is certain, and cannot be denied, that this noble Lord, my Lord at the Bar, was in the Field, wherein there was actual Fighting; for he does not deny it himself, but says, that he was engaged particularly with Captain James, when Captain Coote was engaged with Captain French, between whom, as it is alledged, the Quarrel was; but that is no Way in Point of Fact made appear to your Lordships; and there being such Suspensions and Circumstances of the Blood upon my Lord of Warwick's Sword, and the great Concern that he was in when he came to the Bagnio, and desiring to be concealed, and that no Body should know that he was there, and the Care he took of Mr. French, who is the pretended Person that did the Fact, is that which is to be submitted to your Lordships; and it is to be observed, that Mr. French's Sword was not bloody, but only dirty, but my Lord of Warwick's Sword was very bloody from the Hilt to the Point, and he was in a great Consternation when he came into the House.

There is likewise a Circumstance which your Lordships will please to observe, that even Mr. Coote's Sword was brought into the House by some of the Company that were there, and whatsoever this noble Lord pretends of his Friendship to Mr. Coote, yet, it seems by his Care that he took of Captain French, he had as much Friendship for him.

There is another Circumstance that has been testified, which it will be fit for your Lordships to take into Consideration, and make some Observation of; that is, the Nature of the Wound: It seems, he had two Wounds, one on the left Side of the Breast, near the Collar Bone, and that was downward; and yet his Man, that was here produced duced as a Witness, does testify, that he was one that used his right Hand, and then it is a Wonder that he should receive such a Sort of a Wound in that Part; and the other Wound was on the left Side too, but it was upward, and how that could be given to one that was a Right-handed Man, is certainly a very great Wonder; and the Wounds being both given upon the same Side, it cannot but be concluded, that they were given by one and the same Sword.

Another Circumstance which relates to my Lord of Warwick is, that when he came into the Bagnio, after the Fact was over, he would have himself denied to be there, and went to the Door when James and Dockwra came in; and his declaring his desire of going into the Country; these, we say, are Circumstances that do induce a Doubt, That my Lord of Warwick had a Concern upon him of great Guilt of having a Hand in this Man's Death: It is indeed pretended by my Lord of Warwick, That Mr. Coote was a Person that my Lord of Warwick had a Kindness for; but it is plain by the Evidence, that he left him dead in the Field, and did not take any Care of him, but took a great deal of Care of Captain French, who, it is pretended, was the Person that fought with Coote, when he came to the Bagnio; and there is nothing of Kindness at this Time pretended, nor any Thing of a Defence to this Matter offer'd by my Lord of Warwick, but only what the Chairmen say, that he endeavoured to put it off to another Time. These, my Lords, are all the Observations that I shall make upon the Evidence in this Case; how far this Evidence, upon Consideration, will weigh with your Lordships, I must submit it to you. If my Lord of Warwick did do the Fact, as these Circumstances, we think, may incline your Lordships to believe he did, it will surely be Murder; but how far the Evidence comes up to the Proof of that, we must humbly submit to your Lordships, who are the Judges of it; and we leave it entirely to your Consideration upon what you have heard.

L. H. St. Then it seems you have done on all Sides.

Counsel. Yes, my Lords.

Lords. Then adjourn, adjourn.

L. H. St. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn into the House of Lords?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. St. This House is adjourned into the House of Lords.

Then the Lords went back to their own House in the same Order they came into the Court in Westminster-hall, and debated the Matter among themselves, what Judgment to give upon the Evidence that had been heard; and in about Two Hours Time they returned again into the Court, erected upon a Scaffold in Westminster-hall; and after they were seated in their Places, the Lord High Steward being seated in his Chair before the Throne, spoke to the Lords thus:

L. H. St. Will your Lordships proceed to give your Judgment?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. St. Your Lordships will give me leave, as I ask your Lordships your several Opinions, to take so much Time as to write down the Opinion of every Lord.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Lord High Steward asked this Question of every one of the Lords there present, beginning with the puisne Baron, which was the Lord Bernard.

L. H. St. My Lord Bernard, Is Edward Earl of Warwick guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?

The Lord Bernard stood up in his Place uncovered, and laying his Right Hand upon his Breast, pronounced his Judgment thus:

L. Bernard. Not guilty of Murder, but guilty of Manslaughter, upon my Honour.

The same Question was asked severally of all the Lords, who in the same Form delivered their Opinions, as followeth.

L. Haversham. Not guilty of Murder, but guilty of Manslaughter, upon my Honour.

D. of Leeds. Not guilty of Murder, but guilty of Manſlaughter, upon my Honour.

Lord High Steward. My Judgment is, That my Lord of Warwick is not guilty of the Murder, but is guilty of Manſlaughter, upon my Honour.

Then the Lord High Steward reckoned up the Number of the Peers that were then preſent, and the Opinions that were given, and afterwards acquainted their Lordſhips with the Reſolutions that they came to, in this manner.

L. H. St. My Lords, your Lordſhips are Ninety-three in Number here preſent, and you have all acquitted my Lord of Warwick of the Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, but you are of Opinion that he is guilty of Manſlaughter; Is it your Pleaſure, that he ſhould be called to the Bar, and acquainted with your Lordſhips Judgment?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes; Chief Governor of the Tower of London, bring forth the Body of your Priſoner, Edward Earl of Warwick, forthwith, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

Then the Earl of Warwick was brought to the Bar.

L. H. St. My Lord of Warwick, your Lordſhip has been Arraigned upon an Indictment for the killing Mr. Coote; you have pleaded not Guilty, and put your ſelf upon your Trial by your Peers here preſent; my Lords have heard the Evidence given both againſt you and for you, and have conſidered of it, and are come to a Reſolution; and their Judgment is, That your Lordſhip is not guilty of the Murder whereof you ſtand indicted, but that you are guilty of Manſlaughter. What has your Lordſhip to ſay, why Judgment of Death ſhould not be pronounced againſt you according to the Law?

Earl of Warwick. My Lords, I deſire that the Benefit of my Peerage may be allowed me, according to the Statute of Edward the Sixth.

L. H. St. My Lord, your Lordſhip has demanded the Benefit of your Peerage upon the Statute of Edward the Sixth, and you muſt have it by Law; but I am directed by their Lordſhips to acquaint you, That you cannot have the Benefit of that Statute twice; therefore I am likewiſe directed by their Lordſhips to ſay, That they hope you will take a more than ordinary Care of your Behaviour for the future, that ſo you may never hereafter fall into ſuch unfortunate Circumſtances as you have been now under; my Lords hope this will be ſo ſenſible a Warning, that nothing of this kind will ever happen to you again; your Lordſhip is now to be diſcharged.

L. H. St. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Houſe of Lords?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. St. This Houſe is adjourned to the Houſe of Lords.

Then the Lords went in Proceſſion, in the ſame Order that they came into the Court.

CLXV. The TRIAL of Charles Lord Mohun, before the Houſe of Lords, for the Murder of Richard Coote, Eſq; March 29, 1699. 11 Will. III.

ABOUT One of the Clock the Lords came in the ſame Order, as the Day before, to the Trial of the Earl of Warwick, into the Court erected in Weſtminſter-Hall.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, my Lord High Steward, his Grace, does ſtrictly Charge and Command all manner of Perſons here preſent, to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprifonment.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, All manner of Perſons who are obliged to give their Attendance here this Day, before his Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, let them give their Attendance forthwith.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation again.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, his Grace

my Lord High Steward of England, does ſtrictly Charge and Command all manner of Perſons here preſent to be uncovered.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation again.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, Chief Governor of the Tower of London, bring forth the Body of your Priſoner Charles Lord Mohun forthwith, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

Then my Lord Mohun was brought to the Bar.

*L. High Steward. My Lord Mohun, your Lordſhip is now brought upon your Trial for the Murder of Mr. Coote, for which you ſtand indicted by the Grand Jury for the County of Middleſex. The King, who knows that Juſtice is one of the Pillars which ſupports a Throne, will have a ſtrict Account count taken of the Blood of any of his Subjects, without respect to the Quality of the Slain, or of the Person who stands charged with his Death. There is not one of the noble Peers here present, who are to be your Triers, but does heartily wish your Lordship innocent; but, on the other side, if you should appear to be guilty upon the Evidence, you ought not to hope that any Consideration of Relation, Friendship, or Pity, will prevail against Justice. And therefore since in your present Condition every Thing that is valuable in this World is at stake, it will be highly necessary for your Lordship to recollect your self, and to have your best Thoughts about you. Facts of this Nature are frequently attended with such unhappy Circumstances, that a noble Person may be justly covered with Shame to have Faults and Weaknesses exposed to such an Assembly as this, although he be not conscious to himself of the Guilt of Blood: But your Lordship ought not to be so far discomposed with any Thoughts of this Kind, as to neglect your Defence against this heavy Accusation of Murder. In order to this, it is necessary for your Lordship to hear with Temper what will be said against you, and by no means to interrupt the Counsel or Witnesses. I will take care to give your Lordship notice when the proper Time comes for you to make your Observations upon the Evidence, to examine your Witnesses, and to say what you think proper for your own Defence; and when my Lords have heard, and fully and maturely considered the whole Matter, their Lordships will give such a Judgment as the Law and Justice require.

L. H. St. Read the Indictment to my Lord.

Clerk of the Crown. Charles Lord Mohun, your Lordship stands indicted in the County of Middlesex by the Name of Charles Lord Mohun of Okehampton in the County of Devon, late of the Parish of St. Martins in the Fields in the County of Middlesex, together with Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, late of the same Parish and County, Richard French, late of the same Parish and County, Gent. Roger James, late of the same Parish and County, Gent. and George Dockwra, late of the same Parish and County, Gent. not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the 30th Day of October, in the Tenth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord that now is, William the Third, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. with Force and Arms, &c. at the Parish aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, in and upon one Richard Coote, Esq; in the Peace of God, and our said Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, then and there being, Feloniously, Wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did make an Assault; and that the aforesaid Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, with a certain Sword made of Iron and Steel, of the Value of five Shillings, which he the said Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, in his right Hand then and there had and held drawn, the aforesaid Richard Coote, in and upon the left Part of the Breast of him the said Richard Coote, near the Collar-Bone of him the said Richard Coote, then and there Feloniously, Voluntarily, and of his Malice aforethought, did Strike, Stab, and Thrust in, giving to the said Richard Coote, then and there with the Sword drawn aforesaid, in and upon the left Part of the Breast of him the said Richard Coote, near the Collar-Bone of him the said Richard Coote, one mortal Wound of the Breadth of half an Inch, and of the Depth of five Inches, of which said mortal Wound he the aforesaid Richard Coote then and there instantly died: And that you the said Lord Mohun, together with the said Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, then and there Feloniously, Wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, were present, aiding, abetting, comforting, assisting, and maintaining the said Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, the said Richard Coote, in Manner and Form aforesaid, Feloniously, Wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, to kill and murder; and so the said Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, and you the said Charles Lord Mohun, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, the aforesaid Richard Coote, in Manner and Form aforesaid, Feloniously, Wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did kill and murder, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, his Crown and Dignity.

Cl. of the Crown. How say you, Charles Lord Mohun, are you guilty of this Felony and Murder, whereof you stand indicted, or not guilty?

Lord Mohun. Not guilty.

Cl. of the Crown. Culprit, How will you be tried?

Lord Mohun. By God and my Peers.

Cl. of the Crown. God send your Lordship good Deliverance.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, All manner of Persons that will give Evidence on behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, against Charles Lord Mohun, the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence; for now he stands at the Bar for his Deliverance.

Lord Mohun. My Lords, I desire I may have the Benefit of Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. H. St. Your Lordships are pleased to permit my Lord Mohun to have Pen, Ink and Paper?

Lords. Ay, ay.

[Pen, Ink, and Paper were carried to my Lord, by one of the Clerks of the House.]

Mr. Cowper. May it please your Lordships, my Lord Mohun, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted by the Grand Jury of the County of Middlesex, before Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer in that County; and the Indictment sets forth, That Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, Charles Lord Mohun, Baron Mohun of Okehampton in the County of Devon, Richard French, Roger James and George Dockwra, the 30th of October, in the Tenth Year of his Majesty's Reign, with Force and Arms at the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, upon one Richard Coote, Esq; Feloniously, Wilfully, and of their Malice aforethought, did make an Assault; and that the said Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, with a drawn Sword then in his Right Hand, the said Richard Coote, upon the left Part of his Breast near the Collar-Bone, did Strike, Stab, and Thrust, giving him thereby a mortal Wound of the Breadth of half an Inch, and the Depth of five Inches, of which Wound he instantly died; that my Lord Mohun, Mr. French, Mr. James and Mr. Dockwra, Feloniously, Wilfully, and of their Malice aforethought, were present, aiding, and abetting my Lord of Warwick and Holland, the said Richard Coote, in manner aforesaid, to Kill and any Murder: and then concludes, so that the Earl of Warwick and Holland, the said Lord Mobun, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, the said Richard Coote, in Manner and Form afore-said, Feloniously, Wilfully, and of their Malice afore-thought, did kill and murder, against the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Indictment my Lord Mobun has pleaded not guilty, and for his Trial has put himself upon God and your Lordships, his Peers. We shall call our Witnesses, and produce what Evidence we have to give to prove my Lord Mobun guilty, and so submit it to you.

Sir Thomas Trevor. Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, This noble Lord, my Lord Mobun, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted for the Death of Mr. Coote, one of the King's Subjects, as your Lordships have heard in the Case that was before you Yesterday, to which Indictment he hath pleaded not guilty, and for his Trial has put himself upon my Lords, who are his Peers; I shall very shortly open the Substance of the Evidence that we shall offer for the King against my Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar; we shall produce Evidence to prove, That at the Time laid in the Indictment, the 29th of October at Night, and the next Morning, which was Sunday, my Lord the Prisoner at the Bar, and my Lord of Warwick, (who has been found guilty of Manlaughter upon this Indictment before your Lordships) and those other Persons that are named in the Indictment, Captain French, Captain James, and Mr. Dockwra, and the Gentleman that was killed, happened to be at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, which was then kept by Mr. Locket, and continued there a great Part of the Night, indeed till the next Morning, about One or Two of the Clock in the Morning; there was my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, Captain French, Captain Coote, and Mr. Dockwra, but very late in the Night the other Gentleman, Mr. James, was sent for: A Messenger was sent particularly to have him come to them; There they continued drinking till about One or Two of the Clock in the Morning, then Coaches were sent for; then the Drawer of the House will acquaint your Lordships, that he went for them, and could not get any at that Time, being a very dark Night; and when there could be no Coaches had, then there were Chairs called for, and the Drawer went to call Chairs; and as we shall make it appear to your Lordships, when the Drawer came back, there did appear to be a Quarrel among them, for there was clashing of Swords, and they seem'd to be divided into two Parties; on the one Side were my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun the Prisoner at the Bar, and Mr. Coote; On the other Side were Captain French, Captain James, and Mr. Dockwra; and first there were two Chairs came to the Door, into which Mr. French, and Mr. Coote went, and when they were in the Chairs my Lord Mobun came out, and said he would kill any of the Chairmen that went away; and so they put up again, and the Gentlemen came out, and came into the House, but afterwards Mr. Coote went into the first Chair, and my Lord of Warwick into the next, and my Lord Mobun into the third, and then they went away; and the other three Gentlemen went into the other three Chairs, and followed them. Your Lordships will hear whither they were all carried. When they came to the End of St. Martins-lane in the Strand, my Lord Mobun would indeed have endeavoured to have perswaded Mr. Coote in particular to have gone home for that Night, and let the Business alone till another Time, but Mr. Coote would go on; and while the three Chairs carried my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Mr. Coote to St. Martins-lane End, which were the three first Chairs that went away from Locket's, the other three Chairs that went after them overtook them, and then by Mr. Coote's Command, the Chairmen that carried him went forward towards Leicester-fields, and then this noble Lord, my Lord Mobun, did say, If you go on, I will go and see the End of it, and ordered the Chairmen that carried him to go after those Chairs in which my Lord of Warwick, and Mr. Coote went, and accordingly they did go till they came to the hither End of the Square in Leicester-fields, near Green-street End, where my Lord Mobun got out of his Chair, and paid for all the three Chairs three Shillings. But we shall not be able to give to your Lordships an Account particularly as to my Lord Mobun, what he did afterwards, but we shall call our Witnesses to prove what we have opened; and when our Witnesses are heard, we shall leave the Matter to your Lordships Judgment.

Samuel Cawtherne, which was the Drawer at the Tavern at Locket's, was sworn, and gave his Evidence to the same Effect that he did the Day before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Will you acquaint my Lords, Who were at your House the 29th and 30th of October last, Saturday Night and Sunday Morning.

Cawthorne. There where my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, Capt. Coote, Capt. French, Mr. Dockwra, and Mr. James.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did they continue there?

Cawthorne. Till between One and Two of the Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Will you acquaint my Lords what happened at your Master's House at that Time; you remember what Evidence you gave Yesterday; tell the whole Matter again, because it relates to another noble Lord that is now at the Bar.

Cawthorne. The Reckoning was called for about that Time, and I went up and took the Reckoning, and all the Gentlemen came down to the Bar, and Coaches were sent for; I went for them, but no Coaches could be had; Then Chairs were sent for, and I called for Chairs, and there came two Chairs to the Door, and into those two Chairs went Captain Coote and Captain French; and my Lord Mobun and my Lord of Warwick endeavoured to quiet them, and to put off the Business till another Day, and thereupon they came out of the Chairs, and came into the House again; My Lord Mobun did desire there might be no Quarrel, and would have Mr. Coote go home with him to his Lodgings at Westminster, or he would go with Mr. Coote, and said there should be no Quarrel that Night: There were then three of them on one Side of the Bar, and three of the other Side, and their Swords were all drawn. My Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Mr. Coote, were of one Side, and Capt. French, Capt. James, and Mr. Dockwra, were of the other Side: I was without the House when the Swords were first drawn drawn, but I heard my Lord Mobun say, I have got a cut Finger by endeavouring to part them, and at first when the Chairs came on, my Lord Mobun said, if they did quarrel, he would send to the Guards for a File of Musqueteers, and secure them; so that he did what he could to prevent any Quarrel at all; and when he had received the Wound in his Hand, I helped him to a Napkin to wrap his Hand in upon the bleeding of it: Then my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Captain Coote, went away in three Chairs, and my Lord Mobun gave Order to go down to Westminster; and there were three Chairs called for by the other three Persons; two did come, and Captain French and Captain James went in to them; and the 6th not being come, they stayed till it did come, and then they three went away too; the Chairs were all ordered to go home with them; My Lord of Warwick, and my Lord Mobun gave Order to their Chairs to keep close with Mr. Coote; and the other three Chairs immediately followed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you consider, and recollect with your self, Was Mr. James there at first?

Cawthorne. No, I was sent for him about Ten a Clock at Night, and there he continued with them till they went all away in the six Chairs, and he was almost fuddled when he came in.

Mr. Att. Gen. When James came in, was his Sword drawn?

Cawthorne. His Sword was in the Scabbard, but the Scabbard was broken, and he took and broke his Sword stamping upon it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, can you tell, you being up and down in the Room, what was the Occasion of the Quarrel?

Cawthorne. Indeed I can't tell; but some Words past when they were below Stairs by the Bar from Captain Coote, That he would laugh when he pleased, and frown when he pleased; and Mr. Dockwra did say, that they would fight them whenever they pleased when they went away; but I did not observe that there was any Quarrel between them while they were above, nor any Swords drawn till after I came from calling the Chairs.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were all the Swords drawn at once?

Cawthorne. They were all drawn when I came in from calling for the Coaches and the Chairs, and three were within the Bar, and three were without; They were putting up their Swords when I came in again; Indeed I do not know any Thing of the Quarrel.

L. H. St. My Lord Mobun, Will you ask this Witness any Questions?

L. Mobun. Indeed I think I need not ask him any Question; but yet, if your Lordships please, I would ask him this, Whether directly or indirectly I was any ways concerned in the Quarrel? Or, Whether I did not endeavour all that ever I could to quiet them?

Cawthorne. Yes, indeed, my Lord Mobun did endeavour all that ever he could to prevent any Quarrel at that Time.

L. Mobun. Did I say any Thing tending to the promoting of a Quarrel or Fighting among them?

Cawthorne. No, my Lord Mobun did not promote any Thing of the Quarrel between them, but he did say two or three times, that he would send for the Guards to secure them, and keep them from fighting, both at the Door of the House, and at the Bar, and ask'd for a Napkin to wrap up his Hand in, for the Wound which he said he got in endeavouring to quiet and part them, and prevent their fighting.

L. Mobun. That is all that I would ask him, whether I did not endeavour all that I could to prevent any quarrelling or fighting at that Time?

Cawthorne. Yes, indeed, my Lord did so.

L. H. St. He has said so already, my Lord, and therefore there does not need any further Examination of him to that Point: If both Sides have done with this Witness, let him go down. (Which he did.)

L. H. St. Then Mr. Attorney, who is your next Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witness is Tho. Browne, who was one of the Chairmen that carried Mr. Coote into Leicester-fields.

Then he was sworn.

L. H. St. What is the Question you would ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I desire he may be ask'd and examin'd, and acquaint your Lordships, who it was that he carried from Locket's the 29th of October last to Leicester-fields, and what Time it was of the Night?

Browne. I carried Mr. Coote in my Chair.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither were you directed to carry him?

Browne. To Leicester-fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time of Night was it?

Browne. It was three Quarters past One, as near as I could guess.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, What other Chairs were there that went along with you?

Browne. There were two other Chairs.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were in those Chairs, pray?

Browne. There were my Lord of Warwick in one, and my Lord Mobun in the other.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you three go away from Locket's together?

Browne. Yes, we did; and when we were bid to take up, we went to the End of St. Martin's-lane, and turning up at the End of St. Martin's-lane, there my Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mobun called out to Capt Coote to stay, and to turn down to go to Westminster; but Mr. Coote would turn up the Lane, and my Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mobun made a Stop at the Back-Door of the Cross-keys Tavern, and both of them perswaded Mr. Coote to put it off till the next Morning; but he would not, he said he would make an End of it that Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, recollect your self, Did they name among them what their Business was that they would make an End of?

Browne. No, they did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was it that stop'd at St. Martin's-lane End?

Browne. When we were turning up at St. Martin's-lane End, my Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mobun call'd out to stop, and ask'd Mr. Coote whither he was going? And when he said, to Leicester-fields, my Lord Mobun called out to us to set down, which we did, at the Back-Door of the Cross-keys Tavern; They did both of them, my Lord Warwick, and my Lord Mobun, perswade Mr. Coote to go home to Westminster, and not to end end the Business that Night ; but he would go on, and while we were there, there went three other Chairs up St. Martin's-lane on the other Side of the Way ; then Mr. Coote, who was in our Chair, bid us take up, and follow those Chairs into the Fields, and swore, damn him he would run his Sword into one of us, if we did not make haste, and overtake those other Chairs, and go before them ; I think his Words were, Damn me, I'll run my Sword into your Breech, if you do not make haste, and get before that other Chair.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say then, they went all away together up to Leicester-fields ?

Browne. Yes, they did so.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be ask'd, whether I did not desire him to go home with me to my Lodging at Westminster.

Browne. Yes, you did, and begg'd of him as if it had been for an Alms, that he would put it off for that Night ; but when the other Chairs past by us at Charing-Cross in St. Martin's-lane, he would have the Chair taken up, and us to make what haste we could to get before them thither, or else, he swore, damn him he would run his Sword into one of us, if we did not make haste to get to Leicester-fields before the other Chairs that went up the other Side of the Way.

Mr. Att. Gen. When the other Chairs were past by, and you went away to Leicester-fields, pray tell my Lords what happened then.

Browne. We went away to Leicester-fields, and when we came to Green-street End, and were entring upon the Square upon the Broad Stones, Mr. Coote call'd out to us, and bid us to set him down, and so did the other two Chairs, and when he put his Hand into his Pocket to discharge us, my Lord of Warwick put his Hand in his Pocket to pay the three Chairs, and Mr. Coote offered half a Guinea to discharge the Chairs, and my Lord Mohun did produce 3 s. and with it discharged all the three Chairs, and they all three walked away together forward upon the Broad Stones on the Right Hand Side of the Way ; It was so dark a Night, I could not see half a dozen Yards from me ; It was the darkest Night, I think, that ever I saw in all my Life, and therefore I cannot tell what became of them after they went out of the Chairs.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did you see my Lord Mohun afterwards ?

Browne. No, I did never see my Lord Mohun afterwards till now here at the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say it was so dark, that you could not see three Yards from you ; pray, what did happen afterwards when you were in the Field ?

Browne. A little while after we had set down these Gentlemen, I fill'd my Pipe out of my Box, and before I could light it, I heard a Calling of Chairs, Chairs, and I went up towards the End of the Square, where the Noise was, and when I came there, they would have had me lift the Chair over the Rails, and I told them, if I did I could not lift it over again : but they would needs have me lift it over, and I did so, and by the Light of the Lanthorn I saw Capt. French and Captain James holding up Captain Coote, and they did desire me to take him into our Chair, but he was in such a Condition that I could not get him into the Chair ; it was before I could well light my Pipe the Chairs were called.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who did call, can you tell ?

Browne. No, indeed I cannot tell who did call Chairs, but it was a Voice from the upper End of the Fields, and we lifted our Chair over the Rails into the Fields, and there were two Gentlemen holding up another Man ; I have heard it said it was Captain French and Captain James, and they cried out, Dear Coote, Dear Coote, and would have had him gotten into the Chair, but we could not ; and my Lord of Warwick did then say, if any Damage did come to the Chair, tho' it were 100 l. we should be satisfied for the Damage ; but we were not able to get him into the Chair, and so there we left him.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say you saw two Gentlemen holding up Mr. Coote, and 'twas a very dark Night, how could you tell who those Gentlemen were ?

Browne. I could not see any Thing of them till we came up with the Candle close to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what did they say when you came up close to the Chair ?

Browne. They offered me an 100 l. Satisfaction for any Damage to my Chair ; but they could not get him in, for he was at that Time dead, I believe, for we went to hale him up, and to get him into the Chair, but we could not do it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell who the two Persons were that held him up ?

Browne. No, but by the Description of the Persons they had such Cloaths on, as that they must be Captain French and Captain James, but indeed I cannot swear directly who they were that were there, nor who they were that called for Chairs at the upper End of the Field ; but when our Chair was lifted over again over the Rails, and we came to the Corner to see who should be taken in, there came one to us who bid us carry him to the Bagnio in Long-Acre, and thither we did go accordingly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, can you tell who the Persons were that held up the Gentleman they would have to be got into the Chair ?

Browne. No, indeed I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, can you describe 'em so as to know them, whether my Lord of Warwick, and my Lord Mohun were those two Gentlemen ?

Browne. My Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mohun were not there I'm sure, for I know them very well ; I was acquainted with them before ; and when I came up to these Gentlemen with the Candle, there was one of them was bigger than my Lord of Warwick, or my Lord Mohun ; and the Elder of them had other Sort of Cloaths than either of them had on at that Time, as we could see when we came up close with the Candle to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any Lights of the Lamps, that are usually in the Streets at that Time, about the Square ?

Browne. Yes, there were those Lights ; but it was a very dark Night, and we could not see two Yards before us, that I am sure of, and there was no Body else that I saw at that Time at the upper End of the Field, but those two Gentlemen, holding up of Captain Coote, whom we had brought up before to the Square, and left him with the Earl of Warwick and my Lord Mohun, at the Bottom of the Square ; but whither they all went, indeed I can't tell : We call'd Watch, but they said it was not within their Ward, and therefore they would not come. When we saw how ill Mr. Coote was upon our coming coming up, and that he could not get him into the Chair, we went away, lifted our Chair over the Rails again, and carried a Gentleman to the Bagnio in Long-Acre.

Lord Mobun. I have a Question to ask this Witness, and that is, How far the Place is whither he carried the Chair, that is, from Green-street End, to the Place whither the Chairs were called for again, at the upper End of the Pales, where he found the two Gentlemen holding up Mr. Coote, and endeavouring to get him up into the Chair?

Browne. I believe it is about fifty Yards, as near as I can guess.

Lord Mobun. I desire to know, whether he means fifty Yards from the upper End to the lower End of Leicester-fields?

Browne. Yes, I believe, my Lord, it is, and better.

Lord Mobun. I desire to ask him, whether Green-street be not the very lower End of the Square?

Browne. Yes, my Lord, the lower End of the Square, coming out of St. Martin's-lane into Green-street.

Mr. Att. Gen. But did you see three other Chairs in that Place?

Browne. Yes, while I was filling my Pipe out of my Box, three other Chairs did come by, and went away; but within a little while after the filling of my Pipe, or rather before I could well fill it, or light it, we heard calling for Chairs again towards the upper End of the Fields, and we carried up our Chair thither, and there we found, as I have told you, two Gentlemen holding up Mr. Coote, and crying out, My dear Coote! my dear Coote!

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell who it was that called for the Chairs the second Time, when you were in the Fields?

Browne. No, indeed, I cannot; but they would have us bring our Chair over the Rails, and we did lift it over; and when we came up to them, I saw only two Gentlemen, whom I did not know who they were particularly, till we came up close to 'em, that we could see their Cloaths, by the Light of the Candle in our Lanthorn; and they would have had us put Mr. Coote into our Chair, and he being very much wounded, they would have had us carry him away; we told them it would spoil our Chair, and we could not besides lift him over the Rails again; they promised we should have any Satisfaction for Damage to our Chair, even to the Value of a hundred Pounds; we went to heave him up to put him into the Chair, and did all we could to have got him into the Chair, but we could not; so we lifted the Chair over the Rails again; and when we came to the Corner of the Rails, at the Way that goes to Long-Acre, there we took up a Gentleman, whom we carry'd to the Bagnio in Long-Acre; we called out to the Watch, but they said it was not within their Ward, and they would not come.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell who were the Persons that were at the upper End of the Fields?

Browne. No, indeed, I cannot tell who they were.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Mobun and my Lord Warwick the two?

Browne. No, my Lord Mobun was not there, nor my Lord Warwick; I know them so well, that it could not be them; one of the Gentlemen was bigger then my Lord of Warwick, and the other of them had other Cloaths than my Lord Mobun.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that the Way they walked up, when they came out of the Chairs, that led to that End of the Fields where you found Mr. Coote wounded?

Browne. Yes, it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, this is but the Repetition of the Evidence that he gave to your Lordships Yesterday.

L. H. St. If you have done with this Witness, my Lord Mobun may ask him any Questions.

Lord Mobun. I desire to have him ask'd, How far is the Place where he carried the Chair at first into Leicester-fields, from the Place where they put over the Chair within the Rails, and would have taken in Mr. Coote?

Browne. It is about fifty Yards, as near I can guess.

Lord Mobun. I desire to know of him, whether the Place where we were set down, that came in the first three Chairs, from Locket's into Leicester-fields, to the Place where he found Mr. Coote supported by the two Gentlemen, be not from one End of the Fields to the other?

Browne. The Place where we set down Captain Coote is at the lower End of Green-street, and the Place where we found him wounded, was at the upper End by Leicester-house.

L. H. St. I think it is understood, that Green-street, which comes out of St. Martin's-lane, is at one End of Leicester-square, and Leicester-house is at the other End.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, where was it that you saw the two Gentlemen holding up Captain Coote, and cry out, My dear Coote! my dear Coote!

Browne. It was on one Side of the Cross-way, that leads out of the Fields towards Newport-street, and by Leicester-house.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you say three Chairs did go up towards the upper End of the Fields?

Browne. Yes, they did so; but our three Chairs that came away first from the Greyhound Tavern, set down at Green-street End, and the three Gentlemen that came in our Chairs went up the Pales to them; but whither they went I can't tell, but soon after we heard calling for Chairs again, and so we went up, where we found the two Gentlemen holding Captain Coote, and saying, My dear Coote! my dear Coote!

Mr. Att. Gen. But when you were called the second Time, that is, into the Fields, where was the Place you say that you found them in?

Browne. It was within the Rails, one Side of the Cross-way towards Leicester-house.

Lord Mobun. Pray, was that the direct Way that I went from the Place that I was set down, that is, the lower End of Green-street, to the Place that they afterwards went to, which was the Bagnio in Long-Acre.

Browne. When Captain Coote, and my Lord Mobun were set down, and walked away upon the Pav'd Stones of the Square, to the Place where I found the two Gentlemen holding up Capt. Coote, was the quite contrary Way from the End of Green-street to the Standard Tavern.

L. H. St. Who is your next Witness, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witness that we call, is Robert Applegate.

Who was sworn.

L. H. St. What do you ask this Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, this is the Chairman that carried my Lord Mobun to Leicester-fields from Locket's; he will give your Lordships an Account when he carry'd him, who he carry'd, and what happened afterwards, which is all but to the same Purpose with the Evidence that he gave Yesterday. But pray, who was that whom you carried on the Thirtieth of October last to Leicester-fields?

Applegate. I carried my Lord Mobun from Locket's, at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, to Leicester-fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, How many Chairs were there of you that went away together?

Applegate. There were three of us that went away together, one carry'd my Lord Warwick, we my Lord Mobun, and the third carry'd Captain Coote, which was the first Chair that went away.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither did you go?

Applegate. We went to the Corner of St. Martin's-lane.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who do you say were in the other two Chairs?

Applegate. My Lord of Warwick, and my Lord Mobun.

Mr. Att. Gen. When they came out first, What Orders or Directions were given?

Applegate. My Lord Mobun said, That he and my Lord of Warwick, and Captain Coote, would go all three together down to Westminster, and there they would all lie together, or be together that Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Answer was given to what my Lord Mobun said?

Applegate. Indeed I do not remember any Answer that was given at all; but after that my Lord Mobun went into the Chair, and ordered us to follow down the other two Chairs towards Westminster, and we put up the Chair and came away; and when we came to St. Martin's-lane End, the Chair that carried Capt. Coote turn'd up the Lane, and we being ordered to follow the other Chairs, went up the Lane too; but my Lord Mobun perceiving that they were not going down to Westminster, call'd out to stop, just when we were entered into St. Martin's-lane, over-against the Back-door of the Cross-keys Tavern, and made the other Chairs to stand, and all the three Chairs were set a-breast before that Place, and my Lord Mobun ask'd Capt. Coote, Whither he was going? and he answered, to Leicester-fields: He begg'd of him, as one would beg for an Alms, that he would not go that Night, for the Business could not be done that Night, and it was better to put it off till the next Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they name what the Business was, that was to be done?

Applegate. No; but my Lord Mobun did say, 'twas impossible to be done that Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, and what happened afterwards, while you were in that Place?

Applegate. While we were there, three other Chairs pass'd by us on the other Side of the Way, and going forward up the Street, Capt. Coote order'd their Chairs to follow, and so we did to Green-street End, and there we set 'em down.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, can you remember what was said by my Lord Mobun at the Time when the other Chairs pass'd by?

Applegate. He was then desiring and begging of Capt. Coote to go home to Westminster, telling him that it could not be done that Night; but it must be deferr'd till the next Morning; but Capt. Coote said he would not delay it till the next Morning, but he would go to Leicester-fields that Night, and all three Chairs were ordered to go forward, and we did go on forward to Leicester-fields; my Lord Mobun, indeed, did beg and desire as heartily as, I say, a Man for an Alms, that they would let it alone for that Night; but Capt. Coote would not, and ordered his Chair to go forwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say, my Lord Mobun begg'd as heartily as if it were for an Alms to defer it for that Night?

Applegate. Yes, he did so; so that I do really think that he was not concerned in the Matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he were so earnest to defer and put off the Business, how came you to carry him thither that Night? What Expressions did he use particularly in St. Martin's-lane, after the other Chairs were pass'd by?

Applegate. He said, If you must go, I'll go with you and see it; and he bid us take up and follow the other Chairs wherein Capt. Coote and my Lord Warwick were; and we did go.

Mr. Att. Gen. And where did you set my Lord Mobun down?

Applegate. At the hither End of Leicester-square, at the Corner of Green-street, the lower Corner of the Pav'd Stones, going up to Leicester-house.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of the three Gentlemen that you set down at the End of Green-street?

Applegate. They went all three together up the Stone Pavement, towards the upper End of the Square, towards the Standard Tavern, I think.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they go together, or did they go asunder?

Applegate. They went together, I think; I did not see them part one from another.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did you see my Lord Mobun afterwards?

Applegate. No, I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of you afterwards?

Applegate. I stay'd a little at the lower End of the Square to take a Pipe of Tobacco, and when I had filled my Pipe, I heard calling Chairs, Chairs again, at the upper End of the Square; and when we brought up our Chair to the upper End of the Fields, the first Man that I did see was my Lord of Warwick, who would have had us put over our Chair within the Rails; but we told him we could not get it over again if any one was put in it; but if they would come out into the Square, there we were ready to carry 'em any where; and when we came to the upper End of the Square, there was Captain French, and we took him into the Chair, and he bid us carry him to the Bagnio in Long-Acre; and at Newport-street End he would have had us stop and pull off his Cloaths, for he believed he was a dead Man.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, who did you see there at the upper End of Leicester-fields?

Applegate. No Body indeed, but my Lord of Warwick and Mr. French.

Mr. Att. Gen. No Body but them two?

Applegate. No; no Body but them two.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where do you say that was, that the Calling for Chairs was, and where you brought your Chair?

Applegate. It was just at the upper End of Leicester-fields, by Leicester House, and by the Standard Tavern.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was it that you there took up?

Applegate. It was Captain French.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither then did you carry him?

Applegate. We were order'd to go to the Bagnio in Long-Acre; and thither we, and another Chair that carried my Lord Warwick, did go; and when we came there, we did knock a good while before we could get any Body up; and when they were let in, we came away, and were bid to call for our Fare the next Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, where was it that you took up Captain French?

Applegate. It was the upper End of all of Leicester-fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. And you went away with him, did you?

Applegate. Yes, as soon as ever we took him up; it was as soon as ever we could, at the outside of the Rails, I was the first Chair that, upon the Calling for Chairs after they came thither, was by the Standard Tavern, and from thence we went into Long-Acre.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whereabout is the Standard Tavern?

Applegate. It is at the further End of the Fields by Leicester House; it is by Cranburne-lane, which is the Street that leads into Newport-street, and so into St. Martin's-lane; and then we were to go to the Bagnio in Long-Acre.

L. H. St. My Lord Mobun, will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Mobun. Yes, my Lord, I have a Question or two to ask him; I desire to ask him, Whether, when we were going along, and the Chair, in which Captain Coote was, turn'd up St. Martin's-lane, I did not call out to have him stop, and know whither they were going?

Applegate. Yes, my Lord, you did.

Lord Mobun. Pray, whither did I bid you go, when you first took me up at Locket's?

Applegate. My Lord Mobun bid me follow those Chairs, but go down to Westminster, for he said they all three would go together, and lie together that Night.

Lord Mobun. My Lords, I desire this Man may be ask'd, whether there were not several Ways of going out of the Fields, besides those of Green-street and the Standard Tavern?

Applegate. Yes, my Lord, no doubt, there are.

Lord Mobun. Then I'll leave it to your Lordships to make the Observation; for there is no Evidence that I was even seen in the Field after I alighted out of the Chair at Green-street End; and I hope your Lordships do observe, That he has told you, I was asearnest in begging Captain Coote to defer going to Leicester-fields till the next Morning, and begg'd as heartily of him for it, as any Beggar would do for an Alms.

L. H. St. My Lord, their Lordships no doubt, have made that Observation; for he did say so.

Lord Mobun. My Lords, I have no more to ask him.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, Who is your next Witness?

VOL. V.

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witness is Peter Ketro, who likewise was a Chairman that carried my Lord Mobun into the Place where the Fact was done.

Peter Ketro was sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you acquaint my Lords who you carried upon the Thirtieth of October last, from the Greyhound Tavern to Leicester-fields?

Ketro. Upon the Thirtieth of October last, in the Morning (which was Sunday) very early, we were call'd to the Door of the Greyhound Tavern, and when we came there, there were several other Chairs there, for there was no Coach, it seems, to be had.

Mr. Att. Gen. And who was in your Chair?

Ketro. My Lord Mobun; and there were two other Chairs that went away together, wherein were Captain Coote and my Lord Warwick.

Mr. Att. Gen. And whither did you go from thence?

Ketro. We went along the Strand, and when we came to the End of St. Martin's-lane, the Chair that Capt. Coote was in, we supposed by his Order, turn'd up the Lane; for my Lord Mobun had given us Order to go down to Westminster; and then when we came there to the End of St. Martin's-lane, he call'd out to stop, and to have the other Chairs stop, and they stood still at the Back-door of the Cross-keys Tavern, which is at the End of St. Martin's-lane, and all the three Chairs did make a stand at that Place, and my Lord of Warwick, and my Lord Mobun, and Captain Coote talk'd together; and my Lord Mobun did desire Capt. Coote to go down to Westminster, and to put off the Business for that Night, for nothing of Business could be done: Then my Lord of Warwick did say, if they did go on he would go on with them; but my Lord Mobun did endeavour to persuade 'em to go down to Westminster to lodge, for nothing could be done that Night; but when the other three Chairs pass'd by, on the other Side of the Way, and Captain Coote would needs go forwards to Leicester-fields, my Lord Mobun did bid us take up and follow them; and he said, if they would go, he would go and see what came of it; so we took up, and followed the other Chairs, and went up the Lane, and into Green-street, to the lower End of Green-street, next the Square, and there our three Chairs set down my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun, and Captain Coote, and were discharged.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what became of them after?

Ketro. There they went up upon the Broad-Stones, up towards the upper End of the Fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they go all together, or did they part?

Ketro. They went together for any Thing I know; I saw no parting, and indeed it was so dark a Night, that I cannot tell what became of 'em after they went out of the Chairs: It was one of the darkeft Nights that ever I saw.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well then, pray what happened after that?

Ketro. I went to light my Pipe of Tobacco, and before we could light a Pipe of Tobacco, there was calling at the upper End of the Square for Chairs again; and so up we went with our Chair to the upper End of the Fields; and when we came there, some Body call'd out to have us lift our Chair over within the Rails; but we told 'em, if we did so, we could not get it over again, if any Body were put into it; and so we were bid to go to the End of the Rails, in order to the getting out from that Place, and getting in of any Body that was to go into the Chair; and when we came to the End of the Rails, we took up Capt. French, and he bid us carry him to the Bagnio in Long-Acre, and we did so, and at Newport-street End he would have had us have pull'd off his Cloaths, for he said, he believ'd he was a dying Man; but we carried him on to the Bagnio in Long-Acre, and there came after us the Lord of Warwick in another Chair; and there we set them down.

Mr. Att. Gen. I have a Question to ask you, Friend; Did you not see my Lord Mohun after you set him down at Green-street End?

Ketro. No, indeed, not I; I did not, after he went out of the Chair?

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell whither he went after he went out of the Chair.

Ketro. No, I can't tell whither he went; they all three went up the Pav'd Stones together, but whither they went I can't tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear of any other Chair that was at that End of the Fields at that Time?

Ketro. There was another Chair at that Time, at the upper End of the Fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear 'em desire to take Mr. Coote into that Chair?

Ketro. No, I did not,

Mr. Att. Gen. Nor do you know any Thing of their putting Mr. Coote into a Chair?

Ketro. No, indeed, not I; what they did as to the other Chair, that was before, they can best tell, for I can't.

L. H. St. Who is your next Witness, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Richard Edwards.

L. H. St. What do you call him to?

Mr. Att. Gen. Because we would not trouble your Lordships with the Repetition of every one of the Witnesses that were here Yesterday; this is the Man that carry'd Mr. Dockwra into the Field.

Edwards was sworn.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, What do you ask this Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray do you acquaint my noble Lords here, who you carried in your Chair to Leicester-fields?

Edwards. Indeed, I can't tell; there were three Chairs that took up three Persons at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, after three other Chairs were gone away, and every one had a Gentleman in 'em: I, for my Part, did not know who was in our Chair; but when we shut up the Chair we were bid to go to the Standard Tavern in Leicester-fields, and thither we did go, and there we set down the Gentleman that was in our Chair, and away we went; and as we went up St. Martin's-lane, we pass'd by the three other Chairs that turn'd up before, at the Back-Door of the Cross-Kays Tavern.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see the other three Chairs in Leicester-fields afterwards?

Edwards. No, indeed, I did not; but went up to the Standard Tavern, and set down the Gentleman that was in our Chair, and there we left him, and went away.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Can you tell who it was that you carried?

Edwards. Indeed, I cannot very well tell; but I believe it was Captain James, or Mr. Dockwra.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you came to the Standard Tavern, pray, what happen'd? What pass'd there?

Edwards. To the best of my Knowledge, I took hold of the Knocker of the Door, and knock'd at the Door, and the Gentleman came out, and was set down there; and he gave me a Shilling, and away I went with my Chair.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you set him down at the Standard Tavern, pray, what did he say?

Edwards. He gave me a Shilling, and bid me go about my Business; and so we went away.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was you there when you heard 'em call Chairs back?

Edwards. No, we went away as soon as we had set him down at the Standard Tavern.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe which Way they went after you set him down?

Edwards. No, indeed, I did not; I never minded which Way they went, after we set him down.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which Way did you go?

Edwards. We went away down towards Charing-Cross.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see any other Chairs in the Square when you went down?

Edwards. Yes, there were other Chairs at the other End of the Square.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see any Gentlemen as you came down, walking towards the Standard Tavern, upon the Pav'd Stones?

Edwards. No, indeed, my Lords, not that I remember; but I did see the other three Chairs as I pass'd by Green-street End; who were in 'em, or what was become of them that were in 'em, that I can't tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did they say to you any of 'em at that Time?

Edwards. They ask'd us if we were going away, and we told them yes; we were discharged.

Mr. Att. Gen. But pray, did you not meet any of the other Gentlemen upon the Pav'd Stones?

Edwards. No, indeed, I did not see, to the best of my Remembrance, any other Gentlemen upon the Pav'd Stones.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did the other Chairmen say to you?

Edwards. They ask'd if we were coming away? and we left 'em behind us.

L. H. St. Has my Lord Mohun any Questions to ask him?

Lord Mohun. No, I have not.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, who is your next Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. Jackson, who was the Chairman that carry'd Capt. James. (He was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Will you acquaint my Lords who you carry'd away from Locket's to Leicester-fields?

Jackson. Captain James: There were six Chairs in all: I do not know who went in the other Chairs, but in the three Chairs that went together, when we went, there was Captain Dockwra, Captain French, and Captain James.

Mr. Att. Gen. And where did you set him down?

Jackson. At the Standard Tavern in the Square in Leicester-fields.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of him after you set him down?

Jackson. We knock'd twice at the Tavern Door, and then he gave us a Shilling, and we went away presently, and went down on the Left Hand upon the Pav'd Stones, towards Green-street End.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you meet any Persons coming up upon the Pav'd Stones?

Jackson. Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell who those Persons were?

Jackson. Indeed, I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many were they in Number?

Jackson. They were two or three; but it was so dark, that I cannot tell how many they were.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which Way were they walking?

Jackson. They were going up towards the middle Street.

Mr. Att. Gen. How far was that from the Standard Tavern?

Jackson. It might be about sixty Yards from the Standard Tavern.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say there were three Chairs standing at the End of Green-street when you came by?

Jackson. Yes, there were so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you no Discourse with them?

Jackson. No, indeed, I had not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not ask them why they stay'd there?

Jackson. No, indeed, I did not; we pass'd by and went home.

Mr. Att. Gen. You know my Lord Mobun, don't you?

Jackson. Yes, I do, very well.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was not my Lord Mobun in that Company?

Jackson. He was, when the six Chairs were call'd to Locket's, but I did not hear any Discourse, that I can remember, that pass'd among 'em, nor do I know, or did hear, what became of my Lord Mobun afterwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were those the other three Chairs that went away from Locket's first, that you saw at Green-street End?

Jackson. Indeed, my Lords, I believe so; I cannot swear that they were those three Chairs; when we had set down Captain James, we did not look back any Way at all, but went away home, it being so late and so dark.

L. H. St. My Lord Mobun, will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Mobun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we shall call William Salmon, who was the Surgeon that did search the Wound by the Coroner's Command, when he took the Inquisition upon the View of the Body.

Who was sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Did you view the Body of Mr. Coote after he was dead?

Salmon. Yes, I did view his Body by the Command of the Coroner at the Watch-house, where it lay in St. Martin's-lane.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray then, will you acquaint my Lords what Wounds you found upon the Body?

Salmon. There was one upon the Left Part of the Breast, near the Collar-bone; which, upon probing, I found to be half an Inch in Breadth, and four or five Inches deep downward; the other was a Wound that was in his Left Side, just under the short Ribs, and that was upward; and upon probing of it, I found it was about the Breadth of an Inch at the Orifice, and about the Depth of five or six Inches, and pierced through the Diaphragma.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did you observe any Difference in the Wounds, or in the Orifice of them?

Salmon. That below was a large Wound, larger than the other.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were the Wounds, do you think, given with two Swords, or with one and the same Sword?

Salmon. Indeed, I can't tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you look upon either, and which of them to be mortal?

Salmon. I look'd upon both to be mortal.

L. H. St. If you have done with him, Mr. Attorney, will my Lord Mobun ask him any Questions?

Lord Mobun. No, I shall ask him no Questions, for I think I need not; I was never prov'd to be in the Company, in the Place where the Fighting was.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have done with calling of Witnesses, till we hear what my Lord Mobun says to it.

L. H. St. My Lord Mobun, This is the Time (the King's Evidence being finished) for you to call your Witnesses, and make your Defence.

Lord Mobun. My Lords, I shall not call many Witnesses, for I think there is nothing that fixes any thing of Guilt, as to Capt. Coote's Death, as to me; but I shall call one Witness that was here (as I understand) yesterday, but not examined, and that is a Person that saw me afterwards, and knows that I had a Wound in my Finger laid open, and that Wound was received at Locket's, by endeavouring to part 'em, when they were quarrelling there at that Time.

The Witnesses stood up.

L. H. St. Tho' you are not upon your Oath, yet you are as much obliged, in Justice and Conscience, to speak the exact Truth, as if you was upon your Oath; therefore have a Care what Testimony you give.

Witness. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. St. What is the Question you would have this Witness ask'd?

Lord Mobun. What he knows of my being wounded about this Time, and what I declared concerning that Wound, how I received it?

L. H. St. I will not refuse to ask the Question, but I must acquaint your Lordship that it signifies nothing in Point of Evidence at Law, what you your self did declare after the Fact was over. It is material what you did to prevent this Mischief before it happened, but not what you said or declared after the Thing was done. You hear my Lord's Question, What say you to it?

Witness. I was at My Lord Mobun's several Days after this Business happened, at the Lodging where he lay, and where I saw him; he had a Hurt in his his Hand, and it was laid open, it was in the Finger, and that he said was all he got by endeavouring to part People from fighting.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, when was this?

Witness. It was several Days after the Death of Mr. Coote.

L. H. St. I told your Lordship before, that in Point of Law, such Evidence would signify nothing; because your declaring any Matter, after the Thing was done, in relation to the Fact, could not be admitted as legal Evidence; if any of my Lords be of another Opinion, I suppose they will declare it.

Lord Mohun. My Lords, I submit it to your Lordships; I only desire he may be ask'd, Whether he saw my Hand or no, and how it was?

Witness. I saw my Lord's Finger, and it had been laid open some time before; and he said, he had received that Wound by endeavouring to part Captain French and Captain Coote: That's all I know of the Matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, pray, When was that that he declared so? How long after the Death of Mr. Coote?

Witness. It was several Days after that.

L. H. St. You hear, in Point of Law, that can be no Evidence at all: If you have no other Witnesses to call, your Lordship would do well to sum up your Evidence, and make what Observations you think fit upon the Evidence which has been given for the King?

Lord Mohun. My Lords, I hope I shall make my Defence, against this Accusation, with all the Modesty and Submission to your Lordships, that becomes me. I am very much ashamed to be brought before your Lordships upon any such Account as this again, after having been once before your Lordships upon such an Account before. I may very well say, I am not guilty at all of having any hand in Mr. Coote's Death; and I can assure your Lordships, I will avoid all Occasions of giving you any Trouble of this Nature for the future: I do not doubt but to acquit my self of all Guilt, in relation to this Matter; and, indeed, with Submission to your Lordships, there has been no Evidence given, relating to me, that does infer any Guilt upon me, to prove that I was at the Place where the Fact was done; therefore I shall only make some few little Remarks upon what has been said, and leave it all to your Lordships Consideration.

The King's Counsel first have call'd the Drawer of the House, and he has satisfied, that I did so far endeavour to part 'em, that I threaten'd to send for the Guards and secure them, if they would not go home; and when they went into the Chairs, I went into my Chair, on purpose to follow 'em down to Westminster, whither I would have had them gone. The Prick that I got in my Finger, of it self speaks, that I endeavour'd to part 'em, and so the Drawer he has told you; I am sure it was the Occasion of a great deal of Pain to me, it being forc'd to be afterwards laid open. The Chairman that carry'd Mr. Coote, swears, That I, at the Door of the Tavern in St. Martin's-lane, did make 'em stand, and when I came up to them, I begg'd, as for an Alms, that they would go home; and I ask'd Coote whither he was going? Which proves that I was not conscious of any Design of going to fight at that Time. Your Lordships are likewise told, That when we came to Green-street End, I was set down upon the Pav'd

Stones. I was so, indeed, and I went up about five or six Yards, but that is all that's prov'd; but I did take the quite contrary Way to the Place where Mr. Coote was wounded. Then there was another Chairman, one Applegate, and truly what Use they make of him, I cannot imagine, as an Evidence against me; for he says, I was very earnest in St. Martin's-lane to hinder any Quarrel, and indeed at the Tavern Door, at Locket's, I was so at first; and when we came to St. Martin's-lane End, he says, that I order'd 'em to make them stop, and ask Coote whither he was going? And he saying he was going to Leicester-fields, I endeavour'd all I could to persuade him to the contrary, and did entreat him that he would go no farther, but go down to Westminster to his Lodging, or lodge with me; but Mr. Coote would not give me Time, at that Time, the other Chairs coming by, to give him further Reasons, but would go away: And then it is objected, that I should say, that if they would go, I would go and see: That was, my Lords, I would go on till I could have a further Opportunity to prevent any Fighting among them: And the Witness Ketso says, my Lord of Warwick did bid the Chair to follow the other Chair in which Captain Coote was. My Design was for Westminster, to go to my Lodgings; and when we came to the End of the Square, if I did go up the whole Stones, it was directly the contrary Way to the Place where it is prov'd this Fact happen'd. For the next Witness, Edwards, he says he saw no Body walking upon the Pav'd Stones; and truly, I did go the direct Way into Newport-street: And for my not appearing before, it was for avoiding Confinement; and I must submit the whole Matter to your Lordships, how far any Guilt is fix'd upon me, not being prov'd to be in the Field at the Time when they fought, or seen to be in the Company when they came up and found Mr. Coote wounded, and dying, or dead. It is a plain Case I could have no hand at all in his Death; and so I think I need give no further Trouble to your Lordships, for I believe your Lordships cannot but be satisfied, that as I have pleaded, I am not guilty of killing this Gentleman: Nay, it is impossible that I should go into the Field to be a Second, when my own right Hand was wounded, for I was not able to hold my Sword in my Sword Hand, because of that Wound. I submit the Matter entirely to your Lordships, from whom I am sure to meet with every Thing that will be suitable to Honour and Justice.

L. H. St. The King's Counsel are now to sum up the Evidence for the King.

Mr. Solicitor General * began to sum up the Evidence for the King, but his Voice was so low, and the Noise in the Hall so great, that he could not be heard; and therefore the Lord High Steward moved the House that he might stand by the Prisoner at the Bar, which was something nearer than the Place where the King's Counsel stood, as was done the Day before; and it was order'd accordingly.

* Sir John Hawles.

L. H. St. Mr. Solicitor, Pray raise your Voice as much as you can, that all my noble Lords may hear you.

Several

Several of the Lords did move, That one that had a better Voice might sum it up, and particularly Mr. Cowper; but it being usually the Part of the Solicitor General, and he only having prepared himself, he was ordered to go on; but for the better Hearing of him, several of the Lords towards the upper End of the House, removed from their Seats down, as they did the Day before, to sit upon the Wooll-packs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, I am of Counsel for the King against this noble Lord, my Lord Mobun, the Prisoner at the Bar, who has been upon his Trial this Day, and it comes to my Turn to sum up the Evidence that has been given against him, which is but a Repetition of what your Lordships, no doubt of it, have taken exact Notice of; but I must shortly sum up the Chief of the Particulars thereof, and make a few Remarks what of that Evidence sticks particularly upon my Lord Mobun. The first Witness was the Drawer of the House, at the Greyhound in the Strand, who gives you an Account, who were at his Master's House the Nine and twentieth of October last, and particularly, that my Lord Mobun was there in the same Company wherein this Gentleman was, that was unfortunately killed, and that he continued in that Company till very late that Night, or rather, very early the next Morning; when, after the Reckoning was paid, they came all down to the Bar and call'd for Coaches; and he tells you, that he was sent out, and he tells you what he was sent for, he was sent for Coaches, and so cannot give any Account what pass'd while he was gone; but when upon calling for Coaches, none could be had, there was Order for Chairs to be call'd, and Chairs were brought to the Door; and when he came in again he heard the Clashing of Swords, and there were Three on the one Side of the Bar, and Three of 'em on the other: Indeed he does say, he did not see when the Swords were drawn, but at that Time they were putting up their Swords, my Lord Mobun was in the Company; upon which I would observe to your Lordships, that there had been some Fighting; for the Witness says, upon my Lord's Question, that my Lord call'd for a Napkin to put his Hand in, for his Finger was cut; and he said, This is all that I have got by endeavouring to part them; so that it shews there was a Quarrel, and my Lord Mobun was in it. When the Chairs were brought to the Door, they went into them; there went Mr. Coote into one, into the second my Lord of Warwick, and into the third my Lord Mobun; so that still my Lord Mobun was in the Company, and they went away together; and tho' it is pretended by my Lord, that he did all he could to prevent the Quarrel, yet he gave Directions to the Chairmen that carry'd him to follow the other Chairs, and your Lordships perceive what the Business was that they went about; and the other three Chairs followed after presently, so that they all went away together; nay, my Lord himself does not disown his being in the Company till they came into Leicester-fields. Next I would observe what fell from Browne, who carry'd the very Gentleman that was kill'd, Mr. Coote, that my Lord Mobun was in one of the three first Chairs, and that they all went together, till that my Lord Mobun call'd out to stop, upon the Turning up into St. Martin's-lane; and tho' they stop'd in St. Martin's-lane, and my Lord Mobun did intreat them to let it alone at that Time, yet it was only to let it alone till the Morning; and when the other three Chairs pass'd by on the other Side of the Way, and Coote would have them go on, my Lord Mobun said, If they would go on, he would go with them and see it. Applegate, the Chairman, that carry'd my Lord Mobun, says the same: And so it is plain my Lord Mobun did go on with an Intention to make one in the Affray; for Applegate says, That when my Lord Mobun could not prevail upon his Persuasions, and when Coote went away, after the other three Chairs were pass'd by, my Lord Mobun said, If you do go, I must go and see it; and they did go all together: And the Chairman says, he set my Lord Mobun down at the End of Green-street, at the lower End of the Fields, where the other two Chairs set down Captain Coote and my Lord of Warwick, and that they all three walk'd up together towards the Standard Tavern; still all this proves my Lord did go there, and that he himself did say he would go and see it: And it is plain that my Lord Mobun did go as far as Leicester-fields, and it is only his Declaration concerning himself, without any Proof, that he went away, and did not go into the Fields, to the Place where the Fact was done; and we think it is sufficient Proof that he was one of them that were concerned, because we do prove, that he was all along in the Company till the very Time that they came into the Place where the Thing was done. Then there is the Chairman that carry'd Mr. James, and he tells your Lordships, that the three first Chairs that went up St. Martin's-lane, went to the Standard Tavern, and there knock'd at the Door, and paid the Chairmen, and went out of their Chair; and so says the other Chairmen that carry'd Capt. Dockwra and Capt. French; and they say also, that when they came down the Pav'd Stones again, they heard Chairs call'd for, but they did not interpose at all in the Matter, but the other two Chairs it seems did, for they went up to the upper End of the Square, where there were two Persons holding up Mr. Coote, and after they put the Chair over the Rails, in order to have him carried away in a Chair, but they could not get him into the Chair. I would likewise observe from the Evidence of the Surgeon, who gives you an Account of what Nature the Wounds were; one was in the Breast, near the Collar-Bone, on the left Side; the other was under the short Ribs, on the left Side too, which could not be given him by the Person that he was fighting with, he being a Right-hand Man, as was prov'd by his Servant. My Lord Mobun has call'd but one Witness, which is only about a little Circumstance of his being wounded in the Hand, and having the Wound laid open, but that was two Days after the Fact was done; my Lord Mobun could not but know that the Matters he was to answer, related to a Time before. It must be agreed to me, that they all three, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mobun and Mr. Coote, went all away together, that they were carried to Leicester-fields, that they were set down together, and walk'd up together upon the Stone Pavement, when the others were gone towards the upper End of the Fields; so that in all probability, they all went together into the Place where the Fight was, and were all concern'd; and if so, my Lord Mobun must be equally guilty with the rest, my Lord Mobun knowing what Business it was they were going about. It must be left to your Lordships, whether he shall not be presumed to be there there when the Fact was done, especially his saying, when he could not prevail in St. Martin's-lane, to put the Matter off till another Time, that if they did go on, he would go and see it; so that putting these two Circumstances together, his going in one of the Chairs with my Lord Warwick and Coote, and what he said after when the Chairs stopt in St. Martin's-lane, we think are Circumstances to induce your Lordships to believe, that he was present at the Time of the Fact committed, or very near the Place; and if that be so, how far he is guilty must be submitted to your Lordships Consideration; and this is all that I shall trouble your Lordships with, without repeating the particular Evidence, which your Lordships, I am sure, very well remember.

Lord Mohun. My Lords, I desire I may say one Word in answer to what Mr. Solicitor has observed. I think your Lordships have had no Evidence given you where Mr. Coote was kill'd; but only the Chairman that was desir'd to bring over his Chair within the Rails, says, it was towards Panton-street, which is quite contrary to the Place where I was set down, at Green-street End; I must then be at a very great Distance from the Place where the Fact was done.

L. H. St. If all have done on both Sides, then your Lordships have nothing left but to consider of the Evidence which has been given, which I suppose you will do among your selves.

Lords. Ay, adjourn, adjourn.

L. H. St. Is it your Pleasure, my Lords, to adjourn into the House of Lords?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. St. This House is adjourn'd into the House of Lords.

[And the Lords went back in the same Order to the House of Lords, and there they staid for about two Hours Time, debating the Matter among themselves, and afterwards returned again into the Court in Westminster-hall, and were seated all in their Places, as they were before, and the Lord High Steward was seated in the Chair before the Throne.]

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, my Lord High Steward of England, his Grace, does straitly Charge and Command all manner of Persons here present to be uncovered, and keep Silence, upon pain of Imprisonment.

L. H. St. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to go on now to give your Judgment?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. St. Then I must pray your Lordships to give me Time to write down your Opinions distinctly, that I may be able to acquaint you with Certainty of the Numbers.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Lord High Steward stood up, and put the Question to every Lord, beginning with the youngest Baron, to know what his Judgment was; and the Lord to whom he call'd, stood up in his Place uncovered, and laying his Right Hand upon his Breast, delivered his Judgment in the Manner following.

L. H. St. My Lord Bernard, Is Charles Lord Mohun guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?

L. Bernard. Not guilty, upon my Honour.

The same Question was ask'd severally of all the Lords, who in the same Form delivered their Opinions, as followeth.

L. Herbert. Not guilty, upon my Honour.

Then the Lord High Steward of England, standing up uncovered, putting his right Hand upon his Breast, said, My Lord Mobun is not guilty, upon my Honour.

Then the Lord High Steward seated himself again in the Chair, to take the Number of the Peers who had given their Judgment.

L. H. St. My Lords, Eighty-seven of your Lordships are present, and you are all unanimously of Opinion, That my Lord Mobun is not guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. St. Let the Prisoner be called to the Bar.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, my Lord High Steward of England, his Grace, does straitly Charge and Command all manner of Persons here present, to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, Chief Governor of the Tower of London, bring forth the Body of your Prisoner Charles Lord Mobun, whom you have committed to you, in order to be brought hither this Day, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

Then he was brought forth to the Bar, and the Lord High Steward address'd himself to him in this Manner.

L. H. St. My Lord Mobun, you have been indicted for the Murder of Mr. Richard Coote, upon which Indictment your Lordship has been Arraigned, and upon your Arraignment has pleaded not guilty, and for your Trial you have put your self upon your Peers, my Lords here present; and they have heard the Evidence, and have considered of it, and delivered their Judgment upon the whole Matter; and I am to acquaint your Lordship, they are all unanimously of Opinion, That your Lordship is not guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof you stand indicted; and therefore your Lordship is discharged from your Imprisonment, paying your Fees.

Then the Lord Mohun made his Reverence to the Lords, and express'd himself thus.

Lord Mobun. My Lords, I do not know which Way to express my great Thankfulness and Acknowledgment of your Lordships great Honour and Justice to me; but I crave leave to assure your Lordships, That I will endeavour to make it the Business of the future Part of my Life, so to behave my self in my Conversation in the World, as to avoid all Things that may bring me under any such Circumstances, as may expose me to the giving your Lordships any Trouble of this Nature for the future. And then making his Reverences to the Lords, he went away from the Bar.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, All manner of Persons here present, are commanded to keep Silence, by my Lord High Steward of England, his Grace, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

L. H. St. My Lords, the Trial being at an End, there is nothing remains to be done here, but the determining the Commission.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. St. Sir Samuel Astry, let Proclamation be made in order to the dissolving the Commission of High Stewardship.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, my Lord

High Steward of England, his Grace, does straitly Charge and Command all manner of Persons here present, and that have here attended, to depart hence in the Peace of God, and of our Sovereign Lord the King; for his Grace, the Lord High Steward of England, intends now to dissolve his Commission.

And then the White Staff being delivered to his Grace, the Lord High Steward, he stood up, and holding it in both his Hands, broke it in two; and then leaving the Chair, came down to the Wool-pack, and said, Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the House of Lords?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. St. This House is adjourned to the House of Lords.

And so they went back in the same Order that they came into the Court, and all the Assembly broke up.

CLXVI. The TRIAL of Spencer Cowper, Esq; Ellis Stephens, William Rogers, and John Marson, at Hertford Assizes, for the Murder of Mrs. Sarah Stout, July 16, 1699.
11 Will. III.

Proclamation was made for all Persons concerned to attend.

Cl. of Arr.

O U good Men that are empannell'd to enquire, &c. answer to your Names, and save your Fines.

Then Ellis Stephens, William Rogers, and

John Marson, being upon Bail, Proclamation was made for them to attend, which they accordingly did; and Mr. Cowper was brought into Court by the Under Sheriff.

Cl. of Arr. { Spencer Cowper, hold up thy Hand.
(Which he did.)
John Marson, hold up thy Hand.
(Which he did.)
Ellis Stephens, hold up thy Hand.
(Which he did.)
William Rogers, hold up thy Hand.
(Which he did.)

Cl. of Arr. Y OU stand indicted by the Names of Spencer Cowper, late of the Parish of St. John's, in the Town of Hertford, in the County of Hertford, Esq; John Marson, late of the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, Gent. Ellis Stephens, late of the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, Gent. and William Rogers, late of the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, Gent. for that you not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, on the Thirteenth Day of March, in the Eleventh Year of the Reign of his present Majesty, by Force and Arms, &c. at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, in and upon one Sarah Stout, Spinster, in the Peace of God and our Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being, violently, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice afore-thought, did make an Assault; and that you the aforesaid Spencer Cowper, John Marson, Ellis Stephens, and William Rogers, a certain Rope of no Value, about the Neck of the said Sarah then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice afore-thought, did put, place, fix and bind; and the Neck and Throat of the said Sarah, then and there with the Hands of you the said Spencer Cowper, John Marson, Ellis Stephens, and William Rogers, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice afore-thought, did hold, squeeze, and gripe; and that you the said Spencer Cowper, John Marson, Ellis Stephens, and William Rogers, with the aforesaid Rope, by you the said Spencer Cowper, John Marson, Ellis Stephens, and William Rogers, then as aforesaid, about the Neck of the said Sarah Stout put, placed, fixed, and bound, and by the squeezing and gripping of the Neck and Throat of the said Sarah with the Hands of you the said Spencer Cowper, John Marson, Ellis Stephens, and William Rogers, as aforesaid, the said Sarah Stout then and there, by Force and Arms, &c. feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice afore-thought, did choak and strangle; by reason of which choaking and strangling of her the said Sarah Stout, by you the aforesaid Spencer Cowper, John Marson, Ellis Stephens, and William Rogers, with the said Rope about the Neck of the said Sarah Stout as aforesaid, placed, fixed and bound, and by the squeezing squeezing and griping of the Neck and Throat of the said Sarah, with the Hands of you the said Spencer Cowper, John Marlon, Ellis Stephens and William Rogers, as aforesaid, the said Sarah then and there instantly died. And so you the said Spencer Cowper, John Marlon, Ellis Stephens and William Rogers, the said Sarah Stout, on the thirteenth Day of March, in the Year aforesaid, in the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought, did kill and murder; and the said Sarah Stout, as aforesaid, by you the said Spencer Cowper, John Marlon, Ellis Stephens and William Rogers, feloniously, voluntarily, and out of your Malice aforethought, choaked and strangled, into a certain River there, being called the Priory River, then secretly and maliciously did put and cast, to conceal and hide the said Sarah Stout so murdered, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

How sayest thou, Spencer Cowper, art thou guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof thou standest indicted, or not guilty?

Mr. Cowper. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Mr. Cowper. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God send you a good Deliverance.

Then the other Three pleaded not guilty, and put themselves upon their Country in manner aforesaid.

Then Proclamation was made for Information.

Cl. of Arr. You the Prisoners at the Bar, these Men that you shall hear called, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your several Lives and Deaths; therefore if you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time to speak is as they come to the Book to be sworn, before they be sworn.

Then the Pannel was called over.

Cl. of Arr. Do you design to join in your Challenges, or to challenge separately?

Mr. Cowper. If we should challenge separately, there must be so many separate Trials; and therefore to prevent the Trouble of the Court, I am willing there should be but one Challenge for all.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, do you all agree to that?

Prisoners. Yes, yes.

Then after some Challenges, as well on the Part of the King as of the Prisoners, there not being a full Jury of the principal Pannel:

Mr. Cowper. If your Lordship please, the Pannel is now gone through, I desire they may shew some legal Cause for their Challenges.

Mr. Jones. I conceive we that are retained for the King are not bound to shew any Cause, or the Cause is sufficient if we say they are not good for the King, and that is allowed to be a good Cause of Challenge; for what other Cause can we shew in this Case? You are not to shew your Cause, you challenge peremptorily; so in this Case the King does.

VOL. V.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, I stand at the Bar with some Disadvantage, to encounter a Gentleman that hath no Concernment; but however, I do take it for Law, that there must be a Cause shewed, and that Cause must be a legal one, and what that Cause is they must certainly make out. I do think it ought to appear that there is some Relation, or some notorious Affection or Friendship, or something of that sort, or otherwise it is not a legal Cause of Challenge; and if there seem to be any Difficulty in this Particular, I hope your Lordship will assign me Counsel to argue it with the King's Counsel.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Mr. Cowper, you are not under such Disadvantage as Men usually are that stand where you now do. You have been educated in the Study of the Law, and understand it very well. I have several Times seen how you have managed your Clients Causes to their Advantage. As for this Matter of Challenge, Mr. Jones, I think, you should shew your Cause of Challenge, tho' the Law allows the Prisoner Liberty to challenge twenty peremptorily.

Mr. Jones. I don't know, in all my Practice of this Nature, that it was ever put upon the King to shew Cause; and I believe some of the King's Counsel will say they have not known it done.

Mr. Cowper. In my Lord Chief Justice Hales's Pleas of the Crown, p. 259, it is expressly so, and in the Statute of 33 Edw. I. 'tis said, the King shall not challenge without Cause, and that must be legal.

Cl. of Arr. Call Daniel Clarke.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Mr. Jones, if you can say any Juryman hath said any Thing concerning this Cause, and given his Verdict by way of Discourse, or shewed his Affection one way or other, that would be good Cause of Challenge.

Mr. Jones. My Lord, then we should keep you here while to Morrow Morning.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. If there hath been any great Friendship between any Jury-man and the Party, it will look ill if he be insisted upon.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, I don't insist upon it, but I profess I know of no Friendship, only that Mr. Clarke in Elections hath taken our Interest in Town; I know I have a just Cause, and I am ready to be tried before your Lordship and any fair Jury of the County; therefore I do not insist upon it.

Then the Jury sworn was as followeth:

Evan Lloyd, Esq;	}	Thomas Parrot,
William Watson,		Sam. Wallingham,
John Prior,		Francis Cole,
John Harrow,		Rich. Crouch,
George Holgate,		John Cock,
John Stracey,		Rich. Dickinson.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, I humbly move that I may have Pen, Ink and Paper.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Ay, by all means.

Cl. of Arr. Hold up your Hand. (Which he did.) And so of the rest. You of the Jury, look upon the Prisoners, and hearken to their Charge. They stand indicted by the Names of, &c. (Prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis.)

Jury. My Lord, we desire we may have Pen, Ink and Paper.

Cl. of the Affize. There are three of the Jury desire Pen, Ink and Paper.

C c 2

Mr.

Mr. Baron Halsell. Let as many have it as will.

Mr. Jones. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn, I am of Counsel for the King in this Cause, and it is upon an Indictment by which the Gentlemen at the Bar stand accused for one of the foulest and most wicked Crimes almost that any Age can remember: I believe in your County you never knew a Fact of this Nature; for here is a young Gentlewoman of this County strangled and murdered in the Night-time. The Thing was done in the Dark, therefore the Evidence cannot be so plain as otherwise might be.

After she was strangled and murdered, she was carried down into a River to stifle the Fact, and to make it supposed she had murdered her self; so that it was indeed, if it prove otherwise, a double Murder, a Murder accompanied with all the Circumstances of Wickedness and Villainy that I remember in all my Practice, or ever read of.

This Fact, as it was committed in the Night-time, so it was carried very secret, and it is very well we have had so much Light as we have to give so much Satisfaction: For we have here in a manner two Trials, one to acquit the Party that is dead, and to satisfy the World, and vindicate her Reputation, that she did not murder herself, but was murdered by other Hands. For my part, I shall never, as Counsel in the Case of Blood, aggravate; I will not improve or enlarge the Evidence at all, it shall be only my Business to set the Fact as it is, and to give the Evidence, and state it as it stands here in my Instructions.

My Lord, for that Purpose, to lead to the Fact, it will be necessary to inform you, that upon Monday the 13th of March, the first Day of the last Assizes here, Mr. Cowper, one of the Gentlemen at the Bar, came to this Town, and lighted at Mr. Barefoote's House, and staid there some Time, I suppose to dry himself, the Weather being dirty, but sent his Horse to Mrs. Stout's, the Mother of this Gentlewoman. Some Time after, he came thither himself, and dined there, and staid till Four in the Afternoon; and at Four, when he went away, he told them he would come and lodge there that Night, and sup.

According to his Word he came there, and had the Supper he desired; after Supper Mrs. Stout, the young Gentlewoman, and he sat together till near Eleven a-Clock. At Eleven a-Clock there was Orders given to warm his Bed, openly to warm his Bed, in his hearing. The Maid of the House, Gentlemen, upon this went up Stairs to warm his Bed, expecting the Gentleman would have come up and followed her before she had done; but it seems, while she was warming his Bed, she heard the Door clap together, and the Nature of that Door is such, that it makes a great Noise at the Clapping of it to, that any Body in the House may be sensible of any one's going out. The Maid upon this was concerned, and wondered at the Meaning of it, he promising to lie there that Night; she came down, but there was neither Mr. Cowper nor Mrs. Stout, so that we suppose, and for all that we can find and learn, they must go out together. After their going out, the Maid and Mother came into the Room; and the young Gentlewoman not returning, nor Mr. Cowper, they sat up all Night in the House, expecting what Time the young Gentlewoman would return. The next Morning, after they had sat up all Night, the first News of this Lady was, that she lay floating and swimming in Water by the Mill-dam. Upon that there was several Persons call'd; for it was a Surprize how this should come to pass. There she lay floating with her Petticoats and Apron, but her Night-Rail and Morning-Gown were off, and one of them not found till some time after; and the Maid will give you an Account how it came to be found.

This made a great Noise in the Country; for it was very extraordinary, it happening that from the Time the Maid left Mr. Cowper and this young Gentlewoman together, she was not seen or heard of till next Morning, when she was found in this Condition, with her Eyes broad open, floating upon the Water.

When her Body came to be viewed, it was very much wondered at; for in the first Place, it is contrary to Nature, that any Persons that drown themselves should float upon the Water. We have sufficient Evidence that it is a Thing that never was; if Persons come alive into the Water, then they sink, if dead, then they swim, that made some more curious to look into this Matter. At first it was thought that such an Accident might happen, though they could not imagine any Cause for this Woman to do so, who had so great Prosperity, had so good an Estate, and had no Occasion to do an Action upon her self so wicked and so barbarous, nor cannot learn what Reason she had to induce her to such a Thing. Upon View of the Body it did appear there had been Violence used to the Woman, there was a Crease round her Neck, she was bruised about her Ear; so that it did seem as if she had been strangled either by Hands or a Rope.

Gentlemen, upon the Examination of this Matter, it was wondered how this Matter came about, it was dark and blind. The Coroner at that Time, nor these People, had no Evidence given, but the ordinary Evidence, and it pass'd in a Day. We must call our Witnesses to this Fact, that of Necessity you must conclude she was strangled, and did not drown her self. If we give you as strong a Proof as can be upon the Nature of the Fact, that she was strangled, then the second Matter under that Enquiry will be, to know who, or what Persons should be the Men that did the Fact. I told you before, it was, as all wicked Actions are, a Matter of Darkeness, and done in secret, to be kept as much from the Knowledge of Men as was possible.

Truly, Gentlemen, as to the Persons at the Bar, the Evidence of the Fact will be very short, and will be to this Purpose.

Mr. Cowper was the last Man unfortunately in her Company, I could wish he had not been so with all my Heart, 'tis a very unfortunate Thing, that his Name should upon this Occasion be brought upon the Stage; but then, my Lord, it was a strange Thing, here happens to be three Gentlemen, Mr. Marson, Mr. Rogers, and Mr. Stephens; as to these three Men, my Lord, I don't hear of any Business they had here, unless it was to do this Matter, to serve some Interest or Friend, that sent them upon this Message; for, my Lord, they came to Town, (and in Things of this Nature, 'tis well we have this Evidence, but if we had not been straightned in Time it would have brought out more, these Things come out slowly) these Persons, Mr. Stephens, Mr. Rogers, and Mr. Marson, came to Town here on the 13th of March last, the Assize Day. My Lord, when they they came to Town, they came to an House, and took Lodgings at one Gurrey's, they took a Bed for two, and went out of their Lodging, having taken a Room with a large Bed in it, and afterwards they went to the Glove and Dolphin, and then about Eight a-Clock one Marson came to them there; in what Company they came, your Lordship and the Jury will know by and by; they staid there, my Lord, at the Glove from Eight a-Clock to Eleven, as they say. At Eleven these three Gentlemen came all into their Lodging together to this Gurrey's. My Lord, when they came in, it was very observable amongst them, unless there had been a Sort of Fate in it, First, That they should happen to be in the Condition they were in; and, secondly, fall upon the Discourse they did at that Time; for, my Lord, they called for Fire, and the Fire was made them; and while the People of the House were going about, they observed and heard these Gentlemen talk of Mrs. Sarah Stout; that happened to be their Discourse; one said to the other, Marson, she was an old Sweet-heart of yours: Ay, saith he, but she cast me off, but I reckon by this Time a Friend of mine has done her Business. Another Piece of Discourse was, I believe a Friend of mine is even with her by this Time. They had a Bundle of Linnen with them, but what it was is not known, and one takes the Bundle and throws it upon the Bed; Well, saith he, her Business is done, Mrs. Sarah Stout's courting Days are over; and they sent for Wine, my Lord; so after they had drank of the Wine they talk'd of it, and one pulled out a great deal of Money; saith one to another, what Money have you spent to Day? Saith the other, thou hast had 40 or 50*l.* for thy Share: Saith the other, I will spend all the Money I have, for Joy the Business is done.

My Lord, this Discourse happened to be among them, which made People of the House consider and bethink themselves; when the next Day they heard of this Mrs. Stout's being found in the Water, this made them recollect and call to mind all these Discourses.

My Lord, after these Gentlemen had staid there all Night, next Morning, truly it was observed (and I suppose some Account will be given of it) that Mr. Cowper and they did meet together, and had several Discourses, and that very Day went out of Town, and I think as soon as they came to Heddesdon, made it all their Discourse and Business to talk of Mrs. Stout.

My Lord, we will call our Witnesses, and prove all these Facts that I have opened to your Lordship; and then I hope they will be put to give you some Account how all these Matters came about.

Call Sarah Walker, (who was sworn.)

Mr. Jones. Mrs. Walker, pray give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, of Mr. Cowper's coming to your House the 13th of March, and what was done from his coming there at Night to his going out.

Sarah Walker. May it please you, my Lord, on Friday before the last Affizes, Mr. Cowper's Wife sent a Letter to Mistress Stout, that she might expect Mr. Cowper at the Affize-Time; and therefore we expected Mr. Cowper at that Time, and accordingly provided; and as he came in with the Judges, she ask'd him if he would alight? He said no, by Reason I come in later than usual, I will go into the Town and show my self, but he would send his Horse presently. She ask'd him, how long it would be before he would come, because they would stay for him? he said, he could not tell, but he would send her Word; and she thought he had forgot, and sent me down to know, whether he would please to come? He said, he had Business, and he could not come just then, but he came in less than a Quarter of an Hour after, and dined there, and he went away at Four a-Clock; and then my Mistress ask'd him, if he would lie there? and he answered yes, and he came at Night about Nine a Clock; and he sat talking about half an Hour, and then call'd for Pen, Ink and Paper, for that, as he said, he was to write to his Wife; which was brought him, and he wrote a Letter; and then my Mistress went and ask'd him, what he would have for Supper? he said Milk, by Reason he had made a good Dinner; and I got him his Supper, and he eat it; after she called me in again, and they were talking together, and then she bid me make a Fire in his Chamber; and when I had done so, I came and told him of it, and he looked at me, and made me no answer: Then she bid me warm the Bed, which accordingly I went up to do as the Clock struck Eleven, and in about a Quarter of an Hour, I heard the Door shut, and I thought he was gone to carry the Letter, and staid about a Quarter of an Hour longer, and came down, and he was gone and she, and Mrs. Stout the Mother, ask'd me the Reason why he went out when I was warming his Bed? and she ask'd me for my Mistress, and I told her I left her with Mr. Cowper, and I never saw her after that, nor did Mr. Cowper return to the House.

Mr. Jones. How long did you sit up?

Walker. All Night.

Mr. Jones. What Time next Morning did you see her?

Walker. About Seven a-Clock.

Mr. Jones. In the Water or out?

Walker. Out of the Water.

Mr. Cowper. Pray will you recollect a little, and be very particular as to the Time when I went out at Night?

Walker. Sir, it was a Quarter after Eleven by our Clock; the Difference between the Town-Clock and ours was half an Hour.

Mr. Cowper. But you say by your Clock it was a Quarter after Eleven.

Walker. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Cowper. Pray what Account did you give as to the Time to the Coroner's Inquest?

Walker. I said then it was Eleven, or a Quarter after Eleven, when I heard the Door shut.

Mr. Cowper. Pray was Mrs. Stout present with the Coroner's Inquest when you gave that Account?

Walker. Yes, she was.

Mr. Cowper. Pray what Account did you give as to the Time before my Lord Chief Justice Holt?

Walker. I gave the Account that it was Eleven, or a Quarter of an Hour after.

Mr. Cowper. In her Depositions there is half an Hour's Difference, for then she said it was half an Hour after Ten.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. Which Clock was earliest, yours or the Town-Clock?

Walker.

Walker. Ours was half an Hour faster than theirs.

Mr. Cowper. How came you to know this?

Walker. By reason that Dinner was dress'd at the Cook's, and it was ordered to be ready by Two a-Clock, and it was ready at Two a-Clock by the Town-Clock, and half an Hour after Two by ours.

Mr. Cowper. When you came down and misfed your Miftrefs, did you enquire after her all that Night?

Walker. No, Sir, I did not go out of the Doors; I thought you were with her, and so I thought she would come to no Harm.

Mr. Cowper. Here is a whole Night she gives no Account of. Pray, Miftrefs, why did not you go after her?

Walker. My Miftrefs would not let me.

Mr. Cowper. Why would she not let you?

Walker. I said I would see for her: No, faith she, by Reason if you go and see for her, and do not find her, it will make an Alarm over the Town, and there may be no Occasion.

Mr. Cowper. Did your Miftrefs use to stay out all Night?

Walker. No, never.

Mr. Cowper. Have not you said so?

Walker. I never said so in my Life.

Mr. Cowper. Pray Mrs. Walker did you never take notice that your Miftrefs was under Melancholy?

Walker. I don't say but she was melancholy; she was ill for some time, and I imputed it to her Illness, and I know no other Cause.

Mr. Cowper. Have you not often told People that your Miftrefs was a melancholy Person, upon your Oath?

Walker. I have said she hath been ill, and that made her melancholy.

Mr. Cowper. I will ask you this Question; Pray, did you ever purchase any Poison, more or less, within these twelve Months?

Walker. Yes, Sir, I did so, and can tell what it was for.

Mr. Cowper. By whose Order?

Walker. By my own Order.

Mr. Cowper. Did you buy Poison but once, upon your Oath?

Walker. I believe I might buy twice.

Mr. Cowper. Where?

Walker. Of Mr. Ludman.

Mr. Cowper. Both Times there?

Walker. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Of him?

Walker. No, of the young Man.

Mr. Cowper. Did you ever buy any Poison at Luton?

Walker. No.

Mr. Cowper. Did you ever buy any by your Miftrefs's Order, or of one Mrs. Crooke, upon your Oath?

Walker. No, I never did.

Mr. Cowper. Pray at what Time was it that you bought this Poison you speak of?

Walker. I can't remember.

Mr. Cowper. Pray recollect your self?

Walker. It was within this half Year, to be sure.

Mr. Cowper. What was the Name of the Poison you ask'd for?

Walker. I ask'd for White Mercury.

Mr. Cowper. She faith, I pass'd by her Miftrefs's House, and went directly to Mr. Barefoot's; Pray did not you come to Mr. Barefoot's after me?

Walker. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Cowper. Pray did you give the same Account before the Coroner, when this Matter was enquired into, that you have now done?

Walker. Yes, I did, as near as I can tell.

Mr. Cowper. Did you give this Account in Substance?

Walker. Yes, I did.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Mr. Cowper, I suppose you don't mean in relation to the Poison.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, I mean in relation to so much of the Evidence which she now gives, and particularly respects me. For what End or Purpose did you buy it?

Walker. I bought it to poison a Dog.

Mr. Cowper. Why should you poison the Dog?

Walker. It was a Dog that used to haunt our House, that did us a great deal of Mischief; but that did not do, so I bought it a second Time.

Mr. Cowper. Who gave it to the Dog?

Walker. 'Twas another Maid did give it the Dog.

Mr. Cowper. Why did you then swear it was given the Dog?

Walker. Sir, I saw it given.

Mr. Cowper. Did your Miftrefs know of it?

Walker. Yes, she did know of it afterwards.

Mr. Cowper. How did you give it?

Walker. In warm Milk.

Mr. Cowper. How did the Milk look?

Walker. It did not look discolour'd in the least.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. You said just now your Miftrefs was ill, and that made her melancholy; what Illness was it?

Walker. My Lord, she had a great Pain in her Head.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. How long had she been troubled with it?

Walker. Ever since last May was twelve Months was the beginning of it.

Mr. Jones. Did you ever find her in the least inclined to do her self a Mischief?

Walker. No, I never did.

Mr. Cowper. You bought Poison twice, did you give all the Poison you bought to the Dog?

Walker. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. The first and the last?

Walker. Yes, the whole.

Mr. Cowper. How much did you buy?

Walker. I am not certain how much I bought.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, what Mischief did it do the Dog?

Walker. I cannot tell, he may be alive till now for ought I know.

Mr. Cowper. What Mischief did the Dog do?

Walker. A great deal, he threw down several Things and broke them.

Mr. Jones. Did Mr. Cowper, upon your Oath, hear Miftrefs Stout give you Order to make his Fire, and warm his Bed?

Walker. He knows best, whether he heard it or no; but he sat by her when she spake it.

Mr. Jones. Did she speak of it so as he might hear?

Walker. Yes she did, for he was nearer than I.

Mr. Jones. And did not he contradict it?

Walker. Not in the least.

Mr. Jones. Was it the old or young Woman that gave you the Order?

Walker. The young Woman.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, did the Dog lap it, or did you put it down his Throat, upon your Oath?

Walker. No, he lapt it, upon my Oath.

Mr. Jones. Did Mr. Cowper send for his Horse from your House the next Day?

Walker. I can't say that; I was not in the Way.

Mr. Jones. Did he come to your House afterwards?

Walker. No, I am sure he did not.

Mr. Jones. Was the Horse in your Stable when it was sent for?

Walker. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Jones. And he did not come to your House again, before he went out of Town?

Walker. No, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Do you know which Way he went out of Town?

Walker. No, Sir.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Did Mr. Cowper use to lodge at your House at the Affizes?

Walker. No, my Lord, not since I came there; the Sessions before, he did.

Mr. Cowper. Where did you come to invite me to Dinner?

Walker. At Mr. Barefoot's.

Mr. Cowper. Then you knew I was to lodge there?

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Who wrote the Letter on Friday, that Mr. Cowper would lodge there?

Walker. I know not who wrote it, his Wife sent it.

Mr. Jones. Did he tell you he would lodge there that Night before he went away?

Walker. When he went from Dinner he said so.

Mr. Jones. Call James Berry. (Who was sworn.) Now, my Lord, we will give Evidence of the Manner how she was found. Mr. Berry, Do you remember when Mrs. Stout was found by your Mill?

Berry. No, indeed, I do not know just what Day it was.

Mr. Jones. When you found her, do you remember, how, in what Manner she was found?

Berry. Yes; I went out in the Morning to shoot a Flush of Water by Six a-Clock, and I saw something a floating in the Water, so I went out to see what it was, and I saw part of her Cloaths.

Mr. Jones. Did you see her Face?

Berry. No, not then.

Mr. Jones. Was her Face under Water, or above?

Berry. No part of her Body was above Water, only some part of her Cloaths.

Mr. Jones. How many Foot deep might the Water be?

Berry. Five Foot deep.

Mr. Jones. And how much was she under Water, do you conceive?

Berry. She might be under Water about five or six Inches.

Mr. Jones. Then he whole Body was not under Water, was it?

Berry. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Was her Face under Water?

Berry. Yes.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Did she lie upon her Face, or her Back?

Berry. She lay upon her Side.

Mr. Jones. When she was taken out, were her Eyes open or shut?

Berry. Her Eyes were open.

Mr. Jones. Was she swell'd with Water?

Berry. I did not perceive her swell'd: I was amaz'd at it, and did not so much mind it as I should.

Mr. Jones. But you remember her Eyes were staring open?

Berry. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Did you see any Marks or Bruises about her?

Berry. No.

Mr. Cowper. Did you see her Legs?

Berry. No, I did not.

Mr. Cowper. They were not above Water.

Berry. No.

Mr. Cowper. Could you see them under Water?

Berry. I did not so much mind it.

Mr. Cowper. Did she lie streight or double, driven together by the Stream?

Berry. I did not observe.

Mr. Cowper. Did you not observe the Weeds and Trumpery under her?

Berry. There was no Weeds at that Time thereabouts.

Mr. Jones. Was the Water clear?

Berry. No, it was thick Water.

Mr. Jones. Was there any Thing under her, in the Water, to prevent her sinking?

Berry. No, I do not know there was; she lay on her right Side, and her right Arm was driven between the Stakes, which are within a Foot of one another.

Mr. Jones. Did any Thing hinder her from sinking?

Berry. Not that I saw.

Mr. Jones. Did you help to take her out from the Stakes?

Berry. No.

Mr. Jones. Call John Venables.

Mr. Cowper. Mr. Berry, if I understand you right, you say her Right Arm was driven between the Stakes, and her Head between the Stakes; could you perceive her Right Arm, and where was her Left Arm?

Berry. Within a small Matter upon the Water.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Did you see her Head and Arm between the Stakes?

Berry. Yes, her Arm by one Stake, and her Head by another.

Mr. Jones. Did her Arm hang down, or how?

Berry. I did not mind so much as I might have done.

Then John Venables was sworn.

Mr. Jones. Did you see Mrs. Stout, when she was taken out of the Water, as she lay in it?

Venables. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Give an Account how you found her.

Venables. She was floating upon the Water.

Mr. Jones. How? Was all her Body, or what Part in the Water?

Venables. She lay upon her Right Side, and this Arm upon the Water, rather above the Water, her Ruffles were upon the Water.

Mr. Jones. Did you help to take her out?

Venables. No, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Were her Eyes open then?

Venables. Her Eyes were open when I saw her, but I did not see her when she was taken out.

Mr. Jones. Did any thing hinder her from sinking?

Venables. I saw nothing to hinder her if she would have sunk.

Mr.

Mr. Jones. Call Leonard Dell. (Who was sworn.) Did you see this Mrs. Stout in the Water?

Dell. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Pray tell us in what Posture she was found.

Dell. I saw her floating in the River; I saw her Face and her Cloaths.

Mr. Jones. Were her Cloaths all above the Water?

Dell. Her Stays and her Coat that she had next her.

Mr. Jones. Were these plainly above the Water?

Dell. Some Part of them.

Mr. Jones. Did you see her Face, was that above the Water?

Dell. No, Sir, it was between the Piles; she lay on her Right Side, and her Head was between the Stakes, and her Right Arm.

Mr. Jones. Did you help to take her out of the Water?

Dell. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Did any Thing hinder her from sinking?

Dell. Neither Stakes nor any Thing there.

Mr. Jones. Did her Arms or Neck stick to the Stakes?

Dell. Not to my thinking.

Mr. Jones. Was the Water clear, or weedy?

Dell. It was very clear.

Mr. Jones. How many Foot deep was it?

Dell. I know not, but it might be five Foot deep.

Mr. Jones. Did you help to take her out of the Water?

Dell. Yes, Sir, and we took her and carried her into the Meadow just by, and laid her on the Bank.

Mr. Jones. Did you observe her Face, Neck, or Arms, to be bruised?

Dell. I saw no Bruise at all.

Mr. Cowper. How did you know but her Right Arm did reach to the Ground, since you did not see it?

Dell. We could see her Arm lie in this Manner between the Piles, the Right Arm was downwards, for she lay on one Side.

Jury-man. Did you see any Arm above in the Water?

Dell. No.

Mr. Baron Hatsfell. You should propose your Questions to the Court.

Jury-man. My Lord, I desire to know where was her Left Arm.

Mr. Baron Hatsfell. Where was her Left Arm?

Dell. I can't tell how it did lie; I did not observe it.

Mr. Baron Hatsfell. When you took her out of the Water, did you observe her Body swelled?

Dell. We carried her into the Meadow, and laid her on the Bank-side, and there she lay about an Hour, and then was ordered to be carried in to the Miller's.

Mr. Baron Hatsfell. Did you observe that any Water was in her Body?

Dell. None at all that I could see; but there was some small Matter of Froth came from her Mouth and Nostrils.

Jury-man. My Lord, I desire to know whether her Stays were laced?

Dell. Yes, she was laced.

Mr. Cowper. If I take you right, you say she was strait-laced?

Dell. Her Stays were laced.

Mr. Cowper. And you say there was Froth and Foam came out of her Mouth and Nostrils?

Dell. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Pray, what Quantity?

Dell. I could hold it all in the Palm of my Hand.

Mr. Cowper. How was she taken out of the Water?

Dell. My Lord, we stood upon the Bridge, I and another Man, where she lay, and he laid hold of her and took her out.

Mr. Jones. And did you not perceive she was hung?

Dell. No, my Lord.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, Where was she laid when she was taken out?

Dell. In the Place call'd the Hoppers, just by.

Mr. Cowper. How long did she lie there?

Dell. About an Hour.

Mr. Cowper. Did you stay there all that Time?

Dell. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. And did the Froth continue to issue from her Mouth and Nostrils?

Mr. Baron Hatsfell. He told you, Mr. Cowper, he could hold it all in the Palm of his Hand.

Mr. Jones. Call John Ulfe. (Who was sworn.) John Ulfe, Did you see Mrs. Stout when she was taken out of the Water?

Ulfe. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Give an Account of the Condition she was in.

Ulfe. She lay on one Side; I help'd to take her out.

Mr. Jones. Did she hang or stick to any Thing?

Ulfe. There was nothing at all to hold her up; she lay between a Couple of Stakes, but the Stakes could not hold her up.

Mr. Jones. Did you see her after she was taken out?

Ulfe. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Did any Water come out of her?

Ulfe. Nothing at all, only a little Froth came out of her Nostrils.

Mr. Jones. Call Katharine Dew. (Who was sworn.) Did you see Mrs. Stout taken out of the River?

Dew. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Did you see her in the River before?

Dew. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Jones. How did she lie in the River?

Dew. She lay Side-way with her Eyes open, and her Teeth clenched in her Head, with Water flowing a little from her Face, some Part of her and her Petticoats were above Water.

Mr. Jones. Did nothing hold her from sinking?

Dew. Her Right Arm lay against the Stake.

Mr. Jones. Did you see her after she was taken out of the River?

Dew. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Was she swelled?

Dew. I did not perceive she was swelled at all.

Mr. Jones. Did you handle her?

Dew. No, I touch'd nothing but her Petticoat.

Mr. Jones. Did you observe her Legs were in the Water?

Dew. No, I did not.

Mr. Cowper. Did you see where her Right Arm was?

Dew. I could not see her Right Arm, the Water flow'd over it.

Mr. Cowper. Did you see her after this Time?

Dew. No, Sir, I saw her taken out, but not afterward.

Mr. Ba-

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Did you see her after she lay on the Ground?

Dew. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. How was she then?

Dew. She purged at the Nose and one of her Eyes; I did not take particular Notice after she was out; the Notice I took was when she was in the Water.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. What did you see at her Eye?

Dew. Froth, my Lord.

Mr. Jones. Did you see her after she was stripp'd naked?

Dew. No, my Lord.

Mr. Jones. Was it a settled Frothing, or a Purging?

Dew. A purging Froth.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Did any Body wipe it off?

Dew. No, my Lord, I did not see any Body do it.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Then there was no new Froth came?

Dew. No, my Lord, I saw her froth at the Nose and one of the Eyes as soon as she was taken out, but I did not stay long.

Mr. Cowper. Was she in her Stays?

Dew. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Cowper. Was she not laced?

Dew. Yes, she was laced before and behind.

Mr. Jones. Call Thomas Dew. (Who was sworn.) Did you see this Mrs. Stout in the Water? Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account what Posture she was in.

Dew. I saw her lying in the Water floating, above the Water I will not say, but the Water ran some small Matter over her; her right Arm was within the Stake, and her left Arm without; she lay just upon her Side, and I saw her when she was first taken up, and her Shoes and Stockings were as clean as when they were put on, no Mud nor Dirt upon them, and I saw her Shoes and her Stockings, as high as her Knee almost; but I saw no Dirt.

Mr. Jones. Do you believe she had been sunk to the Bottom?

Dew. She did not look as if she had, nor I see no Water come from her.

Mr. Jones. Did you observe that she was swelled at all?

Dew. No, nor swell'd that I perceive a bit; there was a little Froth that came out of her Nose, and about her (I can't say from her Eye) in that it was a small Quantity.

Mr. Jones. Call Mr. Edward Blackno. (Who was sworn.) Did you see Mrs. Stout when she lay in the Water?

Blackno. Yes, I did see her lye in the Water floating; I was so near, that I saw the Miller's Man lift her up by one of her Arms out of the Water.

Mr. Jones. Was the Arm bent or streight?

Blackno. It hung in this Manner (showing the Court how with his own Arm.)

Mr. Baron Hatsell. The other Witnesses said, she lay on her right Side.

Blackno. Yes, she lay on her right Side, and her Arm in this Manner.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Did you observe her to be swelled?

Blackno. I did not see her taken out.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Did you observe any thing to hinder her from sinking?

Blackno. No, I did not, nothing but the Water.

VOL. V.

Mr. Cowper. I think, Sir, if I heard you right, you say, that this taking by the Arm and stirring her, was before she was taken out of the Water; then I would know, after she was stirred, was she let go again? Was you by at the taking of her up?

Blackno. No, I was not.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. He told you she was floating when he saw her, and that nothing hindered her from sinking.

Then William Edmunds and William Page were sworn.

Mr. Jones. Edmunds, did you see Mrs. Stout when she was in the Water?

Edmunds. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Give an Account what Posture she was in?

Edmunds. She lay against the Stake, her Head lay against the Stake in the River; we were coming up in a Barge, and called to a Miller to draw the Water, but he said he could not, for then she would swim through; and then we came on, and see her lie in the Water.

Mr. Jones. Did any thing hinder her from sinking?

Edmunds. Not that I see.

Mr. Jones. Did no Part of her Legs or Arms stick? Did you see her taken out?

Edmunds. No, I did not, I was gone, I did not know whether they would take her out or no.

Mr. Jones. Page, did you see Mrs. Stout upon the Water?

Page. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Tell us how she lay.

Page. She lay floating on the Water on her right Side, with her Head between the Stakes.

Mr. Jones. Did her Arms br Cloaths, or any Thing stick?

Page. Not that I saw.

Mr. Jones. Did any Thing hinder her from sinking?

Page. I saw nothing.

Mr. Cowper. Did you see her Legs or Knees?

Page. No, I could not, they were not out of the Water.

Mr. Jones. Swear Mrs. Anne Ulfe. (Which was done.) Did you see Mrs. Stout in the Water?

Ulfe. Yes, I help'd to pull her out; she lay on one Side in the Water floating, and the Water came over her Face.

Mr. Jones. Did she stick by any Thing?

Ulfe. One of her Arms was about the Post.

Mr. Jones. How?

Ulfe. It got through the Grate.

Mr. Jones. But it did not hang.

Ulfe. No.

Mr. Jones. Did you take her out?

Ulfe. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Did you mind her Cloaths?

Ulfe. Yes I turn'd up her Petticoat in the Water.

Mr. Jones. Had she Gloves on?

Ulfe. No, Sir.

Mr. Jones. How were her Shoes and Stockings?

Ulfe. They were not muddy, her Stockings were rouled down, she had no Garters on.

Mr. Cowper. You say, one Arm lay through the Grate, where lay the other?

Ulfe. The other was down in the Water.

William How was sworn.

Mr. Jones. Did you see Mrs. Stout in the Water?

D d

How.

How. Yes, Sir, I see her lie upon the Water; she lay afloat, she might lie three or four Inches deep in the Water.

Mr. Jones. Did any of her Cloaths lie above the Water?

How. Some Part of her Coats lay above the Water.

Mr. Jones. Did any Thing hinder her from sinking?

How. I saw nothing, I saw them take her out, and did not perceive she hung any Way, she lay with one Arm, and her Head in the Grate, but I did not perceive she hung.

John Meager was sworn.

Mr. Jones. Well, do you give an Account of what you know of Mrs. Stout being in the Water?

Meager. I see Mrs. Sarah Stout floating in the Water, her right Arm in the Grate, and her left Arm with the Stream.

Mr. Jones. Did she hang or stick by any Thing?

Meager. No, neither hang nor stick, she floated.

Mr. Cowper. Did you see some Body go through the Blue-coat Building about Eleven a-Clock?

Meager. No, Sir, I was in Bed before Nine.

Mr. Jones. Now, my Lord, we will give an Account how she was when she was stript, and they came to view the Body. Call John Dimsdale junior. (Who was sworn.)

Dimsdale. My Lord, I was sent for at Night on Tuesday the last Assizes——

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I have some Physicians of Note and Eminency that are come down from London; I desire they may be call'd into Court to hear what these Surgeons say.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. Ay, by all means.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, there is Dr. Sloane, Dr. Garth, Dr. Morley, Dr. Gilstrap, Dr. Harriot, Dr. Wollaston, Dr. Crell, Mr. William Cowper, Mr. Bartlett, and Mr. Camlin.

Who respectively appear'd in Court.

Mr. Jones. Give an Account how you found Mrs. Stout.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. You are a Physician, I suppose, Sir?

Dimsdale. A Surgeon, my Lord. When I was sent for to Mrs. Stout's, I was sent for two or three times before I would go; for I was unwilling after I heard Mrs. Stout was drown'd; for I thought with myself, what need could there be of me when the Person was dead; but she still sent; and then I went with Mr. Camlin, and found a little Swelling on the Side of her Neck, and she was black on both Sides, and more particularly on the left Side, and between her Breasts up towards the Collar-bone, that was all I saw at that time, only a little Mark upon one of her Arms, and I think upon her left Arm.

Mr. Jones. How were her Ears?

Dimsdale. There was a Settling of Blood on both Sides the Neck, that was all I saw at that Time.

Mr. Jones. How do you think she came by it?

Dimsdale. Truly I only gave an Account just as I say now to the Gentlemen at that Time, I saw no more of it at that Time, but about six Weeks after the Body was opened by Dr. Philips——

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, he is going to another Piece of Evidence, and I would ask him——

Mr. Jones. Let us have done first; how was her Ears?

Dimsdale. There was a Blackness on both Ears, a Settling of Blood.

Mr. Jones. Call Sarah Kimpson.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. Mr. Cowper, now you may ask him any Thing, they have done with him.

Mr. Cowper. I would ask him whether he was not employed to view these particular Spots, she mentions at the Coroner's Inquest?

Dimsdale. I was desired to look upon the Face and Arms, and Breast, because they said there was a Settling of Blood there.

Mr. Cowper. When you return'd to the Coroner's Inquest, What did you certify as your Opinion?

Dimsdale. I did certify there was a Settling of Blood; but how it came I could not tell.

Mr. Cowper. I ask you, Sir, Did not you say it was no more than a common Stagnation usual in dead Bodies?

Dimsdale. I do not remember a Word of it.

Mr. Cowper. Sir, I would ask you; You say the Spot was about the Collar-bone; was it above or below?

Dimsdale. From the Collar-bone downwards.

Mr. Cowper. Had she any Circle about her Neck?

Dimsdale. No; not upon my Oath.

Mr. Jones. Swear Sarah Kimpson. Did you observe this Mrs. Sarah Stout, when she was strip'd how her Body was?

Kimpson. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Pray give an Account of it.

Kimpson. She had a great Settlement of Blood behind her Ear, as much as my Hand will cover and more; and she had a Settlement of Blood under her Collar-bone.

Mr. Jones. Did you see nothing about her Neck?

Kimpson. Nothing round her Neck; on the Side of her Neck there was a Mark.

Mr. Jones. Was there any other Part bruised?

Kimpson. Only her left Wrist, and her Body was very flat and lank.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, what Day was it that you saw her?

Kimpson. It was the Day she was found.

Mr. Cowper. Was she not laced?

Kimpson. She was laced.

Mr. Cowper. Did you help to stir her?

Kimpson. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Did her Body seem to be swell'd, or was there any Water come from her?

Kimpson. I did not observe the least Drop of Water that appeared any Way.

Mr. Jones. Do you know what did Purge from her?

Kimpson. Nothing that I saw.

Mr. Jones. Had not you a Child drowned there lately?

Kimpson. Yes, about ten Weeks ago.

Mr. Jones. And you found her?

Kimpson. She was drowned at Night, and we found her next Morning.

Mr. Jones. Where did you find her, at the Top, or at the Bottom of the Water?

Kimpson. At the Bottom.

Mr. Jones. How was she?

Kimpson. She was swell'd as much as she could hold.

Mr. Jones. Were her Eyes shut or open?

Kimpson. Her Eyes were shut, and the Child was laced as tight as the Coat could be.

Mr. Jones. Was the Child opened?

Kimp-

Kimpson. Yes.

Mr. Jones. And what was in the Body of the Child?

Kimpson. 'Twas very full of Water.

Mr. Jones. Call Sarah Peppercorn.

Mr. Cowper. You say you view'd the Child; Had it any Settlement of Blood?

Kimpson. I saw none.

Mr. Cowper. And you view'd the Body?

Kimpson. Yes.

Then Sarah Peppercorn was sworn.

Mr. Jones. Did you see the Body of Mrs. Sarah Stout, after it was stript and laid out?

Peppercorn. I did, Sir.

Mr. Jones. In what Condition did you find her?

Peppercorn. I did not see her till she was brought home to her Mother's, and there was a Rumour in the Town that she was with Child, and I was sent for to give an account whether she was or not, and I found she was not; and I help'd to pull off her Cloaths, and she was very clear as any I ever knew, only had a black Place on the Side of her Head, and in another Place about her Ear; but how it came I know not.

Mr. Jones. Did you observe how her Body was?

Peppercorn. Her Body was very well as any Woman's could be.

Mr. Jones. Did you observe any Water, or any such thing from her?

Peppercorn. No.

Mr. Jones. Was there any Purging at her Mouth or Nostrils?

Peppercorn. A little Froth as any Body might have.

Mr. Cowper. At what Hour did you see her?

Peppercorn. I believe it might be Nine or Ten a-Clock.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. In the Morning?

Peppercorn. Yes, Sir; but I can't give a just Account of the Time.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. What was you sent to for?

Peppercorn. To know if she was with Child; for it was reported she had drowned her self because she was with Child; and so her Mother desired me to come to give an Account that it was not so, and I found that it was not so.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. You are a Midwife, are you not?

Peppercorn. Yes, my Lord.

Then Elizabeth Husler was sworn.

Mr. Jones. Had you the View of the Body of Mrs. Sarah Stout the Day you heard she was drowned?

Husler. She was not drowned, my Lord; I went thither and helped to pull off her Cloaths.

Mr. Jones. In what Condition was her Body?

Husler. Her Body was very lank and thin, and no Water appeared to be in it.

Mr. Jones. Was there any Water about her Mouth and Nose?

Husler. Not when I saw her.

Mr. Jones. Did you mind her about her Neck and Head?

Husler. Yes, yes, there was a Settling of Blood at the Top of the Collar-bone, just here, and there was a Settling of Blood upon both her Ears, most about her left Ear.

Mr. Jones. Swear Ann Pilkington. (Which was done.) Did you see the Body of Mrs. Stout after she was drowned?

Vol. V.

Pilkington. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Pray, in what Condition was she when she was stript?

Pilkington. I was in the House when she was brought in dead; and old Mrs. Stout desired me to help to lay her out; and taking a View of her, I did not at all perceive her Body to be swelled.

Mr. Jones. Was there any Water came out upon the moving of it?

Pilkington. No, I did not perceive any; and by a further View, I saw a Redness on the left Side of her Head, and her Ear was black, and there was a little Mark upon her Breast on the left Side.

Mr. Jones. What Colour was it of?

Pilkington. It seem'd reddish and blackish: As to Colour it was like a Settling of Blood: I can't tell how to make it out very well.

Mr. Cowper. Had she any Circle round about her Neck?

Pilkington. No, not that I see.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, did not you make some Deposition to that Purpose, that you know of?

Pilkington. Sir, I never did, and dare not do it.

Mr. Cowper. It was read against me in the King's Bench, and I will prove it; was not Mr. Mead with you at the Time of your Examination?

Pilkington. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Did not he put in some Words; and what were they?

Pilkington. Not that I know of.

Mr. Cowper. But you never swore so, upon your Oath?

Pilkington. No, I don't believe I did; if I did, it was ignorantly.

Mr. Jones. Here is her Examination, it is cross her Neck.

Mr. Cowper. Was Mr. Young of Hertford, the Constable, present when you were examined?

Pilkington. Yes, he was so. The next Day Mrs. Stout sent for me again to put on her Daughter's Shroud, and I was one that helped to draw the Sheet away, and there was not one Drop of Water come from her; and I laid a Cloth under her Chin, when I help'd her into the Coffin, but I did not see the least Moisture come from her.

Mr. Cowper. What Day was it, that you put her into the Coffin?

Pilkington. The next Day after she was dead.

Mr. Cowper. Do you know nothing of her being convey'd into the Barn?

Pilkington. I happen'd to be in the Barn, Mrs. Stout desired me to go with her, and she was brought up in an indecent Manner, and I put a Sheet about her. I was in Mrs. Stout's House before her Daughter was brought thither.

Mr. Jones. Call Doctor Coatsworth, Doctor Nailor, Doctor Woodbouse, Doctor Bide.

Mr. Coatsworth was sworn.

Mr. Jones. Pray, Doctor, had you a View of the Body of Mrs. Stout?

Coatsworth. Yes, I had Sir: I am a Surgeon.

Mr. Jones. Pray give an Account of it, and what your Opinion was how she came by her Death.

Coatsworth. My Lord, in April last I was sent for by Dr. Philips, to come to Hertford to see the Body of Mrs. Stout open'd, who had been six Weeks buried; and he told me, That there was a Suspicion she was murdered, and that her Relations were willing to have her taken up and opened. I came down, I think on the 27th of April, and lay at Mrs. Stout's House that Night, and by her Discourse, I understood she wanted to be satisfied, whether her Daughter was with Child. I told her it was my Opinion we should find the Parts contained in the Abdomen so rotten, that it would be impossible to discover the Uterus from the other Parts; however, if she would have her opened, I could not discover whether she was with Child, unless the Infant was become bony. Her Face and Neck, to her Shoulders, appeared black, and so much corrupted, that we were unwilling to proceed any further: But, however, her Mother would have it done, and so we did open her; and as soon as she was opened, we perceived the Stomach and Guts were as full of Wind as if they had been blown with a pair of Bellows; we put her Guts aside, and came to the Uterus, and Doctor Philips shewed it us, in his Hand, and afterwards cut it out and laid it on the Table, and opened it, and we saw into the Cavity of it, and if there had been any Thing there as minute as a Hair, we might have seen it, but it was perfectly free and empty; and after That, we put the Intestines into their Places; and we bid him open the Stomach, and it was opened with an Incision-Knife, and it sunk flat, and let out Wind, but no Water; afterwards we opened the Breast and Lobes of the Lungs, and there was no Water: Then we look'd on each Side, and took up the Lobes of the Lungs too, to see if there was no Water in the Diaphragm, and there was none, but all dry. Then I remember I said, this Woman could not be drowned, for if she had taken in Water, the Water must have rotted all the Guts: That was the Construction I made of it then; but for any Marks about her Head and Neck, it was impossible for us to discover it, because they were so rotten.

Mr. Cowper. You say, this Inspection was made about six Weeks after she was dead?

Coatsworth. It was made on the 28th of April.

Mr. Cowper. She was drowned on the 13th of March.

Mr. Jones. Did you make an Incision into those Parts of the Neck and Head.

Coatsworth. No: I told Mrs. Stout and her Son, If you imagine the Skull to be injur'd, I will open the Head; for if the Scalp be never so rotten, yet if the Skull has suffered any Impression I shall discover it; they said, They did not suspect a broken Skull in the Case, and so we did not examine it.

Mr. Jones. But all her other Parts were found?

Coatsworth. Yes, found to a Miracle; for I did not imagine we could find them so.

Mr. Jones. Call John Dimsdale?

Mr. Cowper. My Lord I would know, and I desire to be heard to this Point: I think where the Coroner's Inquest have view'd the Body, and the Relations have been heard, and the Body buried, that it is not to be stirr'd afterwards for any private Inspection of Parties, that intend to make themselves Prosecutors; but if it is to be taken up, it is to be done by some legal Authority; for if it should be otherwise, any Gentleman may be easily trepan'd: For instance, if they should have thought fit, after the Coroner's View, to have broken the Skull into a hundred Pieces, This was a private View altogether among themselves. Certainly, if they intended to have prosecuted me, or any other Gentleman upon this Evidence, they ought to have given us notice, that we might have had some Surgeons among them, to superintend their Proceedings. My Lord, with submission, this ought not to be given in Evidence.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. Mr. Cowper, I think you are not in earnest; there is no Colour for this Objection: If they did take up the Body without notice, Why should not that be Evidence? unless you think they had a design to swear themselves.

Mr. Cowper. Had you a Melius Inquirendum, or any lawful Warrant for making this Inspection?

Coatsworth. No, there was not.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. Suppose they did an ill Thing in taking up the Body without some Order, tho' I don't know any more ill in taking up that Body than any other; but, however, Is that any Reason why we should not hear this Evidence?

Coatsworth. Mr. Camblin, Sir William Cowper's Surgeon was there by.

Mr. Jones. Call Mr. Dimsdale senior. (Who was sworn.) Had you a View of the Body after it was taken up?

Dimsdale. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Pray give your Opinion of it?

Dimsdale. On the 28th of April, as I remember, I was sent for down by Mrs. Stout to view the Body of her Daughter. Her Daughter was just taken out of the Ground, but not opened; they had just touch'd the Body, but not opened the Skin when I came there——

Mr. Baron Hatfield. Are you a Surgeon?

Dimsdale. Yes, my Lord. Finding her Head so much mortified, down to her Neck, we thought all the Parts were seized, and had a Consultation, Whether we should open her or not; but Mrs. Stout was very much enraged, because a great Scandal had been raised, That her Daughter was with Child; and she said, She would have her opened to clear her Reputation. With that we opened her, and found her Body as sound as any Flesh could be; no manner of Putrefaction in her Lungs or any other Part, but she was very full of Wind. We search'd the Stomach and the Thorax, and found not one Drop of Water about it. I was more curious than the rest, and turn'd away her Legs, to see if the Coffin was soil'd, and the Coffin and Shroud were not wet. Her Uterus was taken out, and I saw no manner of Sign of Conception. After this we had a Consultation to consider, Whether she was drowned or not drowned; and we were all of Opinion, That she was not drowned; only Mr. Camblin desired he might be excused from giving his Opinion, whether she was drowned or not; but all the rest of us did give our Opinions, That she was not drowned.

Mr. Jones. Give your Reasons, why you believ'd she was not drowned.

Dimsdale. My Reason was this: Because we found no Water in her; her Intestines were not putrified; for if there had been Water in her, that would have caused a Fermentation, and that would have rotted the Lungs and Guts.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. Could you tell, so many Weeks after, whether she was drowned or no?

Dimsdale. Yes, my Lord, for this Reason: For if she had been drowned, there had been some Sign of Water; and if there had been a Pint of Wa-

Water, it would have rotted her Lights and her Guts; and that is done in a Week's Time by Fermentation.

Mr. Cowper. Sir, I desire to know, Whether according to Reason and your Skill, after six Weeks Time, it's possible there should be Water in the Thorax?

Dimsdale. I do believe there may be some; for it can't come out after the Body is dead, by but Putrifaction; and there was no Putrifaction, but it was firm and sound.

Mr. Baron Hatfell. What Parts would have been putrified by the Water?

Dimsdale. The Lungs and Bowels.

Mr. Baron Hatfell. And they were firm?

Dimsdale. They were: And if there had been Water, they would have been putrified.

Mr. Jones. Call John Dimsdale junior.

Juryman. Was her Navel started?

Dimsdale sen. No: I never saw such a Body in my Life.

Mr. Cowper. Did you ever see a Body that was drowned, opened six Weeks after?

Dimsdale sen. No, never. If a Body be drowned a Fortnight, the Bowels will be so rotten, there will be no coming near it; and I took particular Notice, and I did not see one Drop of Water.

Mr. Baron Hatfell. Was the Coffin close?

Dimsdale sen. Yes; it was close and dry as any Board whatsoever; and all the Parts sound, but the Head and Neck, and left Arm.

Mr. Jones. What do you think could be the Reason of that?

Dimsdale sen. The left Arm was rottener than the other, the Neck was rotten before.

Mr. Jones. What did you take to be the Cause of it?

Dimsdale sen. I can't judge of that.

Call John Dimsdale (junior.) Who was sworn.

Dimsdale jun. My Lord, the Body was opened before I came to see it, and they were drawing up an Affidavit, that there was no Water in the Body, and they desired me to sign it; but I desired first to look into the Body; and I did look into it, and turn'd the Intestines aside, and there was no Water in it; but the Head from the Neck was very much putrified.

Mr. Jones. Do you believe she was drowned?

Dimsdale jun. No, I believe not.

Mr. Jones. Did you open the Child that was drowned? What Difference was there between the Body of that Child and this?

Dimsdale jun. The Child was extremely swell'd in the Belly and Stomach, and had abundance of Water in it.

Mr. Jones. Was the Child lac'd that you open'd?

Dimsdale jun. It was laid upon the Table before I came.

Mr. Cowper. How long was it before the Child was opened?

Dimsdale jun. It was drowned in the Afternoon, and opened the next Morning.

Mr. Cowper. You said, Sir, you was ask'd to sign the Affidavit before you saw the Body, and you were honest, and would see the Body first; Pray who ask'd you?

Dimsdale jun. All of them did.

Mr. Cowper. Who in particular; if you please name them?

Dimsdale jun. Mr. Coatsworth, Mr. Philips, Mr. Camblin, &c. they asked me to set my Hand to it, because they thought I had seen it before.

Then Dr. Dimsdale was sworn.

Mr. Jones. Mr. Robert Dimsdale, was you at the opening of this Body?

Dr. Dimsdale. I came after it was opened; my Brother and I came together.

Mr. Jones. What Profession are you of, a Physician?

Dr. Dimsdale. Yes: when the Body was taken up, they desired us to be there, to inspect the Body; but before we came, it happen'd they had opened the Body, and were setting there Hands to a Paper, a sort of Affidavit; and when I came in, they would have had us set our Hands, but we would not, till we had look'd upon the Body, and went and laid it open again, and we did not find the least Drop of Water neither in the Thorax nor Abdomen.

Mr. Cowper. Is it possible there should be Water in the Thorax, according to your Skill?

Dr. Dimsdale. Yes, we did think there would have been, if she had been drown'd.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Could you expect to find it, so long as six Weeks after?

Dr. Dimsdale. We should have expected that or a Putrifaction; but we found no Putrifaction, neither in the Bowels nor Intestines, but only upon her Head and Shoulders, and one Arm.

Mr. Cowper. Pray by what Passage does the Water go into the Thorax?

Dr. Dimsdale. 'Twill be very difficult for me to describe the Manner here; but we should have found some in the Stomach and Intestines.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, Sir, how should it go into the Thorax?

Dr. Dimsdale. By the Lymphæduct, if carried by any Means.

Mr. Cowper. When the Party is dead, Can any Water pass into any Part of the Body?

Dr. Dimsdale. We opened the Abdomen of the Child that was drowned, and found in the several Cavities abundance of Water.

Mr. Jones. When a Person is dead, Can they receive any Water after?

Dr. Dimsdale. No; for all the Parts are closed and contracted.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, If a dead Body be put into the Water, will not the Water come into the Wind-pipe?

Dr. Dimsdale. I question whether it will or no.

Mr. Jones. Was her Mouth shut?

Dr. Dimsdale. She was putrified about the Head and Shoulders, and one Arm that I saw was putrified; it was the left Arm, as I take it.

Mr. Jones. What is your Opinion, as to her Death?

Dr. Dimsdale. I believe, if she had been drown'd, there would have been a Putrifaction of the Abdomen first; and it was her extream Parts, her Arm, her Head, and her Breast, that was putrified, but her Bowels seem'd firm and sound.

Mr. Jones. Then you don't think her Death was by drowning?

Dr. Dimsdale. No.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, did not you give some Certificate or Paper, declaring the Death of this Gentlewoman, before you saw the Body at all?

Dr. Dimsdale. No, I did not.

Mr. Cow-

Mr. Cowper. Sir, I would ask you, Was not you angry that Mr. Camlin would not join with you in Opinion?

Dr. Dimsdale. No.

Mr. Cowper. Did not you tell him, that you were a Graduate Physician, and was angry he would not join with you?

Dr. Dimsdale. Suppose I did?

Mr. Baron Hatsell. But did you so or no?

Dr. Dimsdale. Yes, my Lord, we had some Words about it.

Mr. Jones. Swear Dr. Coatsworth. (Which was done.)

Now, my Lord, we call these Gentlemen that are Doctors of Skill, to know their Opinions of them that are found floating without Water in them, how they came by their Death.

Dr. Coatsworth. I have not seen many drowned Bodies to make Observation upon; but it is my Opinion, That every Body that is drowned, is suffocated by Water passing down the Wind-pipe into the Lungs upon Respiration; and at the same Time, the Water pressing upon the Gullet, there will be a necessity of swallowing a great Part of it into the Stomach: I have been in danger of being drowned my self, and I was forced to swallow a great Quantity of Water. If a Person was drowned, and taken out immediately, as soon as the Suffocation was effected, I should not wonder if there were but little Water in the Stomach and Guts; but if it lay in the Water several Hours, it must be very strange if the Belly should not be full of Water; but I will not say, it is impossible it should be otherwise.

Mr. Cowper. I desire to know, whether this Gentleman attempted to drown himself, or was in danger of being drowned by Accident.

Dr. Coatsworth. It was by Accident: I was passing up the Ship Side, and took hold of a loose Rope instead of the Entering-Rope, which failing me, I fell into the Water.

Mr. Cowper. But you struggled to save your self from drowning?

Dr. Coatsworth. I did so: I have seen several Persons that have been drowned, and they have lain several Days, until by Fermentation they have been rais'd; but I never made my Observations of any Persons that have been drowned above six Hours.

Mr. Jones. Did you ever here of any Persons that, as soon as they were drowned, had swam above Water?

Dr. Coatsworth. I have not known such a Case.

Mr. Cowper. Did you ever know, Sir, a Body that was otherwise kill'd, to float upon the Water?

Dr. Coatsworth. I never made any Observation of that.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Dr. Browne has a learned Discourse, in his Vulgar Errors, upon this Subject, concerning the floating of dead Bodies; I don't understand it my self, but he hath a whole Chapter about it.

Then Dr. Nailor was sworn.

Mr. Jones. We ask you the same Question that Doctor Coatsworth was asked, What is your Opinion of dead Bodies? If a Body be drowned, will it have Water in it or no?

Dr. Nailor. My Lord, I am of Opinion, That it will have a Quantity if it be drowned; but if there be no Water in the Body, I believe that the Person was dead before it was put into the Water.

Mr. Cowper. I would ask the Doctor one Question, my Lord, Whether he was not a constant Voter against the Interest of our Family in this Corporation?

Dr. Nailor. I never did come to give a Vote, but Sir William Cowper, or his Son, oppos'd me, and said, I had no Right to Vote.

Mr. Cowper. I would have ask'd the same Question of the Dimsdales, if I had remembered it; they are of another Party, as this Gentleman is.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. It is not all material, as they are Witnesses.

Then call Mr. Babington. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Jones. Pray, What is your Opinion of this Matter?

Mr. Babington. I am of Opinion, that all Bodies that go into the Water alive, and are drowned, have Water in them, and sink as soon as they are drowned, and don't rise so soon as this Gentlewoman did.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, what is your Profession, Sir?

Mr. Babington. I am a Surgeon.

Mr. Cowper. Because Mr. Jones, call'd you Doctor.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Did you ever see any drowned Bodies?

Mr. Babington. Yes, my Lord, once I had a Gentlewoman a Patient that was half an Hour under Water, and she lived several Hours after, and in all that time she discharged a great Quantity of Water: I never heard of any that went alive into the Water, and were drowned, that floated so soon as this Gentlewoman did; I have heard so from Physicians.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. I have heard so too, and that they are forced to tie a Bullet to dead Bodies thrown into the Sea, that they might not rise again.

Mr. Cowper. The Reason of that is, that they should not rise again, not that they will not sink without it. But I would ask Mr. Babington, whether the Gentlewoman he speaks of went into the Water voluntarily, or fell in by Accident?

Mr. Babington. By Accident, but I believe that don't alter the Case.

Mr. Jones. Swear Dr. Burnet. (Which was done.)

Dr. Burnet. You hear what is the Matter in question; what is your Opinion of it?

Dr. Burnet. My Lord, I think that if any Person fall into the Water by Accident, or throws himself in, the Body will receive Water as long as it is alive, and there are Endeavours for Respiration, and after these Endeavours are over, there is no Water will come in, for all the Parts are clos'd; so consequently there must be Water in all probability found in her.

Mr. Jones. What, do they swim or sink?

Dr. Burnet. They sink; I never saw a Person drowned taken up without Water in my Life; but I have seen several full of Water.

Mr. Cowper. I think you say when the Faculty of Respiration ceases, no Water comes in.

Dr. Burnet. Yes, that is my Opinion.

Mr. Cowper. But the Water does pass into them while there are Endeavours for Respiration?

Dr. Burnet. Yes, that is my Opinion.

Then Dr. Woodhouse was sworn.

Mr. Jones. Doctor, What is your Opinion of this Matter?

Dr. Woodhouse. My Opinion is, that no Person is suffocated by Water, but he must have a great deal deal of Water within him, a great deal of Water in the Stomach, and some in the Lungs?

Mr. Cowper. Pray, Sir, did you ever open any of these Bodies?

Dr. Woodhouse. Yes, I have opened a Child my self that had a great Quantity of Water in it.

Mr. Cowper. Did you find any Quantity of Water in the Throat?

Dr. Woodhouse. There was some, but a little, but a great deal in the Stomach.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, which way can it pass into the Thorax?

Dr. Woodhouse. While the Person is struggling for Respiration, there may be a Relaxation of and the Person must suck in Water as well as Air, and some Water may get into the Windpipe, and so enter into the Lungs.

Mr. Cowper. Is there a Passage from the Lungs to the Thorax?

Dr. Woodhouse. The Thorax is the Vessel wherein the Lungs lie, the Lungs in the Thorax, the Breast is the Cavity where the Lungs lie, the Windpipe is the Conveyance to the Lungs, and a Person in Respiration takes down some Water there, but no doubt the greater Quantity will be in the Stomach.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. Pray let me ask you a Question: Some of the Witnesses said, That if a Person be drowned, and lies dead a great while, the Inwards will be putrified; What is your Opinion of it?

Dr. Woodhouse. No doubt, my Lord, where Water gets into the Stomach, or wherever it is, it will putrify very soon.

Mr. Jones. Call Edward Clement. (Who was sworn.) Are not you a Seaman?

E. Clement. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Jones. How long have you been so?

E. Clement. Man I have writ my self but six Years, but I have used the Sea nine or ten Years.

Mr. Jones. Have you known of any Men that have been kill'd, and thrown into the Sea, or who have fallen in and been drowned? Pray tell us the Difference as to their swimming and sinking?

E. Clement. In the Year 89, or 90, in Beachy Fight, I saw several thrown over-board during the Engagement, but one particularly I took notice of, that was my Friend, and kill'd by my Side; I saw him swim for a considerable Distance from the Ship; and a Ship coming under our Stern, caus'd me to lose sight of him, but I saw several dead Bodies floating at the same time; likewise in another Engagement, where a Man had both his Legs shot off, and died instantly, they threw over his Legs; though they sunk, I saw his Body float: Likewise I have seen several Men who have died natural Deaths at Sea, they have when they have been dead had a considerable Weight of Ballast and Shot made fast to them, and so were thrown over-board; because we hold it for a general Rule, that all Men swim if they be dead before they come into the Water; and on the contrary I have seen Men when they have been drowned, that they have sunk as soon as the Breath was out of their Bodies, and I could see no more of them. For Instance, a Man fell out of the Cornwall, and sunk down to rights, and seven Days afterwards we weighed Anchor, and he was brought up grasping his Arm about the Cable; and we have observed in several Cafes, that where Men fall over-board, as soon as their Breath is out of their Bodies they sink downright, and on the contrary where a dead Body is thrown over-board without Weight it will swim.

Mr. Jones. You have been in a Fight; How do Bodies float after a Battle?

E. Clement. Men float with their Heads just down, and the small of their Back and Buttocks upwards: I have seen a great Number of them, some hundreds in Beachy-head Fight, when we engag'd the French. I was in the old Cambridge at that Time. I saw several (what Number I will not be positive, but there were a great Number, I can't guess to a Score) that did really swim, and I could see them float for a considerable Distance.

Mr. Jones. Have you seen a Shipwreck?

E. Clement. Yes; the Coronation in September 1691. I was then belonging to the Dutchess, under the Command of Captain Clement; we look'd out and see them taking down their Masts; we saw the Men walking up and down on the right Side, and the Ship sink down, and they swam up and down like a Shoal of Fish one after another; and I see them hover one upon another, and see them drop away by Scores at a time, and there was an Account of about Nineteen that sav'd themselves, some by Boats, and others by Swimming; but there were no more sav'd out of the Ship's Complement, which was between five and six Hundred, and the rest I saw sinking downright, some twenty at a time. There was a Fisherman brought our Captain Word, that in laying in of his Nets he drew up some Men close under the Rocks that were drowned belonging to the Coronation. We generally throw in Bags of Ballast with them.

Mr. Jones. I suppose all Men that are drowned, you sink them with Weights?

E. Clement. Formerly Shot was allowed for that purpose; there us'd to be threescore Weight of Iron, but now 'tis a Bag of Ballast that is made fast to them.

Mr. Jones. Then you take it for a certain Rule, that those that are drowned sink, but those that are thrown over-board do not?

E. Clement. Yes; otherwise why should the Government be at that vast Charge to allow threescore or fourscore Weight of Iron to sink every Man, but only that their Swimming about should not be a Discouragement to others?

Then Richard Gin was sworn.

Mr. Jones. You hear the Question; Pray what do you say to it?

R. Gin. I was at Sea a great while, and all the Men that I see turned over-board had a great Weight at their Heels to sink them.

Mr. Jones. Then will they swim otherwise?

R. Gin. So they say.

Mr. Jones. Are you a Seaman?

R. Gin. I went against my Will in two Fights.

Mr. Jones. Then Gentlemen of the Jury, I hope we have given you Satisfaction that Mrs. Stout did not drown herself, but was carried into the Water after she was killed. That was the first Question; for if it be true that all dead Bodies when they are put into the Water do swim, and the Bodies that go alive into the Water and are drowned do sink, this is sufficient Evidence that she came by her Death not by drowning, but some other Way. Now, my Lord, as to the second Matter, and that is to give such Evidence as we have against these Gentlemen at the Bar. Mr. Cowper, it appears, was the last Man that any one can give an Account of was

was in her Company. What became of her afterwards, or where they went, no Body can tell; but the other Witnesses have given you Evidence that he was the last Man that was with her. I shall only give this further Evidence as to Mr. Cowper, That notwithstanding all the Civility and Kindnesses that pass'd between him and this Family, when the Bruit and Noise of this Fact was spread abroad, Mr. Cowper did not come to consider and consult with old Mrs Stout what was to be done; but he took no manner of Notice of it, and the next Day he rode out of Town, without further taking Notice of it.

Call George Aldridge, and John Archer.

John Archer was sworn.

Mr. Jones. Do you know any thing of Mr. Cowper's going out of Town about this Business of Mrs. Stout's being drowned?

J. Archer. Yes, I did see him go out of Town afterwards.

Mr. Jones. Which Way did he go?

J. Archer. He went the Back-way from the Glove; I suppose he came that Way.

Mr. Cowper. What Day was it I went? Is it not the Way that I us'd to go when I go the Circuit into Essex.

J. Archer. Yes, I believe so.

Mr. Cowper. I lodg'd at Mr. Barefoot's, and he has a Back-door to the Glove, where my Horse was, and I went the direct Way into Essex, and it was Wednesday Morning: What Day was it you see me go?

J. Archer. It was on the Wednesday Morning.

Mr. Cowper. That was the very Day I went into Essex.

Then George Aldridge was sworn.

Mr. Jones. When did Mr. Cowper go out of Town the last Affizes?

G. Aldridge. On Wednesday.

Mr. Jones. Which Way did he go?

G. Aldridge. He went the Way to Chelmsford.

Mr. Jones. Did you not fetch his Horse from Stout's?

G. Aldridge. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Jones. How often did you go for it?

G. Aldridge. Three Times.

Mr. Jones. When?

G. Aldridge. On Tuesday Night I sent once, and went twice my self; the first Time there was no Body at home to deliver the Horse, so I went to Mr. Stout's, and ask'd him about the Horse, and he said he could not deliver him till the Maid went home, and then I went about Eleven of the Clock and had the Horse.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Was it Eleven at Night?

G. Aldridge. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Cowper. When I sent you to fetch my Horse, what Directions did I give you?

G. Aldridge. You gave me Directions to fetch your Horse, because you said you should have occasion to go out next Morning betimes with the Judge.

Mr. Cowper. The Reason I sent for my Horse was this; when I heard she had drowned her self, I think it concern'd me in Prudence to send a common Hostler for him, for fear the Lord of the Manor should seize all that was there as forfeited.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. There was no Danger of that, for she was found Non compos mentis.

Mr. Cowper. No, my Lord, I sent before the Verdict.

Mr. Jones. It seems you did not think fit to go and take Horse there your self, though you put your Horse there.

Now, my Lord, we will go on and give the other Evidence that we opened concerning these three other Gentlemen that came to Town, two of them took Lodgings at Gurrey's at Five in the Afternoon, but did not come in till between Eleven and Twelve, and then they brought another in with them; and though he had been in Town five or six Hours, his Feet were wet in his Shoes, and his Head was of a reeky Sweat; he had been at some hard Labour I believe, and not drinking himself into such a Sweat.

Call John Gurrey, Matthew Gurrey, and Eliz. Gurrey.

John Gurrey was sworn.

Mr. Jones. Do you know any of the Gentlemen at the Bar?

J. Gurrey. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Name who you know.

J. Gurrey. There is Mr. Stevens, Mr. Rogers, and Mr. Marson.

Mr. Jones. Pray, do you remember when they took Lodging at your House?

J. Gurrey. The last Affizes; when they first came, there was only Mr. Stevens and Mr. Rogers.

Mr. Jones. At what Time did they take it?

J. Gurrey. I was at Church, and can't tell that, they hir'd the Lodgings of my Wife.

Mr. Jones. What can you say more?

J. Gurrey. I was in at Night when they came; there came three of them at Eleven at Night, whereof Mr. Marson was the third Person, and he said he was destitute of a Lodging, and he ask'd for a spare Bed; my Wife told him she had one, but had let it; whereupon Mr. Stevens and Mr. Rogers said he should lodge with them; so they went up all together, and they call'd for a Fire to be kindled, and ask'd for the Landlord, which was I, and they ask'd me to fetch a Bottle of Wine, and I told them I would fetch a Quart, which I did; and then they ask'd me to sit down and drink with them, which I did; and then they ask'd me if one Mrs. Sarah Stout did not live in Town, and whether she was a Fortune? I said yes; then they said they did not know how to come to the Sight of her; and I said I would shew them her to-morrow Morning, not questioning but I might see her some time as she was coming down the Street; so they said they would go to see her. Mr. Rogers and Mr. Stevens charged Mr. Marson with being her old Sweetheart; faith Mr. Marson, she hath thrown me off, but a Friend of mine will be even with her by this Time.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. What a-Clock was it then?

J. Gurrey. I reckon Eleven of the Clock when they came in.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Did you observe in what Condition Mr. Marson was in?

J. Gurrey. I did not observe, only that he was hot, and put by his Wig; I see his Head was wet, and he said he was just come from London, and that made him in such a Heat.

Mr. Jones. Had he Shoes or Boots on?

J. Gurrey. I did not observe that.

Mr. Jones. What did they do he next Day?

J. Gurrey.

J. Gurrey. The next Morning I heard this Party was in the Water; I sat up all Night, and was fain to wait till my Daughter came down to look after the Shop, and then I went to see her, and she was remov'd into the Barn, and they were wiping her Face, closing her Eyes, and putting up her Jaws; and as I came back these Persons were walking, and I met Mr. Marson and Mr. Stevens, and told them the News: Said I, this Person is come to a sad Accident: Say they, so we hear; but nevertheless we will be as good as our Word, and go and see her. I went with them, and overtook Mr. Rogers; and Marson said, we are going to see Mrs. Stout. O Landlord, said Rogers, you may take up that Rogue (pointing at Mr. Marson) for what he said last Night; but I did not think, they speaking so jocularly, that there was any Suspicion of their being concern'd in the Murder. A second time I went, the Barn-door was lock'd; I knock'd, and they open'd it and let us in, and they uncover'd her Face to let me see her, and I touch'd her; and looking about for them, they were gone, and I can't say they see her or touch'd her: Then Mr. Marson and they were consulting how to send a Great Coat to London, and I directed them to a Coachman at the Bell-Inn; but I did not hear he went to enquire after the Coachman; then they went to your Lordship's Chamber, and I went home; and about Eleven of the Clock I saw Mr. Marson and Mr. Stevens coming down with Mr. Spencer Cowper.

Mr. Marson. I did not go out that Night after I came in.

Mr. Jones. No; we agree that. Did you see Mr. Cowper and these Gentlemen together?

J. Gurrey. Only at Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday Noon, Mr. Cowper, Mr. Marson, and Mr. Stevens were coming down to the Market-place.

Mr. Jones. Did not they take their Leave of you when they went away from you that Forenoon?

J. Gurrey. No; only in the Morning they told me they would send me Word at Noon if they intended to lodge there.

Mr. Marson. I desire to know of Mr. Gurrey, if his Sister was not in the Room when we came in?

J. Gurrey. She was in our House that Day; but whether when they came in, I can't tell.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, have you not had some Discourse with your Sister, the Widow Davis, concerning some Suspicion that you had of Sarah Walker, that hath been produced as a Witness?

J. Gurrey. I don't remember any such.

Mr. Cowper. Then did not you say these Words, We must not concern ourselves with Sarah Walker, for she is the only Witness against the Cowpers?

J. Gurrey. I can't remember any such Thing.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. You may answer according to the best of what you remember; if you say you have forgot when you have not, you are forsworn.

Mr. Cowper. If your Lordship pleases to give Leave to Mr. Gurrey to recollect himself. I ask him, whether he did not talk with his Sister Davis about some Suspicion his Wife and he had about Sarah Walker, the Maid-servant of the Deceased?

J. Gurrey. I believe there might be some Talk of a Person that was seen to go into the Church-yard at some Distance with Sarah Walker.

Mr. Cowper. Did your Wife say that she did suspect that Person?

J. Gurrey. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Did your Wife say they behav'd themselves strangely, and that she would have persuaded the Widow Blewit to have watch'd her?

J. Gurrey. There was something of that.

Mr. Cowper. Was there not some such Words, that they must not meddle with Sarah Walker, for she is the Witness against the Cowpers?

J. Gurrey. I said, Do not concern your self with Sarah Walker, for fear of taking off her Evidence.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, did not the Widow Davis warm the Sheets for these Gentlemen?

J. Gurrey. She was with my Wife, but I can't say whether she warm'd the Sheets.

Mr. Cowper. When they came home, had you any Lodgers that wanted to come home? Had not you one Gape?

J. Gurrey. I can't say whether he was in before or after them.

Mr. Cowper. Did not you say to your Sister Davis, Now these Gentlemen are in Bed, if Mr. Gape would come home, our Family would be quiet?

J. Gurrey. I do not remember that.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, did not you go to look for Mr. Gape?

J. Gurrey. Yes, I went to Hockley's.

Mr. Cowper. Who did you employ to speak to Mr. Gape?

J. Gurrey. Mrs. Hockley.

Mr. Cowper. When you came home to your own House, and after you had been at Hockley's to speak with Mr. Gape, what Account did you give of the Time of Night, and other Particulars?

J. Gurrey. I gave no Account of the Time.

Mr. Cowper. Not to Mrs. Davis?

J. Gurrey. I can't tell whether I did or no.

Mr. Cowper. Did not you say Mr. Gape ask'd Mrs. Hockley what a-Clock it was?

J. Gurrey. No, I don't remember that; but Mrs. Hockley went in and told him what Time of Night it was; it was Eleven or Twelve of the Clock, whether I can't say.

Mr. Jones. Call Martha Gurrey. (Who was sworn.) Which of these Gentlemen do you know?

Mrs. Gurrey. Mr. Marson, Mr. Rogers, and Mr. Stevens.

Mr. Jones. What Time of the Night was it when they came to your House? Give an Account of it, and of what you heard them say.

Mrs. Gurrey. It was a little after Five, or thereabouts, that they came——

Mr. Jones. Who came?

Mrs. Gurrey. Mr. Stevens, and Mr. Rogers, and there was one Mr. Gilbert, that married a first Cousin of mine, he came and ask'd me for my Husband; and I ask'd him his Business, and he said, he wanted to speak with him——

Mr. Jones. Pray come to these Men; when did they come to your House?

Mrs. Gurrey. They hired the Lodging at Five of the Clock. When they first came to see them I was not at home: Mr. Gilbert brought them, and as I was coming along the Street I saw Mr. Gilbert walking off, and would not look at me.——

Mr. Jones. When did they go out?

Mrs. Gurrey. They never staid there.

Mr. Jones. When did they come in again?

Mrs. Gurrey. Between Eleven and Twelve.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. What did they do when they came in again?

Mrs. Gurrey. I was laying on some Sheets two Pair of Stairs when they came, and then there was three of them; so they saw me a little after, and begg'd my Excuse for bringing in another, for they said it was so late that they could not get a Lodging any any where else; and said, if I thought fit, the Gentleman should lie with them; and I told them I liked it very well.

Mr. Jones. What Firing had they?

Mrs. Gurrey. The Firing I laid on in the Morning, and they sent for my Husband to fetch them some Wine.

Mr. Jones. What did you hear them talk on?

Mrs. Gurrey. They discours'd with my Husband, and ask'd him if he knew Mrs. Sarah Stout; and one of them said to Mr. Marson, I think she was an old Sweetheart of yours; ay, said he, but she turn'd me off, but a Friend of mine is even with her: And Mr. Rogers said he was in with her, and afterwards said, her Business was done. They had a Bundle, that was wrapt in a pure white Cloth, like to an Apron, but I can't say it was an Apron; and there was a Parcel hanging loose by it; and when he laid it down he said, he would pass his Word Mrs. Sarah Stout's courting Days were over; and I said, I hoped 'twas no Hurt to the Gentlewoman; and then I looking upon Mr. Marson, saw him put his Peruke aside, and his Head reek'd, and he told them he was but just come from London that Night, which made him disappointed of a Lodging.

Mr. Jones. What did you hear them say about any Money?

Mrs. Gurrey. I ask'd them how they would have their Bed warm'd, and Mr. Marson answer'd, very hot: With that I went down to send my Daughter up, and she could not go presently; I told her then she must go as soon as she could.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. Pray don't tell us what pass'd between you and your Daughter: What do you know of these Gentlemen?

Mrs. Gurrey. I went to the next Room, to see if every thing was as it should be; I hearkened, and they had some Discourse about Money, and I heard some-body (I don't know who it should be except it were Mr. Stevens) answer and say, the Use-money was paid to-night; but what Money they meant, I can't tell.

Mr. Jones. What did you find when they were gone?

Mrs. Gurrey. Sir, I found a Cord at the End of the Trunk.

Mr. Jones. Was it there in the Morning, or before they came?

Mrs. Gurrey. No, it could not, for I swept my Room, and wiped down the Dust.

Mr. Jones. Was the Cord white?

Mrs. Gurrey. No, it was more dirty than it is now, for my Husband and I have worn it in our Pockets.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, who brought the Cord down from above Stairs?

Mrs. Gurrey. My Daughter that liv'd with me, and she laid it upon the Shelf.

Mr. Cowper. Did not you hear there was a Coroner's Inquest sitting?

Mrs. Gurrey. The next Day at Night I did hear of it.

Mr. Cowper. Why did not you go to the Coroner's Inquest and give an Account of it there?

Mrs. Gurrey. I told my Husband of it, and I ask'd my Husband if he did not hear what they said concerning Mrs. Sarah Stout, and he answer'd, yes, they ought to be taken up for the Words they said last Night: Why, said I, don't you take notice of it? I think you ought to take them up. But he went out of Doors, and I saw no more of him till the Afternoon. When I heard the Words I thought some-body had stole away and got to bed to her.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, if your Husband heard these Words, why did not he go to the Coroner's Inquest?

Mrs. Gurrey. I did speak to him to have them taken up.

Mr. Cowper. Why did he not do it?

Mrs. Gurrey. He said he would not do it; he did not know but it might cost him his Life.

Mr. Jones. How came you after this to discover it?

Mrs. Gurrey. Because I was so troubled in Mind I could not rest Night nor Day; and I told him if he would not tell of it, I would tell of it myself, for I was not able to live.

Then Elizabeth Gurrey was sworn.

Mr. Jones. Pray, do you know Mr. Rogers, Mr. Stevens, and Mr. Marson?

E. Gurrey. I know Mr. Marson, and these are the other Gentlemen I reckon.

Mr. Jones. What Discourse did you hear from them?

E. Gurrey. Mr. Marson ask'd the other Gentlemen how much Money they had spent; the other answer'd, what was that to him? you have had forty or fifty Pounds to your Share. Then the other ask'd him, whether the Business was done? and he answer'd, he believ'd it was; but if it was not done, it would be done to-night. Then, my Lord, he pull'd a handful of Money out of his Pocket, and swore he would spend it all for Joy the Business was done.

Mr. Jones. Was Mr. Cowper's Name mention'd?

E. Gurrey. I heard them mention Mr. Cowper's Name, but not Mrs. Sarah Stout's.

Mr. Jones. What Condition was the Gentleman's Shoes in?

E. Gurrey. I think it was Mr. Marson, his Shoes were very wet and dirty; one of them was very hot, and he wiped his Head with his Handkerchief.

Mr. Jones. Now, my Lord, we have done as to our Evidence. Mr. Marson pretended he was just then alighted and come from London, and was in a great Heat, and his Shoes were wet: I wonder what Mr. Marson had been doing; for when he was examined, he said, he came to Town about Eight of the Clock, and went to the Glove and Dolphin Inn, and stay'd there till he came to his Lodging. Now 'tis a wonderful Thing that he should come wetshod from a Tavern, where he had been sitting four or five Hours together.

[Then the Examination of Mr. John Marson was read.]

The Examination of JOHN MARSON, taken before Me, this 27 Day of April, 1699.

WHO being examin'd where he was on Monday the 13th of March last, saith, That he was at the Borough of Southwark (he being an Attorney of the said Court) till past Four of the Clock in the Afternoon; and saith, That he set out from Southwark for Hertford soon after, and came to Hertford about Eight of the Clock the same Afternoon, and put up his Horse at the Sign of ——— an Inn there, and then went to the Hand and Glove, together with Godfrey Gimbart, Esq; Ellis Stevens, William Rogers, and some others, where they stay'd till about Eleven of the Clock at Night, and then this Examinant went thence directly to the House of John Gurrey, with the said Stevens and Rogers, who lay all together in the said Gurrey's House all that Night. And being ask'd what he said concerning the said Mrs. Sarah Stout, decess'd, this Examinant saith, That on Sunday the 12th of March last, this Examinant being in Company with one Thomas Marshall, and telling him that this Examinant intended the next Day for Hertford with the Marshal of the King's Bench, the said Thomas Marshall desired this Examinant and the said Stevens, who was then also in Company, that they would go and see the said Sarah Stout (his Sweetheart). He confesseth, That he did ask the said Gurrey if he would shew this Examinant where the said Stout lived, telling the said Gurrey that his Name was Marshall, and ask'd him if he never heard of him before, and jocularly said, That he would go to see her the next Morning; but doth not believe that he said any thing that any Friend was even with the said Sarah Stout, or to such like Effect. And doth confess, That he did the next Day, upon the said Gurrey's telling him that the said Stout was drowned, say, that he would keep his Word, and would see her. And saith, That meeting with Mr. Cowper (who is this Examinant's Acquaintance) he believes he did talk with him concerning the said Stout's being drowned, this Examinant having seen her Body that Morning.

J. Holt.

John Marlon.

Mr. Jones. All that I observe from it, is this; that he had been five Hours in Town, and when he came to his Lodging he came in wet and hot, and said he was just come from London.

Mr. Marlon. I had rid forty Miles that Day, and could not be soon cold.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. They have done now for the King; come Mr. Cowper, what do you say to it?

Mr. Jones. If your Lordship please we will call one Witness more, Mary Richardson. Mrs. Richardson, Do you know Mr. Marlon, or any of these Gentlemen?

Mrs. Richardson. They came on Tuesday Night to the Bell at Hoddesdon and lay there, and one of the Gentlemen, when I was warming the Sheets, ask'd me if I knew Mrs. Sarah Stout? and I said yes. He ask'd me if I knew which Way she came to her End? and I told him I could not tell.

Mr. Jones. Is that all? what did they say more?

Mrs. Richardson. They did desire and wish it might be found out how it came about, and one Gentleman took no notice of her at all. They had a little Bundle, but what was in it I can't tell, but there I saw it bound up in some colour'd Stuff or other, but what it was I can't tell.

Mr. Jones. Is that all you can say?

Mrs. Richardson. Yes, that's all.

Mr. Jones. Then we have done.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Come, Mr. Cowper, what do you say to it?

Mr. Cowper. Now they have done on the Part of the King, my Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I must beg your Patience for my Defence. I confess, it was an unfortunate Accident for me (as Mr. Jones calls it) that I happen'd to be the last Person (for ought appears) in the Company of a melancholy Woman. The Discourse occasion'd by this Accident had been a sufficient Misfortune to me, without any thing else to aggravate it; but I did not in the least imagine that so little, so trivial an Evidence as here is, could possibly have affected me to so great a Degree, as to bring me to this Place to answer for the worst Fact that the worst of Men can be guilty of.

VOL. V.

My Lord, your Lordship did just now observe, that I have appear'd at the Bar for my Clients; but I must say too, that I never appear'd for my self under this, or the like Circumstances, as a Criminal, for any Offence whatsoever.

Mr. Jones very well said, when he spoke on the Part of the King, That if this Gentlewoman was murther'd, the Crime was Villainous, Base, Barbarous, and Cruel; and for my Part I think so too; the Crime would be so great, that it could never be sufficiently condemn'd: But at the same time I may aver, that to suppose a Murther without good Grounds for it, and afterwards to charge innocent Men with it knowingly and maliciously, is to a Trifle as Base and Barbarous as the Murther itself could be. My Lord, I speak for my own Part; I know not at what Price other Men may value their Lives, but I had much rather my self was murther'd than my Reputation; which yet I am sensible hath suffer'd greatly hitherto by the Malice and Artifice of some Men, who have gone pretty far in making this Fact, as Barbarous as it is, to be credited of me. And therefore I must beg your Lordship's and the Jury's Patience, while I not only defend my Life, but justify my self also from these things that have unjustly aspers'd me, by the Conspiracy and Artifice of my Accusers.

My Lord, in all the Evidence that hath been given, I must observe, that there is no positive Evidence, with Submission, to induce the Jury or any one to believe the General, that this Gentlewoman was murther'd; but they go upon Suppositions and Inferences, which are contradicted by other Circumstances, in the very Evidence of the Prosecutor, that make full as strong to prove she was not murther'd, as that she was; so that, as it stands, it can amount only to a bare Supposition that she was murther'd by any Body.

Then, as to the Evidence that particularly relates to my self, or the Gentlemen who stand with me at the Bar, that they or I were concern'd in it (if she was murther'd) there is not one Syllable of Proof; at most, it amounts but to make us suspect a Murther, not prov'd, but only suspected: This I observe upon the Evidence, as it now stands without Answer, as it has been given on the King's Part: And how far, in the Case of Life, Men shall be affected with Evidence of this nature, which neither proves the Murther in general, nor that they did it in particularly, tho' no Defence was made, or any further Answer given, I must submit to your Lordship's and the Jury's Judgment.

But, my Lord, I do not doubt but I shall be able to wipe away even that remote Suspicion by my Defence: They have been long in their Evidence for the King, and therefore I must beg your Patience while I give a particular Answer to every Part of it, in as good a Method as I am able; and I will waste as little Time as may consist with the justifying my Reputation; for which I know your Lordship will have as tender a Regard, to see it doth not suffer unjustly, as for my Life it self.

And I promise your Lordship, I shall trouble you with no Evidence which is not express and plain; no Inuendo's or Suspicions; but I shall prove prove fully and clearly, in the first place, That there was no Ground at all, in this Case, to suppose she was murther'd by any one but herself.

The first Fact that they insisted upon to infer a Murther from it, was, that the Body was found floating: Now, my Lord, that Fact I am able by the Evidence I have, as well as from that of the Prosecutor, to deny; for the Fact was directly otherwise, that is, she was not found floating.

And whereas the Prosecutor's Witnesses, who have been produced to this Point, are obscure and poor Men, and, your Lordship observes, have been taught to say generally that she floated; which, when they are requir'd to explain, and describe how she lay, they contradict themselves in, by shewing she lay sideways between the Stakes, and almost all under Water. Now I shall give your Lordship and the Jury a full and particular Account and Description from the Parish Officers, Men employ'd by the Coroner to take the Body out of the Water, of the very Manner and Posture in which it was first found; which they are much better able to do than the Prosecutor's Witnesses, having seen her before all or most of those People; and these Officers clearly agree, that her Body was under Water when found, except some small Appearance of her Petticoats, near or on the Surface of the Water, which may be very easily accounted for, because the Stakes the Witnesses mention, and which are driven into the Ground cross the River, to prevent Weeds and Trumpery from running into the Mill-stand, as the Witnesses have already said, about a Foot distant from one another, and are set with their Feet from the Mill, and their Heads inclining toward the Mill with the Stream. Now my Lord, every one knows, that tho' a drowned Body will at first sink, yet is buoyant, and does not go downright and rest in one Place like Lead; for a human Body is seldom or never in a Stream found to lie where it was drown'd: A Body drown'd at Chelsea has been often found by Fishermen at London, and that before it came to float above Water. Now, if a Body is so buoyant, as that it is driven down by the impellent Force of the Current (tho' it do not float above Water) it seems a Consequence, that when it comes to be stopp'd and resisted by the Stakes, which lie with their Heads downward, inclining with the Stream, the Stream bearing the Body against the Stakes, must needs raise it upwards to find another Passage if possible, when the Ordinary and Natural is obstructed. I have seen, I remember, that where Weeds have been driven down a River, and have been rouled along at the Bottom, when they have come down to a Board or Stakes of a Wye, or Turnpike, they have been by the Force of the Water raised up against those Boards, or Stakes, and forced over them, tho' without such Obstruction they had undoubtedly continued to roul under the Water. I don't know of any other Symptom they pretend to, of her not being drowned, from any thing observ'd of her in the Water. Then, as to the Flatness of her Belly, when she was put into her Coffin, I shall shew 'tis a common and natural Accident; sometimes drowned Bodies are swell'd more, sometimes less, sometimes not at all: I think it hardly deserves a Physician to prove that a Body may be drowned with very little Water; that a Man may be drowned by Strangling or Suffocation, caused by a little Water in the Lungs, without any great quantity of Water receiv'd in the Body, is a certain and establish'd Truth; for I am told that when Respiration ceases, the Party dies, and can receive no more Water after that: So that nothing is to be infer'd from a Body's having more or less Water found in it, especially if your Lordship will give me Leave to observe this Distinction, where a Body is voluntarily drowned, and where it is drowned by Accident; for People that fall in by Accident do struggle and strive as long as they can; every time they rise they drink some Water into the Stomach, to prevent its passing into the Lungs, and are drowned no sooner than needs must; but Persons that voluntarily drown themselves, to be sure desperately plunge into the Water, to dispatch a miserable Life as soon as they can; and so that little quantity in the Lungs which causes Death may be the sooner taken in; after which no more is receiv'd: And I hope by Physicians it will appear there is good Ground for this Difference.

The next is the Evidence that the Surgeons have given on the other Part, relating to the taking this Gentlewoman out of her Grave after she had been buried six Weeks. Whether this ought to have been given in Evidence, for the Reasons I hinted at in a Criminal Case, I submit to your Lordship; but, as it is, I have no reason to apprehend it, being able to make appear, that the Gentlemen who spoke to this Point have deliver'd themselves in that manner, either out of extream Malice, or a most profound Ignorance; this will be so very plain upon my Evidence, that I must take the Liberty to impute one or both of those Causes to the Gentlemen that have argued from their Observations upon that Matter.

And now, if your Lordship will but please to consider the Circumstances under which they would accuse me of this horrid Action, I don't think they will pretend to say, that in the whole Course of my Life I have been guilty of any mean or indirect Action; and I will put it upon the worst Enemy I have in the World to say it. Now, for a Man in the Condition I was in, of some Fortune in Possession, related to a better, in a good Employment, thriving in my Profession, living within my Income, never in Debt (I may truly say not Five Pounds at any one time these Years past) having no Possibility of making any Advantage by her Death, void of all Malice, and, as appears by her own Evidence, in perfect Amity and Friendship with this Gentlewoman, to be guilty of the murdering her, to begin at the Top of all Baseness and Wickedness, certainly is incredible.

My Lord, in this Prosecution my Enemies seeing the Necessity of assigning some Cause, have been so malicious to suggest before (tho' not now, when I have this Opportunity of vindicating my self publickly) that I have been concern'd in the Receipt of Money for this Gentlewoman, had her Securities by me; and sometimes, that I had been her Guardian, or her Trustee, and I know not what. I now see the Contrivers and Promoters of that Scandal, and they know it to be Base, False, and Malicious; I never was concern'd in Interest with her, directly or indirectly, and so I told them when I was before my Lord Chief-Justice: 'Tis true, it was then just suggested by the Prosecutors, I then denied it, and I deny it still—— I thank God, I have have not been used, nor have I need, to deny the Truth.

My Lord, you find the Prosecutors have nothing to say to me upon this Head, after all the Slanders and Stories they have publish'd against me, of my having Money in my hands which belong'd to the Deceased: But tho' they do not stir it, I will, and give your Lordship a full Account of all that ever was in that Matter. When I lodg'd at Herford, some time since, she desired me to recommend to her a Security for 200*l.* if it came in my Way; my Lord, when I came to Town, I understood that one Mrs. Puller, a Client of mine, had a Mortgage formerly made to her by one Mr. Lofius, of Lambeth in Surrey, for the like Sum, and that she was willing to have in her Money: I wrote to this Gentlewoman, the Deceased, to acquaint her of the Security; she thereupon did send up 200*l.* and some odd Pounds for Interest (the Account of which I produced to my Lord Chief-Justice); this Money was sent to me by Mr. Cramfield, as I have been inform'd, and by him given to Mr. Toller's Clerk, and by him brought publicly to me: My Lord, this Mortgage I immediately transferr'd by Assignment, endors'd on the Back of it, and Mrs. Habberfield, a Trustee for Mrs. Puller, sign'd and seal'd it, and that very 100*l.* and Interest due, was at one and the same time paid to Mrs. Puller, and by her the Principal was paid to her Daughter, in Part of her Portion. All this was transacted the beginning of December last, and she was not drowned till the 13th of March following: And, my Lord, these People that are now the Prosecutors did own before my Lord Chief-Justice that they had found this Mortgage among the Deceased's Writings in her Cabinet at the Time of her Death. Now, my Lord, I say, that saving this one Service I did her, as I said in December last, I never was otherwise concern'd with her in the receiving or disposing of any of her Money; nor had I ever any of her Securities for Money in my keeping; and I defy any Adversary I have to shew the contrary.

My Lord, as there appears no Malice, no Interest, so they have prov'd for me that there was no Concealment of Shame, to induce me to commit so barbarous an Action; otherwise, perhaps, now they find they can assign no other Cause, they would content themselves to give that Reason, and fling that Scandal at me: And tho' I take it by the Experience I have had of them, they did not design to do me any Favour, yet I thank them, in endeavouring to vindicate her Honour, they have secured my Reputation against that Calumny; and tho' I am satisfied, as I said, they did not intend me Kindness, yet, I thank God, they have given me a just Opportunity to take Advantage of their Cunning for the clearing of my Innocence in that Particular.

Then, my Lord, not to rest it here, but to satisfy the Jury and the World how this Gentlewoman came to destroy her self: I shall give the clearest Evidence that was ever given in any Court that she murder'd her self. When I enter upon this Proof, I must of necessity trespass upon the Character of this Gentlewoman that is dead. I confess this is a tender Point, 'tis a thing I would willingly be excused from, and 'tis not without a great deal of Reluctance and Compulsion forced from me. That she was melancholy the Prosecutors themselves have prov'd; but I must of necessity shew you the Occasions and Reasons of it, and the Witnesses will tell your Lordship what desperate Resolutions she had been under formerly, and that will lead me to near the Time of her Death, to shew why, and upon what Accidents, she made away her self. I will not enumerate Particulars by way of opening; only I must tell your Lordship, that some Letters of hers must of necessity be produced, which truly, as I said, I should not meddle with, if I had not these innocent Gentlemen here to defend as well as my self. Perhaps it may be said, that in Honour I ought to conceal the Weakness of this Gentlewoman; but then in Honour and Justice to these Gentlemen that are falsely accus'd with me, I cannot do it: I hope this one Reason will excuse me to the World, for I have no other that could have oblig'd me to bring these Letters upon the Stage. I solemnly protest, if I stood here singly in the Case of my own Life, upon the Evidence given against me, I take it to be so inconsiderable, I would not do it; but I must do it, to shew that these Gentlemen also are innocent, and to preserve them, because I am satisfied in my own Mind they are so. My Lord, when I have done that, I shall shew your Lordship in the next Place, that it is utterly impossible I could be concern'd in this Fact, if I had had all the Motives and Provocations in the World to have done it; I shall shew your Lordship, in Point of Time it could not be.

The Maid Sarah Walker, who is the single Witness, I take it, that says any thing in the least relating to me, said but now the Clock had struck Eleven before she carried up the Coals, and about a quarter of an Hour after, while she was warming the Bed above Stairs, she heard the Door clap, and some time after that she came down and found that I and her Mistress were gone. Now in Point of Time I shall prove it utterly impossible I could be guilty of the Fact I am accus'd of, being seen to come into the Glove-Inn as the Town-Clock struck Eleven, and staying there more than a quarter of an Hour, was, after several things done at my Lodging, in Bed before Twelve a-Clock, and went no more out that Night, as I shall prove. As for that little Circumstance of sending for my Horse, which they have made use of all along to back this Prosecution, their very telling me of that Matter, shews how much they are put to their Shifts to justify their accusing me; I say, in Prudence I ought to have done what I did: I sent for him on the Tuesday, but, as their Witness saith, I told him at the time I bid him fetch my Horse, not to use then, nor till by the Course of the Circuit I was to go into Essex with the Judges the next Morning; and 'till then the Prosecutor's Witness, who is the Hostler of the Glove-Inn, was order'd to set him up there, to litter him down, and to take care of him and feed him, and that he should be ready for me to go to Chelmsford on the Morrow, whither I went with the other Counsel the next Morning being Wednesday: And this, my Lord, is the Whole of that Matter.

My Lord, this Business slept near two Months after the Coroner's Inquest before I heard of it, or imagin'd my self to be concern'd in it, and was never stirr'd till two Parties, differing on all other Occasions, had laid their Heads together: I beg leave to let your Lordship a little into that Matter, to shew you how this Prosecution came to be manag'd with so much Noise and Violence as it hath hath been. I can make it appear, that one of the greatest of the Quakers, Mr. Mead by Name, has very much, and indirectly too, concern'd himself in this Matter: It seems they fancy the Reputation of their Sect is concern'd in it; for they think it a wonderful thing, nay, absolutely impossible (however other People may be liable to such Resolutions) that one who was by her Education entitled to the Light within her, should run headlong into the Water, as if she had been possess'd with the Devil; of this they think their Sect is to be clear'd, tho' by spilling the Blood of four innocent Men. The other sort of People that concur with the Quakers in this Prosecution, I shall mention, now I come to observe what the Witnesses are that have been produced against me; some of 'em I have nothing to object to, but that they are extream indigent and poor, and have been help'd by the Prosecutor; those that are so, say nothing as to me; others, who live in this Town, and give their Opinions of the Manner of her Death, are possess'd with much Prejudice against me, upon Feuds that have risen at the Elections of my Father and Brother in this Town; and these with the Quakers have wholly dress'd up this Matter for several Ends; the Quakers, to maintain the Reputation of their Sect; and the others, to destroy, or break at least, the Interest of my Family in this Place: But however effectual these Designs may have been to have made a great Noise in the World out of nothing, I am satisfied now that I am in a Court of Justice, where no Person's Reputation, much less his Life, will be sacrificed to the Policy or Malice of a Party without Proof; and therefore I have taken up so much of your Time, to set the true Rise of this Prosecution before you in a clear Light.

My Lord, as to my coming to this Town on Monday, it was the first Day of the Assizes, and that was the Reason that brought me hither: Before I came out of Town, I confess, I had a Design to take a Lodging at this Gentlewoman's House, having been invited by Letter so to do; and the reason why I did not was this: My Brother, when he went the Circuit, always favour'd me with the Offer of a Part of his Lodging, which out of good Husbandry I always accepted: The last Circuit was in Parliament-time, and my Brother being in the Money-Chair, could not attend the Circuit as he us'd to do; he had very good Lodgings, I think one of the best in this Town, where I us'd to be with him; these were always kept for him, unless notice was given to the contrary. The Friday before I came down to the Assizes, I happen'd to be in Company with my Brother and another Gentleman, and then I shew'd them the Letter by which I was earnestly invited down to lie at the House of this Gentlewoman during the Assizes ('tis dated the 9th of March last); and designing to comply with the Invitation, I thereupon desir'd my Brother to write to Mr. Barefoot, our Landlord, and get him, if he could, to dispose of the Lodgings; for, said I, if he keeps 'em they must be paid for, and then I cannot well avoid lying there: My Brother did say he would write, if he could think on't; and thus, if Mr. Barefoot disposed of the Lodgings, I own I intended to lie at the Deceased's House; but if not, I look'd on my self oblig'd to lie at Mr. Barefoot's. Accordingly I shall prove, as soon as ever I came to this Town, in the Morning of the first Day of the Assizes, I went directly to Mr. Barefoot's (the Maid and all agree in this) and the Reason was, I had not seen my Brother after he said he would write, before I went out of London; and therefore 'twas proper for me to go first to Mr. Barefoot's, to know whether my Brother had wrote to him, and whether he had dispos'd of his Lodgings or not. As soon as I came to Mr. Barefoot's, there was one Mr. Taylor, of this Town, came to me, and I in his hearing ask'd Mr. Barefoot, his Wife, and Maid-servant, one after another, if they had receiv'd a Letter from my Brother to unbespeak the Lodgings; they told me No, that the Room was kept for us; and I think they had made a Fire, and that the Sheets were airing. I was a little concern'd he had not writ; but being satisfied that no Letter had been receiv'd, I said immediately, as I shall prove by several Witnesses, If it be so, I must stay with you, I will take up my Lodging here: Thereupon I alighted, and sent for my Bag from the Coffee-house, and lodg'd all my Things at Barefoot's, and thus I took up my Lodging there as usual. I had no sooner done this, but Sarah Walker came to me from her Mistress to invite me to Dinner, and accordingly I went and dined there; and when I went away, it may be true, that being ask'd, I said I would come again at Night; but that I said I would lie there, I do positively deny, and knowing I could not lie there, 'tis unlikely I should say so. My Lord, at Night I did come again, and paid her some Money that I receiv'd from Mr. Loftus, who is the Mortgager, for Interest of the 200*l.* I before mention'd (it was 6*l.* odd Money, in Guineas and Half-guineas): I writ a Receipt, but she declined the signing of it, pressing me to stay there that Night, which I refused, as engag'd to lie at Mr. Barefoot's, and took my leave of her; and that very Money which I paid her was found in her Pocket, as I have heard, after she was drowned.

Now, my Lord, the Reason that I went to her House at Night was first, as I said, to pay her the Interest-Money; in the next Place, 'twas but fitting, when I found my self under a Necessity of disappointing her, and lying at Barefoot's, to go to excuse my not lying there, which I had not an Opportunity at Dinner-time to do. My Lord, I open my Defence shortly, referring the Particulars to the Witnesses themselves, in calling those who will fully refute the Suppositions and Inferences made by the Prosecutor, whom first, my Lord, I shall begin with, to shew there is no Evidence of any Murther at all committed; and this, I say again, ought to be indisputably made manifest and prov'd before any Man can be so much as suspected for it.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Do not flourish too much, Mr. Cowper; if you have open'd all your Evidence call your Witnesses, and when they have ended, then make your Observations.

Mr. Cowper. Then, my Lord, I will take up no more of your Time in opening this Matter.

Call Robert Dew. (Who appeared.)

When Mrs. Sarah Stout drowned her self, was not you a Parish Officer?

R. Dew. I was—— I was next House to the Coach and Horses, and about a Six a-Clock came a little Boy (Thomas Parker's Boy) and said there was a Woman fallen into the River I consider'd it was not my Business, but the Coroner's, and and I sent the Boy to the Coroner, to acquaint him with it, and the Coroner sent Word by the Boy, and desir'd she might be taken out; so I went to the River and saw her taken out: she lay in the River (as near as I could guess) half a Foot in the Water; she was cover'd with Water; she had a striped Petticoat on, but nothing could be seen of it above Water. I heav'd her up, and several Sticks were underneath her, and Flags; and when they took her out, she froth'd at the Nose and Mouth.

Mr. Cowper. How was she? was she driven between the Stakes?

R. Dew. She lay on the right Side, her Head leaning rather downwards; and as they pull'd her up, I cried, Hold, hold, hold, you hurt her Arm; and so they kneel'd down and took her Arm from the Stakes.

Mr. Cowper. Did you see any Spot upon her Arm?

R. Dew. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Cowper. What sort of Spot was it?

R. Dew. It was reddish; I believe the Stakes did it; for her Arm hit upon the Stake where she lay.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, how do these Stakes stand about the Bridge of the Mill?

R. Dew. I suppose they stand about a Foot asunder; they stand slanting, leaning down the Stream a little.

Mr. Cowper. Could you discern her Feet?

R. Dew. No, nothing like it, nor the striped Petticoat she had on.

Mr. Cowper. Might not her Knees and Legs be upon the Ground, for what you could see?

R. Dew. Truly, if I were put upon my Oath, whether they were so, or not, I durst not swear it; sometimes the Water there is four Feet, sometimes three and a half; I believe her Feet were very near the Bottom.

Mr. Cowper. Are not the Stakes nail'd with their Head against the Bridge?

R. Dew. They are nail'd to the Side of the Bridge.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, describe the Manner in which they took her up?

R. Dew. They stoop'd down, and took her up.

Mr. Cowper. Did they take her up at once?

R. Dew. They had two Heavings, or more.

Mr. Cowper. What was the Reason they did not take her up at once?

R. Dew. Because I cried out, They hurt her Arm.

Mr. Cowper. Was she not within the Stakes?

R. Dew. No, this Shoulder kept her out.

Mr. Cowper. When you complain'd they hurt her Arm, what Answer did they make you?

R. Dew. They stoop'd down and took her Arm out from between the Stakes; they could not have got her out else.

Mr. Cowper. After she was taken out, did you observe any Froth or Foam come from her Mouth or Nose?

R. Dew. There was a white Froth came from her, and as they wiped it away, it was on again presently.

Mr. Cowper. What was the Appearance of her Face and upper Parts at that Time?

R. Dew. She was so much disfigur'd, I believe that scarce any of her Neighbours knew her, the Slime of the Water being upon her.

Mr. Cowper. Did you see her Maid Sarah Walker at that Time?

R. Dew. No.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Mr. Cowper, do you intend to spend so much Time with every Witness? I don't see to what Purpose many of these Questions are ask'd.

Mr. Cowper. I have done with him, call Young.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Mr. Cowper, I would not have you straiten your self, but only ask those Questions that are pertinent.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, give an Account of what you know of the Matter.

Young. On Tuesday Morning, between Five and Six a-Clock, last Affizes—

Mr. Cowper. What Officer was you?

Young. I was Constable.

Mr. Cowper. Was you employed by the Coroner?

Young. Not by him in Person. Between Five and Six a-Clock some of the Men that came into my Yard to work told me a Woman was drowned at the Mill; I staid a little and went down to see, and when I came there I saw a Woman, as they had told me, and I saw part of her Coat lie on the Top of the Water to be seen, and I look'd strictly and nicely within the Bridge, and saw the Face of a Woman, and her left Arm was on the Outside the Stakes, which I believe kept her from going thro'; so I look'd upon her very wishfully, and was going back again; and as I came back I met with R. Dew and two of my Neighbours, and they ask'd me to go back with them, and said they were going to take her up; and being Constable, I told them I thought it was not proper to do it, and they said they had Orders for it; so I being Constable, went back with them, and when I came there I found her in the same Posture as before; we view'd her very wishfully; her Coat that was driven near the Stakes was seen, but none of her other Coats, or her Legs; and after we had look'd a little while upon her, we spake to Dell and Ulse to take her up, and one of them took hold of her Coat till he brought her above Water; and as her Arm drew up, I saw a black Place, and she laid sideway, that he could not take her up till they had let her down again, and so they twist'd her out sideway; for the Stakes were so near together that she could not lie upon her Belly, or upon her Back; and when they had taken her up, they laid her down upon a green Place, and after she was laid down, a great Quantity of Froth (like the Froth of new Beer) work'd out of her Nostrils.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. How much do call a great Quantity?

Young. It rose up in Bladders, and run down on the Sides of her Face, and so rose again; and seeing her look like a Gentlewoman, we desired one Ulse to search her Pockets, to see if there were any Letters, that we might know who she was; so the Woman did, and I believe there was twenty or more of us that knew her very well when she was alive, and not one of us knew her then; and the Woman search'd her Pockets, and took out six Guineas, ten Shillings, Three-pence halfpenny, and some other Things; and after that I desired some of my Neighbours to go with me and tell the Money; for when it came to be known who she was, I knew we must give an Account on't, and I laid it upon a Block and told it, and they ty'd it up in a Handkerchief, and I said I would keep the Money; and they should seal it up to prevent any Que-

Question about it; and during all this while of Discourse, and sealing up the Money, the Froth still work'd out of her Mouth.

Mr. Cowper. Have you measured the Depth of the Water? What Depth is it there?

Young. I measured the Water this Morning, and 'twas so high that it ran over the Floodgate, and the Height of it was about four Foot two Inches; but sometimes 'tis pent up to a greater Height than 'tis to Day.

Mr. Cowper. Was it higher to Day than when the Body was found?

Young. To the best of my Remembrance 'twas as high to Day as it was then.

Mr. Cowper. Was any Part of the Body above Water?

Young. No, nor nothing like the Body could be seen.

Mr. Cowper. Could you see where her Legs lay?

Young. No, nor nothing but her upper Coats, which were driven against the Stakes.

Mr. Cowper. Pray give an Account how long she lay there, and when she was convey'd away.

Young. I stay'd a quarter of an Hour, and then I went and sealed up the Money at my own House, so that I did not see her removed.

Mr. Jones. Was any Body there besides your self at this time?

Young. Yes, twenty People at the least.

Mr. Jones. Now here is Ten of them that have sworn that the Body was above the Surface of the Water.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. No, her Cloaths, they say, were, but the Body was something under the Water.

Mr. Cowper. Now I will trouble your Lordship no more with that Fact, but I will give you an Account of the Coroner's Inquest, how diligent they were in their Proceedings, and produce a Copy of the Inquisition it self, that she was found to have drowned herself.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. Mr. Cowper, that is no Evidence, if it be produced in order to contradict what these Witnesses have said, that have been examined for the King; but if you will prove, that they have sworn otherwise before the Coroner than they now do, then you say something, otherwise the Coroner's Inquest signifies nothing as to the present Question.

Mr. Cowper. Call Thomas Wall. I am loth to be troublesome; but if you please to favour me, I desire to know of them, whether they do admit there was an Inquisition, and that she was found Non Compos Mentis, and did kill her self.

Mr. Jones. We do admit it.

Jury-man. We desire it may be read.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. Why, won't you believe what they agree to on both Sides?

Jury-man. If they do agree so, I am satisfied.

Mr. Cowper. Thomas Wall, pray do you give an Account of what you know of Mrs. Stout's being taken up.

Wall. My Lord, I was one of the Jury, that view'd her at the Place where she was laid when she was taken up, and there was no Marks upon her, only a little Mark about her Ear, and something near her Collar-bone; that was all I see upon her.

Mr. Cowper. Do you know any thing of any Surgeons being employ'd to view those Marks?

Wall. My Lord, we had several Persons that came before us that we examin'd; we had a Dispute concerning these Marks what might effect them, and we desir'd Mr. Dimsdale and Mr. Camlin to see them, that we might be the better satisfied; and they both went down and view'd the Body after it was brought down to Mrs. Stout's, and they came back, both of them, and Mr. John Dimsdale told us, that these Marks were no more than were usual in such Cases, and it was only the Stagnation of Blood.

Mr. Cowper. Was it the old Man or the young Man?

Wall. It was the young Man.

Mr. Cowper. Usual did he say?

Wall. I can tell the very Words, I have them writ down.

Mr. Cowper. Pray do so, for he has denied it here.

Wall. (Looks on his Paper.) Here 'tis. Mr. Dimsdale and Mr. Camlin came to us, and Mr. Dimsdale spake and said these Marks are usual, or might be usual; or if they were Marks, it was no more than was usual in such Cases; and that it was the Stagnation of Blood.

Mr. Cowper. Now you have your Notes in your Hand, pray, what did Sarah Walker say to you as to the Time I went from Mrs. Stout's?

Wall. Sarah Walker said, it was about Eleven a-Clock when she took up Coals to warm the Bed, but she said she could not, nor did not know when Mr. Cowper went out, for she warm'd the Bed, and Mr. Cowper not coming up, she took up some more Coals, and tarried a little longer, and no Body coming up, she went down, and found Mr. Cowper was gone, and she look'd into the Parlour, and her Mistress was gone.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. The Woman said the same Thing.

Mr. Cowper. 'Tis necessary in this Particular as to the Time.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. She told you the Clocks did differ.

(Then Mr. Bowden was called.)

Mr. Cowper. Well, what do you know of the taking up of Mrs. Stout?

Bowden. I went with the rest of the Neighbours to view her, and I did perceive it was Mrs. Sarah Stout's Body, tho' some question'd it: I do believe I was the second Person that discover'd it was she; and, my Lord, I did see a great deal of Froth that came out of her Mouth and Nostrils.

Mr. Cowper. Did you go about to wipe it away?

Bowden. No, but some other Persons did; it came out in a great Quantity.

Mr. Jones. How much do you call a great Quantity?

Bowden. Her Mouth and Nostrils were very full of it.

Mr. Jones. Was not her Mouth shut?

Bowden. I did not observe that.

Mr. Cowper. How long had she lain there before you came?

Bowden. I believe I was there in half an Hour; as soon as I heard the Report of it I went down.

Mr. Cowper. Call Mr. Shute.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. Well, what can you say to this Matter?

Shute. Sir, I was summoned upon the Jury upon the Coroner's Inquest; and I perceiv'd when I was there, that the same Stuff worked out of Mrs. Stout's Nostrils as worked out of the Child's.

Mr.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. What Child is that you speak of? Is it the Child that was drowned in the same Place as Mrs. Stout was?

Shute. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, I am very tender how I take up your Lordship's Time; and therefore I will not trouble you with any more Witnesses upon this Head; but, with your Lordship's Leave, I will proceed to call some Physicians of Note and Eminence, to confront the Learning of the Gentlemen on the other Side.—Dr. Sloane, you were in Court when these Gentlemen delivered their Opinion concerning Mrs. Stout's having no Water in her; I desire you would give your Opinion in that Matter.

Dr. Sloane. I have not heard them very particularly or distinctly, because of the great Crowd; some of them I have; Cases of this kind are very uncommon, and none of them have fallen directly under my own Knowledge. As to my Opinion of drowning, it is plain, that if a great Quantity of Water be swallowed by the Gullet into the Stomach, it will not suffocate or drown the Person: Drunkards, who swallow freely a great deal of Liquor, and those who are forced by the Civil Law to drink a great Quantity of Water, which in giving the Question (as 'tis called) is poured into them by way of Torture to make them confess Crimes, have no Suffocation or Drowning happen to them: But on the other hand, when any Quantity comes into the Wind-pipe, so as it does hinder or intercept the Inspiration, or Coming-in of the Air, which is necessary for Respiration or Breathing, the Person is suffocated. Such a small Quantity will do, as sometimes in Prescriptions, when People have been very weak, or forced to take Medicines, I have observ'd some Spoonfuls in that Condition (if it went the wrong Way) to have choaked or suffocated the Person. I take Drowning in a great measure to be thus; and though it is very likely when one struggles he may (to save himself from being choaked) swallow some Quantity of Water, yet that is not the Cause of his Death, but that which goes into the Wind-pipe and Lungs. Whether a Person comes dead or alive into the Water, I believe some Quantity will go into the Wind-pipe; and I believe, without Force after Death, little will get into the Stomach, because that it should, swallowing is necessary, which after Death cannot be done.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. Pray, Doctor, I understand you say this; that in case a Person is drowned, that there may be but little Water in the Stomach?

Dr. Sloane. That it is accidental, my Lord.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. But what do you say to this; if there had been Water in the Body, would it not have putrified the Parts after it had lain six Weeks?

Dr. Sloane. My Lord, I am apt to think it would have putrified the Stomach less than the Lungs, because the Stomach is a Part of the Body that is contrived by Nature partly to receive Liquids; but the Contrivance of the Lungs is only for the receiving of Air; they being of a spongy Nature, the Water might sink more into them than the Stomach; but I believe it might putrify there too after some time. I am apt to think, that when a Body is buried under Ground, according to the Depth of the Grave, and Difference of the Weather and Soil, the Fermentation may be greater or lesser, and that according to the several Kinds of Meats or Liquids in the Stomach the Putri-faction will likewise vary; so that it seems to me to be very uncertain.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. But when they are in a Coffin, how is it then?

Dr. Sloane. No doubt there will be a Fermentation more or less, according as the Air comes more or less to the Body. Indeed it may be otherwise, where the Air is wholly shut out, which is supposed to be the Way of Embalming, or preserving of dead Bodies of late, without the Use of any Spices, which is thought in a great measure to be brought about by the Closeness of the Coffin, and hindering of the Air from coming in to the Body.

Mr. Cowper. Is it possible, in your Judgment, for any Water to pass into the Thorax?

Dr. Sloane. I believe 'tis hardly possible that any should go from the Wind-pipe into the Cavity of the Thorax, without great Violence and Force; for there is a Membrane that covers the Outside of the Lungs, that will hinder the Water from passing through it into any Part without them.

Mr. Cowper. Now, do you think it possible to find Water in a drowned Body after six Weeks time?

Dr. Sloane. I am apt to think if there was any Quantity in the Lungs, the Sponginess of the Part would suck up some Part of it. As to the Stomach, I have not known it tried; but 'tis like, if there was a great Fermentation, a great deal of it would rise up in Vapours or Steams, and go off that way.

Mr. Cowper. Dr. Garth, I can't tell whether you were in Court when the Surgeons who are Witnesses for the King gave their Evidence.

Dr. Garth. Yes, I was.

Mr. Cowper. Then I desire you, Sir, to give your Opinion as to those Particulars.

Dr. Garth. I observed in this Trial the first Gentleman call'd for the King that spoke to this Matter was Mr. Coatsworth: He saith he was sent for to open her, upon an Aspersion of her being said to be with Child. I agree with him in what he speaks to that Point, but must differ with him where he infers she was murdered, because he found no great Quantity of Water in her, as also her Head extremely mortified, but not her Lungs (Lungs and Bowels I think were used promiscuously.) Now, my Lord, as to the Matter of Putrifaction, I think 'tis not much material whether there be any Water or no in the Cavities of the Body; if Water would hasten Putrifaction, it would do it as well in the Lungs as otherwise; there is always some Water in the Lympheducts there, the Breaking of which may be one Occasion of Catarrhs. As to what relates to the Putrifaction of the Head, it may happen from a Stoppage of the reflux Blood, which is staid there in a great Quantity, through the Suffocation in the Water, or from the Nearness of the Brain, which is observed often to mortify first.

The next was Mr. Dimsdale (I would speak to them all in order if my Memory would permit) I think he was of the same Opinion as Mr. Coatsworth; he laid the Stress of his Suspicion upon the Mortification of the Head, which I think is not at all material, no more than what they infer from her floating; it being impossible the Body should have floated, unless it had rested, or had been entangled among the Stakes, because all dead Bodies (I believe) fall to the Bottom, unless they be prevented by some extraordinary Tumour. My Lord, we have not only Philosophy, but Experiments for this. The Witnesses all agree she was found upon her Side, which to suppose her to float in this posture, is as hard to be conceived, as to imagine a Shilling should fall down and rest upon its Edge rather than its broad Side; or that a Deal Board shou'd rather float Edgeways than therwise; therefore 'tis plain she was entangled, or else the Posture had been otherwise.

As to the Quantity of Water, I do not think it necessary it should be very great. I must own the Water will force itself into all Cavities where there's no Resistance. I believe when she threw herself in, she might not struggle to save herself, and by consequence not sup up much Water. Now there's no direct Passage into the Stomach but by the Gullet, which is contracted or purs'd up by a Muscle in Nature of a Sphincter: For if this Passage was always open, like that of the Wind-pipe, the Weight of the Air would force it self into the Stomach, and we should be sensible of the greatest Inconveniencies. I doubt not, but that some Water fell into her Lungs, because the Weight of it would force itself down; but if we consider the Wind-pipe with its Ramifications as one Cylinder, the Calculation of its Contents will not amount to above twenty-three or twenty-four solid Inches of Water, which is not a Pint, and which might imperceptibly work and fall out. I remember I offered a Wager at Garaway's Coffee-House to a Gentleman here in Court.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. Pray, Doctor, tell us your Opinion as to what the Seaman said, and also as to what Dr. Sloane said, whether Water in the Body will putrify it.

Dr. Garth. I say not; for in some Places they keep Flesh-Meat from corrupting by preserving it in Water, and 'tis well known 'twill putrify less so, than when exposed to Air.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. But what do you say as to the sinking of dead Bodies in Water?

Dr. Garth. If a strangled Body be thrown into the Water, the Lungs being filled with Air, and a Cord left about the Neck, 'tis possible it may float, because of the included Air, as a Bladder wou'd; but here is neither Cord, nor any Mark of it, nor nothing but a common Stagnation.

Mr. Baron Hatfield. But you don't observe my Question; the Seaman said, that those that die at Sea, and are thrown overboard, if you don't tye a Weight to them, they will not sink: What say you to that?

Dr. Garth. My Lord, no doubt in this they're mistaken. The Seamen are a superstitious People, they fancy that whistling at Sea will occasion a Tempest: I must confess I never saw any Body thrown overboard, but I have tried some Experiments on other dead Animals, and they will certainly sink; we have tried this since we came hither. Now, my Lord, I think, we have Reason to suspect the Seaman's Evidence; for he saith, that threescore Pound of Iron is allowed to sink the dead Bodies, whereas six or seven Pounds would do as well. I cannot think the Commissioners of the Navy guilty of so ill Husbandry; but the Design of tying Weights to their dead Bodies, is to prevent their floating at all, which otherwise wou'd happen in some few Days: Therefore what I say is this, that if these Gentlemen had found a Cord, or the Print of it, about the Neck of this unfortunate Gentlewoman, or any Wound that had occasioned her Death, they might then have said something.

Mr. Cowper. Do you apprehend that any Quantity of Water can enter into the Cavity of the Thorax.

Dr. Garth. 'Tis impossible there should till the Lungs be quite rotten; there is no Way but by the Lungs, which are invested with so strong a Membrane, that we cannot force Breath with our Blow-pipes through it; and there's a great Providence in such a Texture, for if there were any large Pores in the Membrane, the Air would pass thro' it into the Cavity of the Thorax, and prevent the Dilatation of the Lungs, and by consequence there would be an End of Breathing.

Mr. Cowper. Dr. Morley, pray be pleased to give your Opinion of these Matters.

Dr. Morley. Those which seem to be Questions of greatest Moment, are whether there was a Necessity for this Body (if drown'd) to have a great Quantity of Water in it, and whether Bodies thrown dead into the Water float. To the first I answer positively, that there is no absolute Necessity that she should have a great Quantity of Water in her; and I think the Question Mr. Cowper ask'd Dr. Coatsworth, whether he had like to have been drowned by Accident or Design, suits with my Assertion; for if this Gentlewoman did voluntarily drown her self, she then, in all likelihood, threw herself into the Water, with a Resolution of keeping her Breath for a speedy Suffocation; and then if upon the first Endeavours for Respiration (which naturally must be) she drew into her Lungs two Ounces of Water, it was the same Thing to drowning of her, as if there had been two Tun. We see the same Thing done by Divers in order to save themselves, as it happened to this unfortunate Gentlewoman, in her Design of destroying her self: If a Diver, before he comes to the Surface of Water, should so far mistake his Power of holding his Breath, that he should be forced to endeavour Respiration, the little Water he drew into his Lungs by this Attempt to respire, may drown him. We last Night drown'd a Dog, and afterwards dissected him, and found not a Spoonful of Water in his Stomach, and, I believe, about two Ounces in his Lungs; while we were doing this, we drowned another, and he lay at the Bottom and did not float; no more would he have done, if he had been hang'd before thrown into the Water: We took him up, and opening him, we found much about the same Quantity of Water in his Lungs, and little or none in his Stomach. They both froth'd at Nose and Mouth, because the Water coming into the little Bladders of the Lungs, and there meeting with Air, a Commotion arose between the Water and Air, which caused the Froth. To the second Question, I think if Bodies new killed swim, 'tis by Accident; for the Reason that Bodies swim, is because by Putrification they rarify, by Rarification they grow lighter, which brings them to the Top of the Water.

Mr. Cowper. I desire to know if any Man of Skill in Prudence would give his Opinion?

Mr. Baron Hatfield. This is not a proper Question.

Mr. Cowper. Then I will ask it thus: Do you think, Doctor, it is to be known six Weeks after, if a Person was drowned?

Dr. Morley. I think it is morally impossible.

Mr. Cowper. Can there be any Water in the Thorax?

Dr. Morley. By an Imposthume or some Violence to Nature possibly; but I think no otherwise.

Mr.

Mr. Cowper. Dr. Woollaston, what is your Opinion if a Person be drowned, whether it can be discover'd six Weeks after?

Dr. Woollaston. My Lord, I think it is impossible to be known; for if there had been never so much Water in the Body at first, it could not lie there so long, but must of necessity have forced its way out. We see in Persons that die of Dropsies, that the Water will work it self out (and sometimes burst the Body) before it is buried; and, I am sure, if it do so in Dropsies, where there are no visible Passages for it to get out at, it must do so much more in drowned Persons, where the Water lies only in the Stomach and Guts, and has nothing to hinder its working out when it ferments, as it always doth.

Mr. Cowper. Have you ever made any Experiments in that nature, Doctor?

Dr. Woollaston. I have made no Experiments, but I have seen a very particular Instance.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. That is very well; pray let us hear it, Doctor.

Dr. Woollaston. My Lord, about three Years since, I saw two Men that were drowned out of the same Boat. They were taken up the next Day after they were drowned: One of 'em was indeed prodigiously swell'd, so much that his Cloaths were burst in several Places of his Sides and Arms, and his Stockings in the Seams; his Hands and Fingers were strangely extended; his Face was almost all over black; but the other was not in the least swell'd in any Part, nor discolour'd; he was as lank, I believe, as ever he was in his Lifetime; and there was not the least Sign of any Water in him, except the watery Froth at his Mouth and Nostrils. My Lord, this I saw my self, and took very particular Notice of it.

Mr. Jones. Did you see these Bodies taken out of the Water your self, Doctor?

Dr. Woollaston. No, Sir.

Mr. Jones. How long had they been taken out when you saw them?

Dr. Woollaston. I enquir'd, and to the best of my Memory, it was that same Day.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. But what do you think, Doctor, of a Person's being drowned without taking in any Water?

Dr. Woollaston. My Lord, what is taken in is, I believe, chiefly at the Surface of the Water, when they open their Mouths for Breath, and the Water that rushes in they are forced to drink down, to keep it from the Lungs: But when the Head is quite under Water, I don't think 'tis possible for any quantity to get down into the Stomach; because it being Breath they open for, the very first Water they take in would of necessity fill the Lungs; and, when the Breath is stopp'd, I don't see how they can swallow.

Mr. Cowper. Dr. Gelfrop, what is your Opinion of this Matter?

Dr. Gelfrop. I don't think they can make any Judgment of Persons being drowned after Six Weeks time.

Mr. Cowper. Can any Water get into the Thorax?

Dr. Gelfrop. No, not unless the Lungs be putrified.

Mr. Cowper. Is a great quantity of Water necessary to Persons dying by drowning?

Dr. Gelfrop. No; only so much as may hinder Respiration.

VOL. V.

Mr. Cowper. Now, my Lord, I would call Mr. William Cowper; and because of his Name, I must acquaint your Lordship; that he is not at all related to me, tho' I should be proud to own him if he were so: He is a Man of great Learning, and, I believe, most People admit him the best Anatomist in Europe. Mr. Cowper, pray will you give your Opinion of this Matter?

Mr. W. Cowper. My Lord, I hope what I shall say will not be suspected because I am of the same Name, for this Gentleman is an utter Stranger to me.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Pray, Mr. Cowper, without any Apology, give your Opinion concerning Persons drowned; and how 'tis with them in their inward Parts.

Mr. W. Cowper. I will give you a short Account, I hope to your Satisfaction too, my Lord. I will not only speak from Reason, but give you the Testimony of the Experiments I have made upon this Occasion. My Lord, I heard it made a mighty Argument, that this Person had no Water that seem'd to flow out, but the Witnesses agree that there was a Froth. Now, my Lord, it was not reasonable to expect any thing but Froth. My Lord, had she been thrown into the Water, and made her utmost Efforts, which she would then have done to have saved her self, and been often buoy'd up to the Top of the Water, no doubt but she would have swallow'd a considerable quantity of Water before she had been drowned; and it may be expected to flow from her, if her Head had been inclined downwards.

This is a Truth that no Man can deny who is acquainted with any Thing of this nature, That when the Head of an Animal is under Water, the first time 'tis oblig'd to inspire (or draw in Air) the Water will necessarily flow into its Lungs, as the Air would do if it were out of the Water; which quantity of Water (if the Dimensions of the Windpipe, and its Branches in the Lungs, be consider'd) will not amount to three Inches square, which is about three Ounces of Water. Nor is a greater quantity of Water in the Windpipe necessary to choak any Person, if we do but reflect what an Ebullition is caused by its meeting with the Air which remain'd in the Lungs, whereby a small quantity of Water is converted into Froth, and the Chancel of the Windpipe, and those of the Bronchia, are fill'd with it, infomuch that no Air can enter the Lungs for the Office of Respiration. After a Suffocation is thus commenced (I am apt to think) all regular animal Actions are perverted, and particularly that of swallowing (or Deglutition); and what Water flows into the Lungs at the Instant, or after this Suffocation, is from its own Weight, which is more or less as the Body is farther under, or nearer the Surface of the Water. My Lord, I don't speak this by way of Conjecture or Hypothesis, but I have made Experiments, which have suggested what I here offer. I shall by the by tell you how fallacious the first Experiment was, when I propos'd to satisfy my self, whether a dead Body would float in Water: It happen'd that a Spaniel, that had a great deal of long Hair, was hang'd for this Purpose, which I found to swim on the Surface of the Water; but when I consider'd that his Hair might buoy him up, I caus'd another Dog, which had shorter and less Hair, to be hang'd and put into the Water, which (agreeable to what I had always conceiv'd of a Human Body) sunk directly to the Bottom. In order to satisfy my self what quantity of Water was necessary to enter the Body of an Animal, and cause a Suffocation in Water, I caused three Dogs, when alive, to be suddenly plunged under Water till they were stifled; one was before I left London, the other two I made the Experiment on last Night, in the Presence of Dr. Sloane and Dr. Morley, and we could not compute there was more than three Ounces of Water in their Lungs, and none that we could perceive in their Stomachs.

Dead Bodies necessarily sink in Water, if no Distention of their Parts buoy 'em up; this Distention sometimes happens before Death, at other times soon after, and in Bodies that are drowned after they lie under Water: This Enlargement of them is caused by a Rarefaction of the Humours within the Cavities, and the Bodies necessarily rises to the Surface of the Water. Your Lordship may infer this from what the Seaman told you, and the great Weight they use to fasten to their Bodies that die of Diseases, was not of such use to sink them, as it was to prevent their floating afterwards; so that the Weight was necessary for those that were kill'd, as well as those that died of Diseases.

It is so commonly known that the Contents in the Stomach of a dead Body are discharg'd by the Mouth and Nostrils, so soon as it begins to ferment, and the Belly becomes distended, that it is no Wonder that Water, if the greatest quantity of that had been in the Stomach, or any thing else that was fluid, must be forced from thence six Weeks after Death.

My Lord, I can't but think it ridiculous to expect Water in the Cavity of the Thorax; 'tis such a Conceit as nothing in Nature can account for, unless the Lungs had suffer'd some Aposthumation, or the like, whereby the Water my pass their outward Membranes into that Cavity.

Mr. Cowper. With your Lordship's Favour, I now think it a proper Time to make this Observation. The Witnesses that have given Evidence for the King do say, They believe she was not drowned; but they have not pretended to say how she died otherwise.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. That is very true.

Mr. Cowper. Dr. Crell, I desire you will be pleased to give an Account of this Matter.

Dr. Crell. My Lord, I have little to say in this Affair, the Physicians that have been examin'd already having made it out, that Persons who are drowned may have but little Water in their Bodies; but I have taken what Pains I could, upon so short Warning, and I will tell you the Opinion of several eminent Authors. My own Opinion is, That a very small quantity of Water, not exceeding three Ounces, is sufficient to drown any Body; and I believe that the Reason of the Suffocation, or of any Person's being stifled under Water, is from the intercepting of the Air, that the Person can't breathe, without which he cannot live. Now, my Lord, I will give you the Opinion of several ancient Authors.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. Pray, Doctor, tell us your own Observations.

Dr. Crell. My Lord, it must be Reading, as well as a Man's own Experience, that will make any one a Physician; for without the reading of Books of that Art, the Art itself cannot be attain'd to; besides, my Lord, I humbly conceive; that in such a difficult Case as this, we ought to have a great Deference for the Reports and Opinions of learned Men: Neither do I see any Reason why I should not quote the Fathers of my Profession in this Case, as well as you Gentlemen of the Long-Robe quote Coke upon Littleton in others: But I shall not trouble the Court long; I shall only insist upon what Ambrose Parey relates in his Chapter of Renunciations. He was chief Surgeon to Francis the First, employ'd by him in most of his Sieges and Battles against the Emperor Charles the Fifth, and consequently must observe, and could not be ignorant of such like Casualties in such great Bodies of Men. He tells us, That the certain Sign of a Man's being drowned, is an Appearance of Froth about his Nostrils and Mouth. Now, my Lord, I think that every one of the King's Evidences observ'd it in the present Case, and a Woman swore, that she saw her purge at the Nose; which could not be, as he declares, if the Person had been strangled, or otherwise kill'd before.

As to the Quantity of Water requisite to drown a Person, I believe that three Ounces, or less, is enough; to wit, as much as will fill the Windpipe, and so stop the breathing of the Person drowning. I am not now to descant upon Matter of Fact, whether she drowned her self; but my firm Opinion is, that she was drown'd; for tho' sometimes, not always, there is Water found in the Bodies of such Persons; yet where-ever it be, besides the Lungs, it is superfluous as to this End, and accidental upon violent Strugglings.

Mr. Cowper. I desire Mr. Harriot may be ask'd what Observations he hath made concerning this Matter.

Mr. Harriot. My Lord, when I was a Surgeon in the Fleet, I made it always my Observation when we threw Men over-board that were kill'd, some of them swam, and some sunk; and I remember particularly, when the Sandwich was burnt, we saw abundance leap off from on board, and they sunk directly, but in a little time I observ'd some swim again.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. When a dead Body is thrown over-board, does it sink or swim?

Mr. Harriot. I always observ'd that it did sink: When we were in the Channel, and in Time of Peace, we never threw any over-board but we put some Weight to them; but it was not to make them sink, but for Decency sake, that they might not be driven to Shore when they began to float.

Mr. Cowper. I desire that Mr. Bartlet may be ask'd to the same Purpose.

Mr. Bartlet. I have been in several of the King's Ships of War that have been disabled and forced to lie by, in several Engagements between the French and English, and I never saw any Bodies float, either of the Men that were kill'd in our Ship, or in the Ships that have been near us; I have not seen a Body upon the Surface of the Water.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. Another Witness said, That after an Engagement he saw them swimming.

Mr. Bartlet. I can't tell what he saw, my Lord; but what I say I am ready to make Oath of.

Mr. Cowper. Dr. Camlin, will you please to give my Lord and the Jury an Account whether you were employ'd by the Coroner's Inquest to view the Body of Mrs. Stout after she was drowned, and the Marks upon it, and tell my Lord your Opinion of it.

Mr. Camlin. I was sent for by the Coroner and the the Jury that sat upon the Body of Mrs. Sarah Stout, the Coroner being then at her Mother's House, and the Coroner desired Mr. Dimsdale and me to go and take notice of the Marks upon her Neck, and upon her Breast: We view'd all about, and perceiv'd a Mark under her left Ear; we look'd to see if there was any Contusion, and we perceiv'd a Settlement of Blood upon her Breast, and another upon her Arm; and when we came back, Mr. Dimsdale made a Report, I flood by him at that time, That it was only a common Settlement.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, Mr. Camlin, was the Spot above or below the Collar-bone?

Mr. Camlin. Below the Collar-bone.

Mr. Cowper. What did Mr. John Dimsdale say then concerning this Matter?

Mr. Camlin. I understood that he was of Opinion, that it was only a common Stagnation of Blood, that happens in the Case of drowned People.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. Did he say so to the Jury?

Mr. Camlin. Mr. Dimsdale spake for us both, and I understood him, that it was a Stagnation that did commonly happen to drowned People; and that was my Opinion of it too.

Mr. Cowper. And that you agreed to be your Report?

Mr. Camlin. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, Mr. Camlin, was you present when the Child that was drowned in the same Place was taken up?

Mr. Camlin. Yes; it was taken up some time after, near the same Place, as I was told, and there was more and greater Signs of the Stagnation of Blood on the Body of this Child, than on the Body of Mrs. Stout; the Child's Face was black and discolour'd.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. How old was the Child?

Mr. Camlin. Between Ten and Eleven, as near as I could guess.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. Had Mrs. Stout any Signs of being strangled when you saw her first?

Mr. Camlin. Nothing at all, that I could discern.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, I will give you no more Trouble upon this Head; I shall go now to the next Thing I opened, and shall prove substantially that this Gentlewoman is not only more to be suspected to have murder'd her self, than to be murder'd by any Body; but 'tis almost a Certainty that she was the Cause of her own Death. Mr. Firmin I would begin withal, if he be here.

(But he not presently appearing.)

Mr. Cowper. Then, my Lord, if you please, I will desire Mr. Bowd in the mean time to give your Lordship an Account of what he knows of the Melancholy of this Gentlewoman.

Mr. Bowd. 'Twas much about this time Twelve-month I had some Business in London, and she sent to me, to know when I should go to London, and I waited upon her before I went, and she desired me to do some Business for her; and when I return'd, I acquainted her with what I had done; and sitting together in the Hall, I asked her, What's the Matter with you? Said I, There's something more than ordinary; you seem to be melancholy. Saith she, You are come from London, and you have heard something or other: Said I, I believe you are in Love. In Love! said she, Yes, said I, Cupid that little Boy hath struck you home: She took me by the Hand; Truly, said she, I must confess it, but I did think I should never be guilty of such a Folly; and I answered again, I admire that should make you uneasy; if the Person be not of that Fortune as you are, you may, if you love him, make him happy, and your self easy. That can't be, saith she; the World shall not say I change my Religion for a Husband. And some time after I had been in London, having bought some India Goods, she came to my Shop and bought some of me for a Gown, and afterwards she came to pay me for it, and I asked her, How do you like it? Have you made it up? No said she, and I believe I shall never live to wear it.

Mr. Cowper. Pray how long is it since?

Mr. Bowd. It was about February or January before her Death. I ask'd her why she did not come to my House oftener? she said, She had left off all Company, and apply'd herself to Reading, and Company was indifferent to her.

Mr. Cowper. Mr. Firmin, will you please to inform my Lord and the Jury what you know of Mrs. Sarah Stout's being melancholy?

Mr. Firmin. I did observe about three quarters of a Years ago, that she was melancholy; I can't say that she acknowledg'd her self to be so, but I have charg'd her with it.

Mr. Cowper. Did you believe she was melancholy when you charg'd her with it?

Mr. Firmin. Yes, I did.

Mr. Cowper. Mrs. Bendy, if you please to inform the Court what you know of this Gentlewoman's being melancholy.

Mrs. Bendy. Sir, I can say she always acknowledg'd her self extremely melancholy; and when I have ask'd her how she did, she has said, Pretty well in Health, but so much troubled with Melancholy she could not tell what to do with her self.

Mr. Cowper. Did she tell you any Thing particularly?

Mrs. Bendy. It disorder'd her so, she said, that she had rather have chosen Sickness than so much Disorder in her Mind.

Mr. Cowper. Have you any Thing more to recollect?

Mrs. Bendy. Nothing but what I heard from Mrs. Cowper.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. How old was this Gentlewoman?

Mrs. Bendy. About Six and twenty.

Mr. Cowper. Call Mrs. Jane Low, Mariba Grub and Mrs. Cowper. Mrs. Low, pray do you inform my Lord and the Jury what you know concerning the Melancholy of Mrs. Sarah Stout, and when you first observ'd it.

Mrs. Low. 'Twas a Week before Whitsuntide was Twelve-month.

Mr. Cowper. What did she say then?

Mrs. Low. She often complain'd to me, that she was very melancholy and uneasy; one Time particularly, as we were walking together in the Fields, I ask'd her the Occasion of it, and she told me, That was a Secret; but she said, she led a very melancholy Life: Said I, I am apt to believe you are in Love; she did not disown it, and with a little more speaking she own'd she was. I ask'd her who the Person was; she said, That should be a Secret, but it would end her Days: Said I, a Woman of your Fortune may command any Body: She shook her Head and said, No: Perhaps, said I,

he

he may not be a Quaker, and you may be afraid of disobliging your Mother; but if you tell your Mother that your Life depends upon it, your Mother (rather than lose her only Child) will consent to it: She said, No; 'twas a Person she could not marry; and shook her Head, and look'd very melancholy.

Mr. Cowper. When was this?

Mrs. Low. This was the Week before Whitsuntide; and in Whitsun-week she saw me often, and said, She would take her full swing of Melancholy when her Mother was away; and she used to lie a-Bed that Week.

Mr. Cowper. Have you observ'd any Melancholy in her since?

Mrs. Low. Yes, at several times.

Mr. Cowper. Do you remember any thing of an intermitting Fever?

Mrs. Low. Yes; she told me her Melancholy had occasion'd an intermitting Fever; and I mention'd Dr. Eales to her, and she said her Distemper lay in her Mind, and not in her Body, and she would take nothing, and the sooner it did kill her the better.

Mr. Cowper. Did she say any thing of her Disposition to Reading?

Mrs. Low. She said, nothing delighted her now, neither Reading nor any thing else.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, Sarah Walker, when I ask'd her if she did not observe the Melancholy of her Mistress, and whether she had not said that her Mistress had been melancholy? deny'd that she had said so: Pray have you heard her say any thing to that Purpose?

Mrs. Low. I have often ask'd her how her Mistress did, and she would answer, Very much indispos'd, but not otherwise.

Mr. Cowper. Mrs. Cowper, what do you know of Mrs. Stout's Melancholy?

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, this is my Brother's Wife.

Mrs. Cowper. About Spring was Twelve-month she came up to London, and I believe it was not less than once or twice a Week I saw her; and I never had an Opportunity to be an Hour alone with her at any time, but I perceiv'd something of her Melancholy. I have ask'd her the Reason of it several times, and sometimes she seem'd to dislike her Profession, being a Quaker; and sometimes she would say, that she was uneasy at something that lay upon her Spirits, which she should never out-live; and, that she should never be well while she was in this World. Sometimes I have endeavour'd to persuade her out of it seriously, and sometimes by Raillery, and have said, Are you sure you shall be better in another World? And particularly I remember I have said to her, I believe you have Mr. Marshall in your Head; either have him, or do not trouble your self about him; make your self easy either one way or another; and she hath said, No, in an indifferent way, I cannot make my self easy: Then I have said, Marry him; No, saith she, I can't. Sometimes with Company she would be diverted, and had frequently a way of throwing her Hands, and shew'd great Disturbance and Uneasiness. This time Twelve-month, at the Summer Assizes, I was here six Days, and I saw her every Day; and one time, among other Discourse, she told me she had receiv'd great Disturbance from one Theophilus, a Waterman and a Quaker, who coming down to old Mrs. Stout, that was then lame, she had gather'd about 20 or 30

People together to hear him preach, and she said he directed his Discourse to her, and exasperated her at that rate, that she had thoughts of seeing no Body again, and said, she took it heinously ill to be so us'd; and particularly, that he told her that her Mother's falling outwardly in the Flesh should be a Warning that she did not fall inwardly; and such Canting Stuff, as she call'd it; and she said, that Theophilus had so used her, that she was ashamed to shew her Head. Another time, the same Week, she had a Fever, and she said, she was in great hopes it would end her Days, and that she neglected her self in doing those Things that were necessary for her Health, in hopes it would carry her off, and often wish'd her self dead. Another time, which I think was the last time I saw her, 'twas at my Sister's Lodgings, and I sent for her to drink a Dish of Tea with us, and she came in a great Toss and Melancholy: Said I, What is the Matter you are always in this Humour? Saith she, I can't help it, I shall never be otherwise. Saith my Sister, for God sake keep such Thoughts out of your Head as you have had, don't talk any more of throwing your self out of Window: Saith she, I may thank God that ever I saw your Face, otherwise I had done it, but I can't promise I shall not do it.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. What is your Name, Madam?

Mr. Cowper. 'Tis my Brother's Wife, my Lord. I desire Mrs. Toller may give an Account of what she knows as to her being melancholy.

Mrs. Toller. My Lord, she was once to see me, and she look'd very melancholy, and I ask'd her what was the Matter? and she said, Something had vex'd her that Day; and I ask'd her the Cause of it, and she stopp'd a little while, and then said, She would drown her self out of the Way.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. How long ago was this?

Mrs. Toller. About three quarters of a Year ago.

John Stout. I desire to know whether she has always said so, or not told another Story.

Mrs. Toller. I told you no Story; it may be I did not say so much to you, but I said she talk'd something of drowning. I have been with her when Mr. Cowper's Conversation and Name has been mention'd, and she said she kept but little Company, that sometimes she went to Mrs. Low's, and that she kept none but civil modest Company, and that Mr. Cowper was a civil modest Gentleman, and that she had nothing to say against him.

Mr. Cowper. This is Mrs. Eliz. Toller, my Lord.

Mrs. Eliz. Toller. My Lord, she came to see me some time after Christmas, and seem'd not so cheerful as she us'd to be; said I, What is the matter? Why are you not so merry as you us'd to be? Why do you not come often to see me? Saith she, I don't think to go abroad so much as I us'd to do, and said, It would be as much a Rarity to see her go abroad, as to see the Sun shine by Night.

Mr. Cowper. Mrs. Grub, what do you know concerning Mrs. Stout's pulling out a Letter at her Brother Mr. John Stout's? Give an Account of it, and what she said upon that Occasion.

Mrs. Grub. I have a Daughter that lives at Guernsey, and she sent me a Letter, and I pray'd Mrs. Sarah Stout to read the Letter; and while she was reading it I cry'd; saith she, Why do you cry? Said I, Because my Child is so far off. Said she, If I live till Winter is over, I will go over Sea as far as I can for the Land.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. What was the Occasion of her saying so?

Mrs.

Mrs. Grub. I was washing my Master's Study, Mrs. Sarah Stout came in, and I had a Letter from my Daughter at Guernsey, and I pray'd Mrs. Sarah Stout to read it, and she read my Letter, and I cry'd, and she ask'd me why I cry'd; said I, because my Child is so far off: Saith she, if I live to Winter, or till Winter is over, I will go over Sea as far as I can for the Land.

Mr. Cowper. Now, my Lord, to bring this Matter of Melancholy to the Point of Time, I will call one Witness more, who will speak of a remarkable Instance that happen'd on Saturday before the Monday when she did destroy her self.

Call Mr. Joseph Taylor. Pray, will you inform the Court and Jury of what you observ'd on Saturday before the Monday on which Mrs. Stout destroy'd her self.

J. Taylor. I happen'd to go in at Mr. Firmin's Shop, and there she sat the Saturday before this Accident happen'd, the former Affizes, and I was saying to her, Madam, I think you look strangely discontented; I never saw you dress'd so in my Life: Saith she, the Dress will serve me as long as I shall have occasion for a Dress.

Mr. Cowper. In what Posture did she appear in the Shop?

J. Taylor. She appear'd to be very melancholy.

Mr. Cowper. What Part of her Dress did you find fault with?

J. Taylor. It was her Head-cloaths.

Mr. Cowper. What was the Matter with them?

J. Taylor. I thought her Head was dawb'd with some kind of Grease or Charcoal.

Mr. Cowper. What Answer did she make?

J. Taylor. She said, they would serve her Time.

Mr. Cowper. As to this Piece of Evidence, if your Lordship please, I desire it may be particularly taken notice of; 'twas her Head-dress that she said would serve her Time.

Pray, Mr. Taylor, was you at Mr. Barefoot's when I came there on Monday Morning?

J. Taylor. Yes; I went up Stairs with you into your Chamber.

Mr. Cowper. Pray what did I say to Mr. Barefoot?

J. Taylor. You ask'd him if they had received a Letter from your Brother, and he said, No, not that he knew of, but he would call his Wife; and he did call his Wife, and ask'd her if she had receiv'd a Letter, and she said, No; then said you, I will take up this Lodging for mine; and accordingly you went up Stairs, and I went with you, and staid there about four times as long as I have been here.

Mr. Cowper. Are you very sure that I said I would take up my Lodgings there?

J. Taylor. Yes, I am very sure of it.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. What Time of the Day was it?

J. Taylor. 'Twas the fore Part of the Day: while I was there, my Lord, Mrs. Sarah Stout's Maid came to invite Mr. Cowper to her House to Dinner.

Mr. Cowper. Did you know any thing of my sending to the Coffee-house?

J. Taylor. You sent to the Coffee-house for your Things.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Did Mr. Cowper use to lie at Mrs. Barefoot's?

J. Taylor. His Brother did, but I do not know whether this Gentleman did; but at that Time he took up that Place for his Lodging, and said, it was all one, my Brother must pay for't, and therefore I will take it up for my self.

Mr. Cowper. Call Mrs. Barefoot and her Maid.

(But they not presently appearing.)

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, in the mean time I will go on to the other Part of my Evidence, in opening of which I shall be very short.

My Lord, my Wife lodging at Hertford, occasion'd me frequently to come down. Mrs. Stout became well acquainted with her: When Business was over in the long Vacation, I resided pretty much at Hertford, and Mr. Marshall came down to pay me a Visit, and this introduced his Knowledge of Mrs. Stout. When she was first acquainted with him she receiv'd him with a great deal of Civility and Kindness, which induced him to make his Addresses to her, as he did, by way of Courtship. It happen'd one Evening that she and one Mrs. Crook, Mr. Marshall, and my self, were walking together, and Mr. Marshall and Mrs. Crook going some little Way before us, she took this Opportunity to speak to me, in such Terms, I must confess, as surpriz'd me. Says she, Mr. Cowper, I did not think you had been so dull. I was inquisitive to know in what my Dulness did consist. Why, says she, do you imagine I intend to marry Mr. Marshall? I said, I thought she did, and that if she did not, she was much to blame in what she had done: No, says she, I thought it might serve to divert the Censure of the World, and favour our Acquaintance. My Lord, I have some original Letters under her own Hand, which will make this fully manifest: I will produce the Letters after I have call'd Mr. Marshall. Mr. Marshall.

Mr. Marshall. If your Lordship please, it was in the long Vacation I came down to spend a little of my leisure Time at Hertford; the Reason of my going thither was, because Mr. Cowper was there at that Time. The first Night when I came down I found Mrs. Sarah Stout visiting at Mr. Cowper's Lodgings, and there I first came acquainted with her; and she afterwards gave me frequent Opportunities of improving that Acquaintance: And by the Manner of my Reception by her, I had no Reason to suspect the Use it seems I was design'd for. When I came to Town, my Lord, I was generally told of my courting Mrs. Stout, which I confess was not then in my Head; but it being represented to me as a Thing easy to be got over, and believing the Report of the World as to her Fortune, I did afterwards make my Application to her, but, upon very little Trial of that sort, I receiv'd a very fair Denial, and there ended my Suit; Mr. Cowper having been so friendly to me, as to give me notice of some Things, that convinc'd me I ought to be thankful I had no more to do with her.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. When did she cast you off?

Mr. Marshall. I can't be positive as to the Time, my Lord, but it was in Answer to the only serious Letter I ever writ to her; as I remember, I was not over-impertunate in this Affair, for I never was a very violent Lover.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Well, but tell the Time as near as you can.

Mr. Marshall. I believe 'twas the second or third time I came down to Hertford, which is about a Year and half since; and, during the Whole of my Acquaintance with her, I never till then found her averse to any Proposal of mine; but she then telling me, her Resolution was not to comply with what I desir'd, I took her at her Word, having partly by my own Observation, but more by Mr. Cowper's Friendship, been pretty well able to guess at her Meaning.

Mr.

Mr. Cowper. Because what you say may stand confirmed beyond Contradiction, I desire you to say whether you have any Letters from her to yourself.

Mr. Marshall. Yes, I have a Letter in my Hand which she sent me, upon occasion of some Songs I sent her when I came to Town, which she had before desired of me; and this is a Letter in Answer to mine; 'tis her Hand-writing, and directed to me.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. How do you know 'tis her Hand-writing?

Mr. Marshall. I have seen her write, and seen and receiv'd several Letters from her.

Mr. Cowper. Pray shew it Mr. Beale.

Mr. Beale. I believe it to be her Hand; I have seen her write, and have a Receipt of hers.

Clerk of Arr. 'Tis directed to Mr. Thomas Marshall, at Lyons-Inn, and dated Sept. 26, 1697.

S I R,

Sept. 26, 1697.

*Y*ours came very safe; but I wish you had explain'd your Meaning a little more about the Accident you speak of; for I have been puzzling my Brains ever since; and without I shall set my self to conjuring, I cannot imagine what it should be, for I know of nothing that happen'd after you went away, nor no Discourse about you, only when we were together, the Company would sometimes drink your Health, or wish you had been there, or the like; so that I fancy it must be something Mr. ——— has invented for Diversion; tho' I must confess we have a sort of People here, that are inspir'd with the Gift of Foreknowledge, who will tell one as much for nothing as any Astrologer will have a good Piece of Money for. But, to leave jesting, I cannot tell when I shall come to London, unless it be for a Night and away, about some Business with my Brother, that I must be obliged to attend his Motions; but when I do, I shall remember my Promise, altho' I do not suppose you are any more in earnest than my self in this Matter. I give you Thanks for your Songs and your good Wishes, and rest

Your loving Duck.

Mr. Cowper. Have you any more Letters?

Mr. Marshall. Yes, I have another Letter here; but, before 'tis read, I think 'twill be proper to give the Court an Account of the Occasion of its being writ. I waited on Mrs. Stout one Evening at her Lodgings in Houndsditch, and at our parting she appointed to meet me the next Day; and to excuse her not coming according to that Appointment, she sent me this Letter.

Clerk of Arr. 'Tis directed to Mr. Thomas Marshall; 'tis without Date.

Mr. Marshall,

I Met unexpected with one that came from H——d last Night, who detain'd me so long with relating the most notorious Inventions and Lyes that are now extant amongst those People, that I could not possibly come till 'twas late; and this Day was appointed for Business, that I am uncertain when it will be finish'd; so that I believe I cannot see you whilst I am in Town. I have no more at present, but that I am your obliged Friend.

Mr. Cowper. Now, my Lord, if your Lordship please, I proceed to shew you, that I went not so much voluntarily as press'd by her to come to this House, and for that I will produce one Letter from her to my self; and, my Lord, I must a little inform you of the Nature of this Letter. It is on the Outside directed to Mrs. Jane Ellen, to be left for her at Mr. Hargrave's Coffee-house. For her to direct for me at a Coffee-house, might make the Servants wonder, and the Post-man might suspect, and for that Reason she directed it in that manner. There was Mr. Marshall by when I received it, and I can prove the Hand by Mr. Beale.

Mr. Marshall. My Lord, I verily believe I was by, and that Mr. Cowper shew'd me this Letter immediately on receipt of it, as he had done several others from the same Hand.

Cl. of Arr. This is directed for Mrs. Jane Ellen. 'Tis dated March the 5th, without any Year.

S I R,

March the 5th.

I Am glad you have not quite forgot that there is such a Person as I in being; but I am willing to shut my Eyes, and not see any Thing that looks like Unkindness in you, and rather content my self with what Excuses you are pleas'd to make, than be inquisitive into what I must not know. I should very readily comply with your Proposition of changing the Season, if it were in my Power to do it, but you know that lies altogether in your own Breast: I am sure the Winter has been too unpleasant for me to desire the Continuance of it; and I wish you were to endure the Sharpness of it but for one Hour, as I have done for many long Nights and Days, and then I believe it would move that rocky Heart of yours, that can be so thoughtless of me as you are: But if it were design'd for that End, to make the Summer the more delightful, I wish it may have the Effect so far, as to continue it to be so too, that the Weather may never overcast again; the which if I could be assur'd of, it would recompense me for all that I have ever suffer'd, and make me as easy a Creature as I was the first Moment I receiv'd Breath. When you come to H——d pray let your Steed guide you, and don't do as you did the last time; and be sure order your Affairs to be here as soon as you can, which cannot be sooner than you will be heartily welcome to your very sincere Friend.

For Mrs. Jane Ellen, at Mr. Hargrave's near Temple-Bar, London.

Mr. Cowper. Tho' it is directed to Mrs. Jane Ellen, it begins in the Inside, Sir; and 'tis dated the 5th of March next before the 13th.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. What March was it?

Mr. Marshall. I kept no Account of the Time, but I am very positive, by the Contents, that Mr. Cowper shew'd me this Letter, and I read it, but by my now Remembrance, it should be longer since than March last.

Mr. Cowper. It was March last. That which will set Mr. Marshall's Memory to rights is this other Letter, which I received at the Rainbow, when he was by, and he read it; and it importuning me to a Matter of this kind, I did produce it to my Brother and him; they both knew of it, and both read it, and that will refresh his Memory concerning the Date of the other.

Mr. Marshall. My Lord, I was in the Coffee-house with Mr. Cowper when he receiv'd this Letter; and he afterwards shew'd it to Mr. William Cowper, at the Covent-garden Tavern, when I was by.

Cl. of the Arr. This is dated the 9th of March, and directed to Mrs. Jane Ellen, at Mr. Hargrave's.

S I R,

March 9.

I Writ to you by Sunday's Post, which I hope you have receiv'd; however, as a Confirmation, I will assure you I know of no Inconveniency that can attend your cohabiting habiting with me, unless the Grand Jury should thereupon find a Bill against us; but I won't fly for't, for come Life, come Death, I am resolv'd never to desert you; therefore according to your Appointment I will expect you, and till then I shall only tell you, that I am,

For Mrs. Jane Ellen at
Mr. Hargrave's near Temple-Bar, London.

Yours &c.

Mr. Cowper. If your Lordship please, I will further prove this Letter by my Brother.

Mr. W. Cowper. I can bear my Brother Witness, that when he has been advis'd to make these Letters Part of his Defence, he hath express'd great Unwillingness, and has said, nothing but the Life of these Gentlemen could incline him to it.

My Lord, all I can say to this Matter is this: I do remember, that when she was one time in London, I think it was about a Year and a half since, I am not positive as to the Time, but when she was in London, my Brother came in the Morning to my Chamber in the Temple, and after some Discourse, he told me he had receiv'd a Letter from Mrs. Stout that Day, wherein he said, she intended him a Visit at his Chamber that Afternoon; he told me at the same time, that his Friend Mr. Marshall had some Thoughts of her, and therefore for that, as well as other Reasons, he would decline receiving the Visit intended him; and upon Consideration, this was the Method agreed upon: At that Time I lived with my Father in Hatton-Garden; and this Gentlewoman having writ in the same Letter I now speak of, that she designed to dine there, and to come from thence in the Afternoon; says my Brother, you may casually, as it were, take occasion to say at Dinner, that my Business obliges me to go to Deptford in the Afternoon, as in good earnest it did, as he then told me, and from that she may take a Hint of my not being at home, and so save her self the Disappointment of coming to my Chamber. I told him I would find an Opportunity of doing it if I could. At Dinner my Father happen'd to ask me, as he often did, when I saw my Brother? I took this Hint, and said I had seen him at my Chamber in the Morning, and that he was gone to Deptford that Afternoon about some Law Business. My Lord, Mrs. Stout was then at the Table. I no sooner said it, but I observ'd she chang'd Colour presently, and rose with her Napkin, and went into the Back-yard, and we saw her through a Sash-window fall into a Woman's Fit of Swooning, and they gave her the Assistance that is usual in such Cases.

My Lord, the next Thing I can speak to is this: The Parliament sitting late the Friday before the Monday of the last Affizes at Hertford, I came late from Dinner, I had din'd about Seven a-Clock, as I remember, and having occasion to speak with my Brother, I found him out by Enquiry at the Covent-Garden Tavern, and there was Mr. Marshall of Lions-Inn with him. I had not drunk above a Glass or two of Wine, but my Brother began with me, and said, I seldom trouble you with Affairs of mine, but now I do not know well how to avoid it. I have receiv'd an importunate Letter, which I will shew you; it came from a Lady, whose Name I believe you will guess; so he pull'd it out of his Pocket and read it so often, because of the Oddness of the Expression, that I can say, I am sure this is the very Letter he shew'd me at the Covent-Garden Tavern the Friday before the last Affizes; faith he, the Occasion of my shewing it, is not to expose a Woman's Weakness, but I would not willingly lie under too many Obligations, nor engage too far; nor on the other hand, would I be at an unnecessary Expence for a Lodging. Upon this Subject there was some Discourse, I think, foreign to this Purpose, and therefore I would not trouble your Lordship with a Repetition of it; that which is material is this; I did undertake to write to Mr. Barefoot's to dispose of his Lodgings, where I us'd to be at the Time of the Affizes, and my Brother with me. I said I would write the next Day, being Saturday; but when I should have writ, it was very late, and I was weary, being then tied down to the Business of Parliament, and partly for that Reason, and partly in point of Discretion, which I had upon my second Thoughts, that 'twould be better for my Brother's Business to be at Mr. Barefoot's, which is near the Court, and in the Market-place, I did neglect writing; and tho' I thought of it about Eleven a-Clock, yet, as I said, partly for one Reason, and partly for the other, I did not write that Time. My Lord, my Brother could know nothing of this Matter; for I did not see him from the Friday he shew'd me the Letter, till he went to the Affizes; so that he could not know before he was at Hertford, that I had not writ. My Lord, I say as to this Letter, I am sure he shew'd me the Friday next before the last Affizes.

VOL. V.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. Let me see that Letter. (Which was shewn his Lordship.)

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, one or two of the Jury seem to question whether the Letters are sufficiently prov'd; for their Satisfaction, I will further prove them. Call Mr. John Beale, William Oaker, and Mrs. Low. My Lord, Mr. Beale is one of their own Sect.

(The Witnesses prov'd her Hand.)

Jury. My Lord, we are satisfied.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. I believe you may ask her Mother, she will tell you whether it be her Daughter's Hand.

Mrs. Stout. How should I know! I know she was no such Person, her Hand may be counterfeited.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. But if it were written in a more sober Stile, what would you say then?

Mrs. Stout. I shan't say it to be her Hand, unless I saw her write it.

(Then the Letter was shewn to Mr. Stout.)

Mr. Stout. 'Tis like my Sister's Hand.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. Do you believe it to be her Hand?

Mr. Stout. No, I don't believe it; because it don't suit her Character.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. But do you think she might not conceal from you what were her inward Thoughts.

Mr. Stout. Not in such a Degree as this.

Mr. Cowper. Call Mrs. Barefoot and her Maid. I desire they may be ask'd what they know about my taking of Lodgings at their House.

Mr. Baron Hatsell. This is taken for granted.

Mrs. Barefoot. When you came to my House, you ask'd me, if I had receiv'd a Letter from your Brother, and I told you, No.

Mr. Cowper. What did I say to that?

Mrs. Barefoot. Then you ask'd me if I expected you? and I told you, Yes, by reason I had heard nothing from you.

Mr. Cowper. Where did I lodge that Night?

G g

Mrs.

Mrs. Barefoot. I had prepar'd the Lodging before you came, expecting you or Mr. Cowper your Brother.

Mr. Cowper. And I did come?

Mrs. Barefoot. Yes, as you us'd to do.

Mr. Cowper. Did I send for my Things from the Coffee-house?

Mrs. Barefoot. Yes, you did, and I carried them up in your Chamber as I us'd to do.

Mr. Baron Hatfell. Where did Mr. Cowper dine that Day?

Mrs. Barefoot. Mrs. Stout sent her Maid to desire him to come to Dinner at their House; whether he went thither or no I can't say, but he went out.

Mr. Cowper. What Time did I come into my Lodging that Night?

Mrs. Barefoot. It was a little after Eleven.

Mr. Cowper. You are sure I came in a little after Eleven.

Mrs. Barefoot. Yes.

Mr. Jones. By what Clock? By the Town-Clock?

Mrs. Barefoot. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Did I go out any more that Night?

Mrs. Barefoot. No.

Mr. Cowper. Is your Maid there?

Mrs. Barefoot. Yes.

Mr. Baron Hatfell. What is your Name?

Mrs. Hanwell. Mary Hanwell.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, what Time was it I came to my Lodging?

Mrs. Hanwell. You came in a little after Eleven a-Clock.

Mr. Cowper. Are you very positive in that?

Mrs. Hanwell. Yes, I am very positive.

Mr. Cowper. What was done before I went to Bed?

Mrs. Hanwell. My Lord, I went up and made a Fire, and then I came down again, and then I went up and warm'd Mr. Cowper's Bed, and then he desir'd another Blanket, and I came down for it; and all this took up a considerable Time; and Mr. Cowper was in Bed before Twelve a-Clock.

Mr. Cowper. Did I go out again that Night?

Mrs. Hanwell. No, you went out no more.

Mr. Cowper. Now, if your Lordship pleases, I would explain that Part of Sarah Walker the Maid's Evidence, where she says her Mistress order'd her to warm the Bed, and I never contradicted it. Your Lordship observes the Words in the last of the two Letters, No Inconvenience can attend your cobabiting with me; and afterwards, I won't Fly for it: For come Life come Death, I am resolv'd, and so on—

I had rather leave it to be observed, than make the Observation myself, what might be the Dispute between us at the Time the Maid speaks of. I think it was not necessary she should be present at the Debate; and therefore I might not interrupt her Mistress in the Orders she gave; but as soon as the Maid was gone, I made use of these Objections; and I told Mrs. Stout, by what Accident I was obliged to take up my Lodging at Mr. Barefoot's, and that the Family was sitting up for me: That my staying at her House under these Circumstances, would in probability provoke the Censure of the Town and Country; and that therefore I could not stay, whatever my Inclination otherwise might be; but, my Lord, my Reasons not prevailing, I was forced to decide the Controversy by going to my Lodging, so that the Maid may swear true, when she says I did not contradict her Orders.

Mr. Baron Hatfell. I believe you have done now, Mr. Cowper.

Mr. Cowper. No, my Lord, I have more Evidence to give. Call Elizabeth Spurr.

If your Lordship pleases to observe, I have already proved by two Witnesses that I was actually at Mr. Barefoot's a little after Eleven; so that if I was to rest upon this Proof, here is not the least Article of Time, in which it can be supposed I was employ'd in this Matter: But, says Sarah Walker, the Maid, to obviate (I presume) this Evidence of mine, our House-Clock went faster than the Town-Clock. Now to answer this too, I shall further prove to your Lordship, that before I came to my Lodging, I was at the Glove and Dolphin Inn, where I had a little Account of about six or seven Shillings, as I remember, for Horse-keeping, and which I then paid.

Mr. Cowper. Do you remember my coming to your House, and at what Time?

E. Spurr. The Clock struck Eleven, just as you came into the Door.

Mr. Cowper. How long did I stay at the Glove?

E. Spurr. About a Quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Cowper. How far is it from the Glove and Dolphin to Mrs. Stout's House?

E. Spurr. About a Quarter of a Mile, or not quite so far.

Mr. Cowper. Call Mary Kingitt, and George Man, (who not then appearing) in the mean time, I would observe to your Lordship, that to go from Mrs. Stout's House to the Place where she was drown'd, and to return from thence to the Glove and Dolphin, will take up at least half an Hour, as I shall prove, and then the Matter will stand thus: Says Sarah Walker, you went about a Quarter after Eleven; but our Clock went half an Hour too fast: Then according to her Account, I went three Quarters after Ten by the Town-Clock; and if it requires (as I say, I shall prove it does) half an Hour to go to the Place where she was drown'd, and to return from thence to the Glove Inn, that would make it a Quarter past Eleven when I came to the Inn by the Town-Clock, which it was not; and if I staid there a Quarter of an Hour (which is proved I did not) it must be half an Hour after Eleven when I came to my Lodging by the same Clock, which it was not; so that I think this Matter as to the Time is very clear. My Lord, to prove the Time it requires to go from Mrs. Stout's to the Place where she drown'd her self, and to return to the Glove, I desire Sir William Ashurst may be called.

Sir William Ashurst. My Lord, I can't say I walk'd as fast as I could, but I went with a Gentleman I see here to satisfy my self about the Probability of this Matter; I walk'd as People usually do, and I found it took up half an Hour and a Minute, when I walk'd with that Gentleman.

Mr. Baron Hatfell. Who was with you, Sir?

Sir William Ashurst. Mr. Thompson was with me the Time I mention. I walk'd it before with Sir Thomas Lane.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, indeed it will take a compleat half Hour.

Mr. Cowper. I desire Sir Thomas Lane may give you an Account of the Distance between one Place and the other.

Sir Thomas Lane. Sir William Ashurst and I did walk to the Place mentioned, and we were careful to take notice of the Time, and it took up about three Quarters of an Hour, according to my Observation; and we did not stay at all by the Way, except just to look upon the Hospital.

Mr.

Mr. Cowper. Now, my Lord, Mary Kingitt and George Man, the Servants at the Glove, are come : Pray, Mrs. Kingitt, do you remember my coming into the Glove and Dolphin ?

Mary Kingitt. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. How long did I stay there ?

Mary Kingitt. About a quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Cowper. What was my Business there ?

Mary Kingitt. You came and enquir'd what you ow'd.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. What a-Clock was it then ?

Mary Kingitt. I thought it was about Eleven ; our t'other Maid told it Eleven.

Mr. Jones. How came you to take Notice of the Time ?

Mary Kingitt. She heard the Clock go Eleven, but I did not.

Mr. Cowper. Was there any Dispute about the Account ?

Mary Kingitt. You ask'd the Hostler how that came to stand in the Book, concerning the Horse; for you told him, You thought you had paid some Part of it, and he told you, You had not.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, with your Lordship's Favour, I would ask George Man a Question to the same Point. Do you remember my coming into the Glove and Dolphin ?

G. Man. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. How long did I stay there ?

G. Man. You staid but a quarter of an Hour, as near as I can guess.

Mr. Cowper. I will now call a Witness to prove that this Maid Sarah Walker is not so cautious and careful how she swears, as I think she ought to be.

Call Mrs. Mince.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. Pray wherein hath Sarah Walker said any Thing that is false ?

Mr. Cowper. In this; I ask'd her when she gave Evidence, Whether she went out to see for her Mistress all that Night, and whether her Mistress did not use to stay out a-Nights, and whether she herself had not used to say so ? If your Lordship pleases to remember she said No. Pray Mrs. Mince, what have you heard Mrs. Stout's Maid say concerning her Mistress, particularly as to her staying out all Night ?

Mrs. Mince. She hath said, That her Mistress did not love to keep Company with Quakers; and that she paid for her own Board and her Maid's; and, that when she entertain'd any Body, 'twas at her own Charge. And she hath said, that Mrs. Stout used to ask, Who is with you, Child? and she would not tell her; and, that she did entertain her Friends in the Summer-house now and then with a Bottle of Wine; and when her Mother ask'd who was there, her Mistress would say, Bring it in here, I suppose there is none but Friends: And after the Company was gone, she us'd to make her Mother believe that she went to Bed, but she us'd to go out and take the Key with her, and sometimes she would go out at the Window; and she said particularly, One time she went out at the Garden Window, when the Garden Door was lock'd, and, that she bid her not sit up for her, for she would not come in at any Time.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. Did ever Sarah Walker tell you that Mrs. Stout staid out all Night ?

Mrs. Mince. She hath said, She could not tell what Time she came in, for she went to Bed.

Mr. Cowper. Now, if your Lordship please, I will prove to you, if it may be thought material, that Gurrey, at whose House these Gentlemen lodg'd, should say, That if I had visited Mrs. Stout none of all this had been (upon so little an Omission it seems did this Prosecution depend). To which I give this Answer, my Lord; I never did once go to visit her in my Life, she knows it. Now, for a Man officiously to make a new Visit in the Time of the Affizes, one engag'd in Business as I was, and especially upon so melancholy an Occasion, I say, for me to go officiously to see a Woman I never had the least Knowledge of, would have been thought more strange (and justly might have been so) than the Omission of that Ceremony. For my Part, I cannot conceive what Mr. Gurrey could mean, this being the Case, by saying, That if I had visited Mrs. Stout, nothing of this had happen'd.

VOL. V.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. Mr. Cowper, he is not the Prosecutor, I think 'tis no matter what he said.

Mr. Cowper. I take it, my Lord, with humble Submission, 'tis material as he is a principal Witness against these Gentlemen; and the rather, for that he now pretends, that what he did was out of Conscience. My Lord, I have only one Thing more to say, I know not whether 'twill be requisite for me, or no, to give some Account of my self. Sir William Ashurst, if you please.

Sir William Ashurst. My Lord, if I had not had a good Opinion of this Gentleman, I had not come on purpose to hear this Cause, which has made so great a Noise all England over.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. But what do you say as to Mr. Cowper's Reputation, for which you are call'd ?

Sir William Ashurst. I always thought Mr. Cowper to be a Gentleman of singular Humanity and Integrity; he is an Officer in London, and as to his Management of his Office, I think no Man ever perform'd it better, or has a better Reputation in the Place where he lives.

Sir Thomas Lane. My Lord, I came hither on purpose to own this Gentleman, and indeed he deserves to be own'd by his Friends, and those that know him; his Character is altogether untainted with us, he has gain'd a good Reputation in the Business wherein he is concern'd, he has behav'd himself in his Office which he holds of the City of London very honestly and well; I never knew him discover any ill Nature in his Temper; I think he can't be suspected of this or any other Act of Barbarity.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, in the next place I would call Mr. Cox, who has the Honour to serve in Parliament for the Borough of Southwark, and has been my near Neighbour these eight or nine Years. If you please, Mr. Cox, give an Account what Reputation and Character I have in that Place.

Mr. Cox. My Lord, I live in Southwark, where Mr. Cowper lives: I have liv'd by him eight or nine Years; I know him to be a Person of Integrity and Worth, all the Neighbours court his Company. I take him to have as much Honour and Honesty as any Gentleman whatsoever; and, of all Men that I know, he would be the last Man that I should suspect of such a Fact as this is: I believe nothing in the World could move him to entertain the least Thought of so foul an Act.

Mr. Cowper. Mr. Thompson, I desire you would be pleas'd to give an Account of what you know of me.

Mr. Thompson. If you please, my Lord, the first Acquaintance I had with Mr. Cowper was in our Childhood, I had the Honour to go to Westminster School with him; I did not renew my Acquaintance with him till about five Years ago; since that Time I have been often with him, and have several Times had Occasion to ask his Advice in Matters relating to his Profession; and I think no Man more faithful in the Service of his Client than he is, and I am sure he is very deserving of the Esteem of any Man, and I believe he never entertain'd a Thought of so foul and barbarous a Fact as this, of which he is accused.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. Mr. Marson, you have heard the Evidence, what do you say to it?

Mr. Marson. My Lord, our Business at Hertford was this: Mr. Ellis Stevens and I went down, he is Clerk of the Papers of the King's-Bench, and Mr. Rogers is Steward of the King's-Bench, and it was their Duty to wait upon my Lord Chief-Justice, with the Marshal of the King's-Bench, out of Town; and on Monday Morning we went to my Lord Chief-Justice's House in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, as we us'd to do, and there set out; but I, being an Attorney of the Borough Court, could not with any Convenience go farther with them than to a Place which I think is call'd Kingsland, and therefore I return'd to my Business in Southwark, where I attended the Court, as was customary and necessary for me to do, and set forth from thence at past Four in the Afternoon: By the way, as I remember, about Waltham-Crofts, I met one Mr. Hanks, a Clergyman of my Acquaintance, who had been likewise to attend my Lord Chief-Justice to Hertford, and was returning from thence; with some Persuasion I prevail'd with him to go back again with me to Hertford, telling him, I did not know the Way; and we gallop'd every Step of it, because Night was coming on, it was about Eight a-Clock when we came in. Mr. Hanks and I found the Marshal, Mr. Stevens, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Rutkin, and others of the Marshal's Acquaintance, at the Coffee-house; and truly when I came in, I might, for ought I know, be in a Sweat with riding so hard as we did, but even then I was not in such a Sweat as the Witness would have it. My Lord, we went from thence to the Glove and Dolphin, and stay'd there till about Eleven a-Clock. Mr. Rogers and I had a Dispute who should lie with Mr. Stevens at the now Witness Mr. Gurrey's; at last 'twas agreed between us to go to Gurrey's to see what Convenience he could make for us, and to drink a Glass of Wine at our Lodging; but afterwards it came in Mr. Rutkin's Head that he was to lie with the Marshal, and for that reason, he said, he would go back again; and accordingly he went, and Mr. Hanks with him, after they had seen us into our Lodgings, and Mr. Stevens, Mr. Rogers and I drank three Bottles of Wine together, Mr. Gurrey, our Landlord, was sent to fetch it; and afterwards in jocular Conversation, I believe Mr. Stevens might ask Mr. Gurrey if he knew one Mrs. Sarah Stout? and the Reason why he ask'd that Question our Witnesses will explain. I believe he might likewise ask what sort of Woman she was? and possibly I might say the Words, My Friend may be in with her, tho' I remember not I did say any thing like it, but I say there is a Possibility I might, because I had heard she had deny'd Mr. Marshall's Suit, and that might induce me to say, My Friend may be in with her, for all that I remember. I confess Mr. Rogers ask'd me what Money I had got that Day, meaning at the Borough-Court? I answer'd, Fifty Shillings; faith he, We have been here a spending our Money, I think you ought to treat us, or to that purpose. As to the Bundle mention'd, I had no such, except a Pair of Sleeves and a Neckcloth. As to the Evidence which goes to Words spoken, the Witnesses have fruitful Inventions; and as they have wrested and improv'd the Instances I have been particular in, so have they the rest, or otherwise forg'd them out of their own Heads.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. Mr. Rogers, what do you say to it?

Mr. Rogers. We came down with the Marshal of the King's-Bench, it rain'd every Step of the Way, so that my Spatterdash and Shoes were fain to be dry'd; and it raining so hard, we did not think Mr. Marson would have come that Day, and therefore we provided but one Bed, tho' otherwise we should have provided two, and were to give a Crown for our Night's Lodging. We went from the Coffee-house to the Tavern, as Mr. Marson has said, and from the Tavern the next Way to our Lodging, where there was some merry and open Discourse of this Gentlewoman, but I never saw her in my Life, nor heard of her Name before she was mention'd there.

Mr. Stevens. We never stirr'd from one another, but went along with the Marshal of the King's-Bench, to accompany my Lord Chief-Justice out of Town, as is usual.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. I thought it had been as usual for him to go but half the Way with my Lord Chief-Justice.

Mr. Rogers. They generally return back after they have gone half the Way, but some of the Head-Officers go throughout.

Mr. Stevens. 'Twas the first Circuit after the Marshal came into his Office, and that's the Reason the Marshal went the whole Way.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. Did not you talk of her Court-ing-days being over?

Prisoners. Not one Word of it; we absolutely deny it.

Mr. Stevens. I never saw her.

Mr. Jones. Mr. Marson, did you ride in Boots?

Mr. Marson. Yes.

Mr. Jones. How came your Shoes to be wet?

Mr. Marson. I had none.

Call Mr. Heath, Mr. Hunt, and Mr. Foster.

Mr. Marson. Mr. Hunt, will you please to acquaint my Lord and the Jury with what Discourse we had on Sunday Night before the Assizes, at the Old Devil Tavern at Temple-Bar.

Mr. Hunt. On Sunday Night I happen'd to be in Company with Mr. Marson, and three or four more of Clifford's-Inn, and there was a Discourse of the Marshal's attending my Lord Chief-Justice out of Town to Hertford, and Mr. Marson said, It may be the Marshal may require my waiting upon him too; and the whole Company being known to Mr. Marshall, and there being a Discourse of Mr. Marshall's court-ing of Mrs. Stout, faith one of the Company, If you do go to Hertford, pray enquire after Mr. Marshall's Mistress, and bring us an Account of her.

Mr. Jones. Who was in Company?

Mr. Hunt. There was Mr. Heath, Mr. Foster, Mr. Marson, Mr. Stevens, Mr. Bevor, and Mr. Marshall.

Mr. Marson. Now 'twas this Discourse that gave us an Occasion to talk of this Woman at Gurrey's House, which we did openly and harmlessly. Mr. Forster, do you remember any Thing of our talking of this Gentlewoman on Sunday Night?

Mr. Foster. Yes; I and they were talking, that they should go to Hertford the next Day, to wait on the Marshal, in Compliment to my Lord Chief-Justice, and go as far as Hertford; and there being a Report, that Mr. Marshall courted this Woman, man, we put it in a jesting Way, Pray enquire after Mr. Marshall's Mistress, how the Match goes on; for there was some Wagers between him and the Company, who should be married first: And so, in a jocular way it went about, and Mr. Marson or Mr. Stevens said, They would do their Endeavour, and they would enquire after the Lady, and give as good an Account of her as they could.

Mr. Stevens. If you please, my Lord, we will call another to this Purpose.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. No, I think you need not, for it seems not material.

Then Mr. Hanks was call'd.

Mr. Hanks. I came as far as Waltham's-Cross to wait upon my Lord Chief-Justice; I stay'd there 'till about Four or Five a Clock, and then set out for London; and I met with Mr. Marson, who importun'd me to go back with him to Hertford, and accordingly I did so, and we came in about Seven or Eight at Night, and we enquir'd after the Marshal of the King's-Bench, and where he had set up his Horses, and we found him in the Coffee-house just by the Court, and we went and set up our Horses, and came again to him; from thence we went to the Glove and Dolphin Tavern; these three Gentlemen and the Marshal, and one Mr. Rutkin came afterwards to us, and we stay'd till about Eleven at the Glove and Dolphin.

Mr. Marson. Do you remember how we rid?

Mr. Hanks. Yes, very hard.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. What Time did you come in to the Tavern?

Mr. Hanks. Between Seven and Eight, as I remember.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. And did you stay there till past Eleven?

Mr. Hanks. 'Till about Eleven, little more or less; we went away together in order to drink a Glass of Wine with them at their Lodging; but Mr. Rutkin considering that he was to drink a Glass of Wine, and lie with the Marshal, thought it would disturb the Marshal; So, saith he, I will not go in; but we saw them go into their Lodgings, and return'd to the Bull, where we eat Part of a Fowl, and I was never out of Mr. Marson's Company all that Time.

Mr. Marson. When you took your leave of me, don't you remember that the Door was clap'd to?

Mr. Hanks. I can't remember that.

Mr. Marson. Mr. Gurrey saith, I never went out after I came home. Mr. Rutkin, pray give an Account to my Lord, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, of what you know of my coming to Hertford.

Mr. Rutkin. My Lord, I came to wait on the Marshal of the King's-Bench to Hertford, and when we were come to Hertford we put up our Horses at the Bull, and made our selves a little clean; we went to Church, and dined at the Bull, and then we walk'd in and about the Court, and diverted our selves till about Seven a-Clock; and between Seven and Eight a-Clock came Mr. Marson and Dr. Hanks to Town, and then we agreed to go to the Dolphin and Glove to drink a Glass of Wine: The Marshal went to see an ancient Gentleman, and we went to the Dolphin and Glove, and stay'd there till past Ten a-Clock, and after the Reckoning was paid we went with them to their Lodging, with a Design to take a Glass of Wine; but then I consider'd I was to lie with the Marshal, and for that Reason I resolv'd not to go in, but came away, and went to the Bull-Inn, and drank Part of a Pint of Wine, and afterwards went to the next Door to the Bull-Inn, where I lay with the Marshal.

Mr. Jones. What Time did the Gentlemen go to their Lodging?

Mr. Rutkin. I am not positive as to that, but I believe 'twas about Eleven a-Clock.

Mr. Marson. If your Lordship pleases, now I'll call some Persons to give an Account of me.

Mr. Cox.

Mr. Cox. I have known Mr. Marson a long time, and had alway a good Opinion of him; I don't believe 5000*l.* would tempt him to do such a Fact.

Mr. Marson. Captain Wife, I desire you would please to speak what you know of me.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, because these Gentlemen are Strangers in the Country, I think, if in taking an Account of any Evidence for my self there is any Thing occurs to me that they may have a just Advantage of, I think I ought not to conceal it, for I am as much concern'd to justify their Innocence as my own. The principal Witness against them is one Gurrey; and I will prove to you, that since he appear'd in this Court, and gave his Evidence, he went out in a triumphant Manner, and boasted, That he, by his Management, had done more against these Gentlemen than all the Prosecutor's Witnesses could do besides. To add to that, I have another Piece of Evidence that I have been just acquainted with: My Lord, 'tis the Widow Davis, Gurrey's Wife's Sister, that I would call.

Major Lane. My Lord, I have known Mr. Marson ever since he was two Years old; and never saw him but a civiliz'd Man in my Life; he was well bred up among us, and I never saw him given to Debauchery in all my Life.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Where do you live?

Major Lane. In Southwark, my Lord.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Well, what do you say, Mrs. Davis?

Mrs. Davis. I came to the House where these Gentlemen lodg'd; I was in about half an Hour, and my Sister ask'd me to air two or three Pair of Sheets: When I had air'd the Sheets, she ask'd me to go up and help to lay them on; and, before I had laid them on, these Gentlemen came into the Room.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. What Hour?

Mrs. Davis. By the Time of my going out again, I believe it might be about Ten, or something better, and they drank three Quarts of Wine, and they had some Bread and Butter and Cheese carried up, and so they went to Bed; and after my Brother went to fetch Mr. Gape, that lay at his House, from Hockley's.

Mr. Cowper. I only beg leave to observe, that Gurrey deny'd that he went for him.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Ay; but this signifies very little, whether it be true or false.

Mrs. Davis. The next Day after, these Gentlemen were about the Town; and she said, She did believe they were come to clear a young Man (a Minister's Son) that was try'd at the Bar for robbing the Mail: I ask'd why she thought so? she said, She was sure of it: And I ask'd her, how she could be sure of it, when she was never told so? Why, said I, do they accuse these Gentlemen? They ought rather to take up the Gentleman that was with Mrs. Stout's Maid; and she said, If they took up Mrs. Stout's Maid, they should have never a Witness.

Mr.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Who was That that was talking with Mrs. Stout's Maid?

Mrs. Davis. I don't know, but she said she did not like their Actions; and therefore she ought to have been examined who she was with.

Capt. Wife. I have known Mr. Marson several Years, and he is a Person of as fair Reputation as any in the Borough.

Mr. Reading. I have been acquainted with Mr. Marson Twenty Years, he lives near the House where I now do: He has a general good Character among his Neighbours, for a fair Man in his Practice, an honest Man, and a Man of good Conversation.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Well, Mr. Stevens, What do you say?

Mr. Stevens. I desire Sir Robert Austin to give an Account of me.

Sir Robert Austin. I have known Mr. Stevens many Years; his Brother is Captain in a neighbouring Country; he is reckon'd not only an honest Man in his Practice, but has the general Character of a good-natur'd Man; and he is so far from being a Person likely to do such an Action, that, for a younger Brother, he was very well provided for; his Father left him a Thousand Pounds, and he is Clerk of the Papers, which is reputed worth a Hundred Pounds a Year, and is in good Practice besides.

Juryman. I have known him several Years, and he has the same Reputation Sir Robert has given him.

Sir John Shaw. I know Mr. Stevens, and his Brother Captain Stevens: As to this Gentleman, he hath always behav'd himself well in our Country, and hath the Character of an honest Gentleman.

Mr. Evans. I have known him for these eight Years, and to be a very civil Person, and well educated, and never heard but a good Character of him: I have also known Mr. Marson these ten Years, and never saw any Ill by him, and do believe, that he or the other would not have done such an ill thing to have gain'd this Country.

Mr. Menlove. My Lord, Mr. Stevens was my Clerk, and he behav'd himself very honestly with me. And since that, I have kept a Correspondence with him, and I believe he would not do such a Thing for all the World.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Call some Body to speak for Mr. Rogers, if there be any.

Mr. Evans. My Lord, Mr. Rogers hath a general Character in Southwark, for a very honest Man.

Mr. Rogers. Pray call Mr. Lygoe. Sir, please to give my Lord and the Court an Account what you know of me.

Mr. Lygoe. My Lord, I have known all the three Gentlemen at the Bar, but particularly Mr. Rogers and Mr. Stevens, from their Infancy. I have employ'd them both in Business several times, and always found them fair Practisers; and believe neither of them would be guilty of doing an ill Act.

Mr. Rogers. Call Mr. Thurlby. Sir, Pray give the Court an Account how I behaved my self in your Service.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Come, Mr. Thurlby, What do you say of Mr. Rogers?

Mr. Thurlby. My Lord, Mr. Rogers lived with me about eight Years, in which Time I frequently trusted him with very great Sums of Money, I ever found him just and faithful, and can't believe, that any Money could tempt him to do an Act of this Kind.

Mr. Jones. My Lord, we insist upon it, That Mr. Cowper hath given a different Evidence now from what he did before the Coroner; for there he said he never knew any Distraction, or Love-fit, or other Occasion she had to put her upon this extravagant Action. Now, here he comes, and would have the whole Scheme turn'd upon a Love-fit. Call John Mason. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. What do you say, Sir, to this Matter?

Mr. Stout. When Mr. Cowper was examin'd before the Coroner, he was ask'd, if he knew any Reason why she should do such a Thing? and he said, She was a very modest Woman, and he knew no Cause why she should do such a Thing as this. John Mason, Was you by when Mr. Cowper gave Evidence before the Coroner?

Mason. Yes.

Mr. Jones. What did he say?

Mason. He said he did not know any Thing was the Cause of it, but she was a very modest Person.

Mr. Jones. Was he upon his Oath?

Mason. Yes, he was.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. When did he say this?

Mason. It was the same Day she was found.

Mr. Jones. Did they ask him any Question, if he knew any Person that she was in Love with?

Mason. He said he knew but of one, and his Name was Marshall, and Mr. Marshall told him, That he was always repulsed by her.

Mr. Stout. I desire John Archer may be asked the same Question. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Jones. Was you present with the Coroner's Inquest?

J. Archer. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Was Mr. Cowper examin'd by them?

J. Archer. Yes, he was?

Mr. Jones. What did he say concerning Mrs. Stout then?

J. Archer. They ask'd him, If he knew any Occasion for Mrs. Stout's Death? and he said, He knew nothing of it, or of any Letters?

Mr. Cowper. Then I must call over the whole Coroner's Inquest to prove the contrary.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Did they ask him concerning any Letters?

J. Archer. They ask'd him if he knew of any Thing that might be the Occasion of her Death.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. I ask you again, if they ask'd him if he knew of any Letters?

J. Archer. My Lord, I don't remember that.

Mr. Stout. I would have called some of the Coroner's Inquest, but I was stopp'd in it.

Juryman. We have taken Minutes of what has pass'd: If your Lordship please, we will withdraw.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. They must make an End first.

Mr. Jones. If your Lordship please, we will call one Witness to falsify one Piece of their Evidence, and that is one Widow Larkin. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Jones. Do you remember one Mr. Rutkin being at your House?

Larkin. Yes.

Mr. Jones. At what Time did he come in?

Larkin. Between Nine and Ten of the Clock.

Mr. Jones. Was the Marshal then in the House?

Lar-

Larkin. No; the Marshal did not come till near an Hour after.

Mr. Jones. Did not he go out afterwards?

Larkin. Not that I know of.

Mr. Rutkins. I am satisfied it was past Eleven when I came in.

Mr. Baron Hatfell. It is likely it may be true; for, I believe they did not keep very good Hours at that Time.

Mr. Stout. I desire to call some Witnesses to my Sister's Reputation.

Mr. Jones. My Lord, they would call Witnesses to this Gentlewoman's Reputation; I believe the whole Town would attest for That, that she was a Woman of a good Reputation. Indeed they have produced some Letters without a Name, but if they insist upon any thing against her Reputation, we must call our Witnesses.

Mr. Baron Hatfell. I believe no Body disputes That; she might be a virtuous Woman, and her Brains might be turn'd by her Passion, or some Distemper.

Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard a very long Evidence. I am sure that you can't expect that I should sum it up fully; but I will take Notice of some Things to you, that I think are most material; and if I omit any Thing that is material, I would desire Mr. Jones (that is Counsel for the King) and Mr. Cowper to put me in mind of it.

The Indictment against the Prisoners at the Bar is for a very great Crime, it is for Murder, which is one of the most horrid of all Crimes: You are to consider first what Evidence you have heard to prove it; and tho' there be no direct Proof, you are to consider what is circumstantial.

They do begin with Sarah Walker, who was Mrs. Sarah Stout's Maid, and she tells you, that Mr. Cowper, when he came to this Town on Monday the 13th of March last, came to Mrs. Stout's House and dined there, and went away about Four of the Clock in the Afternoon; but she tells you, that the Friday before, there came a Letter from Mr. Cowper's Wife to Mrs. Stout, to let her know that Mr. Cowper would come and lodge at their House at Hertford at the Affizes; so that when he came, she thought that he had intended to have done according to that Letter. She saith, that after Dinner Mr. Cowper went away, and came again at Nine at Night, and there he supped; he was desir'd so to do, (and indeed had been invited to Dinner also that Day) and she doth say, that after Supper there was a Fire made in his Chamber (for this young Gentlewoman, Mrs. Stout, press'd him to lie at their House) and she order'd the Maid to warm his Bed, and I believe, says she, Mr. Cowper heard her say so, for he was nearer to her than I at that time, and he doth not deny but that he heard it. She says, that accordingly she went up to warm the Bed, and having stay'd there a while, she heard the Door clap; and when she came down into the Parlour, where she had left them, they were both gone, and that she could not tell what the Meaning of it was; and they waited for her all Night, old Mrs. Stout and this Maid, and she did not come in all Night, nor was afterwards seen alive; but Mr. Cowper was the last Person seen in her Company.

The other Witnesses that came afterwards, speak concerning the finding of the Body in the River, and tell you in what Posture it was. I shall not undertake to give you the Particulars of their Evidence, but they tell you she lay on her right Side, the one Arm up even with the Surface of the Water, and her Body under the Water; but some of her Cloaths were above the Water; particularly one says, the Ruffles of her left Arm were above the Water. You have heard also what the Doctors and Surgeons said on the one side and the other, concerning the Swimming and Sinking of dead Bodies in the Water; but I can find no Certainty in it; and I leave it to your Consideration.

Another Circumstance they build on, and which seems to be material is, of her Belly being lank, and, that there was no Swelling; whereas, say they, when a Person is drown'd, there is a great deal of Water goes in, and makes the Belly to swell; but here was no Swelling that Morning she was taken out, and no Water came out of her Mouth and Nostrils, only a little Froth there was, and her Belly was lank. But, say they, on the other Side, that may very well be; for, perhaps she might be choak'd immediately, as soon as she was in the Water; and, say they, you may not wonder at That; for if she went to drown her self, she would endeavour to be choak'd as soon as she could; for those Persons that are drown'd against their own Consent do swallow a great deal of Water, but those that drown themselves don't swallow much Water, for they are choak'd immediately by the Water going into the Windpipe; that we commonly call going the wrong Way. The Doctors and Surgeons have talk'd a great deal to this Purpose, and of the Water's going into the Lungs or the Thorax; but unless you have more Skill in Anatomy than I, you won't be much edified by it. I acknowledge I never studied Anatomy; but I perceive that the Doctors do differ in their Notions about these things. But, as to Matter of Fact, 'tis agreed to by all the Witnesses for the King, that her Body was lank, her Belly was thin, and there was no Sign of any Water to be in it: They on the other Side tell you, that her Stays was on, and she was strait-laced, and that might occasion her Belly's being so small, and hinder the Water from going in.

Gentlemen, I was very much puzzled in my Thoughts, and was at a Loss to find out what Inducement there could be to draw in Mr. Cowper, or these three other Gentlemen, to commit such a horrid, barbarous Murder. And, on the other hand, I could not imagine what there should be to induce this Gentlewoman, a Person of a plentiful Fortune, and a very sober good Reputation, to destroy her self.

Now, Gentlemen, I must confess, the Evidence that the Defendants have given by these Letters, if you believe them to be this Gentlewoman's Hand-writing, do seem to fortify all that Mr. Cowper's Witnesses have said, concerning her being melancholy: It might be a Love-distraction, and she might have been a virtuous Woman for all that; for it might be a Distemper which came upon her, and turn'd her Brains, and compos'd her Mind, and then no Wonder at her writing thus, in a Manner different from the rest of the Actions of her Life. Gentlemen, you are to consider and weigh the Evidence, and I will not trouble you any more about that Matter.

As to these three other Gentlemen that came to this Town at the Time of the last Affizes, what what there is against them you have heard : They talk'd at their Lodging at a strange rate, concerning this Mrs. Sarah Stout, saying, her Business is done, and, that there was an End of her Court-ing-Days, and that a Friend of theirs was even with her by this Time. What you can make of it, That I must leave to you ; but they were very strange Expressions ; and you are to judge, whether they were spoken in jest, as they pretend, or in earnest. There was a Cord found in the Room, and a Bundle seen there, but I know not what to make of it. As to Mrs. Stout, there was no Sign of any Circle about her Neck, which, as they say, must have been, if she had been strangled : Some Spots there were ; but it is said, possibly those might be occasion'd by rubbing against some Piles or Stakes in the River. Truly, Gentlemen, these three Men, by their Talking, have given great Cause of Suspicion ; but whether They, or Mr. Cowper, are guilty or no, that You are to determine. I am sensible I have omitted many Things ; but I am a little faint, and cannot repeat any more of the Evidence.

Jury. We have taken Minutes, my Lord.
Mr. Baron Hatsell. Well then, Gentlemen, go together, and consider your Evidence ; and I pray God direct you in giving your Verdict.

[Then One was sworn to keep the Jury, and in about half an Hour, the Jury return'd.]

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed in your Verdict ?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you ?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Spencer Cowper, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner. How say you ? Is he guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty ?

Foreman. Not guilty.

[In like Manner the Jury did give their Verdict, that John Marson, Ellis Stevens, and William Rogers were Not guilty.] *

* See the Case of Spencer Cowper, Esq; John Marson, Ellis Stevens, and William Rogers, Gentlem. in the State Trials, Vol. VIII. p. 466, 467, 468, and Mrs. Stout's Case, 469, 470, 471, and several Observations relating to this Trial.

CLXVII. *The TRIAL of MARY BUTLER alias STRICKLAND, at the Old Bailey, for Forging a Bond of 40000*l.* in the Name of Robert Clayton, Octob. 12, 1699. II Will. III.*

Cl. of Arr. BRING Mary Butler to the Bar.

[Accordingly she was brought.]

Mary Butler alias Strickland, you stand indicted by the Name of Mary Butler alias Strickland, late of London, Widow ; for that you endeavouring, and maliciously intending, to deceive and oppress Sir Robert Clayton, Knight and Alderman of London, the First Day of December, in the Seventh Year of his now Majesty's Reign, at London aforesaid, in the Parish of St. Mary Woolnoth, in the Ward of Langborne, a certain false Writing, sealed in Form of a Bond, bearing Date the Fourteenth Day of April, 1687, in the Name of the said Sir Robert Clayton, for the Payment of the Penal Sum of Forty Thousand Pounds, to be made by the said Sir Robert Clayton to you Mary Butler alias Strickland, with Condition there under-written ; concerning, among other Things, the Payment of Twenty Thousand Pounds, to be made to you Mary Butler alias Strickland, after the Death of the said Sir Robert Clayton, by his Heirs, Executors, and Administrators ; falsely, knowingly, unlawfully, and subtilly did make, counterfeit and write, and cause to be made, counterfeited, and written : And further, that you Mary Butler alias Strickland, afterwards, viz. the First Day of December, in the Seventh Year aforesaid, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, a certain false and forged Writing, sealed in Form of a Bond, in the Name of the said Sir Robert Clayton, for the Payment of the penal Sum of Forty Thousand Pounds by the said Sir Robert Clayton, to you Mary Butler alias Strickland, with Condition under-written, concerning, among other Things, the Payment of Twenty Thousand Pounds, to be made to you Mary Butler alias Strickland, after the Death of the said Sir Robert Clayton, by his Heirs, Executors, or Administrators, as a true Bond of the said Sir Robert Clayton, as if really made by him ; falsely, subtilly, and deceitfully, did publish, you Mary Butler alias Strickland well knowing the said Writing to be false, forged, and counterfeited, and not the Deed of the said Sir Robert Clayton, to the great Damage of the said Sir Robert Clayton, to the evil Example of all others in the like Case, offending against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Cl. of Arr. How say'st thou, Mary Butler alias Strickland, art thou guilty of this Forgery whereof thou standest indicted, or not guilty ?

Prisoner. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Prisoner, look to your Challenges. Cryer, swear the Jury, which follow :

JURY sworn.

William Clark,	}	George Ludlam,
William Christopher,		Richard Kemble,
Thomas Wharton,		John Clarke,
George Kimble,		Stephen Broughton,
James Church,		Joseph Sheppard,
John Whistler,		Thomas Wickham.

Clerk

Clerk of Arr. You of the Jury that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to her Cause. She stands indicted, &c.

Mr. Montagu. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this Indictment does charge the Prisoner at the Bar, Mary Butler, alias Strickland, with a Fraud and intended Cheat. It sets forth, that the Prisoner at the Bar intending to cheat Sir Robert Clayton, did counterfeit a certain Writing, purporting to be the Bond of Sir Robert Clayton, for payment of Twenty Thousand Pounds, and that it was to be paid to the said Mary Butler, alias Strickland, after the Death of the said Sir Robert Clayton. Likewise, that she did publish this Writing as Sir Robert Clayton's Deed. To this Indictment she has pleaded not guilty. If we prove the Fact, I do not question but you will find her guilty, that she may have her due Punishment.

Mr. Serj. Wright. My Lord, I am Counsel for the King in this Cause. You hear what sort of Crime it is that is charged on the Prisoner. It is for Forging a Bond of no less Penalty than Forty Thousand Pounds, for the Payment of Twenty Thousand Pounds. This is made in the Name of Sir Robert Clayton, and the Twenty Thousand Pounds were to be paid a little after his own Death, by his Executors or Administrators: And that in the mean time Twelve Hundred Pounds a Year were to be paid for the Interest of this Sum. But, my Lord, the Prisoner did not rest here, (a second Contrivance will be opened to you.) That which she is now charged with, is the Forging of a Bond of the Penalty of Forty Thousand Pounds.

My Lord, the Prisoner for some Years had a great Intimacy with a great Peer, the late Duke of Buckingham. And she either had, or pretended to have, a Bond from him for Five Thousand Pounds, payable to herself after his Death, and an Annual Interest in the mean time, till the Principal was paid. Sir Robert Clayton being a Trustee of the Duke's Estate for the Payment of his Debts, the Prisoner came frequently to Sir Robert Clayton, to solicit his Favour and Interest for the Payment of this Debt. On this Account she insinuated herself into his Company and into his Family. Sometimes she pretended to be a great Penitent, and that she was sorry for the Conversation she had with the Duke; that her own Relations were Papists, and if she should go to them, they would send her into a Nunnery. All which was but counterfeit, and in order to win upon Sir Robert Clayton; and he finding she was an ill Woman, notwithstanding all her Pretences, he at last, about twelve Years ago, forbid her his House, and since that she never was there.

About the Year 1695, Sir Robert Clayton had some private Intimation given him, that the Prisoner had a great Demand on him, no less than Twenty Thousand Pounds. Upon this Sir Robert Clayton took the best Course he could to find it out, and exhibited a Bill in Chancery against her, and some of her Accomplices, to discover whether they had any Pretences upon him or his Estate. To this Bill the Prisoner put in an Answer, that she had no Claim or Demand against him upon any Account whatsoever. While this was in Agitation, the Prisoner came to Mr. Woodward, an Attorney of this City, and brought him a Writing, purporting a Bond, with the Name Robert Clayton subscribed to it, sealed and attested by four Witnesses, as the Bond of Sir Robert Clayton, and told Mr. Woodward, "That Bond was given to her by Sir Robert Clayton, upon some good Considerations; but it having taken Air, some Uneasiness had risen about it in Sir Robert Clayton's Family; and (as she pretended) upon this Account he had exhibited a Bill in Equity against her, therefore this Bond must be delivered up; and Sir Robert had promised to give her a new Bond for Twenty Thousand Pounds, and that all the Money in Arrears for Interest, was to be turned to Principal, and put into the new Bond: But this was to be done very privately, so as not to be known by any of Sir Robert Clayton's Family, and therefore none of his Servants were to be privy to it." Thereupon she gives to Mr. Woodward the Bond, desiring him to make a new Bond by it, and to turn all the Interest that was due into Principal. Upon this Mr. Woodward made her a Bond of the Penalty of Fifty-four Thousand Pounds, conditioned for Payment of Twenty-seven Thousand Pounds after Sir Robert Clayton's Death, and Interest in the mean time. This Bond she took away with her, and likewise the first Bond; but what she did with them since, we are not privy to. And a great Charge she laid upon Mr. Woodward, to carry it with all possible Privacy, that no Notice might be taken by Sir Robert's Family.

Some few Months ago there was another Intimation sent to Sir Robert Clayton, that this Gentlewoman pretended to have a great Claim upon him of a great Sum of Money that was to be paid her, either at present, or after his Death; and that Mr. Woodward made the Bond, and he could give an Account of it. Upon this Sir Robert Clayton sent to Mr. Woodward, who, like a very honest Man, told the whole Business, in what manner it was the Prisoner came to him, and how he came to make the Bond; and that he was desired to be silent in it, Sir Robert Clayton having desired this Bond should be made out of his own House, that none of his Family might take notice of it. Sir Robert Clayton having this notice, and finding from Mr. Woodward, the Prisoner had taken this Course to carry on this Design to charge his Estate, he got a Warrant from the Lord Chief-Justice to have her before him, to be examined before his Lordship. Where being brought, she upon her Examination, has confessed the whole Matter, her having the first Bond, and where it was made. What is become of the latter Bond, we cannot get out of her, nor whether she ever affixed the Name of Sir Robert Clayton to that. But we will produce credible Witnesses to prove her guilty of Forging the first Bond for the Payment of Twenty Thousand Pounds; and that it had the Name and Seal of Sir Robert Clayton affixed to it, and that she affirmed it to be a good Bond, well executed by Sir Robert Clayton, and that there was Interest due upon it from Sir Robert Clayton, and that the Interest was in the second Bond to be turned into Principal. We will call Witnesses to prove this, and then I hope she shall have such Punishment as she deserves.

Mr. Northey. My Lord, what the Nature of our Evidence will be, I shall inform you. It cannot be expected from us to produce the Bond, for that she carried away from Mr. Woodward, so that we cannot give the Writing itself in Evidence; but, if she insist on it, we hope she will produce the

Bond

Bond. We have the Copy (taken by Mr. Woodward) of the first Bond, which he had from her, that he might draw the Second Bond by it. But we can prove from that which agrees with our Record, that she affirmed, that the first Bond that she produced was Sir Robert Clayton's: That that Bond which she produced, of which this is the Copy, she affirmed to be Sir Robert Clayton's Deed. We shall do that, and afterwards prove her publishing it; for our Indictment is against her for Forging a Bond, and publishing that forged Bond, knowing it to be such, and close all with her own Confession. And, my Lord, there is this to shew there could be nothing in the Bond; that from the Time she pretended to have this Bond, when she was to have Twelve Hundred Pounds a Year, she remained a Prisoner all that Time, and got her self out by swearing she was not worth Five Pounds in all the World. Call Mr. Woodward. (Who appeared, and was sworn.)

Mr. Serj. Wright. Mr. Woodward, you hear what the Charge is; pray give an Account of what you know in reference to it.

Mr. Woodward. My Lord, Mrs. Butler has been my Client many Years. About two or three Years ago, more or less, Mrs. Butler came to me, and brought me a Bond; she gave it me to peruse, and told me another must be drawn by it. When I had perused the Bond, I found it was signed Robert Clayton, and four Witnesses Names set to the Bond. It was a Bond of the Penalty, as I remember, of Forty Thousand Pounds, and I think it was in the Year 1687, for to pay, I think, Twelve Hundred Pounds a Year, by four quarterly Payments yearly, during Sir Robert Clayton's Life, and Twenty Thousand Pounds within six Months after his Death. There were some other Things in that Bond, which will appear by the Copy, which indeed I did take; for Mrs. Butler desired it might be a Secret, being of a very great Concern. And I asked her why such a Bond should be given. I thought it must be great Generosity, and not for Money lent. But she told me the Forty Thousand Pound Bond was to be delivered up to Sir Robert. I asked her why, since she had it, she did not keep it? she said, that he would give her another Bond. She told me it had taken Air, and my Lady Clayton had some Disquiet about it; and for my Lady's Satisfaction, a Bill in Chancery was exhibited against her, to which she was to put in her Answer, and thereby disclaim any sort of Bond, or Interest, or any Pretence that she had upon Sir Robert Clayton.

Mr. Serj. Wright. She told you this her self?

Mr. Woodward. Yes; and when she gave me the Bond, she told me it was Sir Robert Clayton's Bond, or to that Purpose. But there being about nine or ten Years Arrears of Interest, she desired me to cast up the Interest that was in Arrear, and that it might be put to the Principal in the new Bond, saying, that Sir Robert would give her a Bond for the Whole together.

Mr. Serj. Wright. Was the whole Interest pretended to be in Arrear?

Mr. Woodward. I cannot say, all the Interest.

Mr. Serj. Wright. How did you compute it, from the Date of the Bond, or from what she told you?

Mr. Woodward. She said she had received some Money, and I computed the rest, rather under than over, and so made the Interest to come to Seven Thousand Pounds (the Interest payable by the Bond being Twelve Hundred Pounds a Year.) Whereupon she desired I would draw a Bond for it my self; and accordingly she left the first Bond with me. I took some Time, and drew it; and made the Penalty thereof Fifty-four Thousand Pounds, conditioned for the Payment of Twenty-seven Thousand Pounds. And it was to be made in the same Nature as the former was, in respect of the Principal, and in the mean time to continue the Payment of the Interest yearly, by proportionable Quarterly Payments.

Mr. Montagu. What Discourse had you with her about it?

Mr. Woodward. I did draw a Bond, and did take Notice, That whereas Sir Robert Clayton had given her this Bond of Forty Thousand Pounds, and at his Request, she had delivered it up to him; and upon an Account stated, there did remain Seven Thousand Pounds in Arrears for Interest, which in all amounted to Seven and Twenty Thousand Pounds, or thereabouts; when I gave it her, I said, it is a very great Sum, it concerns you to have Witnesses of Credit, for no body will believe Sir Robert Clayton did give you this Bond, especially after his Death, unless it be very well attested. I told her, if she pleased, I would go and be a Witness for her to see it executed. So she went away. And when she came to me again, she told me, that Sir Robert knew me very well, but did not think fit to have me for a Witness. I answered, I do not care; but it being a very great Sum, take care it be well executed. I gave her both the Bonds, and from that Time heard no more of it till about two Months since.

Mr. Northey. Was there anybody came to discourse with you of making a new Bond, besides her self?

Mr. Woodward. Not that I know of, I do not remember any. It was an extraordinary Sum, I did take a Copy of the Bond.

Mr. Northey. Have you it here?

Mr. Woodward. Yes, I have it here.

Mr. Northey. He swears he took a Copy of it, and delivered it to the Prisoner again. We desire it may be read.

Mr. Mallet. Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Woodward. I cannot say I examined it.

Mr. Northey. Did you write it from the Bond?

Mr. Woodward. I did.

Mr. Northey. Do you believe it is a true Copy?

Mr. Woodward. I believe it is. The Reason why I did not examine it, was because it was to be a Secret.

Mr. Mallet. Do you look upon your self to be infallible?

Mr. Serj. Wright. Had you any Direction from the Prisoner to take a Copy?

Mr. Woodward. I cannot say that.

L. C. J. Holt. Why did you write it out, for your Direction to draw the new Bond?

Mr. Woodward. I did write it out, because it is a special Condition, more than is usual in Bonds: for it is expressed, that there should be no Prosecution against her, by Sir Robert Clayton, or his Executors, either at Law or in Equity, for the 20000 l. or the Interest, or to do any Act to obstruct her in receiving the same.

L. C. J. Holt. When did you take a Copy of it?

Mr. Woodward. At the same time, and before I returned it.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you make the new Bond by this Copy, or by the former Bond?

Mr. Woodward. Very likely I might use both.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you keep them both?

Mr. Woodward. I did keep 'em both by me till I deliver'd the new Bond.

Mr. Serj. Wright. Is the Copy your own Hand-writing?

Mr. Woodward. Yes.

Mr. Montagu. What did you take it from?

Mr. Woodward. From the Original.

Mr. Wright. And do you take that to be a true Copy?

Mr. Woodward. I believe it is a true Copy.

Mr. Hall. Did you read it over at that Time?

Mr. Woodward. I did read it over.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you write it?

Mr. Woodward. I did write it.

Mr. Mallet. And did you examine it afterward?

Mr. Woodward. No, I did not examine it, it was not to be taken Notice of.

Mr. Hall. Can you say you read it carefully over at that Time?

Mr. Cutts. It may not be the very same Bond, if he did not examine it by the Original, sign'd by Sir Robert Clayton.

Mr. Northey. They may shew the Bond.

Mr. Mallet. Did the Prisoner bring the Bond to you, of which this is the Copy, and tell you This was her Bond?

Mr. Northey. We will prove it by her own Confession.

Mr. Mallet. If it be not the same Bond, she cannot be convicted.

Mr. Northey. No doubt of it.

Mr. Serj. Wright. Produce the Copy; and, if your Lordship please, it may be read.

L. C. J. Holt. Let it be read.

Noverint Universi per presentes me Robertum Clayton, Militem & Decurionem Anglice, Kt. & Alderman de London, teneri & firmiter obligari Mary Butler alias Strickland, de South-street in Parochia de Edmon-ton, in Comitatu Middlesex, vidue, Quadraginta mille libris bone & legalis moneti Anglie, solvend' eidem Mary Butler alias Strickland, aut suo certo Attornat' Executor' vel Administrator' suis, ad quam quidem solutionem bene & fideliter faciendam obligo me, heredes, Executores & Administratores meos, firmiter per presentes. Life of the said Sir Robert Clayton: And also, if the Heirs, Executors, and Administrators of the said Sir Robert Clayton do, and shall, on or before the End and Expiration of Six Months next after the Death or Decease of him the said Sir Robert Clayton, not only well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the said Mary Butler alias Strickland, her Executors, Administrators, or Assigns, the full and just Sum of Twenty thousand Pounds of lawful Money of England, above express'd; but also all such Interest thereof, after the Rate aforesaid, as shall be in arrear and unpaid at the Death of the aforesaid Sir Robert Clayton, and also all such as shall grow due to be paid for the same, for so long time of the said Six Months as the said Sum of Twenty thousand Pounds shall be unsatisfied and unpaid after the Death or Decease of the said Sir Robert Clayton, without Coven, Fraud, or Deceit; nor shall not commence any Suit, either in Law or Equity, against the said Mary Butler alias Strickland, her Heirs, Executors, or Administrators, for, concerning, or in respect of the said Twenty thousand Pounds and Interest, or any Part thereof; and shall not do any Act or Thing to obstruct, molest, or hinder her, them, or any of them, from receiving, having, or enjoying the same; then this Obligation to be void, and of none effect, or else to remain in full Force.

Robert Clayton.

Seal'd and delivered in the Presence of us,

*J. Pennington,
Edw. Spencer,
John Hebden,
Eliz. Rivers.*

Mr. Serj. Wright. Did the Prisoner bring you the Bond, of which this is a Copy, as a true Bond?

Mr. Woodward. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Wright. I ask you this, Had you a Charge from her to keep this Matter secret?

Mr. Woodward. Yes; and that I would write the Bond with my own Hand.

Mr. Serj. Wright. She giving you this Charge, how came this Matter to be known then?

Mr. Woodward. Mr. Nicholas Baker came to me from Sir Robert Clayton, and ask'd me if I did not know the Prisoner, and particularly about a Bond, and whether I did not make one for her. It was not in my Memory at first, till further Discourse occasion'd me to remember it; and I told him, that I did do some Business for her. He told me Sir Robert Clayton had some Information given him, that there was such a Bond drawn by me: Then I told him, I did remember there was such a Bond brought to me, and that I had made a Bond for Mrs. Butler, and had taken a Copy of the first Bond, which I had by me; and also of the second Bond, in which I had left out a material Word in the Obligation, and was fain to write it over again, and had the first Draught by me till about a Month before that Time, when meeting with it among my Papers, I threw it into the Fire in my Closet, but this Copy did remain by me.

Mr. Hall. You say this Copy is all your own Hand-writing?

Mr. Woodward. Yes, it is.

Mr. Hall. Was it Seal'd or Cancell'd?

Mr. Woodward. No; 'twas Seal'd, I am very positive.

H h 2

Mr.

Mr. Hall. Are you positive the Seal was on it at that Time?

Mr. Woodward. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Mallet. Did she tell you that Bond was to be cancell'd?

Mr. Woodward. She told me, she was to deliver up that Bond to Sir Robert Clayton; and, that he would give her another instead of it.

Mr. Mallet. Was the Bond then deliver'd up or no?

Mr. Woodward. I cannot say she did?

Mr. Cutts. Did you never hear any Bill in Chancery? To what End was this Bond deliver'd to you? For what Reason?

Mr. Woodward. I ask'd her why the Bond was to be deliver'd up, and she told me, There was some Uneasiness in the Family, and my Lady Clayton had got the Air of it; and therefore, to satisfy her, there was a Bill prefer'd against her in Chancery, and she was to put in her Answer; and, that he would give her another Bond, and that was to be deliver'd up.

Mr. Noribey. We have other Witnesses to prove the Forging of it. Call Mr. Baker. (Who appear'd and was sworn.)

Mr. Serj. Wright. Mr. Baker, were you present when the Prisoner Mrs. Butler was before my Lord Chief-Justice concerning this Bond? Look on that Copy.

Mr. Baker. I was present at my Lord Chief-Justice's Chamber, when the Prisoner was brought before his Lordship; and she did there acknowledge, that the Bond, of which she was accus'd, she had order'd to be made.

Mr. Serj. Wright. Was that the Bond in question?

Mr. Baker. Yes, she did confess she caused Sir Robert Clayton's Name to be set to it, and the Witnesses Names; and, that it was done by one Mr. Lewkar, a Scrivener in Bishopsgate street.

Mr. Serj. Wright. She said so?

Mr. Baker. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hall. Did she confess it? Where was it?

Mr. Baker. At my Lord Chief-Justice's Chamber; she confess'd it was her own Act, she caused it to be made, and directed the Scrivener to set Sir Robert Clayton's Name, and the Witnesses Names to it.

Mr. Mallet. Was there not at that Time a Discourse of a Bond that she had on the late Duke of Buckingham?

Mr. Baker. I cannot be positive in that; but this was the Fact she was charg'd with, and she did confess that she caused it to be done, and, that the Persons as Witnesses were innocent of it, and, that she did direct Mr. Lewkar to set Sir Robert Clayton's Name to it.

Mr. Hall. How do you know This is the very same Bond?

Mr. Baker. Mr. Woodward shew'd me this very Bond when I went to him from Sir Robert Clayton, to know whether he was acquainted with the Prisoner; who, after some Discourse with him relating to this Bond, very frankly and ingenuously told me the whole Matter of Fact, as he has done here.

Mr. Mallet. But we ask you about her Confession; Did you shew her that Copy? Did she confess that?

L. C. J. Holt. What was the Discourse of at that Time?

Mr. Baker. It was about the Bond of Forty thousand Pounds, with which she was charg'd before your Lordship, to have counterfeited.

Mr. Noribey. Did he give an Account then of this Bond?

Mr. Baker. Yes, Mr. Woodward produced this Copy before my Lord Chief-Justice, and she own'd she had order'd Mr. Lewkar to make it, and to put Sir Robert Clayton's Name to it.

Mr. Serj. Wright. Now, my Lord, we will shew you, that she is going on still, and that very lately she has own'd it, and that she is going about to make the Bond of 50000*l.* a very good Bond.

Mr. Mallet. When it is in Question, you may then invalidate it.

Mr. Serj. Wright. Mr. Woodward has told you he did make the Bond of 54000*l.* but, I think, we have no need of it.

Mr. Hall. They have fail'd in the Indictment, so that it can't be supported by this Bond; it should be laid specially, according to the Condition of the Bond to be paid; for it is a Bond of Forty thousand Pounds, to be paid by his Heirs after his Death Twenty thousand Pounds. Now the Bond, whereof they produce a Copy, is of other Things.

Mr. Noribey. It is for the same.

Mr. Hall. It is a different Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Not at all.

Mr. Mallet. It is laid in the Indictment, to be paid by Sir Robert Clayton: In the Bond 'tis said, it is not to be paid till after his Death.

Mr. Serj. Wright. 'Tis laid in the Indictment, that the Bond was of the Penalty of Forty thousand Pounds to be paid by Sir Robert Clayton, with Condition thereto under-written, concerning, among other Things, the Payment of Twenty thousand Pounds to the Prisoner, after the Death of Sir Robert Clayton, by his Executors.

L. C. J. Holt. Let your Exceptions proceed from the Indictment; it is to be paid after the Death of Sir Robert by his Executors.

Mr. Serj. Wright. Have you any more to say for your selves?

Mr. Hall. We have a great many Witnesses here to prove her Reputation. 'Tis a strange Thing any one should go to forge a Bond on such an eminent Person.

L. C. J. Holt. It is strange indeed; but the Question is, whether it be true.

Mr. Hall. Her Confession is prov'd by Mr. Baker, but we have many Witnesses as to her Reputation.

Mr. Mallet. This Bond is not in the Indictment. The Bond of Forty thousand Pounds is several Years since. Now there are two Bonds. Now that of Fifty four thousand Pounds is not in this Indictment, and this of Forty thousand Pounds is several Years since that it was shewn to him. It is strange he should be so very exact, and yet did not examine it. And probably he might mistake in the Copy, and it may not be the very Bond in the Indictment. Now, as to Mr. Baker, 'tis true, we have a Bond of Five thousand Pounds from the Duke of Buckingham, and we are suing Sir Robert Clayton for this Money, and hope to have it, now after so many Years. And Sir Robert Clayton did prefer a Bill in Chancery against us, and we in Answer did disclaim having any such Bond. And now, when we are like to have a Decree for this Sum against the Trustee of the Duke of Buckingham's Estate, he comes and would take off our Credit in this Matter. We did, in the Year 1695, disclaim any such Bond.

Mr. Noribey. Then you do admit that she own'd the Bond. [Then her Witnesses were call'd.]

Mr.

Mr. Mallet. Mr. Glover, do you know Mrs. Butler?

Mr. Glover. Yes.

Mr. Mallet. Give an Account of what you know, as to her Reputation.

Glover. I have known her fifteen or sixteen Years. All that I know of her is fair and clear.

L. C. J. Holt. Where do you live?

Glover. In Red Lyon-street.

L. C. J. Holt. What Profession are you of?

Glover. I belonged to Lincoln's-Inn.

L. C. J. Holt. A Gentleman of Lincoln's-Inn.

Glover. I was brought up at the University, but have not resided there lately.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you live? Are you a House-keeper?

Glover. I live privately at present.

L. C. J. Holt. Who knows you?

Glover. I cannot tell who knows me here. I believe Mr. Northey does.

Mr. Northey. I do not intend to give any Character of you, I do not use to give Characters of my Clients.

L. C. J. Holt. How long have you lived in Red Lyon street?

Glover. Ten or Eleven Years.

Mr. Mallet. How did she live?

Glover. I knew her live in Devonshire-Square very reputably, I always thought so.

Mr. Serj. Wright. Had she any Estate of her own?

Glover. I cannot say so certainly; it was thought so. She paid every body very punctually.

Mr. Hall. Acquaint my Lord how long you have known her, and whether you think she would be guilty of such a Forgery.

Glover. I have known her fourteen or fifteen Years. I cannot believe she would.

Mr. Montagu. Have you heard the Evidence?

Glover. Yes.

Mr. Montagu. What do you think of it then?

Glover. I know not what to think.

Mr. Montagu. Do you think she would confess her self guilty of a Forgery, if she were not?

Glover. I cannot tell what to say to that. I suppose no Body would confess, if they were not guilty.

Mr. Serj. Wright. Do you know one Hebden?

Glover. I know Hebden.

Mr. Serj. Wright. He is a Witness to the Bond. Was he Sir John Hebden's Son?

Glover. I can give no Account of that, but he has had a very honourable Character.

Mrs. Rodum called, and appeared.

Mr. Hall. Mrs. Rodum, do you know Mrs. Butler?

Rodum. Yes.

Mr. Hall. How long have you known her?

Rodum. Five or Six Years.

Mr. Hall. What do you know of her Character?

Rodum. I am the Widow of one of them that kill'd one another by the Temple. I never knew of any Bond, nor ever heard her lay claim to any such Bond. She lived in good Reputation. She was in my House when my Husband was killed. She lived in my House about a Year; I never heard she made any such Pretension. She liv'd honestly and decently. She owes me upwards of three hundred Pounds.

L. C. J. Holt. For what? How came she to owe you three hundred Pounds?

Rodum. I kept a Shop in the Exchange, and my Husband was a Broker. She owed it me partly for Goods out of my Shop, and partly for Goods out of Scotland. He was killed about half a Year ago, and I have kept the Shop still. About three or four Months ago she left me, and I never heard of any Bond.

Mr. Serj. Wright. Did you never hear of a Bill in Chancery against her?

Rodum. No, Sir.

Mr. Mallet. Did you hear of any Money that was due to her from the Duke of Buckingham?

Rodum. I was told she was suing Sir Robert Clayton for Money that was to be paid her on the Duke of Buckingham's Account, and upon the Credit of that I trusted her.

Shaw called.

Mr. Hall. How long have you known Mrs. Butler?

Shaw. About sixteen Years.

Mr. Hall. Do you think she would forge a Bond?

Shaw. Indeed I cannot give an Account of that.

Mr. Hall. How has she behaved her self?

Shaw. I never knew her guilty of any Rudeness.

Mr. Serj. Wright. Put up more Witnesses, if you have any?

Mr. Hall. We have done.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Butler, will you say any Thing for your self?

Mrs. Butler. I am altogether innocent in the Matter, I never wrong'd Sir Robert Clayton, nor any Body else, in my Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, This Mrs. Butler, alias Strickland, stands indicted for forging a Bond in the Name of Sir Robert Clayton, in the Penalty of Forty thousand Pounds, the Condition for the Payment of Twenty thousand Pounds, among other Things, within six Months after the Death of Sir Robert Clayton. And also, That she did publish this Bond as the true Bond of Sir Robert Clayton. You have heard what Evidence has been given, to prove her guilty of this Forgery, and the Publication of it.

It seems, some Time since, as is proved to you by Mr. Woodward, this Gentlewoman came to him with this Bond of Forty thousand Pounds. And it was upon this Account, as she said: To wit, Sir Robert Clayton having given her this Bond, it had taken Air, and was come to the Lady Clayton's Ear; which occasioned some Difference between Sir Robert Clayton and his Lady. She said, That this Bond, by Direction from Sir Robert, was to be deliver'd up to him to be cancell'd; and that Sir Robert Clayton had engaged to enter into a new Bond in the Penalty of Fifty four thousand Pounds, for the Payment of Twenty six thousand Pounds (there being at that Time supposed an Arrear of Interest for Twenty thousand Pounds) payable after Sir Robert's Death, and Interest in the mean Time. She delivered this Bond to Mr. Woodward. He takes a Copy of it, which is produced and read. And so, according to her Direction, Mr. Woodward does draw another Bond, with the Penalty of Fifty four thousand Pounds. And she then told Mr. Woodward Sir Robert would seal this Bond upon the Delivery up of the Bond of Forty thousand Pounds. Mr. Woodward having considered, that it was an extraordinary Sum for Sir Robert to engage himself in, and he being a very considerable Man, Man, he advised her to have this new Bond well attested; and to be sure to get Witnesses of unquestionable Credit to see it executed. And thereupon he offered himself to go with her to Sir Robert, to be a Witness to this new Bond. No, says she, Sir Robert is not willing that this should be known; you are not a proper Person to be a Witness to it; therefore, says she, I will get some other Witnesses to attest it. Whereupon he gives her this first Bond for Forty thousand Pounds, which she brought to him, for the Payment of Twenty thousand Pounds, and gave her also the Draught of the new Bond. He says, this Bond that she brought to him was attested by four Witnesses. Sir Robert, it seems, upon her Answer in Chancery, not imagining any Thing of this, she having disclaimed in Chancery the having of any; some Time after he had heard a Report as if she was setting up of a new Bond, and that Mr. Woodward could give an Account of it. Wherefore he sends Mr. Baker to Mr. Woodward, who gave him the same Account that he has done here. Then Sir Robert makes a Complaint, and has her brought before me; and there was Mr. Woodward with this Copy. And this was objected to her, as if she had forged this Bond. And it seems, when she was there under Examination, and is proved to you by Mr. Baker, she did plainly confess, that she had forged this Bond of Forty thousand Pounds, and that she had procured one Lewkar to do it for her, who set Sir Robert's Name to it; and said, that the Witnesses, whose Names were set to it, were innocent, and knew nothing of the Matter.

Now what is said for her on the other Side? They bring some Persons for her, that say they have known her. One, that says he belonged to Lincoln's-Inn, and had been acquainted with her fourteen or fifteen Years, and did look upon her as a civil Woman; and for his Part, he does not believe she would be guilty of such a Forgery. Another, who is a Woman, says, she has known her some Time, and she says, she has trusted her much, and did never hear her say any Thing of this Bond, but she behaved her self civilly, and she took her to be a very sober Person. Another Witness says, she look'd on her to be a very honest Person. This is the Sum of the Evidence.

There is a very strong Evidence to induce you to believe that she did forge the Bond. Such a Bond she had, that is plain. She does give no Account what is become of it; and she does not shew any manner of Pretence of having so much Money from Sir Robert Clayton due to her; she does not make it appear why Sir Robert should give her a Bond upon any Account. Now for any to say that they knew her, and they do not believe she would forge a Bond, that is no Evidence; no Body ought to believe ill of Mrs. Butler, or any one else, unless it be made to appear. But the Question is not, what they do believe; but whether the Matter be not proved to you to your Satisfaction, that she has forged this Bond? And if you are satisfied that she did forge it, you ought to find her guilty; and if you do not believe the Evidence to be satisfactory, you ought to acquit her.

Then the Jury withdrew, and being returned, gave their Verdict as follows.

Cl. of Arr. Are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Bring Mary Butler to the Bar. How say ye? Is the Prisoner at the Bar guilty of the Forgery whereof she stands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

The Judgment which the Court pronounced against her was, That she should pay a Fine of Five hundred Pounds to the King, and continue in Prison till she paid it.

PON Reading the Petition of Henry Duke of Norfolk, praying Leave to bring in a Bill to dissolve his Marriage with the Lady Mary Mordant, and to enable him to Marry again; he having certain Proof of his Wife's living in Adultery with Sir John Germaine: It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the said Petition shall be taken into Consideration To-morrow, at Eleven of the Clock, and all the Lords summon'd to attend.

Die Veneris 16 Februarij, 1699.

After reading the Order for resuming the Consideration of the Duke of Norfolk's Petition, and Debate thereupon;

Hodie prima vice lecta est billa, entitled, An Act to dissolve the Duke of Norfolk's Marriage with the Lady Mary Mordant, and to enable him to Marry again. In the Words following,

Humbly sheweth, and complaineth to Your most Excellent Majesty, your true and faithful Subject Henry Duke of Norfolk, and Earl-Marshal of England, That he did, some Years since, marry the Lady Mary Mordant, his now Wife; and, that she hath, for divers Years, lived in Separation from the said Subject, and hath had unlawful Familiarity and adulterous Conversation with Sir John Germaine, Bar. and is guilty of Adultery on her part, and hath broken the Bond of Matrimony. Forasmuch therefore as your said Subject hath no Issue, nor can hope for any other than spurious Issue to succeed him in his Honours, Dignities, and Estate, unless the said Marriage be declar'd void, and annull'd by Parliament, and your said Subject be enabled to marry any other Woman. May it please Your most Excellent Majesty, out of your Princely Goodness and

Compassion to your said Subject's Misfortune and Calamity, and for the future Support and Comfort of himself and Family, that it may be enacted: And be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and of the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That the said Bond of Matrimony being violated and broken by the manifest open Adultery of the said Lady Mary Mordant, &c. and is hereby enacted, declared, and adjudged to be from henceforth wholly dissolved, annulled, vacated, and made void to all Intents, Constructions, and Purposes whatsoever: And, that it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Henry Duke of Norfolk, at any time or times hereafter, to contract Matrimony, and to marry (as well in the Life-time of the said Lady Mary, as if she were naturally dead) with any other Woman or Women with whom he might lawfully marry in case the said Lady Mary was not living: And, that such Matrimony, when had and celebrated, shall be a good, just, and lawful Marriage, and so shall be adjudged, deemed, and taken to all Intents, Constructions, and Purposes; and, that all and every Child and Children born in such Matrimony, shall be deemed, adjudged, and taken to be born in lawful Wedlock, and to be legitimate and inheritable, and shall inherit the said Dukedom of Norfolk, Office of Earl-Marshal of England, and all other Earldoms, Dignities, Baronies, Honours, and Titles of Honour, Lands, Tenements, and other Hereditaments from and by their Fathers, Mothers, and other Ancestors, in like manner and form as any other Child or Children born in lawful Matrimony shall or may inherit or be inheritable, according to the Course of Inheritances used in this Realm; and to have and enjoy all Privileges, Pre-eminencies, Benefits, Advantages, Claims, and Demands, as any other Child or Children born in lawful Wedlock may have or claim by the Laws and Customs of this Kingdom. And be it further enacted, That the said Henry Duke of Norfolk shall be entitled to be Tenant by Courtesie of the Lands and Inheritance of such Wife whom he shall here-

* See State Trials, Vol. VIII. p. 7, and 27. &c. for Two former Trials, relating to this Affair.

hereafter marry; and such Wife as he shall so marry shall be entitled to Dower of the Lands and Tenements whereof the said Henry Duke of Norfolk shall be seised of such Estate whereof she shall be dowable, as any other Husband or Wife may or might claim, have, or enjoy. And the Child or Children born in such Marriage shall and may derive and make Title by Descent or otherwise to and from any of their Ancestors, as any other Child or Children may do, any Law, Statute, Restraint, Prohibition, Ordinance, Canon, Constitution, Prescription, or Custom had, made, exercised, or used to the contrary of the Premises, or any of them, in any wise notwithstanding. And be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the said Lady Mary shall, and is hereby barred and excluded of and from all Dower and Thirds, and of and from all Right and Title of Dower and Thirds unto or out of any the Honours, Manors, Lands, or Hereditaments of the said Duke; and, That all Conveyances, Joyntures, Settlements, Limitations, and Creations of Uses and Trusts of, into, or out of any Honours, Manors, Lands, or Hereditaments, at any time heretofore made by the said Duke, or any of his Ancestors or Trustees, unto, or upon, or for the Use or Benefit of the said Lady Mary, or any the Issue of her Body, or for easing, discharging, or counter-securing any the Manors, Lands, or Hereditaments of the said Lady Mary, or any of her Ancestors, shall be from henceforth, so far as concerns the said Lady Mary, or any Issue of her Body, or any Interest for her or them, utterly void and of none effect; and all and every the said Honours, Manors, Lands, or Hereditaments of the said Duke, or any of his Ancestors or Trustees, shall from henceforth remain and be to and for the Use and Benefit of the said Duke, and such other Person or Persons, and for such Estates and Interests, and in such manner and form as if the said Lady Mary was now naturally dead without any Issue of her Body. And also, That all Limitations and Creations of any Use, Estate, Power, or Trust, made by any of the Ancestors of the said Lady Mary, unto or for the Use or Benefit of the said Duke, his Heirs or Assigns, out of any the Manors, Lands, or Hereditaments of any the Ancestors of the said Lady Mary, shall be from henceforth void, and of none effect. * And be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the said Duke of Norfolk, his Heirs, Executors, Administrators, or Assigns, shall, on or before the Five and twentieth Day of March, One thousand seven hundred and one, pay, or cause to be paid, unto the said Lady Mary, or her Assigns, the Sum of Ten thousand Pounds of lawful Money of England, which was the Portion in Money paid on her Marriage with the said Duke; and in default of Payment of the said Sum of Ten Thousand Pounds, on or before the said Five and twentieth Day of March, then, and in such case, she the said Lady Mary, and her Assigns, during her Natural Life from the Decease of the said Duke, if she shall survive him, shall be entitled to, and shall and may have and enjoy such Joynture and other Advantages as she might or may have or claim by virtue of a certain Indenture, Quinquartite, made upon and in consideration of the said Marriage, bearing Date the Thirteenth Day of June, Anno Domini One thousand six hundred seventy-seven, and made, or mention'd to have been made, between Henry late Duke of Norfolk, then Earl of Norwich, Father of the said Duke, and the present Duke, by the Name of Henry Lord Howard of the first Part, Henry Earl of Peterborough and the said Dutches, by the Name of the Lady

Mary Mordant, sole Daughter and Heir apparent of the said Earl of Peterborough, of the second Part; Henry Marquis of Worcester, William Earl of Powis, and Henry Lord O-Brian, of the third Part; Arthur Onslow, Esq; and Thomas Dalmatroy, Esq; of the fourth Part; Simon Fox, Esq; and Thomas West, Gent. of the fifth Part: And by virtue of the Agreements contain'd in certain Articles bearing Date the Eight and twentieth Day of April, in the Year of our Lord One thousand six hundred ninety-four, made, or mention'd to have been made, between the said Duke of the one Part, and the said Henry Earl of Peterborough on behalf of the said Dutches; and the said Dutches of the other Part, according to the true Intent and Meaning of the said Quinquartite Indenture and Articles; and also, during the joint Lives of the said Duke and Dutches, shall and may enjoy Five Hundred Pounds per Annum, by virtue of an Indenture Quadrupartite, dated the Fifteenth Day of June, One thousand six hundred ninety-four, made, or mention'd to have been made, between the said Duke of Norfolk of the first Part, the said Earl of Peterborough and the said Dutches of the second Part, William Lord Lemster of the third Part, and Sir John Mordant, Knight and Baronet, and William Longueville, Esq; of the fourth Part. And then, and in such Case, the said Duke of Norfolk, his Heirs, Executors, and Administrators, is and are discharg'd of and from the Payment of the said Sum of Ten Thousand Pounds, any Thing herein contained to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding. But on Payment of the said Ten Thousand Pounds in manner aforesaid, she the said Lady Mary shall be wholly barred and excluded from her said Joynture, and of and from all other Advantages out of the Real and Personal Estate of the said Duke, as aforesaid.

Upon the first Reading of the Bill, entitled, An Act to dissolve the Duke of Norfolk's Marriage with the Lady Mary Mordant, and to enable him to Marry again; it is order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that the Dutches of Norfolk may have a Copy of the said Bill; and, that his Grace the Duke of Norfolk shall be heard by his Counsel, to make good the Allegations of his Bill, on Tuesday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon; and, that the Dutches of Norfolk may have Counsel to attend at the same time, if she please.

Die Sabbati 17 Februarij, 1699.

Upon reading the Petition of Mary Dutches of Norfolk, praying to be heard by her Counsel before any further Proceedings be made on the Bill entitled, An Act to dissolve the Duke of Norfolk's Marriage with the Lady Mary Mordant, and to enable him to Marry again; it is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that the Dutches of Norfolk shall be heard by her Counsel as desired, on Tuesday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That William Lane and John le Fountain, Gent. do attend this House on Tuesday the Twentieth Day of this Instant February, at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, as Witnesses to be examined on the behalf of the Duke of Norfolk.

Die Lunæ 19 Februarij, 1699.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That Mr. Daniel Ger-

Germaine, Mr. Simon Briane alias de Brienne, Mrs. Anna-Maria Briane alias de Brienne, and Mrs. Judith Poſſette alias Perſode, do, and they are hereby requir'd, to attend this Houſe, as Witneſſes on the Behalf of his Grace the Duke of Norfolk, to-morrow at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Die Martis 20 Februarij, 1699.

After hearing Council, upon the Petition of the Dutcheſs of Norfolk, purſuant to the Order of the Seventeenth inſtant; as alſo Council for the Duke of Norfolk, the following Order was made; viz.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That this Houſe will hear Witneſſes for the Duke of Norfolk, only to Matter of Fact, ſince the rejecting of the firſt Bill, except only Mr. Daniel Germaine, Mr. Simon Briane alias de Brienne, Mrs. Anna-Maria Briane or de Brienne, Mrs. Judith Poſſette or Perſode, Mrs. Elleanor Vaneſs, who are at liberty to give Evidence to Matters of Fact before that Time, which were not then before the Houſe; and are hereby required to attend this Houſe, as Witneſſes on the Behalf of his Grace the Duke of Norfolk, to-morrow Morning at Eleven of the Clock.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That to-morrow at Twelve of the Clock, this Houſe will proceed to hear Council and Witneſſes for the Duke of Norfolk, to make good the Allegations in his Bill; at which Time the Dutcheſs of Norfolk's Council ſhall be preſent.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That William Bayly and Edmund Davies do, and they are hereby required to attend this Houſe to-morrow at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, as Witneſſes to be examined on the behalf of the Duke of Norfolk.

Die Martis 21 Februarij, 1699.

The Houſe being inform'd, That Endeavours had been made to ſerve Orders upon the Duke of Norfolk's Witneſſes, and ſeveral of them were ſick, and others could not be found:

Joſeph Whilley being call'd in and ſworn, ſaid as follows:

Daniel Germaine. I went to his Houſe, and was told by a Neighbour no body was within; but they bid me go to the Alehouſe at the next Door, and I might hear of him; and enquiring there, I found one of his Journeymen, Peter Hercules, who told me, he had not been at home theſe fix Months, nor could not tell when he would return: But I ſhew'd him the original Order, and ſerv'd him with a Copy, and told him his Maſter was to appear at the Duke of Norfolk's Lodgings, at the Houſe of Lords, to-morrow at Eleven a-Clock, as a Witneſs for him.

Mr. Simon Briane. I went to his Houſe in St. James's-ſtreet, and Mr. Poſſette's Man, Jer. Hoffman, came to the Door, who told me Mr. Briane went to Kensington that Afternoon; and no ſooner had he ſaid ſo, but Mr. Poſſette came in, who told me the ſame; and I aſk'd him to ſpeak with Mr. Briane's Wife, and he told me ſhe was ſo weak, that I could not ſerve her with the Order. Then I aſk'd to ſee Mrs. Poſſette, his own Lady; he likewiſe told me ſhe was ſick, and could not be ſpoke to; ſo I ſhew'd him the original Order, and left the Copy with himſelf for his Lady and Mr. Briane's Lady, and forthwith went to Kensington, to ſerve the Order upon Mr. Briane; but not meeting with him, after a great deal of Enquiry, I left it with his Maid-ſervant at his Lodgings, and ſerv'd her with it, who told me ſhe would give it her Maſter that Night, who waited for the King's coming from Hampton-Court. This Morning I went again to his Houſe at St. James's, and ſent for his Servant, who told me his Maſter did not come to Town laſt Night; ſo I believe his Maid had given him the Order.

Mrs. Elleanor Vaneſs. I enquir'd at every Houſe in Kensington, where I was inform'd there were Dutch People, and could not know of any of them of any ſuch Woman; but the Earl of Albemarle's Steward, and the Porter of the Lodge going into Hide-Park (Kensington) promis'd me they would enquire after her, and ſend me word if they heard of ſuch a Perſon.

Then George Starkey being call'd in and ſworn, ſaith as followeth: I ſerved William Bayly with the Order of this Houſe, to attend as a Witneſs this Day: He told me he was under a Courſe of Phyſick, and could not ſtir out without Danger of his Life, but any other Day he would attend.

Then a Certificate under the Hands of John Hutton and Theodore Colladon, Doctors of Phyſick, was produced and read, as follows:

We whoſe Names are under-written, Doctors of Phyſick, do certify, that Mary, Wife of Simon de Brienne, and Judith Wife of Peter Perſode, have been for ſome time, and are at this preſent, ſo extraordinary ill in Bed, that neither of them can remove from thence without Danger of their Lives. Witneſs our Hands, at their Dwelling-houſe in St. James's-ſtreet, betwixt Ten and Eleven of the Clock in the Morning, the 21ſt Day of February, 1699.

John Hutton.

Theodore Colladon.

After which, the following Order was made; viz.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That Doctor John Hutton and Doctor Theodore Colladon (who ſign'd a Certificate delivered and read this Day, of the Illneſs of Mrs. Mary, Wife to Simon de Brienne, and Judith her Siſter, Wife to Mr. Peter Perſode) do attend this Houſe to-morrow at Eleven of the Clock, to atteſt upon Oath what they have certified.

Then the Form of the Oath formerly given to Witneſſes, being read out of the Journal, 23 Jan. 1691, the ſame was agreed to with ſome Alteration, and is as followeth;

“ YOU ſhall true Answer make to all ſuch Questions as ſhall be aſk'd you by this Honourable Houſe, in relation to the Charge of Adultery in the Bill brought in by the Duke of Norfolk againſt the Dutcheſs of Norfolk with Sir John Germaine. You ſhall declare your whole Knowledge of this Matter, and ſhall ſpeak the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, as well upon the Matter as you ſhall be examined on behalf of his Grace the Duke of Norfolk, as upon ſuch Interrogatories as ſhall be exhibited on behalf of the Dutcheſs of Norfolk, “folk, without Favour or Affection to either “Party. So help you God, and by the Con-

“tents of this Book.”

Then the Council being called in, they for the Duke having opened the Nature of their Evidence, Mrs. Elianor Vanefs was sworn; and being asked some Questions by the Duke's Council, she appeared to be a Dutch Woman, and could not well understand Englisch, and an Interpreter being offered by the Duke's Council; Council withdrew, and the House agreed, that the Dutchess's Council should have an Interpreter also; and the Council being called in again, were told so by Order of the House, and that they might proceed to any other Witness. The Duke's Council desired that they might begin with Mrs. Vanefs, and withdrew.

Then the following Orders were made.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Agents for the Duke of Norfolk do forthwith deliver a List of the Witnesses they intend to examine on the behalf of the Duke of Norfolk, to the Dutchess of Norfolk or her Agents.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That to-morrow at Twelve of the Clock, this House will proceed to hear Council and Witnesses for the Duke of Norfolk, to make out the Allegations in his Bill; at which Time the Dutchess of Norfolk's Council shall be present.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That Daniel Germaine, Simon Briane alias de Brienne, Anna-Maria Briane alias de Brienne, Judith Possette alias Perfode, — Goutaken, — Pontack, Susanna Barrington, — Hicgonee, Mrs. Keemer, Joseph Berger, William Lane, John le Fontaine, Jonathan Browne, — Hater, and — Welburne do, and are hereby required, to attend this House to-morrow at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, as Witnesses to be examined on the behalf of the Duke of Norfolk.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That William Allen and John Maitland do, and they are hereby required, to attend this House, on Service of this Order, as Witnesses to be examined on behalf of the Duke of Norfolk.

Die Jovis 22 Februarij, 1699.

This House being informed, that Sir Theodore Colladon, and Doctor Hutton attended, as ordered yesterday:

Sir Theodore Colladon being called in and sworn, says, He saw Mrs. de Briane yesterday; she was very ill, fainting in Bed, and scarce able to live. Mrs. Perfode he also visited, who having miscarried by a Fright, could not stir out of her Bed without hazard of her Life.

Doctor Hutton being called in and sworn, says, He visited Mrs. Mary de Briane this Morning; she hath been sick three Months, is in an ill Condition of Health, and will endanger her Life if she comes abroad. Mrs. Perfode is very ill, she cannot come out of her Bed without endangering her Life.

Then the Council were called for the Duke and Dutchess of Norfolk.

The Dutchess's Council moved to have the Witnesses Christian Names, and Place of their Abode, and said they had not the Names till this Morning.

Then the two Interpreters took the following Oath.

You shall well, truly, and faithfully interpret between the House and Elianor Vanefs, the Witness, touching the Matters she shall give in Evidence.

Council being withdrawn, the House agreed to tell the Duke's Council, that they might proceed to examine Witnesses that were named the Day before: And that if the Dutchess's Council had any Exception, they might now make it against them or their Testimony, and that the Duke's Agents should give the Christian Names of their Witnesses, and as much as they can of the Places of their Abode to the Agents of the Dutchess.

The Council being called in again, were told what was agreed on by the House touching the Witnesses: Then the Duke's Council proceeded and called in Elianor Vanefs, who being ask'd several Questions by the Duke's Council, the Interpreter ask'd them of her in Dutch, and she answered again to the Interpreter, and he declared her Answers to the House in Englisch.

Nicholas Hausier being sworn in like manner, gave his Testimony in French by an Interpreter.

Then Council being withdrawn, the following Orders were made; viz.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Short-hand Writers, who took the Witnesses Evidence, do dictate to a Clerk, in order to be transcribed what the Witnesses have said; That the Examinations with the Short-hand Writers Book and Papers are to be sealed up and kept by the Clerk until the next Day the House shall proceed on this Matter, and then what is transcribed shall be read at the Bar in the Presence of the Witnesses.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That on Saturday next, at Twelve of the Clock, this House will proceed to hear Council and Witnesses for the Duke of Norfolk, to make out the Allegations of his Bill; at which Time the Dutchess of Norfolk's Council shall be present.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That Simon Briane alias de Brienne, shall be, and is hereby required, to attend this House on Saturday next at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, to be examined as a Witness on behalf of the Duke of Norfolk.

Die Veneris 23 Februarij, 1699.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That James Berger, Susannab Barrington, Frances Knight, and James Macdonnell, shall, and they are hereby required, to attend this House to-morrow at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, as Witnesses to be examined on the behalf of the Duke of Norfolk.

Die Sabbati 24 Februarij, 1699.

The House being moved, That Mr. Simon Briane or de Brienne may be sent for in Custody, for not having attended according to the Order of this House, as a Witness for the Duke of Norfolk?

Here-

Hereupon Thomas Kellett was called in; and being sworn, ſaid to this Effect, viz.

I went to the Houſe of the Dutcheſs of Norfolk, and enquired for Mrs. Sufannab Barrington, and if ſhe lived there? A Man ſaid no: I asked if he could tell me where ſhe was? He ſaid, no.

Then I went to ſerve Mr. Simon Briane or de Brienne; and being at his Houſe, enquired for him: His Man ſaid, his Maſter was gone to Kensington. He took the Order, and ſaid he would give it his Maſter.

I went to the Lord Cutt's Houſe, and aſk'd for one Mr. Berger, but could not hear of him; I went to my Lord's Stables, and aſked his Coachman for Mr. Berger, he ſaid he lived in Hedge-Lane; there I went and found his Wife, and delivered the Order to her; ſhe ſaid ſhe would have nothing to do with it, and that Mr. Germaine gave him Bread. I ſaw him Yeſterday, and he told me he had been with the Duke of Norfolk, and would attend him again.

I went again to the Dutcheſs of Norfolk's Houſe to ſerve Mrs. Barrington, and one told me ſhe was ſeen to look out of a Window, and another told me ſhe was at Home, ſo I could not ſerve the Order on her.

The Houſe being informed upon Oath, That a Copy of the Order for Mr. Simon Briane or de Brienne to attend this Houſe, as a Witneſs for the Duke of Norfolk, was left with his Servant at his Dwelling-place, and he not attending this Houſe, It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Aſſembled, That the Serjeant at Arms, attending this Houſe, do forthwith attach the Body of the ſaid Simon Briane or de Brienne, and bring him to the Bar of this Houſe, to answer for his Offence: And this ſhall be a ſufficient Warrant on that behalf.

To the Serjeant at Arms attending this Houſe, his Deputy or Deputies, and every of them.

The Houſe was informed that one Hugonee, Servant to the Lord Haversham, being ſummoned, was ſince gone away. Of which the Lord Haversham gave the Houſe an Account to this Effect; That he received a Letter from the Duke of Norfolk, wherein he deſired his Servant might attend the Houſe this Day. And his Lordſhip writ an Answer that he ſhould. But when his Lordſhip aroſe in the Morning, his Servant was gone away, and told the Laundry-woman or Servants, he had a Quarrel, and was going for Holland.

The Council and Witneſſes being called in for the Duke of Norfolk, the Dutcheſs's Council preſent, and Mrs. Vanefs at the Bar, the tranſcribed Depoſitions from the Short-hand Writer were read to her, and ſhe ſigned them.

In like manner Nicholas Hoſier's Depoſition was read, and he ſigned it.

Then the Council proceeded, and examined William Bayly, and his Depoſitions were taken in Short-hand, was left with the Clerk to be tranſcribed, in order to be read to him on Monday next.

Council withdrew, and it was ordered that William Bayly do attend this Houſe on Monday next.

Then the following Orders were made.

It is Order'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That on Monday next at Twelve of the Clock this Houſe will proceed to hear Council and Witneſſes for the Duke of Norfolk, at which Time the Dutcheſs of Norfolk's Council ſhall be preſent.

VOL V.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That Mr. Secretary Vernon be deſired to ſend to this Houſe, on Monday next at Eleven of the Clock, the Books wherein the Entries of Paſſes are in the Months of January, February, and March, One thouſand Six hundred Ninety one.

Die Lune 26 Februarii, 1699.

The Council for the Duke and Dutcheſs of Norfolk were called in, and the Examination of William Bayly was read to him; and he being croſs-examined by the Dutcheſs's Council, and that Examination read to him, he ſigned them.

Then John Curry was called in and sworn, ſaid, I went to ſerve Mr. La Fountaine, and Mr. Lane with the Order for their Attendance.

Mr. La Fountaine's Wife lay in, he ſaid he could not be forced to come, he was not a Subject of England, and is the Lady Dutcheſs's Servant.

Mr. Lane gave me a Letter to the Clerk of the Parliament, which was read, and in it he deſired further Time, not having Horſes, nor could ride faſt.

The Dutcheſs's Council moved for Copies of the Depoſitions taken, and Time for the Dutcheſs to be heard, and withdrew. Then the following Orders were made, (viz.)

An Order for both Parties to have Copies of the Depoſitions, and ſo much as relates to that Matter in the Journal.

The other for hearing the Dutcheſs by her Council, on Monday next, and the Duke's Council then to be preſent.

Depoſitions of Elleanor Vanefs.

Q. How came you to know they lay together?

A. Becauſe I was his Valet de Chambre, and help'd to undreſs and put him to Bed.

Q. Where was the Dutcheſs at that Time?

A. The Dutcheſs was ſometimes a-Bed, and ſometimes not, according as he came home, early or late.

Q. How long was the Dutcheſs with Sir John Germaine at the Cockpit?

A. She was at the Cockpit before I came there.

Q. Whether he went from Sir John Germaine's Service, after he came to live there?

A. He left his Service ſeveral times.

Q. When was the firſt time he went from Sir John Germaine's Service.

A. The firſt time he left his Service was in Suffolk-Street.

Q. How long was it before he came to live with him again?

A. He came into his Service again, the Summer after this preſent King came into England.

Q. What Time of the Summer was it?

A. He can't juſtly tell that.

Q. Whether the Dutcheſs was there before he came to the Cockpit or not?

A. She was there before.

Q. How long continued ſhe there?

A. About fifteen Days after he came to Sir John Germaine.

Q. In what manner did Sir John Germaine and the Dutcheſs live there during thoſe fifteen Days?

A. He ſays he hath already explained that before, he uſed to undreſs him and put him a-bed together with the Dutcheſs.

Q. Where did the Dutcheſs live after ſhe went from Sir John Germaine's Houſe?

A. She went and dwelt at Vaux-Hall.

Q. By what Name did ſhe go when ſhe was at Vaux-Hall.

A. She went by the Name of my Lady Beckman.

Q. Whether he went with her, or continued in Sir John Germaine's Service?

A. He went with my Lady Dutcheſs for ſome time, by Sir John Germaine's Order; he was ſometimes with the one, and ſometimes with the other; ſometimes one paid him, and ſometimes the other.

Q. Whether Sir John Germaine went to Vaux-Hall?

A. He came there ſometimes; he has ſeen him there ſeveral Nights.

Q. Whether he ſtayed all Night there?

A. Sometimes.

Q. Who, upon his Oath?

A. Madam the Dutcheſs, Madam Beckman.

Q. How know you that?

A. Becauſe he undreſs'd him when they lay together.

Q. How often was that?

A. He can't juſtly ſay how often, but it was ſeveral times.

Q. What Service was he in when he went out of England, and upon what Occaſion?

A. He

A. He left Sir John Germaine's Service at that Time when the Trial was depending between the Duke and the Dutcheſs of Norfolk.

Q. By whose Order did you leave that Service?

A. He desired leave.

Q. How came you to leave that Service at that Time?

A. Because he was afraid he should be obliged to speak the Truth of what he had seen.

Q. Whether any went with him, and who went from their Service when he went?

A. There were two Servants of the Dutcheſs's.

Q. What was their Names?

A. One is called Susannah Barrington, and the other Eleanor Vanes.

Q. Whither did they go?

A. He was ordered by Sir John Germaine to hire Lodgings for them, where they should be unknown and private.

Q. What was the Reason why they should be in private?

A. He knows no other Reason, but the Difference before the Parliament between the Duke and Dutcheſs of Norfolk; he was obliged to take the Lodgings, because the Wind was contrary for them to go for Holland, and took private Lodgings for them by the Order of Sir John Germaine.

Q. What became of Susannah Barrington after that?

A. She stay'd about three Weeks with him, and then Sir John Germaine came and fetch'd her back again, and where he carried her he does not know.

Q. What became of Vanes, and your self afterwards?

A. When the Wind favoured, we passed the Seas.

Q. What Time of the Year was it?

A. It was about Easter that he came into Holland.

Q. What Time he went from his Service, and was ordered to be private?

A. It was about the Time of the Trial.

Q. Whether he hath any Paper under Sir John Germaine's Hand for his Discharge? We do not ask it, but only to refresh his Memory.

The Paper was dated Eighth of February, One thousand six hundred ninety-two, reckoning the Year to begin the first of January.

Whether that was the Time he left the Dutcheſs's Service?

A. Yes, about six or eight Weeks after he went to Sea.

Q. Where did you stay in the mean time?

A. In the Minories near the Tower.

Q. How came you to stay there so long after you were out of Service, before you went beyond Sea?

A. Because the Wind was contrary.

Q. Who went over with him; what became of Eleanor Vanes?

A. She went with him to Holland.

Q. Who bare her Charges thither?

A. Sir John Germaine gave him seven Guineas to pay for the Expences that he was at here, and to cross the Sea.

Q. How long after that he continued in Holland, before he came into England?

A. He did not stay long in Holland, but went into his own Country.

Q. How long was it before you returned to England?

A. The Summer following.

Q. Was he sent for over into England, and by whom?

A. Yes, Sir John Germaine sent to him often, by himself, and by his Brother in Holland.

Q. When he came over in the Summer following (in Ninety-two) whose Service did he come to?

A. He returned to Sir John Germaine.

Q. Where did he live at that Time?

A. Where he lives at present, at the Cockpit.

Q. Whether after he came back in the Year One thousand six hundred ninety-two, he observed any Conversation between Sir John Germaine and the Dutcheſs?

A. Yes, he says he saw them come together at their House.

Q. What more?

A. He again then saw them a-bed together.

Q. Where?

A. In the House of Sir John Germaine.

Q. How often may that be?

A. He can't justly tell how often.

Q. Whether it was often or not?

A. No, he can't say very often.

Q. When was the last Time he ever saw them a-bed together?

A. The last Time he saw them a-bed was not at the Cockpit.

Q. Where then?

A. It was at the Dutcheſs's own House, where, as he believes, she lives still.

Q. Whereabout in the Town?

A. It was upon a Corner of the Park, near my Lord of Oxford's.

Q. How long since he saw them last a-bed together?

A. He can't justly tell the Time, it was about two or three Months before he went away.

Q. Did he mean the first, second, or third Time?

A. It was two or three Months before he went away the last Time.

Q. In what Year did he go away the last Time?

Let him look upon any Note he hath to refresh his Memory.

Accordingly he look'd upon a Paper.

A. 'Tis the Twenty-seventh of April, One thousand six hundred ninety-six.

Q. Did you go away then the last Time?

A. Yes, he says, that 'twas the last Time he left his Service.

Q. How long before that did you see them a-bed together?

A. He says it was about two Months and a half before he left the Service.

Q. When my Lady Dutcheſs lived at Fox-Hall, whether he can name any body else that was a Servant in the House at that Time?

A. Yes, there was one Eleanor Vanes.

Q. What Servant was she?

A. She look'd to the Kitchen.

Q. Whe-

Q. Whether he has seen her in the Chamber when the Dutcheſs was a-bed there?

A. Yes, very often.

Q. How came ſhe that was Cook-maid to be in the Chamber?

A. He ſays he can't tell the Reaſon, or what Buſineſs ſhe had there; but there ſhe was for one Thing or other, beſt known to her ſelf, he does not know.

Q. Whether when the Dutcheſs was at Fox-Hall, any Relations of Sir John Germaine came to her there?

A. Yes, they would come and ſee her.

Q. Who were they?

A. Mrs. Brienne and Mrs. Judith; he ſays he does not remember that Mrs. Brienne has lain there, but Mrs. Judith has.

Q. Where it was, and upon what Occaſion he met with Elianoſ Vanefs after he carried her over into Holland?

A. I met her in Amſterdam.

Q. Whether he came over into England with her, and upon what Occaſion?

A. I met her at Amſterdam; and ſhe aſk'd me what Buſineſs I had there, whether I had a Maſter; and I ſaid No.

Q. When was that?

A. About a Year and a half, to his Remembrance.

Q. Whether he came over with her the laſt Time?

A. Yes, he came over into England with her in Company, about ſix or ſeven Weeks ſince.

Q. Where has ſhe been ſince he came into England?

A. She was in Lodgings.

Q. Where?

A. He put her into private Lodgings, that ſhe ſhould be ſecure.

Q. Why did you put her into private Lodgings?

A. Becauſe he was afraid, in the Circumſtances that he is now, that ſome body might give them ſome Affront, or do them an Injury; and therefore he thought it beſt to be in ſome Place of Security.

Q. What particular Reaſon had he why he ſhould take private Lodgings, or have that Fear upon him?

A. He ſays, that when he was laſt here, Sir John Germaine came up one Night in a great Paſſion, and ſwore, and ſaid, ſome body would betray him.

Q. I deſire he might repeat that again?

A. Sir John Germaine came one Night up Stairs, and ſaid, that Nicholas, this Rogue, would betray him.

Q. Who was that?

A. He ſays 'twas one Nicholas Ruſbett, that ſerved him or both, he can't tell, but he was in his Service; that he heard theſe Words, and that he thought in theſe Circumſtances, the ſecureſt Way would be to take private Lodgings.

Q. What brought him into England the laſt Time? Whether he was ſpoke to, to come, and for what Purpoſe?

A. He ſays, that about two or three Years ago he happened to meet with a Friend, and he deſired him if he heard of a good Place for him in England, to let him know of it, for he would go and ſerve there again.

Q. Whether he was ſpoke to, to come over, or was Elianoſ Vanefs ſpoke to, and what was the Occaſion?

A. My Lord aſk'd him if he would ſpeak the Truth, and do him any Service; and whether he would bring this Girl along with him.

Q. Who was it that ſpoke to him?

A. My Lord Duke and my Lord Howard.

Q. When was that?

A. It was about a Year ago.

Q. Where was he at that Time?

A. He was in London.

Q. Did he go over of his own Accord, or was he ſent into Holland, who it was that ſent him over, and for what?

A. It was a Friend of his Acquaintance, that he deſired, in caſe he heard of a Place, to ſend for him.

Q. Who ſent for Elianoſ Vanefs over?

A. He ſays, that after he had promiſed my Lord Duke and Lord Howard to ſpeak the Truth of what he knew, they deſired him, that if he met with Elianoſ Vanefs, to deſire her to come over, and ſpeak the Truth of what ſhe knew.

Q. How long after did you meet with Elianoſ Vanefs?

A. 'Tis about twelve Months ſince I met with her.

Q. When was the firſt Time that he ſpoke to Elianoſ Vanefs about her coming over to ſpeak the Truth?

A. 'Tis about a Year ſince.

Q. How long is it ſince they reſolved to come over?

A. About twelve Months.

Q. Whether he was acquainted with Elianoſ Vanefs before he met with her in Sir John Germaine's Service?

A. He ſays never.

Q. You ſay you went from Sir John Germaine's Service in Suffolk-ſtreet, and you ſay when you came to him again he lived in the Cock-pit; did you find Elianoſ Vanefs there then?

A. He ſays he found her at the Cock-pit.

Q. When he waited on Sir John Germaine in his Chamber, who waited on the Dutcheſs in her Chamber?

A. There was one Sufannab Barrington, and Elianoſ Vanefs.

Q. But who waited upon her in her Chamber?

A. Sufannab Barrington did, to dreſs her.

Q. Whether he had ſeen any of Sir John Germaine's Relations in the Chamber, when this Lady and Sir John Germaine were a-bed together?

A. Yes.

Q. Name them?

A. He ſays, he ſaw Mrs. Brienne, and Mr. Daniel Germaine there.

Q. Did you ſee Mrs. Judith there?

A. He does not remember that he ſaw Mrs. Judith in the Room while they were a-bed together, but the other he hath ſeen when they were a-bed together, but at different Times.

Q. Whether ever he hath ſeen the Dutcheſs at any other Place?

A. He has been at the Chapel with her, and elſewhere.

Q. Where?

A. At my Lord Peterborow's, and in her own Houſe?

Croſs Examined.

Q. I deſire he may reduce this to a Certainty, what Time he went out of England, and look upon his Note again?

He look'd upon his Note, and 'twas dated Eighth February, One thouſand ſix hundred ninety-two.

Q. How long after this went he out of England?

A. He went away as ſoon as the Wind was favourable.

Q. Can he recollect the Time?

A. He ſays 'twas ſome time before Eaſter, for he came into Holland about Eaſter.

Q. When he told his Grace the Duke of Norfolk and Lord Howard he would be true to them, whether he was in any Service at that Time?

A. No, he was in no Service at that Time.

Q. How long had he been out of Employ?

A. He has none yet.

Q. But how long had he been out of Employ, or Service, before he made this Propoſal to the Duke, or my Lord Howard?

A. He ſays, he went away about the Twenty-ſeventh of June.

Q. Is it the ſame Year his Paper ſpeaks of, that he ſpoke to my Lord Duke?

A. No, 'twas not; he ſpoke to my Lord Duke about twelve Months ago.

Q. But how long had he been out of Service when he ſpoke to my Lord Duke? when did he leave Sir John Germaine the laſt Time?

A. 'Tis about three Years and half ago; 'twill be four Years in June next.

Q. Has he been in any Service ſince that Time?

A. No, he hath not.

Q. How has he lived ſince then?

A. He ſays he has ſomething of his own in his own Country, upon which he may ſubſiſt ſome time.

Q. I think he ſaid, he ſaw Sir John Germaine and the Dutcheſs in Bed together, in the Houſe where ſhe now lives?

A. Yes.

Q. Then I deſire he will tell, if he knows any of the Dutcheſs's Servants that were about her at that time?

A. Yes, he does.

Q. Then, that he will name them?

A. Henry Keemer.

Q. What's become of him?

A. They told he was dead; and there was Susan Barrington.

Q. I deſire he will tell of ſome of the Servants that lived with the Dutcheſs at that Time, beſides that Perſon that is dead, and the other which is gone beyond Sea, as they ſay?

Mr. Northey answer'd. We don't ſay ſhe is gone beyond Sea.

A. He does not know any other.

Q. Then, that he will tell what Month he ſaw them in Bed together?

A. He can't remember the Month, or the Day; but if they will aſk him the Reaſon why he remembers it, he will tell it them.

Q. If you can come to any Certainty about the Time of the Year, or the Month?

A. He can't ſay the Month, or any particular Time.

Q. What Servant he ſaw in the Houſe, or who let him in?

A. He had himſelf the Key of the lower Room, and could come in when he pleas'd.

Vol. V.

Q. Whoſe Servant was he at this Time he ſpeaks of? Whether he was a Servant to the Dutcheſs or to Sir John Germaine?

A. He was Servant to Sir John Germaine.

Q. He was ſaying he could tell a Reaſon to fix the Time, let him recollect himſelf of the Time?

A. He can't remember the Time, but he came into the Room to bring a Clyſter, and he was deſired to ſtay a little till my Lady Dutcheſs got up.

Q. That he may be poſitive whether he had a Key to the lower Room of the Dutcheſs's Houſe?

A. He ſays he had a Key of the Door that goes into the Park, and he could come into the Houſe by it, for it was the Key of the Houſe.

Q. What Servant was it that brought him up, for that Key only let him into the lower Room?

A. Sometimes Susan Barrington, and ſometimes Henry Keemer.

Q. What Room the Lady Dutcheſs lay in?

A. 'Tis a Room that looks into the Park.

Q. 'Tis not a Ground-Room, I ſuppoſe?

A. No, 'tis up Stairs.

Q. How many Stories?

A. He can't tell what Degree it was.

Q. Being aſk'd that Queſtion again upon the reading his Depoſitions, he ſays he can't tell how many Stories; but, if you pleaſe, he will deſcribe the coming into the Room as well as he can.

Q. Deſcribe the Coming into the Room?

A. That as you come upon the left Hand, there is a Way to go into the Dutcheſs's Room; when you have paſſed the little Chamber-door, you go into a Place full of China; and, after that, you come to the Dutcheſs's Bed-chamber. On the other ſide, going up Stairs, there is a little Room, where Susan told him ſhe lay; and afterwards you come into a Room where the Chimney is, as he thinks, on the right Hand, and he thinks there are two Windows that look into the Street, he is not very certain; and in the Room upon the left Hand there is a Door into a great Room, and from that great Room you can go into the Lady Dutcheſs's Room. It was ſo at that Time, to the beſt of his Remembrance.

Q. How many Rooms are there upon a Floor?

A. There are a matter of 4 Rooms upon a Floor.

Q. Whether he has ſpoke with any body that he knows is acquainted with this Houſe ſince he was examined here before?

A. He ſays he has ſpoke to nobody ſince, that has given him any Account of the Houſe.

Q. Which Side of the Park does the Window of my Lady Dutcheſs's Room look into?

A. Towards the Pond where the Braſs Statue is.

Q. Does the Bed-chamber look towards the Braſs Statue?

A. He durſt not go to look out at the Window for fear of being diſcovered, but he could ſee the Water.

Q. Whether he knows the Horſe-Guards?

A. Yes.

Q. Whether he knows Arlington-Houſe?

A. Yes.

Q. Whether the Window does look towards Arlington-Houſe, or the Horſe-Guards?

A. He hath been there ſeveral times, but it was not his Buſineſs to go to the Window; but when he was in the Room he could ſee the Water.

Q. Whether he could tell which Way the Window look'd?

A. He did not live in the Houſe, but went there there sometimes upon Messages; and when he was there, 'twas not his Business to go to the Window, but he could see the Water when he was in the Room.

Q. Whether the Window was on that side of the little Door that he came in, or on t'other side?

A. Upon the left Hand coming in. He says he has explain'd himself as to the entering in, and he can say no more to it.

Q. Was it one or two Pair of Stairs that the Dutchess lay?

A. He can't be positive, whether one or two Pair of Stairs.

Q. Who brought him up that Time he brought the Clyster?

A. Susan Barrington.

Q. Who told him, at the Cock-pit, 'twas the Dutchess of Norfolk?

A. Sir John Germaine, her self, and the whole House told him so.

Q. Did he before that Time know the Dutchess?

A. No.

Q. Did you never see other Women there besides this Lady?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know all the rest that you saw there?

A. No, he did not know them all.

Q. Whether he was not told the rest of the Women were of great Quality too?

A. He never was told so, nor did he inform himself whether they were or no.

Q. At Fox-hall, and at the Cock-pit, I think, he spake as if he undress'd Sir John Germaine and the Dutchess; whether he undress'd them both?

A. Not the Dutchess.

Q. What Year was it they were at Fox-Hall?

A. It was before he went to Ireland, and after he came from Ireland; but he can't precisely tell the Time.

Q. Whether he has been in any Service since One thousand six hundred ninety-six, when he left Sir John Germaine's?

A. No.

Q. Whether when he came, about a Year ago, into England, there was Application made to him in order to make a Discovery; or, whether he offer'd of himself to make it?

A. He never did offer himself.

Q. Who was it that first ask'd him the Question?

A. 'Twas my Lord Howard.

Q. Where did you meet my Lord Howard? and upon what Occasion?

A. He says, That 'twas that Person that he had address'd himself to, to get him into Service here, that was the Occasion of their meeting together.

Q. Did you know the Lord Howard before?

A. No.

Q. Where was the Place they met?

A. He call'd him to his House.

Q. My Lord, or that Person?

A. He says, That Person to which he address'd himself to get a Place, told him he had found one.

Q. Name that Person.

A. Richardson.

Q. Where does he live?

A. I don't know.

Q. Were you acquainted with him before?

A. Yes.

Q. Where had you been acquainted with him?

A. At London; 'tis a Woman.

Q. Whether he can describe the Room, or the Furniture of the Room, where this Noble Lady and Sir John Germaine were a-bed together, where she lives now?

A. He can't remember any thing of the Furniture.

Q. Was it hung or wainscoted?

A. He says, he can't tell, and yet was there often.

Q. Pray, who was the Clyster for?

A. For Mr. Germaine.

Q. Where was it to be administred?

A. A-bed.

Q. Who was a-bed?

A. My Lady Dutchess was a-bed too.

Q. Was it to be administred at the same time as he and the Dutchess were a-bed together?

A. No.

Q. Was the Dutchess there?

A. He laid the Syringe to the Fire-side, till such time as the Dutchess rose.

Q. Apothecaries are exact in point of Time in making their Bills.

A. He says, I compos'd the Clyster my self, but he did not compose it at the Dutchess's House, but at Mr. Germaine's.

Q. Did you stay with Sir John Germaine till all was over?

A. No; as soon as he had given it him, he went home to Mr. Germaine's House.

Q. Whether he pretends to speak of any other Time he saw the Dutchess in Bed with him at her House in Duke-street, but when he carried him the Clyster?

A. Yes, my Lord, he says he has.

Q. Let him tell the Times and Circumstances.

A. He says, he can't very well remember the Times, but he had sometimes Business there, to bring and carry Letters.

Q. When was that Time of the Clyster?

A. It was about two Months before he left them.

Q. Was that the last time he saw them together?

A. That was the last Time.

Q. How long before that did he see 'em together?

A. Long before that Time, in the same House.

Q. He says, he has seen Sir John Germaine and the Dutchess in Bed together elsewhere. Did he never see them in Bed together at the Mill-bank?

A. He has seen them there two or three Times a-bed together.

Q. When did your Master order you to prepare a Clyster?

A. He had Order to come and wait for Mr. Germaine at the Dutchess's; and, that Mr. Germaine coming to the Dutchess's late, he ordered him to bring the Clyster next Morning.

Q. At what Time he came the next Morning?

A. He had Order to bring it at 9 a-Clock, and he brought it at the appointed Hour, and waited in the little Room where Susan was till he was call'd in.

Q. He says, he waited for Sir John Germaine, by his Orders, at the Dutchess's, till 'twas late; which of the Dutchess's Servants did he keep company with?

A. He says, he remembers very well it was Mr. Keemer.

Q. Whether that time that he saw Mr. Germaine and the Dutchess in Bed together at Mill-bank, if it was after the first time he was sent out of England, when the Bill was depending before the Lords?

A. 'Twas after.

Q. What Year did you see them a-bed together at Mill-bank?

A. 'Twas a day or two before Mrs. D'avenant died. A day or two before she died Mr. Germaine came to Mill-bank, and staid there about eight Days.

Depositions

Depositions of William Bayly.

Die Sabbati 25 Februarii, 1699.

William Bayly ſworn.

Q. D'YE know Sir John Germaine and the Dutcheſs of Norfolk?

A. Yes.

Q. Was you Servant to Sir John Germaine?

A. Yes.

Q. In what Capacity?

A. Three Years I wore his Livery, and three Years I was his Steward.

Q. When did you firſt come to live with him?

A. Three Weeks before the King was crown'd.

Q. Was there any Converſation between Sir John Germaine and the Dutcheſs of Norfolk? D'ye know that they liv'd together, or kept Company one with another?

A. No; I never knew them live together, but ſeen them keep Company together, but never ſaw any Incivility between them.

Q. Where ſaw you them in Company together?

A. I ſaw them in Company in my Maſter's Houſe.

Q. How long ago?

A. About five Years ago.

Q. Where did your Maſter then live?

A. He liv'd then where he does now.

Q. Did the Dutcheſs of Norfolk ever lie there?

A. Never, to my Knowledge.

Q. What was the Time ſhe uſually came there?

A. Commonly in an Afternoon.

Q. How often have you ſeen her there?

A. Two or three times.

Q. At what Time did ſhe uſe to come? and, At what Time did ſhe uſe to go away?

A. She uſed to come there about Four or Five a-Clock in the Afternoon, and might ſtay there about two or three Hours.

Q. You are upon your Oath, and pray tell whether you ever ſaw them in Bed together?

A. By all that's good, I never ſaw them in Bed together.

Q. Did the Lady Dutcheſs uſe to come thither Mask'd or Unmask'd?

A. She uſ'd to come Mask'd, but put it off when ſhe came into the Houſe.

Q. Who uſed to come with her?

A. There uſed to come Mr. Keemer with her.

Q. What Company? Did no other uſe to come with her to Sir John Germaine's Houſe?

A. Yes, another Servant, Mr. Carter.

Q. Who was in the Room with them in Sir John Germaine's Houſe?

A. Mr. Keemer ſtay'd commonly with them all the Time they dined, and after Dinner; the other Servants and I were in the next Room to them, and commonly, when they had Occaſion, they would call Mr. Keemer.

Q. Was there no other Servant but Mr. Keemer that they uſed to call upon?

A. Yes; a Gentlewoman, Mrs. Suſan Barrington.

Q. Have you ſeen her lately?

A. No, not theſe fix Months.

VOL V.

Q. D'ye know if your Maſter uſed to go to the Dutcheſs's Houſe?

A. Yes, I have heard ſo, but I can't ſay ſo poſitively.

Q. Did you ever go with them to the Dutcheſs's Houſe?

A. No; but I have gone with them as far as the Horſe-Ferry.

Q. When was the laſt Time you ſaw them together?

A. I can't tell; I have been out of my Maſter's Service theſe four Years.

Q. How long before you left your Maſter's Service, d'ye think it was that you ſaw them together?

A. I can't tell, but I think it might be about half a Year.

Q. He has gone with his Maſter as far as the Horſe-Ferry; pray then let him be aſk'd where he left his Maſter?

A. I left him at the Horſe-Ferry.

Q. What Orders did your Maſter give you when you left him?

A. He order'd me to go Home, and keep the Houſe.

Q. D'ye know whither your Maſter was gone then?

A. I may judge he went to the Dutcheſs, but I can't ſwear he went there.

Q. Did Sir John Germaine come home to Bed that Night?

A. Some Nights he came, and ſome he did not.

Q. Did you carry Cloaths to him at any Time?

A. I have carried Cloaths for him to Mr. Keemer, the Dutcheſs's Servant.

Q. Where did Keemer live when you carried Cloaths to him?

A. In a little Street going to the Bowling-Alley.

Q. Who did he live withal?

A. He told me he lived with the Dutcheſs, but he was a Houſe-keeper, and had a Houſe there.

Q. Did you always carry Cloaths to Mr. Keemer for your Maſter?

A. Sometimes I carried his Cloaths to Mr. Keemer, and ſometimes Mr. Keemer came to me for them.

Q. Did you apprehend that your Maſter was then at the Dutcheſs's, or at Mr. Keemer's?

A. I can't tell where he was: How can I tell? I answer as punctually as I can.

Q. When Keemer came to you for Cloaths, what Account did he give you where your Maſter was?

A. He gave no Account.

Q. Whether did you ever ſee the Dutcheſs and your Maſter together at any other Place but his own Houſe?

A. Never.

Q. When you carried the Cloaths to Keemer's, did your Maſter lie at Home that Night or not?

A. Sometimes he lay at Home, and ſometimes he did not: Many times my Maſter has been at the Dutcheſs of Mazarine's from Four a-Clock this Day till Twelve the next.

Q. Repeat it again, for that's material.

A. My Maſter has taken his Chair at his own Back-door at Four a-Clock on a Saturday, and not come Home till Sunday at Twelve a-Clock.

Q. Where has your Maſter been at that Time, when he ſtay'd out all Night?

A. At the Dutcheſs of Mazarine's; and when he lost his Gold, he has sent to me for more Gold.

Q. Did he ever send to you for any Cloaths when he was there?

A. Never.

Q. D'ye know where he was when he sent to you for Cloaths?

A. No, indeed.

Q. D'ye know Nicholas Hoffer?

A. Yes, I know him very well; I saw him here just now.

Q. Did you know him when he waited on Sir John Germaine?

A. Yes, he succeeded me, and I succeeded him again.

Q. You was Footman when you went to Sir John Germaine: When was that? and, What Year did you leave off your Livery, and serve him as his Steward?

A. I can't tell.

Q. He succeeded Hoffer, and Hoffer succeeded him: Pray let it be ask'd him, at what Time he came into his Master's Service, when he succeeded Hoffer?

A. 'Twas about the same Time that the Trial was here before.

Q. How long was it e'er Hoffer return'd again to serve Sir John Germaine?

A. To the best of my Knowledge, it was three Years; for I receiv'd and paid Money for my Master, and Hoffer was away all that Time: Hoffer won't deny it, if he were call'd in.

Q. You say that you succeeded Hoffer at the Time when the Trial was here: How long before that Time did you return to your Master's Service?

A. About three Weeks before the King was Crown'd I came to my Master, and serv'd him three Years, and wore his Livery; and he was pleas'd, after Mr. Hoffer went away, to make me lay out his Money, to be Caterer for him, and to keep his Gold, and to the best of my Knowledge 'twas three Years before Nicholas succeeded me again.

Q. How long was it before he came back again to serve Sir John Germaine?

A. Before I saw him in my Master's House, and that he took my Place from me, 'twas three Years.

Q. Did you not see Mr. Hoffer in England before that Time that you went out of your Master's Service?

A. No; I beg your Lordship's Pardon, I will recollect my Memory for that; as I have a Soul to be sav'd, now 'tis come into my Mind, my Master sent for Nicholas into Holland about a Year before Nicholas did come over: My Master told me, before he came, that he would send for Nicholas again, and that I and Nicholas should have the Charge of his House. Nicholas came over, and we had the Play at our own House: Nicholas staid there some Time, but he did not like his Business, and so he went away again, because he could not have all the Money.

Q. About what Time did Nicholas come into England, after the Trial was before this House?

A. I can't resolve you.

Q. Had you no Certificate of Leave, or Discharge, when you left your Master's Service?

A. No; my Master was so kind, that he brought me immediately into the Excise, as soon as I was out of his Service.

William Bayly cross-examin'd, Lune 26 Februarii, 1699.

Q. When you carried the Cloaths to Sir John Germaine's, was it the Time when you wore his Livery?

A. I carried no Cloaths to him when I wore his Livery?

Q. Had you no Discourse with the Dutchess's Agents since Saturday Night?

A. No, I have not seen them, nor don't know them.

Q. He says, he saw the Dutchess of Norfolk at the Cockpit, at Sir John Germaine's House where he now dwells: Pray recollect you self, that you may be positive as to the Time.

A. I can't resolve you as to the Year, 'tis so long ago; I believe 'tis about five Years ago.

Q. Can you be positive that it is not more?

A. To the best of my Knowledge, 'twas about five Years.

Q. Can you be so far certain, that you can say 'twas not more?

A. I can't swear 'twas more, but I believe it may be five Years, more or less.

Q. You say you saw her two or three times there: Was it all in one Year, near the same Time or Month? Can you reduce it to any Certainty?

A. I believe it might be in Summer.

Q. All in one Summer?

A. Yes, I believe, all in one; to the best of my Knowledge there was never a Winter between the Time that I saw her first and last.

Q. Did you know the Dutchess of Norfolk before that Time that you saw her in your Master's House, and took her to be the Dutchess of Norfolk?

A. I did not know her before the Trial was here.

Q. Did you know her any Time after that Trial, before the Time you saw her in Sir John Germaine's House?

A. I was not sure that it was she, only as I had it from Mr. Keemer.

Q. Then you don't undertake of your own Knowledge to say that it was she?

A. I can't swear that 'twas she, but as Mr. Keemer told me; I don't know whether I should know her now or not, 'tis so long since I saw her; I believe it is five Years, if not more.

Q. Did you see her before or after you saw her at Sir John Germaine's House?

A. The first time they told me 'twas she, I met her in her Coach in the Pallmall, with two other Gentlemen with her, a little before the Trial was here: I followed the Coach, and the Dutchess went into some Lady's House in Dover-street, and they told me the Dutchess was the first Woman that went out; this is the first time that e'er I saw her, that I know of, 'till such time as Keemer told me 'twas she.

Q. Whether do you know Nicholas?

A. I know him very well.

Q. Can you tell how long it is since he came last into England?

A. No, he has been here two or three times in England, since I left my Master.

Q. How long before this Examination saw you him, or spoke with him?

A. I

A. I did not ſee him above theſe three Years.

Q. How long before you came hither as a Witneſs did you ſee him?

A. I have not ſeen him theſe three Years till I came hither to be a Witneſs, and did admire to ſee him here, that a Man that had got his Bread under his Maſter ſhould appear here againſt him, it is ſo ungrateful a thing.

Q. How came it you had ſo much Curioſity as to follow the Dutcheſs's Coach?

A. I had a Mind to ſatisfy my own Humour.

Q. D'ye know how Nicholas lived ſince he was out of his Maſter's Service?

A. No, I never ſaw him, nor had any Account of him at all, nor have ſeen him theſe three Years till now.

Q. Did you know when Nicholas and Elleanor Vanefs went out of England?

A. No, I never knew when they went, nor when they came.

Q. Don't you know what Buſineſs he went out of England about, the Time you took his Place?

A. I know not the Buſineſs he went out of England upon.

Q. Did he at any Time tell you he was to get away to hide himſelf from coming hither?

A. No, I heard not one Word from him at the Time of his parting.

Q. What reaſon had you to ſay upon the firſt Sight of Hofier, that he was ungrateful for coming hither?

A. I ſhould think my ſelf ungrateful to eat a Gentleman's Bread ſeven Years, and do him all the Spite and Malice I could.

Q. Repeat thoſe Words?

A. I ſhould think my ſelf very ungrateful to proſecute; if I ſhould do any Harm to a Maſter that I had ſerved ſo many Years, I ſhould think my ſelf very ungrateful, let him think of himſelf what he pleaſes.

Q. He added ſome other Words?

A. For any thing I know, it is Spite and Malice.

Q. Where did you live when you followed the Dutcheſs's Coach?

A. At Mr. Germaine's.

Q. This Man is a Witneſs, and ſo is Hofier; let him explain himſelf what he means, and where in there is any Difference between him and Hofier, for both are Witneſſes?

A. I ſay, I ſhould think my ſelf very ungrateful, if I would do any Harm to a Man whoſe Bread I did eat ſo long, and had got ſo much Money under him.

Q. What Harm does Hofier do, being a Witneſs againſt the Dutcheſs of Norfolk? what Harm is that to Sir John Germaine?

A. I don't know.

Q. D'ye reckon it ungrateful to ſpeak the Truth to the Prejudice of a Maſter?

A. No, I would not ſpeak an Untruth for all the Maſters in the World.

Q. Where is there any Fault more in Hofier than in you?

A. I know not.

Q. Whether did Elleanor Vanefs live with Sir John Germaine when you liv'd there?

A. I know not who ſhe is.

Q. This Woman that was here as a Witneſs?

A. Yes, ſhe liv'd there.

Q. What Time went ſhe away from Sir John Germaine's Service?

A. I know not, I cannot tell, indeed.

Sign'd,

WILLIAM BAYLY.

Die Martis, 5^o Martii, 1699.

Council and Witneſs being call'd in for the Dutcheſs of Norfolk (and the Duke's Council being preſent) the Examination of the Witneſſes, taken Yeſterday in Short-hand and tranſcribed, were read to them, and ſubſcribed, (viz.)

Die Lune 4^o Martii, 1699.

Thomas Hawkſworth ſworn, depoſed as followeth:

Queſt. DO you know Elleanor Vanefs? and did you live in the Dutcheſs of Norfolk's Family?

Anſw. I came to live with the Dutcheſs about October, 1691. and left her in September, about two Years within two Months: Elleanor Vanefs lived there when I lived there, and was Cook-maid.

Q. When did ſhe leave the Dutcheſs's Service?

A. About the beginning of January, or the latter end of December, 1691.

Q. On What Occaſion went ſhe away?

A. She was turned away, to the beſt of my Remembrance, for keeping Company with Dutchmen.

Q. Whether uſed ſhe any other Office but in the Kitchen? or had ſhe Acceſs to the Dutcheſs's Chamber?

A. Never; ſhe was not allowed to come any higher than the firſt Floor: She uſed to clean that Room next the Street, one Pair of Stairs next the Door, and the Back-Parlour even with that, but was not ſuffered to come into the Dutcheſs's Chamber.

Q. Who waited upon the Dutcheſs in her Chamber?

A. Frances Knight; ſhe was conſtantly in the Dutcheſs's Chamber, and uſed to warm her Bed.

Q. You ſay that Vanefs was allowed to come no higher than the firſt Floor; explain that.

A. The Kitchen is under-ground backward; that Room Vanefs cleaned waſ even with the Street, a Ground-Room; the Laundry-maid clean'd the next Pair of Stairs.

Q. What was the Laundry-maid's Name?

A. Suſan; ſhe's dead.

Q. Do you know how long?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever ſee Vanefs in the Dutcheſs's Chamber.

A. Never in my Life; I never heard ſhe was allowed to come there.

Q. How

Q. How long is it since you liv'd with the Dutcheſs?

A. About ſix or ſeven Years, or very near it.

Q. D'ye remember the Bill that was brought into Parliament againſt the Dutcheſs, while you lived there?

A. I came to the Dutcheſs the October before that Bill was brought in.

Q. Was Vanefs turned away before that?

A. She was gone a Month or thereabouts before that.

Q. D'ye remember the Month?

A. To the beſt of my Remembrance, 'twas about the latter End of December, or the beginning of January.

Q. Was there any Stir about the Dutch Foot-Soldiers haunting Vanefs?

A. I never ſaw any, but have heard the Servants ſay they did.

Q. Can you ſay what Time it was? Whether before or after the Bill?

A. Before I heard any thing of the Bill ſhe was gone.

Croſs-Examin'd.

Q. Were do you live now?

A. With Sir Thomas Barnardifton.

Q. What Station were you in, when you lived with the Dutcheſs?

A. A Footman.

Q. Do you know Hofier then?

A. No.

Q. Where did the Dutcheſs live, when you came firſt to her.

A. Upon the Row between the Horſe-Ferry and Mill-Bank.

Q. How long did you live there?

A. A Fortnight or thereabouts; not much more.

Q. Do you know where ſhe liv'd before?

A. No.

Q. Do you know Sir John Germaine? And, on the Oath you have taken, did he ever come to the Dutcheſs's Houſe while you liv'd with her?

A. I never ſaw him in the Houſe; I never ſaw any unhandſome Thing by the Dutcheſs all the Time I lived with her.

Q. Did you never ſee Sir John Germaine with her?

A. No, never, and I had the Privilege of the firſt Floor and the ſecond Floor, and help'd to rub the Rooms, and ſometimes I rubb'd the Lodging-Room.

Q. Had you the Privilege of going up Stairs in the Morning?

A. No, it was one Peacock that rubb'd the Room above Stairs.

Q. Did you know Vanefs? Was ſhe Servant to the Dutcheſs when you liv'd there?

A. Yes, ſhe was.

Q. Can you be poſitive as to the Time of her going away?

A. As near as I can tell, it was in the beginning of January, 1692. I came in the October before, and ſhe went away the January following.

Q. Were you by, when ſhe was diſcharg'd?

A. No.

Q. Who paid her her Wages?

A. I can't tell.

Q. Did you never ſee Vanefs in the Dutcheſs's Chamber?

A. Never.

Q. Did you attend at the Dutcheſs's Chamber in the Morning?

A. Not conſtantly; we took it by Turns.

Q. Did you never attend in her Chamber when ſhe was a-Bed?

A. No.

Q. Who was it of her Women that attended in her Chamber?

A. Suſan —, Frances Knight, and Suſan Barrington.

Q. When did you ſee Suſan Barrington laſt?

A. About five Years ago.

Q. Did ſhe conſtantly attend in the Dutcheſs's Chamber?

A. She and Mrs. Knight carry'd Coals conſtantly to warm the Bed?

Q. How old was you when you liv'd with the Dutcheſs?

A. About eighteen Years old.

Q. How old are you now?

A. I think about Seven and twenty.

Thomas Hawkſworth.

Die Luna, 4 Martii, 1699.

John Peacock ſworn, depoſeth as followeth:

Queſt. DID you live with the Dutcheſs of Norfolk in 1691?

A. 'Tis ſix Years ſince I left her Service, laſt January, or thereabouts; I liv'd two Years and a half with her, or thereabouts; I came in Auguſt, and ſtay'd till January two Years following, or thereabouts.

Q. Did you live with the Dutcheſs, when the firſt Trial, as they call it, came on in Parliament?

A. Yes, I liv'd with her before and after.

Q. Did you know Vanefs?

A. I knew one whoſe Name was called Lena.

Q. What was her Buſineſs?

A. Below Stairs in the Kitchen; I never ſaw her in any other Room, but the outer Room next to the Street, and I was there all the while ſhe was there, and after ſhe was gone.

Q. Did you ever ſee her in the Dutcheſs's Bed-Chamber?

A. No; the Work ſhe was employ'd about was dirty Work; I never ſaw her clean, but naſty, and could not eat the Victuals of her dreſſing.

Q. Was you there before Vanefs?

A. Yes, I was in the Houſe ſome time before her Grace came over, to help the Upholder, and to carry Looking-Glaſſes and Stands.

Q. When did ſhe come over?

A. She came to Mill-Bank, but I know not when ſhe came over: My Lady Peterborow order'd me to do what I did.

Q. Was you Servant there to the Dutcheſs before ſhe came over?

A. I never ſaw my Lady Dutcheſs before ſhe came there, except ſome Years before at Drayton, when he liv'd with her.

Q. Who hired you?

A. I

A. I came there by the Lady Peterborough's Order, and had my Viſtuals at my Lord Peterborough's.

Q. Who hired you?

A. I was not hired at all.

Q. How long did you live at Mill-bank?

A. I liv'd about two Years and a Quarter, or ſomewhat more.

Q. What was your proper Buſineſs, when you liv'd with the Dutcheſs?

A. When the Dutcheſs went abroad, I went with the Coach; and when ſhe ſupp'd or din'd at home, I laid the Cloth, Forks and Spoons.

Q. Did you ever wait above Stairs?

A. Yes, I have waited above Stairs.

Q. Who waited upon the Dutcheſs in her Chamber?

A. Frances Knight, one Suſan, and one Suſannab.

Q. Upon your Oath, did you ever ſee this Woman, Helena, go into the Dutcheſs's Bed-chamber?

A. I never once ſaw her there all the Time I ſtaid there; I rubb'd the Bed-chamber with a long Rubbing-bruſh; I never ſaw her there, nor above Stairs.

Q. Do you know at what Time it was ſhe came to live with my Lady Dutcheſs?

A. Yes; ſhe came while I was there.

Q. Did you live with the Dutcheſs before ſhe came to Mill-bank?

A. I liv'd at no other Place with the Dutcheſs, but at Mill-bank, and at Drayton.

Q. D'ye know how Vanefs left the Dutcheſs's Service; and why?

A. Yes, upon Complaints of Diſorders, and her ill dreſſing the Viſtuals.

Q. What Diſorders?

A. There were Men came to the Door to enquire for her, twice, or more.

Q. Did you ſee the Fellows?

A. Yes, I ſaw the Fellows, they came to the Door in the Duſk of the Evening, and I acquainted the Dutcheſs with it, and told her Grace, I did not think it ſafe for her Houſe, becauſe I had the Charge of Silver Spoons and Forks.

Q. What ſort of Men were they?

A. One of them appear'd to be a Foot-Soldier in a blue Coat.

Q. In what manner was ſhe put away, or left the Houſe?

A. Upon theſe Complaints, the Dutcheſs ſaid ſhe wou'd turn her away.

Q. Did you hear the Dutcheſs ſay ſo?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that before the Trial at the Lord's Houſe, or after?

A. To the beſt of my Remembrance, it was before the Trial, the latter End of December, or the Beginning of January, but I can't be poſitive; I think 'twas the latter End of December.

Q. Did ſhe go away before the Trial, or not?

A. I think, before the Trial, but I am not ſure: Yes, at the Time of the Trial, I remember another Cook.

Q. Are you ſure of that?

A. Yes, I am ſure of it; 'twas the Coachman's Wife, one Goffing.

Q. D'ye know Hauſeur or Nicola?

A. No.

Q. You lived at Mill-bank two Years; D'you know no ſuch Man?

A. I never heard his Name before; I had no Acquaintance with him, nor ever ſaw him about Houſe.

Croſs-Examined.

Q. Where do you live now?

A. Near Huntingdon; I board in a Houſe there.

Q. How long have you been out of Service?

A. Ever ſince I left my Lady Dutcheſs.

Q. How do you live then?

A. I board in a Houſe; I follow no Employment, but live on my own, except to teach Children, two, three or four, out of Charity.

Q. When came you to the Dutcheſs's Service firſt?

A. I ſerved her about ten or twelve Years ago, but I can't remember the preſiſe Time, 'tis ſo long ſince.

Q. How long did you live with her then?

A. I lived with her about half a Year at Drayton in Northamptonſhire; I went about November, and ſtaid to Lady-Day following.

Q. How long was it before you came to live with her the laſt Time?

A. I can't tell.

Q. You ſay you came to live with her about two Years and a Quarter; what Time was that?

A. I can't tell, but that may be eaſily found; I liv'd with her about ſix Years ago, or thereabouts.

Q. How long did you leave the Dutcheſs, after the Hearing came on in this Noble Houſe?

A. I don't know; it was about a Year and three Quarters, or two Years, I can't be poſitive.

Q. Was it after the Trial began?

A. Yes, I think the Trial began in January, and 'twas a Year after it began.

Q. Can't you be poſitive what Time you came to live with the Dutcheſs?

A. I came about Auguſt to Mill-bank, but the Dutcheſs was not come then, but the October following my Lady Dutcheſs came.

Q. Where did the Dutcheſs live then?

A. I don't know, I was at the Lady Peterborough's; I help'd her Servants to carry Things, and to get Things ready.

Q. Did you know where the Dutcheſs liv'd then?

A. No; ſome ſaid ſhe liv'd in Flanders, others in Holland, and ſome in France.

Q. Was you never at Vaux-ball while the Dutcheſs liv'd there?

A. I was never there while the Dutcheſs lived there, if ſhe did live there.

Q. Was you never there where ſhe did live?

A. When no body liv'd there, I have ſeen the Houſe where they ſaid ſhe did live.

Q. How long ago is that?

A. I know not how long ago, but 'twas in the Summer-time.

Q. How came you to take notice of that Houſe more than the reſt of the Houſes in Vaux-ball? Who was it told you the Dutcheſs lived there?

A. I think it was one that was ———

Q. You ſaid the Dutcheſs went ſometimes by Water; did you go along with her at that Time?

A. Yes, I did, with ſome other Company.

Q. Was

Q. Was you ever sent to the House, to fetch Goods from thence?

A. No.

Q. Who went with you, when you went with the Dutcheſs there?

A. One Mrs. Beufflers, and two or three other Ladies.

Q. D'ye know Sir John Germaine?

A. I never ſaw him, but in his Coach, as he was going along the Street; I never ſaw him in any Houſe, or any other Place, ſitting or going, but in his Coach.

Q. Was you never at his Houſe?

A. I never was at his Houſe, nor any Place where he lived.

Q. You ſay you were at the Dutcheſs's Chamber to rub the Room?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Did you not ſee Vanefs there?

A. No.

Q. Can you take it upon your Oath that you never ſaw her there?

A. No, I never ſaw her there; but I ſaw Susan Barrington there.

Q. What Service did Susan Barrington do there?

A. She help'd to dreſs and undreſs her Grace, and to mend Linnen, as I think.

Q. When ſaw you her laſt?

A. 'Twas about the 9th, 10th, or 11th of Auguſt laſt, at the George Inn in Huntingdon.

Q. D'you know where ſhe lived then?

A. She was at Huntingdon then, and came with the Lady Dutcheſs to take a Stage-Coach for London; ſhe was at the George Inn in Huntingdon, I think, about Auguſt laſt.

Q. You ſay you liv'd at the Dutcheſs's Houſe at Mill-bank, before the Dutcheſs came thither: Did Vanefs come with her, or was ſhe hired after?

A. I think ſhe came with the Dutcheſs.

Q. D'ye know whence the Dutcheſs came, when ſhe came there?

A. As I have heard, ſhe came from Fox-ball: When my Lady Dutcheſs went thither by Water the Summer after, I was told, that my Lady liv'd at ſuch a Houſe in Fox-ball.

Q. Didn't you know that my Lady Dutcheſs liv'd at Fox-ball?

A. I never knew my Lady Dutcheſs till ſhe liv'd at Mill-bank.

Q. What Account had you at the Dutcheſs's Houſe where ſhe was then?

A. People ſaid ſhe was in Flanders.

Q. D'you know when Vanefs came to live with the Dutcheſs?

A. I believe ſhe came to live with the Dutcheſs at Mill-bank.

Q. D'ye know when ſhe was diſcharg'd out of her Service?

A. I think 'twas the latter End of December, or the Beginning of January; I think ſo, but I don't ſpeak poſitively.

Q. Was you by when her Wages were paid?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever ſeen her ſince?

A. No, I never ſaw her from that Hour to this.

Q. Where have you liv'd ſince you left the Lady Dutcheſs's Service, and how? Have you any Eſtate?

A. I have a ſmall Matter to live on; I live near Huntingdon, I was born near there; 'tis my native Place; I have liv'd there about four or five Years, or within ſeven Miles of that Place, or thereabouts.

Q. Did Vanefs dreſs the Dutcheſs's Dinner when ſhe lived there; for it ſeems ſhe was not good enough to ſerve you?

A. Yes, ſhe did dreſs the Dutcheſs's Dinner, but I did not care to eat Victuals of her Dreſſing.

Q. When did you firſt complain to the Dutcheſs, that Men follow'd Vanefs? or, that you apprehended Danger by her being there?

A. I can't tell.

Q. Was ſhe diſcharg'd immediately after that?

A. I think ſhe was diſcharg'd immediately after that.

Q. You ſay there were ſome other Ladies that went with the Dutcheſs to Fox-ball; can you name them?

A. Mrs. Marſhal, and ſome others; but I can't be poſitive.

Q. Did you know Mrs. Briane?

A. No, I never heard her Name before.

Q. Did the Dutcheſs eat always at Peterborough-houſe, or Mill-bank-houſe, as you call it?

A. Sometimes ſhe eat abroad, and ſometimes at home.

Q. Who dreſs'd her Victuals when ſhe eat at home?

A. Lena.

Q. What d'ye mean by Mill-bank-houſe?

A. Peterborough-houſe.

Q. Who did you hear ſay the Dutcheſs lived at that Houſe at Fox-ball?

A. The Dutcheſs was going by Water, and told the Ladies then, that That was the Houſe ſhe had liv'd at, at Fox-ball; and walking in the Garden of the ſaid Houſe, told 'em ſo.

JONAS PEACOCK.

Die Luna 4^o Martii, 1699.

Frances Knight ſworn, depoſeth as followeth:

Queſt. HOW long have you liv'd in the Dutcheſs of Norfolk's Family?

Anſw. Twenty-ſeven Years, or upwards.

Q. With whom did you live all that Time?

A. With the Lady Dutcheſs's Father, the Lady Peterborough, and the Dutcheſs.

Q. Did you live with the Dutcheſs when ſhe liv'd at Mill-bank?

A. Yes, I liv'd with her at her firſt coming there.

Q. Have you been with her ever ſince?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know Vanefs in the Dutcheſs's Family at Mill-bank, and what Employ had ſhe there?

A. Yes, I know her very well; ſhe was in the Kitchen.

Q. Did you uſe to be in the Dutcheſs's Bed-chamber, and about her Perſon?

A. Yes, I was the firſt in the Morning there, and the laſt at Night, conſtantly.

Q. Did you know Elianoer Vanefs there; and did ſhe uſe to come into the Dutcheſs's Chamber?

A. She

A. She never came there.

Q. Where uſed ſhe to employ her ſelf?

A. In the Kitchen.

Q. Was ſhe well enough in Cloaths, cleanly enough, and fit to come into the Dutcheſs's Chamber?

A. No, ſhe was not.

Q. What Time went ſhe away; and upon what Account?

A. My Lady put her away, becauſe Soldiers came and aſk'd for her, and ſent for her to Ale-houſes about Ten a-Clock at Night. I went up one Morning, and complain'd of her to my Lady Dutcheſs, and told her that Soldiers haunted her, aſk'd for her, and ſent for her to Ale-houſes at Ten a-Clock at Night: And my Lady Dutcheſs ſaid, ſhe would not keep a Servant that kept ill Hours.

Q. Was this before the Trial?

A. Yes, my Lady put her away, upon my ſpeaking this.

Q. Do you know why ſhe was put away?

A. Yes, for having Soldiers haunt her Company.

Q. Conſider well what you ſay?

A. Yes, my Lords; I ſpeak what my Conſcience tells me: Here I am before the Lords, I muſt ſpeak Truth.

Q. How far can you recollect your ſelf, if it was before the Trial, or not, that ſhe was put away?

A. It was before the Trial.

Q. How long?

A. I can't remember; I think it was about a Quarter of a Year, I can't tell exactly, but it was near upon.

Q. How near was you to the Dutcheſs? What was your Employment?

A. I help'd to get her to Bed, as her Chamber-maid.

Q. Did Elianoſ Vanes never undreſs her?

A. No, never in this World.

Q. Did you never know her come into the Dutcheſs's Chamber?

A. Never, never. Oh, ſie! never indeed.

Q. D'ye know Nicholas Hauſeur?

A. I don't know him: There were many aſk'd for Mr. Keemer, but I did not know them, for he has many Acquaintance.

Q. Did you know Thomas Hawkſworth, your Fellow-ſervant?

A. Yes, he came when my Lady came to Mill-bank; Mr. Peacock came before; they were both Servants together.

Frances Knight Croſs-Examined.

Q. You ſay you lived Twenty-seven Years and upwards with the Dutcheſs and her Mother; Do you live with the Dutcheſs ſtill?

A. Yes.

Q. How long is it ſince you liv'd with her Mother?

A. After the Dutcheſs was marry'd, I came to live with her and my Lord Duke.

Q. Have you been in her Service ſince?

A. Yes.

Q. After the Duke parted with my Lady Dutcheſs, where did ſhe go to live?

A. She liv'd at Mill-bank, and no where elſe that I know of.

Q. Came you to live with her ſoon after her

VOL. V.

Marriage? and have you lived with her ever ſince? and, did ſhe ever live at Vaux-ball?

A. I never lived with her at Vaux-ball.

Q. Then you have not lived with her ever ſince?

A. I have lived with her ever ſince; I have taken my Oath, and as near as I can tell you.

Q. Where did the Dutcheſs live before ſhe came to Mill-bank?

A. She liv'd at Vaux-ball?

Q. Did not you live with her there?

A. No, I broke my Leg, and was brought to her Mother's, and ſtaid there a Twelvemonth; Mr. Peters was my Surgeon, he can tell it: I came here to ſpeak the Truth.

Q. Don't be angry?

A. No.

Q. Did you continue with the Dutcheſs till you broke your Leg?

A. Yes; and when I broke my Leg, I went home to her Mother's.

Q. When left you the Dutcheſs after ſhe parted with my Lord Duke?

A. I left her at Mill-bank.

Q. Do you know the Queſtion that's aſk'd? When did you leave the Dutcheſs after ſhe parted with the Duke?

A. I know no ſuch Queſtion as you aſk. I ſpeak the Truth as well as I can.

Q. Where did my Lady Dutcheſs go, when you left her?

A. I went away lame, and cou'd do her no Service.

Q. Where did you come to my Lady Dutcheſs again, when you were well.

A. At Mill-bank.

Q. Was you ever with her at Vaux-ball?

A. I was not there, becauſe I was lame.

Q. Was you ever at Vaux-ball?

A. I told you I broke my Leg.

Q. Was you ever at Vaux-ball, or not?

A. I tell you I was lame.

Q. Was you ever at Vaux-ball at any Time?

A. I tell you I was lame; I give you Answer to your Queſtion. I tell theſe noble Lords, that every Word I ſpeak is Truth.

Q. But you are ſwore to ſpeak the Whole Truth.

A. I ſpeak the Truth. Why ſhould you do ſo?

Q. Was you ever with the Dutcheſs at Vaux-ball?

A. I was not able to be there with her.

Q. Was you there with her, or not?

A. I was not able to go thither.

Q. Was you never there?

A. I was not able to go thither.

Q. Was you never there, or not, with the Dutcheſs?

A. No, I never was at Vaux-ball in my Life, but at Mill-bank and Whiteball I have. Memorandum in this Interlineation was alter'd, upon reading over her Examination, Yes; I have been there, but I did not ſtay there.

Q. Was you ever there with the Dutcheſs, or not?

A. I was not there: I tell you I was not there, I was lame.

Q. Was you never there with the Dutcheſs at any Time?

L I

A. No,

A. No, I tell you, I was lame: I was never there with the Dutcheſs.

Q. Where was the Dutcheſs before ſhe came to Mill-bank?

A. That I can't tell.

Q. Where was ſhe when you broke your Leg?

A. I left her at Mill-bank, with her Mother.

Q. Where did you find her, when you came again?

A. I found her at her Mother's.

Q. Can't you tell where ſhe was in the mean Time?

A. No.

Q. Was you never told by any of the Family where ſhe was at that Time?

A. No.

Q. Did Vanefs come to the Dutcheſs when ſhe liv'd at Mill-bank?

A. Yes.

Q. How long did ſhe live with her after?

A. I can't tell; but a ſhort Time.

Q. Do you know Suſanna Barrington?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you ſee her laſt?

A. About three Weeks ago.

Q. Is ſhe not in the Dutcheſs's Service ſtill?

A. I'll tell you the Truth: She receiv'd a Letter from Flanders, acquainting her that her Mother was dead: She was very much afflicted with it: And when the Dutcheſs came in, I told her Grace that Suſan had receiv'd a Letter that her Mother was dead, and I did deſire my Lady to give her Leave to go to Holland; and ſhe's there.

Q. Did you ſee the Letter?

A. I ſaw it.

Q. Was it from her Mother, or from her Siſter?

A. Yes, 'twas from her Siſter, that her Mother was dead.

Q. Was Suſanna Barrington in the Dutcheſs's Service when this Bill was depending?

A. No.

Q. How long is it ſince you received that Letter?

A. 'Tis about three Weeks ago.

Q. How long is it ſince you went?

A. A Fortnight to Day.

Q. Did you ſee her any Time theſe three Weeks?

A. No, no.

Q. Did you not live with her in the Houſe, and did you not ſee her?

A. She has been gone about a Week.

Q. D'you know Mrs. Judith?

A. No.

Q. D'ye know Mrs. Briane?

A. I have heard her Name, but am not acquainted with her.

Q. Had you any Diſcourſe with Vanefs, when ſhe came to Mill-bank to live with the Dutcheſs?

A. No, I never lik'd her Diſcourſe.

Q. Did you ever hear the Dutcheſs ſay that ſhe liv'd at Vaux-Hall?

A. No.

Q. Do you know Sir John Germaine?

A. I know him by ſight.

Q. Did you never ſee him at the Dutcheſs's?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever ſee him at Mill-bank, or at her Houſe here?

A. No, my Lords, never.

Q. Did Vanefs come along with the Dutcheſs when ſhe came to Mill-bank, or, was ſhe hired after her Return?

A. She came after her Return to Mill-bank.

Q. What Time went ſhe away?

A. I can't tell the Day; that's a hard Queſtion. She went away, on my ſpeaking to the Dutcheſs, that ſhe was haunted with bad Company.

Q. Did not ſhe dreſs the Dinner, when the Dutcheſs dined at home?

A. Yes, but ſhe never dined at home but very ſeldom.

Q. Can't you tell when Vanefs went away?

A. No.

Q. Did you know Nicolas Hoſier?

A. No, I know no ſuch Man. There were many People came to Mr. Keemer, Lords Servants, and others, I don't know ſuch People.

Q. You have heard that the Dutcheſs liv'd at Vaux-ball.

A. Yes.

Q. At what Time did ſhe live there?

A. I can't tell you; I was ſick in Bed.

Q. You may recollect about what Time was it.

A. I was lame in March, this Month: I can't tell what Year.

Q. D'you know what Houſe ſhe liv'd in?

A. Yes; 'twas one Sir Thomas Groſvener's, at Mill-bank.

Q. I aſk you what Houſe ſhe liv'd at, at Vaux-ball?

A. I know not.

Q. How came you to know the Dutcheſs liv'd at Vaux-ball?

A. You aſk what I can't tell you.

Q. You daren't tell.

A. Yes, I'll tell the Truth, before all the Houſe of Lords.

Q. You ſaid ſhe liv'd at Vaux-ball?

A. No, I never ſaid it.

Q. Whence came the Dutcheſs, when ſhe came to Mill-bank?

A. She came from the Place ſhe did; I did not aſk her the Queſtion, I durſt not be ſo bold.

Q. Can't you tell when ſhe came to Mill-bank nor from what Place ſhe came?

A. I can't tell the Day when ſhe came. I don't aſk from what Place People come.

Q. When did you know Sir John Germaine firſt?

A. I ſaw him firſt with my Lord Duke there, at his Houſe in the Square.

Q. Did you never know him keep Company with the Dutcheſs?

A. No, but only with the Duke of Norfolk there; I ſpeak in the Preſence of God.

Sign'd,

FRANCES KNIGHT.

Die Lunæ 4^o Martii, 1699.

William White ſworn, depoſeth as followeth:

Queſt. DID you live with the Dutcheſs of Norfolk for ſome Years paſt?

Anſ. I liv'd with her ſince the firſt Week of the firſt Trial, about ſix, or ſeven, or eight Years ago.

Q. What

Q. What Care was there taken about the Dutcheſs's Door in the Park?

A. I generally went out the first in the Morning; the Door had two Bolts, a Croſs-Barr, and an Iron Chain; beſides, theſe I unbolted every Morning, and unbarr'd, when I went out early.

Q. Did you ever hear or underſtand that Hofier had a Key to that Door?

A. I never knew any thing of it, nor know not of what Uſe it could have been; for he could not come in till the Door was unbolted.

Q. Say poſitively, whether ever you have heard, that this Man had a Key to that Door?

A. I never heard of it.

Q. Did you never ſee him come in at that Door?

A. Yes.

Q. How? Upon what Occaſion?

A. I happen'd to be going out my ſelf, and to open the Door for him. His Buſineſs, I was told by my Lady Dutcheſs's Maid, was, That ſhe had lent Money to a Man in Holland, and ſhe wrote a Letter to be carry'd by this Man to her Siſter, to get this Money; and ſhe ſent another Letter by one Bull, to carry to Holland, to get the Money, as ſhe told me.

Q. Did you let him in?

A. I unbolted the Door, and let him in.

Q. Did you find that this Man uſed to come freely to the Houſe, at that Door, by any Key?

A. No, I never knew it.

Q. Who did he come to?

A. To Suſan Barrington.

Q. Did you ever ſee him above Stairs with her?

A. No; he might come in, and I not ſee it.

Q. Did the Dutcheſs or Servants ſay any thing that he had Leave to come in?

A. I never examin'd that, becauſe any body that had Buſineſs had Leave to come in, as Tradeſmen, and others.

Q. Did they tell you in the Houſe, that Hofier was at Liberty to come into the Houſe with a Key?

A. No, never.

Q. Had you ever any Diſcourſe with Hofier?

A. I was one Day coming from Change, and met Mr. L'Eſtrange and this Hofier. L'Eſtrange told me, that he was ill of the Gripes. I told him, that the beſt Thing for it was burnt Claret; and he, and I, and Hofier went to a Tavern in Smithfield: And while we were together, Hofier reflected upon his Maſter, ſaying, His Maſter had uſed him ill, and deſerv'd to be ill uſed. Mr. L'Eſtrange heard theſe and ſome more Words; Mr. L'Eſtrange told me, that he ſpoke to that purpoſe, He was reſolved to be reveng'd of his Maſter.

Q. What did he ſay of his Maſter?

A. He ſaid his Maſter had uſed him very ill; he had many threatning Words; he ſaid his Maſter was an ill Man, and deſerv'd to be ill uſed, and the Time would come when he ſhould repent it.

Q. When did he ſay theſe Words?

A. 'Twas about Michaelmas two Years ago, or a Year ago, I can't tell which.

Croſs-Examined.

Q. You ſay you liv'd with the Dutcheſs the firſt Week of the firſt Trial: Was Vaneſs there at that Time?

VOL V.

A. She was gone before I came.

Q. How long?

A. I can't tell; I never ſaw her there, to the beſt of my Remembrance, but have heard there was ſuch a one in the Family.

Q. Did you know Hofier?

A. I ſee him come in at the Back-door.

Q. Whoſe Servant was he then?

A. The firſt Time I did not know; but a little after, I was told he was Sir John Germaine's.

Q. What Occaſion had he to come to the Dutcheſs's Houſe?

A. I know not, but about the Buſineſs of the Letter.

Q. How often did you ſee him there?

A. Two or three Times, or more.

Q. With whom?

A. With Suſan Barrington.

Q. What was his Buſineſs with her?

A. About the Money, as ſhe told me. He went along with that Woman; ſhe ſent a Letter by him; and ſhe ſent Letters by ſome other Dutchmen into Holland, about the Money.

Q. Did he aſk for any other Servant?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did you ſee him above Stairs with her?

A. I never ſaw them in any Apartment but that Place below, where the Lumber is, near the Park-door.

Q. D'you know Suſannah Barrington?

A. I know her very well.

Q. D'you know where ſhe is now?

A. Her Mother died about the 10th of January, and then I ſaw her all in Tears; and ſhe went away after this Account of her Mother's Death.

Q. When did you ſee her laſt?

A. I have not ſeen her this Fortnight or Month, that I know of, that I could diſtinguiſh her from another Woman, except ſhe had a Mask on.

Q. How long before this Trial ſaw you her?

A. About a Fortnight: She gave me an Account that her Mother died the 10th of January, in Holland.

Q. When did ſhe go away?

A. I did not take notice of the Time ſhe went away.

Q. Did you know Hofier at any other Place but at the Lady Dutcheſs's?

A. Never, but as I have ſeen him in the Park, and with Mr. L'Eſtrange.

Q. Was you never with him at Sir John Germaine's.

A. Never.

Q. D'you know Sir John Germaine?

A. After I had lived with the Dutcheſs ſome Time, I was told by ſome in the Street, that that was his Coach, and his Livery, and that he was the Man that there was ſo much Noiſe about.

Q. Did you never ſee him in the Dutcheſs's Houſe?

A. I never ſaw him in no Part of my Lady Dutcheſs's Houſe, nor in no Apartment; and I am the only Man that goes up and down Stairs.

Q. Did you never ſee him in the Dutcheſs's Company at any other Place?

A. No.

Q. Did you conſtantly lie at the Dutcheſs's Houſe?

A. When the Dutcheſs was laſt at Drayton, I lay at Richmond two or three Nights.

Q. Did

Q. Did you lie constantly there, when the Dutcheſs was there?

A. I was ſick near a Month, and all that Time I lay at my Wife's; but moſt commonly lay at the Dutcheſs's, ſince ſhe is come to Duke-ſtreet to live.

Q. You ſay, You uſed to open the Door in the Park firſt in a Morning; what Time did you uſe to open it at?

A. At Six, Seven, or Eight a-Clock in a Morning; there was no certain Hour, but I generally open'd that Door.

Q. Did you ever know Hauſeur come in at any other Door but that?

A. Yes; one wet Day he came in at the Street-door, before the Porter and all the Servants, and ask'd for the ſame Woman.

Q. Did he never ask for any other Body?

A. I never heard him ask for any but Suſan Barrington, for ſhe was his Country-woman.

Q. If Nicholas got in at the Park-door, could not he get up Stairs?

A. If he could get in at that Door he talks of, he could not get into the Dutcheſs's Apartment; for there was a Room betwixt that, where the Plate and Jewels lay, that no Key could open: That if he could get up two Pair of Stairs, he could not get in there.

Q. If he had a Key, and got in at any Door, cou'dn't Suſan Barrington, when he came in, without any difficulty, lead him round the Houſe?

A. I can't ſay but ſhe might, but I never ſaw him, but below Stairs with that Woman, and then he went away without going up Stairs.

Q. Did you never ſee him bring any Thing to the Houſe?

A. No.

Q. You nam'd one L'Eſtrange, that you ſaw with him at the Tavern, what is he?

A. He was my old Fellow-Servant at the late Duke of Norfolk's.

Q. What Diſcourſe had you with him then?

A. He complain'd to me of his being ill, and I gave him the beſt of my Advice.

Q. What Time was it that Nicholas had thoſe threaten'g Words againſt his Maſter?

A. About Ten, Eleven, or Twelve a-Clock at Noon.

Q. How long ago is it?

A. I can't tell if it be a Year, or two Years; 'twas a little after Michaelmas, but whether it be one Year, or two Years, I can't tell.

Q. Cou'dn't Mr. L'Eſtrange tell?

A. I ask'd Mr. L'Eſtrange, and he cou'd not tell.

Q. Whoſe Servant was Nicholas then?

A. He was no body's Servant then: He rail'd againſt his Maſter at that Time for turning him away.

Q. Did you not know who was his Maſter a Year or two ago?

A. He told me, he was out of Place.

Q. Did you not know him to be Sir John Germaine's Servant, when he came to the Dutcheſs's?

A. I did not know it when I firſt ſaw him and Suſan together; but ſome time before he went away, I heard he was his Servant.

Q. But you ſay, you did not know Sir John Germaine about two Years ago?

A. I did not know him ſo, as to ſpeak to him.

WILLIAM WHITE.

Matthew Mac-Donnell ſworn, depoſeth as followeth:

Queſt. HOW long have you liv'd with the Dutcheſs of Norfolk?

Anſw. Four Years at Lady-day next.

Q. In what manner was the Door going out to the Park kept? Had any body a Key to it that was not of the Family? Did it uſe to be left open?

A. 'Twas not to be left open; 'twas very unſafe to be left open; beſides, it was bolted and lock'd.

Q. Was there particular Care taken of that Door?

A. Yes; I my ſelf bolted it very often at Night.

Q. Did you often unbolt it in a Morning?

A. Yes.

Q. Whether or not, the Time that you lived there, did you know any body, that was not of the Family, come with a Key to open that Door?

A. Never.

Q. Did you know Hauſeur, or Nicholas? Had he a Key to that Door?

A. I never knew it.

Q. Did you ever ſee him come in at that Door?

A. I open'd that Door for him once or twice, when he rung.

Q. When was that?

A. In an Evening.

Q. What did he come about?

A. I do not know; but he ask'd for Suſan, my Lady Dutcheſs's Servant.

Q. Did you ever ſee him go up Stairs?

A. I never did hear he went up in my Life.

Q. When he ask'd for Suſan, did he go up then?

A. No; I call'd her to him, and I never ſaw him go up Stairs.

Q. Did you ſtay with him all the while Suſan was with him?

A. No, I had no Buſineſs; I went my way.

Q. Was Nicholas, when he rung, in the Park, or at the inner Door?

A. In the Park.

Croſs-Examined.

Q. Did you know whoſe Servant Nicholas was?

A. I did not know, nor I ask'd no Queſtions.

Q. How often have you ſeen him at the Dutcheſs's?

A. Three times.

Q. Did he always ask for Suſannab Barrington?

A. One time he ask'd for Mr. Keemer.

Q. Who was Mr. Keemer?

A. He was the Dutcheſs's Servant.

Q. Did you uſe to ſtay with him? or, did you leave him?

A. No, to tell you the plain Truth, I thought he came to court Suſan, and did not ſtay with him.

Q. Did you ever ſee him up Stairs in Suſan's Room?

A. I never ſaw him there.

Q. What Employment have you under the Dutcheſs?

A. I am her Foot-man.

Q. When did you ſee Suſan laſt?

A. On

A. On Tuesday Seven-night in the Morning.
Q. Not ſince?
A. No.
Q. Where did you ſee her then?
A. At the Dutcheſs's Houſe.
Q. What became of her after that?
A. She ſaid, her Mother died lately in Holland, and ſhe was going there.
Q. When did you hear her ſay ſo?
A. I heard her ſay ſo ſeveral times before ſhe went away; a Month, or a Quarter of a Year, before ſhe talk'd of going to Holland.
Q. Upon your Oath, don't you know that ſhe is at the Dutcheſs's?
A. I know not of her being there.
Q. Can you take it upon your Oath when ſhe was firſt wanting?
A. I ſaw her on Tuesday Seven-night laſt, in the Morning.
Q. How came you to know ſhe was gone, if you don't know the Time when ſhe went?
A. I did not know ſhe was gone, till I went home from the Houſe here.
Q. Who told you ſhe was gone?
A. The Servants.
Q. She was there when you came hither?
A. On Tuesday Morning I did ſee her.
Q. Has the Dutcheſs another in her Station?
A. There is one Mrs. Cambell, that dreſſes my Lady Dutcheſs, but ſhe does not live there.
Q. Did ſhe uſe, in Suſan's Time, to come and dreſs the Dutcheſs?
A. Yes, ſhe uſed to come ſometimes.
Q. Has the Dutcheſs taken any body to do Suſan's Work?
A. I know not of any.

Mr. Robert Welburne ſworn, depoſeth as followeth:

Queſt. WHAT Account can you give of Mr. L'Eſtrange's having Notice to be a Witneſs?

Anſwer. I was told by the Dutcheſs, That L'Eſtrange had been with her, and gave her an Account of ſome Particulars between White, and him, and Nicholas; That, having the Griping in the Guts, they went into a Tavern together; That he heard White and Nicholas talk together very loud, but he told me he had the Gripes, and could not ſo well mind what he ſaid, but he heard him uſe hard Words againſt his Maſter, but he could not remember that he ſaid he would be reveng'd upon his Maſter; but he would recollect himſelf, and, if he could remember, he would ſay what he could: He told me, he had been bred in the Norfolk Family.

Q. Did you aſk Mr. L'Eſtrange about this Matter?

A. Yes: Mr. L'Eſtrange told me, He remember'd they were together, and heard Nicholas ſpeak very hard, ill Words againſt his Maſter, but he could not be poſitive what they were; but what he could remember he would ſpeak, if that would do the Dutcheſs any Service. He deſir'd my Lady Dutcheſs would give him notice the Night before, and he would appear.

Q. When was this?

A. 'Twas Tuesday or Wednesday; I think 'twas Wednesday.

Croſs-Examined.

Q. Did the Lady Dutcheſs tell you what Mr. L'Eſtrange ſaid?

A. Yes; that gave me the Occaſion to ſpeak of it. He ſaid, he heard Nicholas ſay hard, ill Words againſt his Maſter, but not that he heard him ſay he would ſtudy to be reveng'd. Perhaps, ſays he, there might be ſome other Words. That he was in the Kitchen, and would endeavour to recollect who was there beſides; and if he had two or three Days Time, he would enquire.

Q. Did you let him know you was concern'd for the Dutcheſs?

A. Yes; and he told me he would tell me what he could ſay in this Matter; and he ſhould be ready to appear at any Time, if that would be for the Dutcheſs's Advantage.

Q. Did he tell you he was going abroad into Holland?

A. Not one Word.

Q. Did you intimate to him, when the Dutcheſs was to make her Defence?

A. I think I did, but I can't be poſitive; but he took no notice to me, that he would not be there.

Q. D'you know Mr. La Fountaine?

A. Yes, I know one La Fountaine.

Q. Is he in the Dutcheſs's Service?

A. I believe not.

Q. D'you know whether he is at Drayton?

A. I have ſeen him at Drayton.

Q. Did he live with Sir John Germaine, that you know of?

A. Never, that I know of.

Q. When ſaw you Suſan Barrington?

A. I can't be poſitive; but I think, not this Month or ſix Weeks.

Q. Ha'n't you ſeen her ſince this Bill was brought in?

A. Poſitively, I have not.

ROBERT WELBOURN.

Elleanor Monfort ſworn, depoſeth as followeth:

Queſt. TELL the Lords if you know Nicholas Hoſier, and on what Account you came to know him.

Anſw. This Nicholas lodg'd two or three times at my Houſe. My Huſband was a Dutchman, and he was a Dutchman; they were like Brothers, they lov'd one another.

Q. What know you of this Man, this Nicholas?

A. My Huſband told me, that this Man Nicholas, (I did not know no other Name he had;) my Huſband told me, that he had a Deſign to rob his Maſter, and that he knew where his Gold and his Jewels lay, and had made falſe Keys, and would watch his Opportunity, when his Maſter was at Play, or out of Town; and left the Keys at her Houſe.

A. Your

Q. Your Husband told you so?

A. Yes, my Husband bid me send for this Man. These were his last dying Words.

Q. Your Husband had a sad Misfortune. When was't your Husband told you so?

A. When he was in Prison.

Q. How long ago is that?

A. About eight or nine Years ago last Christmas. I would not have your Lordships think my Husband was so bad a Man; he was only Condemn'd and Executed for changing Ten Pounds of his own Money.

Q. What were your Husband's last dying Words?

A. He desired me to send for this Fellow, and deliver those Things he left at my House. I sent for him, he came, and had some Keys in a Drawer, that my Husband told me he had left there. He took two or three Keys, and put them in his Pocket, and look'd mightily out of Countenance.

Q. What did your Husband say to you?

A. He bid me give Nicholas the Keys, and bid him have a Care, and keep good Company.

Q. When was that?

A. A Week or a Fortnight before my Husband was executed.

A. Did you acquaint Nicholas with what your Husband said of him?

Q. No, an't please your Honours; I only told him, my Husband charg'd me to give him those Keys; but being in Trouble, and having a great many Enemies, I talk'd no further with him.

Q. What did Nicholas say to you?

A. He look'd out of Countenance, and told me he would come and see me another Time; but he never did; so that I did not see him again till I saw him in the Meuse, and then he told me that he would come to see me; but he never did, but always shunn'd me.

Q. How long have you known Nicholas?

A. These eight or nine Years. I knew him when he was Footman to Sir John Germaine, and I knew him when he was his Gentleman. I knew him when he went, and I knew him when he came: He is like a Sea-Rat, he comes and goes when he pleases. I hope in God Almighty it will be consider'd by this House, that such a Fellow's Witness should not be taken in such a great Concern.

Signum,

ELEANOR + MONFORT.

Then the Dutcheſs's Council pray'd that Mac-Donnel may be examin'd, as to the withdrawing Witnesses, and that it be taken in Writing: Which was agreed to, and he examin'd.

Then the Dutcheſs's Council proceeded to examine other Witnesses, and their Evidence taken in Short-hand.

Then Mrs. Pitts being call'd for, and not appearing, William Godfrey being sworn, said to this effect:

I Went to Serve Mrs. Pitts on Friday Morning: When I came to her House there was no body. A Woman with a Pitcher of Water went in: I ask'd her for Mrs. Pitts; she said, She was not at home. I shew'd her the Order, and left a Copy of it upon the Table. She was loth to receive it; she said, the Lady would be within quickly. The Woman's Name was Olivet. The last Night I went again, and a Woman came out and said, Mrs. Pitts was not at home. Then she spake in French to me: I did not understand her. I left a Note for her to attend this Day.

Then the Dutcheſs's Council pray'd, That some Agreements between the Duke and Dutcheſs, in 1694, may be read out of the Deeds executed for that purpose: Which was agreed to, and read accordingly.

Die Martis 5^o Martii, 1699.

Francis Negus sworn, deposeth as followeth:

Quest. I Desire Mr. Negus may be ask'd, Whether the Dutcheſs of Norfolk did not send some Message by him? The Words I don't confine him to; but, Whether the Message sent by him to my Lord Duke was not to this purpose; That notwithstanding the Articles, she desir'd to know from his Grace in what Manner she should live; and, that she would be govern'd by his Directions?

Answer. I think 'twas much about the Time of the Transaction of these Articles the Dutcheſs sent to me. Mr. Longueville was Council for the Duke, and Sir Thomas Powys, for the Dutcheſs. Mr. Longueville took what Care he could; and when they came to talk of their living separately, I took it only to be an Apprehension and Fear that my Lord Duke would confine the Dutcheſs to some House. My Lady Dutcheſs sent for me; I waited on her, and she express'd her self very sensibly of the Misfortunes of the Duke and her self, that such Differences should have been between them; and she was desirous to let my Lord Duke know, and desir'd me that I would let my Lord Duke know it, that she would avoid all Company that should give him any Offence, and that she would not so much as pay a Visit, but where he liked. I acquainted my Lord Duke with something to this purpose; for she often said to me, more than once or twice, That if she happen'd to die before my Lord Duke, she would leave him her Estate; and I know I have said so to my Lord Duke.

Q. Whether, from that Time, do you know that the Duke sent any Message of Complaint to the Dutcheſs, to the Place where she liv'd, that he would have her live in any other Way?

A. I know nothing of that Matter.

Q. Do you know whether my Lord Duke ever desir'd her to come and live with him?

A. I never heard of any such Thing.

Q. Did he ever send to her, to avoid any Company?

A. I never heard of any such Thing.

Q. Whether had you any Directions to attend the Duke, That he would give Way in a Controversy between the Dutcheſs and a Noble Lord of this House, whether he would wave his Privilege?

A. I have great reason to desire Sir Thomas's Favour in this Matter; I know not what he aims at. I was call'd to the Bar before, to speak the Truth as to the Matter of the Privilege; I know not what he means by it.

Q. I meant it only as an Instance of a Civil Message between the Duke and Dutcheſs, owning

ing her as his Wife, and that this was a Meſſage that beſpoke a good Underſtanding between them?

A. Will you have me to give an Answer to Sir Thomas, my Lords? I confeſs, the Duke did ſend for me, and aſk'd how the Settlement and Agreement were betwixt the Duke and the Dutcheſs, becauſe of this Matter of the Privilege.

Q. I did not mean that; but only as a late Inſtance of the Duke's owning the Dutcheſs fo far?

A. When the Duke ſent for me, he would know, whether by the Agreement he was oblig'd to let her have the Privilege: I ſaid, I underſtood it ſo; and tho' he had no Mind to do it, but as he had waved his Privilege, in the Caſe of an Uncle, he would do it for her.

Q. What would have been the Conſequence, if the Duke had not waved his Privilege? Would not that have defended her from a Suit?

A. That you may make uſe of as you pleaſe.

Sir Thomas Powys. I would only make this Uſe of it, as an Inſtance of Kindneſs between the Duke and Dutcheſs.

FRANCIS NEGUS.

After the Examination of Francis Negus, he being before ſworn, the Dutcheſs's Council declar'd they had finiſhed their Evidence.

Whereupon the Duke's Council deſir'd to call a Witneſs or two, to ſupport Nicholas Hauſeur's Reputation. Then William Allen was ſworn and examined.

Anſw. Yes.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. Three Years.

Q. Did you not know him before that Time?

A. I knew him about three Years ago.

Q. Had you any Dealings before that Time?

A. I had Dealings with him when he liv'd with Mr. Germaine.

Q. What were his Dealings?

A. As honeſt and fair as any Man could deſire.

Q. What Office had he under Mr. Germaine?

A. He was Cook to Mr. Germaine, I ſuppoſe.

Q. What! was he, Cook to him?

A. He bought in the Goods, and he paid me honeſtly for what he bought.

Croſs Examined.

Q. What Trade are you?

A. A Butcher.

Q. Then he paid you his Maſter's Money for his Maſter's Goods?

A. Yes, he paid me very honeſtly.

Q. When ſaw you him laſt?

A. I ſaw him when I was ſummon'd here by the Order of this Houſe, but not before of late.

Richard May ſworn, depoſeth as followeth:

Queſt. D'You know Nicholas Hauſeur?

A. I never ſaw him till Sunday Fortnight laſt.

Q. Where ſaw you him then?

A. At my Lord Duke of Norfolk's. I had a Command from my Lord Duke to take him in there.

Q. Where?

A. To lodge him in my Lord Duke's Houſe: I am his Houſhold-Steward; he commanded me to provide for him in the Houſe.

Q. I don't deſire you ſhould do any Thing unbecoming to my Lord Duke; but you are upon your Oath, and you muſt tell the Truth?

A. I'll freely tell what I know.

Q. Can you give me any Account where he was before that Time?

A. I never ſaw nor heard of him till then.

Q. Hath he been there ever ſince?

A. Yes; I made Proviſion for him, by his Grace's Command.

Q. Do you know Vanefs? Where hath ſhe been?

A. On Sunday was Fortnight ſhe came thither likewise, likewise, and I was order'd to take Care for her.

Q. Where was she lodg'd?

A. In my Lord Duke's House in St. James's Square.

Q. Has she been there a Fortnight?

A. Yes, a Fortnight last Sunday, and coming here to attend the Lords.

Q. Had she the Liberty of the House; or was she kept close?

A. They were kept only as they desir'd themselves; no body was deny'd Liberty to see them: They desir'd to be there, sooner than any Place.

Q. D'you know that those People have been sent for, and how long before they came?

A. I was never privy to any thing of that nature: I had no Knowledge of their Names, nor whence they came.

Q. Do you know of any Money issued out for their coming over?

A. Not one Penny.

Q. Do you know of any Reward they have had, or are to have?

A. I know not of any Reward they have had, or are to have.

Q. Did you not ſee a Dutchwoman there, one Helen Vanefs?

A. There was a Woman with him; I do not know her Name.

Q. Did you not ſee her at Captain Soames's?

A. She was with this Gentleman there.

Q. Did you ſee her at no other Time or Place?

A. No.

VOL. V.

Q. Who elſe was there then?

A. Captain Soames, my Lord Howard, and one or two more. I was but at the Door. I have ſeen this Man go in. I was but a Footman waiting at the Door. I knew not the others that were there.

Q. Did you know no more that were there?

A. My Lord Howard was in the Houſe, but I know not if he were with them.

Q. Did you ever ſee Helen Vanefs before, that Time?

A. I have ſeen the Woman ſince, but never ſaw her before.

Q. Did you never ſee her any where elſe?

A. Never any where elſe but at this Houſe, going and coming.

Sign'd,

FRANCIS H UDDLESTONE.

The Council being withdrawn, the following Orders were made.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That Copies of the Examination, read to, and ſigned by the Witneſſes to Day, be deliver'd to either Side.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That this Houſe will peremptorily proceed to hear the Duke of Norfolk's and Dutcheſs of Norfolk's Council, to ſumm up the Evidence on both Sides, on Friday next, at Twelve of the Clock, and all the Lords ſummoned to attend.

The Evidence having been ſumm'd up, the Lords, after a long Debate, and a Division of the Houſe, committed the Bill, by a Majority of Sixteen.

Whereupon the Dutcheſs immediately preferred the Petition recited in the Order 8^o Martii.

Die Veneris 8^o Martii, 1699.

UPON reading the Petition of Mary, Dutcheſs of Norfolk, ſhewing, that by the Bill now depending for diſſolving the Marriage between the Duke of Norfolk, and your Petitioner, her Jointure and Marriage-Agreements are to be ſet aſide, and other Things in the Petition mentioned, and praying to be heard by her Council, touching the ſeveral Claims and Intereſt, and ſeveral Clauſes in the Bill: It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That the Petitioner ſhall be heard by her Council to Morrow at Eleven of the Clock, at the Committee of the whole Houſe, to whom the ſaid Bill ſtands committed; at which Time ſhe is to produce her ſaid Marriage-Agreement and Writings, as in the Petition is ſet forth: At which Time the Duke's Council may be preſent, if he think fit.

Matth. Johnſton, Cler. Parl.

Upon which an Order was made for Council to prepare a Clauſe for the 10,000*l*.

The Dutcheſs's Council having reſuſed to join in drawing any Clauſe, tho' they adviſed a Petition about the Jointure and Marriage-Agreement, the Duke's prepared a Clauſe, to which the Lords added a few Words, and paſſ'd it as in the Bill. The Bill being ſent down to the Commons, the Dutcheſs preſented the following Petition.

M m

To

To the Honourable the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, in Parliament aſſembled.

The Humble Petition of MARY, Dutcheſs of Norfolk.

SH EWETH,

THAT for putting an End to all Differences between the Duke of Norfolk, your Petitioner's Husband, and your Petitioner, ſeveral Articles of Agreement were entered into, and executed in April, 1694, by the ſaid Duke, your Petitioner, and your Petitioner's late Father, the Earl of Peterborough, whereby, and by Deeds executed purſuant thereunto, the Duke had his then deſired Advantage, and hath fully enjoyed the Benefit thereof: That your Petitioner, about the Time of perfecting the ſaid Deeds, ſignified to the ſaid Duke by Mr. Negus, that ſhe ſhould always readily comply with all ſuch Orders in her Way of Living and Converſation, as he ſhould think fit to appoint. Notwithſtanding which, and without ever ſignifying any Diſſatisfaction to or with your Petitioner, and without any manner of Notice, or previous Proceeding in the common and ordinary Courſe of Juſtice, and to take from your Petitioner that legal Trial in the Eccleſiaſtical Court, which by the Laws of this Realm (as ſhe is adviſed) ſhe is entituled unto, did on the 16th of February laſt, exhibit a Bill in the Houſe of Peers, entituled, An Act to Diſſolve the Duke of Norfolk's Marriage with the Lady Mary Mordaunt, and to enable him to marry again. Upon which the Proceedings were ſo very quick, two Witneſſes lately brought from beyond the Seas being forthwith examined againſt your Petitioner, and your Petitioner charged with Facts ſuppoſed to be committed many Years ſince, and long before the Date of the ſaid Articles, could not be prepared to make her Defence as ſhe would have done, if the Proceeding had been againſt her according to the known Laws of the Land. The Places of Abode of the Witneſſes produced againſt her being yet not known or diſcovered to your Petitioner: And your Petitioner having Notice, that the ſaid Bill is paſſed the Houſe of Lords, and ſent down for the Concurrence of this Honourable Houſe,

Your Petitioner prays ſhe may be heard by her Council at Law and one Civilian againſt the ſaid Bill, before any Proceedings be had thereon by this Honourable Houſe,

And your Petitioner ſhall pray, &c.

MARY NORFOLK.

A Day being appointed by the Houſe of Commons for the Committee to proceed, the Duke cauſed the Papers following to be publiſhed.

T H E
Duke of NORFOLK's C A S E;
W I T H
R E A S O N S for paſſing his B I L L.

IF Want either of Precedent for a Parliamentary Divorce, before going through the tedious and ineffectual Methods of Doctors-Commons, or of Demonſtration of Fact, have hitherto deprived the Duke of Norfolk of that Relief againſt his Wife's Adultery, which the Divine Law allows; the late Statute made in the like Caſe, and the coming in of two, who, while the Duke's former Bill was depending, had been ſent away, to prevent that Diſcovery which they now make; cannot but be thought to remove all Objections againſt an Act of Parliament, not only for the Benefit of the Duke, but of the Publick, as a Means to preſerve the Inheritance of ſo great an Office and Honours to Perſons of the true Religion.

And ſince Biſhop Cozens's Argument, in the Lord Roffe's Caſe has made it evident, that thoſe Canons which govern the Spiritual Court in this Matter, are but the Remains of Popery; nothing can be now requiſite to ſatisfy the moſt ſcrupulous of the Reformed Religion, but to ſet the Duke's Proofs of his Lady's Adultery in a true Light.

The Reputation which the Dutcheſs had maintained, of Wit and Diſcretion, made it difficult for many to believe, that ſhe could be ſurprized in the very Act of Adultery, as had been formerly proved. And tho' it then appeared, that one Henry Keemer lived with the Dutcheſs while ſhe went by a feigned Name, at a Houſe hired for her at Vaux-hall by Sir John Germaine's Brother; and that Nicola, who then lived with Sir John, uſed to receive Wood ſent from the Dutcheſs to Sir John's Houſe by the Cock-pit; the withdrawing of Nicola, and carrying with him the Dutch Maid, equally entruſted with the Secret on Sir John's Side; left no Evidence of their conſtant Converſation, but Keemer ſince dead, and Sufannab Barrington, who had the like Truſt from the Dutcheſs.

Keemer,

Keemer, though very unwillingly, ſome Years ſince confeſſed his living with the Dutcheſs at Vaux-hall, where he pretended ſhe was obliged to conceal herſelf for Debt; and what Share Suſannab had in the Secret was unknown, till Nicola appeared: Nicola coming into England ſome time ſince, in Expectation of a Service, expreſs'd his Readineſs to diſcover what he knew, and to endeavour to bring with him the Dutch Maid.

^a She proves, that for two Months the firſt Summer after the King came for England, Sir John Germaine and the Dutcheſs lived together as Man and Wife, and were ſeen in Bed together by her, Mr. Briane, and his Wife, Sir John's Siſter; and that Nicholas Hauſeur, Sir John's Valet de Chambre, uſed to be aſſiſting to him; as the Dutcheſs's Woman, Suſannab Barrington, was to her, at going to Bed, and riſing.

She proves the like Converſation at Vaux-hall, and the Dutcheſs's Houſe at the Mill-bank, till the Duke's firſt Bill for a Divorce was depending; within which time, Nicholas Hauſeur, by Sir John's Order, carried away her and Suſannab Barrington, with Intention of going for Holland, to prevent their being examined to what they knew; but the Wind proving contrary, they could not go till the Bill was rejected; and then Sir John fetch'd back Suſannab, who was moſt uſeful to the Dutcheſs; but Hauſeur went for Holland with Ellen.

^b He confirms Ellen's Evidence in every Particular; and beſides the Perſons mentioned by Ellen, as privy to Sir John's lying with the Dutcheſs, names Sir John's Brother, Daniel. Nicholas having been found very truſty, his Maſter ſent for him to return to his Service; and gave him the Opportunity of proving the Continuance of the ſame adulterous Converſation, at ſeveral Times and Places, from the Summer, 1692, to the 26th of April, 1696. He ſwears he had after his Return to Sir John's Service, ſeen them in Bed together at Sir John's Houſe at the Cock-pit, and at the Dutcheſs's Houſe, at Mill bank, and where ſhe now lives; and uſed to be let into the Dutcheſs's Apartment by Suſannab Barrington, or Keemer. Nor can any Man who ſhall read the Teſtimonials given Mr. Hauſeur by Sir John; by the laſt of which it appears, that he ſerved him faithfully as his Steward, reaſonably queſtion Hauſeur's Credit.

^c Another, who had been advanced by Sir John from his Footman to Mr. Hauſeur's Place, and from thence to a good Office in the Excize, very unwillingly confirmed the Teſtimony of Hauſeur and the Dutch Maid, not only as to the Time of their going from the Service of Sir John and the Dutcheſs; but though being no Foreigner, he could not ſo eaſily be ſent away to prevent Diſcovery, and therefore was not let ſo far into the Secret as Hauſeur and the Dutch Maid; yet he ſwears, the Dutcheſs uſed to come maſk'd to his Maſter's Houſe; that he has gone with him as far as the Horſe-Ferry, towards her Houſe at the Mill-Bank; that then his Maſter ſometimes lay out all Night, and the next Morning he has carried Linnen and Cloaths for his Maſter to Keemer's Houſe, or Keemer has fetch'd them from him: And this he proves to have been ſince the rejecting the former Bill, and about five Years ſince, when he was ſucceeded by Hauſeur, as before he had ſucceeded Hauſeur.

Two other Foreigners, La Fountain, who lived with Sir John, and was ſerved with Summons at the Dutcheſs's Houſe at Drayton, and Hugonee, who ran away from the Lord Haverſham's ſince Summons was taken out againſt him, ſeem to have had the ſame Truſt that Hauſeur had; for both declared, That nothing ſhould oblige them to betray their Maſter's Secrets: One ſaid, No Court could diſpence with an Oath of Secrecy; and both declared, They would immediately go beyond Sea. Summons have been taken out for Mr. Briane and his Wife, and Sir John Germaine's Brother (who are, or lately were, in Town) to confeſs or deny what Nicola and Ellen appeal to them for; and it cannot be imagined, that Sir John ſhould chuſe the Honour of being thought to have to do with a Dutcheſs, before the clearing her and himſelf from the Imputation, by bringing his Relations to diſprove the Charge, if what is ſworn to be within their Knowledge is falſe.

And if Sir John's Vanity ſhould prevail with him, at leaſt it is to be preſumed that his Relations would be more juſt to him and the Lady, than to ſuffer any Thing to paſs againſt them, which they could with Truth and Juſtice prevent.

But ſince none of them appear, the World will believe their abſenting more than a thouſand Witneſſes, in Confirmation of what Mr. Hauſeur, Ellen and Bayly have ſworn: Whoſe Evidence not only ſtands untouch'd by any Thing offered by the Dutcheſs's Witneſſes, but is plainly confirm'd by them in the principal Parts.

This being the Nature of the Proofs, 'tis obſervable,

1. That there never yet was any Caſe of this kind, where the Evidence was not liable to greater Objections than can be made to this.

Though in the lateſt Caſe of this kind, there was full Conviction of the Lady's having Children, while ſhe lived ſeparate from her Huſband, and the Preſumption was very violent whoſe the Children were; yet this was but Preſumption, and that was weakned by the Preſumption in Law that they were the Huſband's; eſpecially, ſince there was no direct Proof of the Lover's ever lying with her.

2. Tho' in that Caſe, by reaſon of the Interval of Parliament, and Fear of the Deaths of Witneſſes, a Suit was begun in Doctors-Commons, 'twas taken from thence while the Suit was depending; therefore that was rather an Objection againſt proceeding in Parliament, than an Argument for it.

3. In that Caſe, ſeveral Witneſſes were examined at the Bars of both Houſes, who had not been examined at Doctors-Commons, nor any Notice given of their Names before their Examination.

4. It appears by that Caſe, and the preſent, that the Examinations in Parliament are more ſolemn and certain than thoſe of the Spiritual Court; which depend too much upon the Honesty of the Register, or his Deputy.

5. Before that Caſe, Parliaments have either broken through the Rules which bind the Spiritual Court, as in the Case of the Duke of Norfolk, ^a Eliz. where the Parliament ratified the Marriage, ^b as lawful according to God's Law; tho' protracted and letted, by Reason of certain Decrees and Canons of the Pope's Law; or else have dissolved a Marriage where there had been no Application to Doctors-Commons, as in the Case of Mrs. Whar-ton, who had been married to Mr. Campbell; and yet there had been no Examination of Witnesses, but what had been before the two Houses.

^c So long before, in the Case of Sir Ralph Sadler, upon Proof before the two Houses, that the Lady Sadler's former Husband had deserted her, and disappeared for four Years before she married Sir Ralph, the Parliament legitimated her Children by Sir Ralph.

Whereas some object against the passing the Bill, as if it would countenance a Jurisdiction in the House of Lords to examine to such Matters, in the first Instance or Originally; the Objection would be the same if it had begun, as it might, in the House of Commons; but in truth would be of equal Force against most private, and several publick Acts, occasioned by the Examination of Witnesses of Notoriety of Fact.

Since therefore the Duke has so long, and so often in vain endeavoured to be freed from a Lady, publicly famed and proved to have lived with Sir John Germaine, as his Wife; the Duke's former Disappointment cannot but be powerful Arguments for his speedy obtaining that Justice which the Spiritual-Court cannot give him, their Power reaching no further than to that Liberty of living as she list, some Years since settled by Articles: But as none of less Art and Oratory than her Council, could have turned this into a Licence to commit Adultery, if she list, or a Pardon afterwards; had there not been Evidence of her acting according to such Construction, the Duke would have hoped she had repented of the former Injuries he had received from her; but now hopes, she shall no longer continue to bear the Name of his Wife, and put him in Danger of being succeeded by Sir John Germaine's Issue, or deprive him of the Expectation of leaving his Honours, Offices and Estate, to a Protestant Heir.

Bishop COZEN'S Argument, Proving, That Adultery works a Dissolution of the Marriage.

Being the Substance of several of Bishop Cozen's Speeches in the House of Lords, upon the Debate of the Lord Ross's Case.

Taken from Original Papers, writ in the Bishop's own Hand.

THE Question is indefinitely to be spoken of, Whether a Man being divorced from his Wife, who hath committed Adultery, and is convicted of it, may marry himself to another Wife or no, during the Life of her which divorced?

The Place in St. Matthew the 5th, repeated again St. Matthew the 19th, has great Perspicuity: If it be not lawful for a Man to put away his Wife, and marry again, except it be in the Case of Fornication (for the displacing the Words, by putting the Exception before the Marriage, cannot alter the Sense) then à contrario, it must of necessity follow, that if the Wife be put away for Fornication, the Husband, by the Tenour of Christ's Words, is left free to marry again; which Freedom is not allowed to the Adulterers herself, nor any Man else that shall marry her.

St. Mark and St. Luke have been opposed to St. Matthew; and it has been said, that Christ's Words in St. Matthew did not properly belong to Christ's Disciples, or the Christian Church, as the Words in St. Mark and St. Luke, which are absolute, do; which is a Saying that neither I, nor, I think, no body else ever heard of before: For Christ's Sermon in the Mount was spoken to his Disciples, and especially belonged to Christians.

'Tis clear they are spoken to his Disciples; for he says to them, that they are the Salt of the Earth, and the Light of the World; and that they are blessed, when they suffer Persecution for his Name's Sake; which no Man will say or apply to the Jews.

'Tis true, that in the 19th Chapter of St. Matthew, Christ answers the Scribes and Pharisees, who came to tempt him with their Question, Whether it was lawful for a Man to put away his Wife for any Cause, as they said, Moses had permitted 'em to do. But the Answer that Christ gave them, That it was not lawful, but only in the Case of Adultery, for Men to put away their Wives, and marry another; was a Rule which concerned all Christians to observe for ever after; and for that Reason was recorded by St. Matthew.

The Words in St. Mark and St. Luke are not to be taken absolutely, but to be supplied and understood by his Words in St. Matthew, as in many other Cases is clear; viz. the Thief upon the Cross, Baptism in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, &c. whereof many Instances may be brought, as the Destruction of Nineveh, &c.

But for Christ's Words, the Exception confirms the Rule, and infers a Concession, that in the Case of Fornication, the putting away one Wife, and marrying another is allowed. It is alike with divers other his Exceptions, which are found in Scripture: For brevity, I will instance in this one (viz.) Except ye repent, ye shall all like- wife

wife periſh. Upon which Text, if I or any Biſhop elſe were to preach, I believe we ſhould not diſcharge our Duty, unleſs we ſhould tell the People, That if by the Grace of God they did repent, they ſhould not periſh.

The Exception here, ei non niſi, unleſs, is parallel with the 1 Kings iii. 18. None were in the Houſe except wee twain; they two therefore were, others were not.

Such Exceptions proceeding from natural Equity, are tacitly implied in Laws, tho' pronounced in general Terms.

But as to the Exception here, the Words are not capable of any other Senſe than as I have obſerved; for except that Reſtraint be referred to marrying again, the Senſe would run thus, Whoſoever puts away his Wife commits Adultery; which ſtands not with Truth or Reason; ſince it is not the Diſmiſſion that is adulterous, but the Marriage of another. It is therefore the plain Drift of our Saviour to teach the Phariſees that the Marriage of a ſecond Wife, after a Diſmiſſion of a former, Upon any other Cauſe, except for Fornication, is no leſs than Adultery; thereby inferring, That upon a juſt Diſmiſſion for Fornication, a ſecond Marriage cannot be branded with Adultery.

Befides, the Phariſee's Queſtion [Is it lawful for a Man to put away his Wife for every Cauſe?] was not without a plain Implication of Liberty to marry another, which our Saviour well knowing, gives a full Answer, as well to what he meant, as what he ſaid; which had not been perfectly ſatisfactory, if he had only determined that one Part concerning Diſmiſſion, and not the other concerning Marriage; which Clause if two Evangelists expreſs not, yet it muſt be fetch'd neceſſarily from the third; ſince it is a ſure and irrefragable Rule, That all Four Evangelists make up one perfect Gospel.

The Rhemists and College of Doway, urge for the Papiſt Doctrine, Rom. vii. 2. The Woman which hath an Huſband, is bound by the Law to her Huſband as long as he liveth; but,

1. This Place is to be expounded by Chriſt's Words.

2. St. Paul hath no Occaſion here to ſpeak of Divorce, but of Marriage whole and ſound, as it ſtands by God's Ordinance.

3. He ſpeaks of a Woman who is under a Huſband; ſo is not ſhe that is divorced from him.

4. St. Paul uſeth this to his Purpoſe of the Law being dead, to which we are not bound.

Nor is their Doctrine more favoured by 1 Cor. vii. 10. Let not the Woman depart; as being in her Choice whether ſhe would depart or not; but in the Caſe of Fornication ſhe was to depart, or rather be put away, whether ſhe would or not.

The Bond of Marriage is to be enquired into, what it properly is. Being a Conjugal Promise ſolemnly made between a Man and his Wife, That each of them will live together according to God's Holy Ordinance, notwithstanding Poverty or Infirmary, or ſuch other Things as may happen during their Lives. Separation from Bed and Board, which is Part of their Promise ſo to live together, doth plainly break that Part of the Bond whereby they are tied to live together both as to Bed and Board. The Diſtinction betwixt Bed and Board and the Bond, is new, never mentioned in the Scripture, and unknown to the ancient Church; deviſed only by the Canonists and Schoolmen in the Latin Church (for the Greek Church knows it not) to ſerve the Pope's Turn the better, till he got it eſtabliſhed in the Council of Trent, at which Time, and never before, he laid his Anathema upon all them that were of another Mind; forbidding all Men to marry, and not to make any Uſe of Chriſt's Conceſſion.

Bed and Board, or Cohabitation, belong to the Eſſence and Subſtance of Matrimony; which made Erasmus and Bishop Hall ſay, That the Diſtinction of thoſe two from the Bond, is meerly Chimerical and Fancy.

The Promise of Conſtancy and mutual Forbearance, if it hinders Divorce as to the Bond, hinders it alſo as to Bed and Board; and becauſe the ſame Bed and the ſame Table were promiſed in the Marriage Contract; but the Promise does not extend even to tolerating Adultery, or malicious Deſertion; which, according to God's Ordinance, diſſolves the Marriage.

Our Saviour ſpeaks of Divorces inſtituted by the Mosaical Law; but they were no other than Divorces from the Bond.

The Form of the Bill of Divorce among the Jews was this, Be expelled from me, and free for any Body elſe. To give the Bill of Divorce, is from the Hebrew Root נז, which is to break, or cut off the Marriage. With this agree the ancient Canons, Councils, and Fathers of the Church.

Concil. Neocaſar. & Elib. forbid the retaining an adulterous Wife. Concil. Eliber. Aurelian. & Arelatenſ. give Liberty in ſuch Caſe to marry again. Clemens's Conſtitution, Tertullian, St. Baſil in his Canons, approved by a General Council, are for marrying again. Concil. Venet. If they marry in any other Caſe than Fornication, they are to be excommunicated, and not otherwiſe. Concil. Wormat. gives Liberty to the innocent Party to marry after Divorce. Concil. Lateran. gives leave for the innocent Party after a Year to marry again.

Concil. Lateran. If any one take another Wife while a Suit is depending, and afterwards there be a Divorce between him and the firſt, he may remain with the ſecond.

Lactantius, St. Hierom and Epiphanius, are for Allowance of Marriage after Divorce. Chryſoſtom, Hom. 19. 1 Cor. 7. ſays, That the Marriage is diſſolved by Adultery; and that the Huſband, after he hath put her away, is no longer her Huſband.

Theophylaſt on the 16th of St. Luke, ſays, that St. Luke muſt be interpreted by St. Matthew. St. Hilary is for marrying again, as Dr. Fulk ſaith upon St. Matthew the 7th. The Eastern Biſhops, in the Council of Florence, are for marrying again: Juſtin Martyr ſpeaks of a Woman giving a Bill of Divorce to a diſſolute Huſband, without finding any Fault with it.

St. Ambroſe ſays, a Man may marry again, if he puts away an adulterous Wife; Theodoreſt ſaid of a Wife who violated the Laws of Marriage; Therefore our Lord requires the Bond or Tie of Marriage to be diſſolved.

All the Greek Church to this Day allow it. Erasmus Cajetan, and other Papiſts: The Civil Law, and the Laws of the Emperor are clear for it: And the Conſtitutions of our own Church of England, in the Time of H. 8. Ed. 6. and Queen Eliz.

The

The Practice of the English Church, in the Stat. 1 Jac. c. 11. against second Marriages, Divorces are excepted; and in Canon 107. 'tis provided, they shall not marry again; but it is not said such Marriages are void, only the Caution is forfeited: Neither doth the Canon speak of such Separations, wherein the Bond is broken, as 'tis by Fornication.

Even the Canon-Law allows marrying again, in case a Woman seeks her Husband's Life, and in case of a Bond-Woman. Gratian says, in the Case of Adultery, lawful Marriages ought not to be deny'd. In the Case of an incurable Leprosy, it was the Advice of St. Gregory to Austin the Monk, That he that could not contain, should rather marry. Bellarmino owns, That the Bond of the Marriage of Infidels is dissolvable; but the Marriage of the Faithful, and of Infidels, is of the same nature: And Justinian, a Jesuit, confesses, That it is simply lawful for the innocent Party to marry again. And the Roman Doctors allow a Dissolution of the Bond of Marriage, if the Parties should, after Consummation, transfer themselves into a Friary or Nunnery.

The Canons which, in the Case of Adultery, prohibit marrying in the Life-time of the guilty Person, are contrary to two Acts of Parliament made 25 Hen. 8. and 3 & 4 Edw. 6. wherein no Canons are allow'd that be any way repugnant to the Laws of God, or the Scripture, the King's Prerogative Royal, and the Statutes of this Land: Thirty-two Persons were to review the Canon-Law, in which Review, drawn up by Archbishop Cranmer, the innocent Person is permitted to marry again, according to Christ's Law and Concession.

We have Examples of such Marriages in H. 4. of France, and H. 8. of England, Lord Mountjoy, Lord Rich, Bishop Thornborough, and divers others. And 'tis observable, That in the Case of the Marquis of Northampton, 5 Edw. 6. who had been divorced for his Lady's Adultery, and married another before any Act of Parliament made concerning it, an Act which passed afterwards (only two Spiritual and two Temporal Lords dissenting) declares, he had been at liberty by the Laws of God to marry, and did lawfully marry another: Where the Act manifestly supposes, that whatever had obtain'd for Law till that Time, was void, as being contrary to God's Law.

The most considerable Men of the Reformed Churches, both at Home and Abroad, are of this Opinion: Grotius quotes Tertullian, in whose Time it was lawful for the innocent Party to marry.

Lancelot. Instit. Jur. Can. acknowledges, that Divorce is a Dissolution of the Marriage.

Selden, who is not likely to contradict the Laws of this Kingdom, maintaineth, That Marriage after Divorce is to be allow'd; and, in that Particular Dr. Hammond doth not contradict him, but is clearly for it.

The Opinion of Amesius deserves to be set down at large: "Marriage, says he, cannot be dissolv'd by Men at their Pleasure; and for that reason, as 'tis consider'd simply and absolutely, 'tis rightly said to be indissoluble, because Marriage is not only a Civil, but a Divine Conjunction; and is also of that nature, that it cannot be dissolv'd without Detriment of either Party: Yet it is not so dissolvable, but it may be dissolv'd for a Cause which God approves as just; for the Indissolubility was not instituted for a Punishment, but for the Comfort of innocent Persons; and it admits an Exception, wherein God ceases to conjoin. By Adultery two are made not to remain one Flesh: Hence it is that a contagious Disease is not a Cause of dissolving Marriage. By Adultery the very Essence of the Contract is directly violated; but the Contract ceasing, the Bond depending on the Contract necessarily ceases. It is against all Reason, that all Matrimonial Duties should be for ever taken away, yet the Bond or Obligation to those Duties should continue. The Words of our Lord, Mat. v. 32. and xix. 9. have no Distinction or Limitation of the Putting away, but simply and absolutely approve of Putting away; therefore they approve of Putting away, not Partial, or to a particular Purpose, from Bed and Board, but Total.

None are against the Reform'd Divines, but Dr. Howson, Mr. Bunney, and Dr. Prideaux.

Dr. Howson was a profess'd Adversary to Dr. Reynolds, who was a great Maintainer of the Church of England against all the Points of Popery, and particularly in this.

Dr. Taylor, Bishop Hall, Dr. Fulk are for Second Marriages; no Authors against them but the Council of Trent, and those of the Church of Rome; whose Credit is only sav'd by those of our Church who agree with them.

Upon the Difference of Explication between St. Ambrose, Origen, and St. Austin, a new kind of Divorce has been thought of, from Bed and Board; but this Divorce, or Name of a Divorce, was unknown to the Jews and Ancient Christians.

I said so much before, at the first and second reading of this Bill, that I was in good Hopes to have had no further Occasion given me of answering any Objections against it now; but seeing divers new Arguments have been studied and framed against it since that Time, I shall now endeavour to satisfy and clear them all.

1. The first Argument against it is, That the Separation from Bed and Board doth not dissolve the Bond of Marriage. To which I must reply, as I did before, That this is a Distinction without a Difference, newly invented by the Canonists and School-men, and never heard of either in the Old or New Testament, nor in the Times of the ancient Fathers, who accounted the Separation from Bed and Board to be the Dissolution of the Bond itself.

2. That first Institution of Marriage, that they may be one Flesh, is by Adultery dissolv'd, when the Adulteress makes herself one Flesh with another Man, and thereby dissolves the first Bond of her Marriage.

3. The Objection, That if the Bond be dissolv'd, and afterwards, if the Man or Woman be reconcil'd, they must be married over again, is no necessary Consequence, no more than 'tis in a Person baptiz'd, who may break his Covenant, and renounce his Baptism, and yet upon true Repentance be receiv'd into God's Favour by virtue of the firſt Covenant, without any new Baptiſm. Suppose a Witch, who, they ſay, makes a Compact with the Devil to renounce her Baptiſm, ſhould afterwards, by the Grace of GOD, ſeriouſly and truly repent herſelf of the Wickedneſs; I do not believe that any body would take upon him to baptize her again: And if a Prieſt ſhould renounce his Orders, and turn Turk, and yet afterwards repent him, and return into the Church, he need not be re-ordain'd a ſecond time. The Caſe will be the ſame in Marriage.

4. I ſaid heretofore, That the Roman Doctors allow'd this Diſſolution of the Bond when the Man and Wife, even after the Conſummation of Marriage, would transfer themſelves into a Friary or a Nunnery; but becauſe it hath been ſince doubted, that no Authority can be ſhewed for this Particular, I ſhall here ſhew it out of the old Conſtitutions of the Church of England.

“ And, ^a in the Caſe of Religion, that is the true Underſtanding, That, to wit, either of them betaking themſelves to Religion before Carnal Knowledge, the Bond of Marriage be diſſolv'd: But if both enter into Religion, and make ſolemn Profeſſion, then ſuch Marriage is diſſolv'd, even as to the Bond.

5. It hath alſo been ſaid, That if the Bill paſs, it will paſs againſt the Church of England; which I confeſs, I do not underſtand; for the Church of England is within the Kingdom of England; and if the Laws of this Kingdom be for the Bill, and have declar'd it by the Aſſent of the King, Lords and Commons, as in the Caſe of the Marquis of Northampton was heretofore declar'd, in the Time of King Edward the Sixth, That by the Laws of GOD the innocent Party was at liberty to marry again; certainly the Spiritual Lords, as well as the Temporal and Commons, are bound to admit it: And I know not why they ſhould be call'd the Church of England, that join with the Council of Trent, and plead ſo much to uphold it, rather than others that join with all the Reformed Churches, and plead againſt the Canon of the Church of Rome, which hath laid an Anathema upon us, if we do not agree with them.

As to the ſuppos'd Inconveniencies that will follow upon marrying again.

1. More Inconveniencies will follow if they be forbidden to marry again.

2. The Father would be in an Uncertainty of the Children, if they ſhould retain the Adulterers.

3. There would be danger of poiſoning or killing one another, if no ſecond Marriage were allow'd.

4. Where the Parties ſhould conſent to new Marriages for their own Luſts, the Magiſtrates have Power to over-rule ſuch Practices.

5. If they be kept altogether by Divorce from Marrying, it would occaſion the innocent Party to ſin.

A little before the main Queſtion about paſſing the Duke's Bill, the Dutcheſs's Agents handed about this Paper, among ſuch as they thought to be her Friends.

^a Prov. Will. Lyndewode, five Conſt. Ang. fol. 94. Ver. nullatenus ſeparantur.

THE

CASE of MARY, Dutcheſs of Norfolk.

UPON the Marriage of the Dutcheſs with the now Duke of Norfolk, in the Year 1677, her Father, the late Earl of Peterborough, paid as Part of her Portion 10000 l. and ſettled on that Marriage Lands of near 1000 l. per Annum, the Remainder of which, on Failure of Iſſue, was limited to the now Duke and his Heirs for ever; and the Earl after his and his Lady's Death, ſecured to the Duke the Forfeiture of Drayton, worth 10000 l. more; and the Duke receiv'd alſo, by Agreement, 1000 l. per Annum for Twenty Years out of the Earl's Eſtate, beſides very rich Jewels, Plate, and other Things of great Value, which the Dutcheſs brought with her into the Duke's Family: And great Debts having been contracted for the Support of the Duke's Honour and his Service, while he cohabited with the Dutcheſs, ſhe hath, ſince his Separation from her, paid them out of her own Eſtate.

That by the evil and malicious Inſinuations of the Dutcheſs's Enemies, the Duke was prevail'd on to carry her, then a Proteſtant, into France, and to put her into a Monastery (where ſhe could not be admitted without changing her Religion) and left her there, on great Aſſurances of ſending for her home in a ſhort time, and ſo parted with great Expreſſions of Kindneſs.

That a conſiderable Time after, by the Duke's Conſent, ſhe return'd into England, and lived retiredly at Drayton in Northamptonſhire; and at the Time of the Revolution ſhe again retired to France, where ſhe continued till ſhe heard of her Father's Imprifonment in the Tower, and then came back to England, and lived privately, till her Father obtain'd his Liberty, when ſhe came home to him.

That the 8th of January, 1691, the Duke was prevail'd on, by the Inſtigations of her Enemies, to exhibit a Bill in the Houſe of Peers, to the ſame Effect with the Bill now depending, and divers Witneſſes were examin'd on both Sides; after which, and a long ſolemn Debate and due Conſideration had by their Lordſhips of the Witneſſes, and what was ſworn by them, the 17th of February, bruary, they were pleased to reject the Bill without a second Reading.

Notwithstanding which, the Duke was again prevail'd on, the 22d of December, 1692, to exhibit a Second Bill in the House of Peers, to the same Effect with his First; which, after several Debates, was the 2d of January following again rejected.

Some time after this, and for accomodating all Differences between them, Proposals were made to the Dutchess, which, after long Agitation, on the 28th of April, 1694, were reduced into Writing, and executed by the Duke and Dutchess; the Preamble of which Articles is in the Words following: Whereas diverse Controversies, Debates, Demands, and Suits of several natures have for some Time since been agitated, and continued, between the said Duke and the said Dutchess his Wife, &c. unto all which it is at last held fitting (it being conducive to their respective Quiets and Ease) to have an End put, and the like for the future prevented. It is therefore hereby, and by the Parties to these Presents, declar'd and agreed in manner following; Whereby the Dutchess convey'd to the Duke's Use the Manour of Castle-Rising, &c. And also the said Dutchess and her Trustees assign'd their Interest in a considerable Part of the Manour of Sheffield in Yorkshire to the Use of the said Duke; so that by these Articles, and that Deed executed thereupon, the Duke had his then desired Advantages.

That after the Execution of these Articles, the Dutchess sent for one Mr. Negus, the Duke's principal Gentleman, and express'd her self very sensible of the Misfortune of the Duke and her self, and desir'd Mr. Negus to tell the Duke, that she would avoid all Company that should give him any Offence; and, that she would not so much as pay a Visit, but where he liked: Which Mr. Negus lately testified before the Lords, and that he acquainted the Duke with it; as also, that she had several times told him, If she died first, she would leave the Duke her Estate.

That notwithstanding the said Agreement, whereby the Duke and Dutchess agreed to live separately, yet without his signifying any Dissatisfaction to or with the Dutchess, and without any manner of Notice, or previous Proceeding in the common and ordinary Course of Justice, but by taking from her that Legal Trial in the Ecclesiastical Court, which by the Laws of this Realm she is entitled unto, he did, on the 16th Day of February last, exhibit in the House of Peers the Bill now depending, for dissolving the Duke's Marriage with the Dutchess, and for enabling him to marry again: Upon which the Proceedings were so very quick, two Foreigners (a French Footman, and a Dutch Cookmaid) lately brought from beyond Sea, being forthwith examin'd against her, charging her with Facts suppos'd to be committed many Years since, and long before the Date of the said Agreement, and on which the two former Bills were founded, that it was impossible for her to make her Defence, as she might have done if the Proceedings had been against her according to the known Laws of this Land.

The Dutchess thought her self under a Necessity of complying with all the Orders of the House of Peers; and accordingly, as well as she could, made her Defence, tho' less than a Week's Time was allow'd her for doing it; and upon examining the Evidence of the Duke's Witnesses, many Contradictions appear'd, some whereof follow, as doth appear by the Depositions taken in Writing, and now remaining in the House of Peers.

For Hauseur the Footman swears, the Dutchess was at the Cock-pit, when, and before he came to live with Sir John Germaine; and, that he continued there Fifteen Days after; and, that after the Dutchess left the Cock-pit she went to Vaux-ball.

Vaness the Cook-maid swears, Hauseur came to Sir John when the Dutchess was at Vaux-ball.

Hauseur swears, that the 8th of Febr. 92, he left Sir John's Service, when the Trial was between the Duke and Dutchess in Parliament, and after lived privately six or eight Weeks, till he and Vaness could get for Holland, and arrived there in the Easter following.

And yet in another Place he swore, he desir'd Leave to go; and afterwards, That he also went for Holland as soon as the Wind was fair.

But note, all the Evidence was closed and order'd to be summ'd up the Ninth of February; so that he needed not afterwards to have gone. And whereas he insinuates, That he and Vaness were secreted, and kept from being Witnesses:

Note, It doth no where appear, that either he or Vaness were ever thought on for Witnesses.

Hauseur swears, He return'd again to Sir John in Summer 92, being often sent to by Sir John.

Whereas Bayly, another of the Duke's Witnesses, swears, he did not return again to Sir John in two Years after he went away, Bayly the Witness being all that Time, and three Years before, a Servant in the House.

Note also, That this very Summer 92, to wit, in Easter-Term, the Duke brought his Action against Sir John, which was tried Michaelmas-Term 92; at which Time it had been more likely, if Sir John had believ'd he could have done him any Harm, he should have kept him Holland, rather than have sent for him over, especially considering that this Fellow afterwards swears Sir John swore in a Rage this Fellow would betray him.

Hauseur being ask'd, Who sent for Vaness over?

He answer'd, That after he had promis'd the Duke and Lord Howard to speak the Truth of what he knew, they desir'd him, if he met Vaness, to desire her to come over, and speak the Truth of what he knew.

And being ask'd, How long after he met Vaness? answer'd, About Twelve Months since.

And being ask'd, When was the first Time he spoke to her about coming over to speak the Truth? answer'd, 'Tis about a Year since.

And being ask'd, How long it was since they resolv'd to come over? answer'd, Twelve Months.

Vaness being ask'd, Whether she was not sent for from Holland to be a Witness? answer'd, She knew nothing of it till eight or nine Weeks ago.

Vaness swears, She was sent away on Account of the Trial.

Whereas Peacock, Hawksworth and Knight, three Servants of the Dutchess's, swore the Dutchess turn'd her away before the Trial, for keeping Company with Dutch Soldiers; and they do swear a new Cook-maid before the Trial.

Hauseur swears, He had a Key of the Door going into the Park, and could come in when he would.

And

And yet owns he knew but two of the Servants, one whereof is long ſince dead.

And alſo the Dutcheſs's Servants ſwear, they never heard any body had a Key; and, that if any Key had been, they muſt have known of it. They alſo prove the ſhutting up, bolting, and chaining the Door every Night, and opening it every Morning; and but one of the Servants remembers ever to have ſeen him at the Door, and then he rung the Bell, but came only to ſee a Country-woman of his, and to carry Letters to Holland, and brought Answer back to her, but was not admitted beyond the Paſſage.

Hauſeur and Vanefs ſwear, they ſaw the Dutcheſs and Sir John in Bed together at Mill-bank.

The Dutcheſs's Woman ſwore, ſhe has put the Dutcheſs to Bed, and taken her up every Night and Morning ſeveral Years, and never ſaw him in the Houſe. And two others ſwear, they were conſtantly in waiting Night and Morning, and poſitively deny any Knowledge of any ſuch Thing, and ſay, they never ſaw Hauſeur there; and that Vanefs was never admitted up Stairs, ſhe was ſo dirty a Creature, much leſs to drefs or undrefs the Dutcheſs, as ſhe pretended often to have done.

Vanefs ſwears, She could not tell the Places ſhe has been at theſe Six Weeks laſt paſt. Whereas

Mr. May, and two other of the Duke's Servants, ſwear, ſhe has been fourteen Days in the Duke's own Houſe, with the full Liberty of the Houſe.

Vanefs being aſk'd, Whether ſhe ever told any body of the Occaſion of her going away? ſhe ſwore, Yes, ſhe told it to a great many in Holland, and not here.

Yet being afterwards aſk'd, Whether ſhe ever diſcovered that ſhe was ſent out of the Way? ſhe ſwore directly, No.

Theſe are ſome of the many plain Contradictions and Diſproofs of theſe Evidences, beſides the great Improbability in their own Nature, in ſeveral Things ſworn.

But it is alſo to be noted, that Hauſeur left Sir John's Service in a Diſguſt; and ſo 'tis prov'd by Bayly, another of the Duke's Witneſſes, and that what Hauſeur ſwore could be nothing but Spight and Malice: Yea, 'tis prov'd on the Dutcheſs's Part, that he ſwore he would find a Way to be reveng'd of him, and that perhaps it might not be long fiſt: And Mr. Strange, Mrs. Pitts, and her two Maids, who could have depoſed very materially for the Dutcheſs, refus'd to appear, tho' often ſummon'd, being Perſons not in the Dutcheſs's Intereſt or Power.

This Hauſeur has been out of Place ever ſince he left Sir John's Service, April 96, and is ſo ſtill, as he ſwears, and ſo in conſequence likely to be neceſſitous.

Note alſo, that Hauſeur ſwears, Sir John gave him ſeven Guineas to pay the Charges of himſelf, Vanefs, and another, which were order'd to be kept private till they could be ſhipp'd off, and alſo for their Paſſage into Holland, which was in Time from the 8th of February 92, till Eaſter.

Which does not look like a Bribe for a Secret of this Nature, being hardly ſufficient to maintain three People, and pay their Lodgings, for two Months.

VOL. V.

Hauſeur would be thought a mighty Conſident, ſo as to have a Key to the Dutcheſs's Houſe, to come in and go out when he pleas'd; and yet, as well acquainted as he pretended to be with the Houſe, and the Dutcheſs's Bed-chamber, he could not tell on what Floor it was, nor what Furniture it had, nor whether wainſcoted or hang'd: And when he was aſk'd which way the Windows of the Bed-chamber look'd? he trifled in that Queſtion, and concluded, he could ſee the Water, but was afraid to go near the Window, for fear of being diſcover'd; and yet had no Scruple of coming into the Houſe with his Key, at any time.

Theſe Things being obſerv'd, it muſt be conſider'd, that the Facts now in effect charged againſt the Dutcheſs are ſuggeſted to be done many Years ſince, and were debated and conſider'd before the Peers, before the Rejection of the two fiſt Bills, and long before the Agreement for putting an End to all Controverſies and Debates. Now 'tis very hard to put the Dutcheſs to account again for thoſe very Facts, conſidering that after eight or nine Years, many People are dead, others diſpers'd, and not in a little Time to be found out, and Circumſtances of Times and Places (which in the Nature of all theſe Cafes is almoſt all that is left to diſcover a Falſity) forgot.

The Dutcheſs is alſo under the unavoidable Neceſſity of proving a Negative againſt downright Swearing, and that without any Matter introductory; and alſo by two mean Servants, the one turn'd out of her Place for keeping company with Foot-Soldiers, and the other leaving his Place in diſguſt, becauſe he could not have the Play-Money.

Maſters are already too much in the Power of their Servants, and if they charge their Maſters with Adultery, Felony, and even Treason, it is not eaſily in the Power of the Maſter to defend himſelf againſt downright Swearing; Servants having thoſe Opportunities of the Knowledge of Times, and Places, and Company, which cannot be denied or avoided, and which others have not; whereupon they may frame and build falſe Evidence, and many times are of ill Principles and deſperate Fortunes, and of Tempers very revengeful; ſo that whoever turns away a Servant, he is in his Power for his Eſtate, Honour, and even Life itſelf; and therefore, for the Safety and Freedom of Families, in other Countries, they are not permitted to be Evidence againſt their Maſters, in any Matter criminal whatſoever.

Note alſo, that the Dutcheſs thinks ſhe, as an Engliſh Subject has, by Magna Charta the ſame Right to a Trial in the legal and ordinary Way of Juſtice, as the reſt of the King's Subjects, eſpecially conſidering that there never yet was in England one Preſident of a Bill exhibited in Parliament to diſſolve a Marriage at the fiſt Inſtance, without any previous Proceedings in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, (which in theſe Cafes is the Law of the Land) and not above Five or Six Bills, in above 600 Years ever paſſ'd to diſſolve Marriages, or make Second Marriages good, even after there had been a Divorce in the Spiritual Courts, and thoſe Bills too in Cafes generally where the Huſbands were without any Recrimination.

No Impediment appears why the Duke ſhould not have endeavour'd a Divorce at Law before he had attempted a Bill to diſſolve the Marriage;

N n

for

for any Application to the Legislature for Trial of Matters of private Right is improper, because there are proper Judicatures that give that Remedy the Law allows.

To ask any thing of the Legislature, in private Causes between Party and Party, beyond what the known Laws in force give, seems to be improper ; because,

1. It is to make a Law in one Person's Case, which is not the Law in another's.

2. It is to retrospect Actions, and after the Fact, to augment or alter the Penalty. Our Laws are certain and known, that Persons may conform their Actions to them.

3. The Courts and Forms of Law are equally the Subjects Right with the Law, and the Application to the Legislature takes away all that Right of Form and Charging ; whereas a Certainty in Time to answer, and Exceptions to Witnesses, and other legal Defences of the Fact cannot be denied the meanest Subject.

The Consequence that short and summary Ways of Proceedings may have on the Settlements of Estates and Families, may be very dangerous ; and tho' the Duke of Norfolk's Bill passed the House of Peers, yet a great Number of the Peers, both Spiritual and Temporal, enter'd their Protest against its passing, and their Reasons for it.

It ought to be no Prejudice to the Dutcheſs, that the next Heir presumptive to the Duke doth not yet appear to be a Protestant, because when a Bill, which hath lately passed both Houses, is become a Law, it is not likely that noble Family will be without a Protestant at the Head of it.

If any of the Witnesses formerly examined on the Bill in 1699, be now again produced, it is humbly apprehended, that as the Validity of their Testimony they then gave, was totally overthrown by a greater Number of Witnesses, so it will be again, tho' under the Disadvantage of the great Distance of Time.

Martis 19 die Martii, 1699.

The Reading the Bill, for dissolving the Marriage of the Duke of Norfolk, the second Time, and hearing Council as well on the behalf of the Dutcheſs against the Bill, as on behalf of the Duke for the Bill, being the Order of the Day, before the Council was called in, to prevent the Inconvenience of People crouding into the House, the House made an Order,

That none but the Council, Solicitors, and Parties should be called in, and that the Witnesses should have Notice to attend without, ready to be called in, if the House should think fit.

It was also intimated, That if the Duke and Dutcheſs did think fit to come into the House, they should be accommodated with Chairs, that being a Respect shewed to the Nobility when they come into the House.

And then the Council, and Solicitors, and Parties of both Sides were called in : And first the Bill was read to them.

And then the Lady Dutcheſs's Petition was read.

The Council that appeared were,

Sir Thomas Powys,
Mr. Dod,
Dr. Pinfold, } for the Dutcheſs.

Mr. Serj. Wright,
Mr. Northey,
Mr. Atwood,
Dr. Oldish, } for the Duke.

And Mr. Speaker then spake to this Effect :

Mr. Speaker. You are here, I see, Council on both Sides. The House have ordered, That my Lady Dutcheſs should be heard according to the Prayer of her Petition ; and my Lord Duke had likewise an Order to be heard to make good his Bill. I think the Petitioner is to be heard first, to make good the Allegations of her Petition ; and when the House have heard you both, as to that, they will consider whether they will proceed to hear the Allegations of the Bill made out.

Sir Thomas Powys. Mr. Speaker, with your Favour, Sir, I am of Council with the Petitioner, the Dutcheſs of Norfolk, against this Bill that is now before you ; and I believe I may say with some Assurance, that this Bill, in the Manner it is now brought before you, is the first that ever was attempted in this Honourable House. It's, Sir, true, that several Years ago this Bill, or another of the same Nature, was attempted twice in the other House, and as often rejected ; but 'tis as true, at last it does come from thence hither, but not without a Protestation there ; and I humbly hope that you will take notice, that this is a Bill of Divorce in Parliament, in the first Instance, without a previous Prosecution to examine the Fact in any of the ordinary Courts that have Authority in these Matters.

It is a Bill not only to Divorce the Dutcheſs upon a very short Warning, who hath been a Wife twenty-three Years, but to render her Infamous to all Posterity by Act of Parliament, which I account to be the greatest Misfortune possible to befall any Person ; and at the same time it takes from her the legal Trial of the Fact whereof she is accused, and which she hath a Right to by the Laws of the Land, sure as much as the meanest Subject ; and which we don't apprehend she has in any wise forfeited ; nor is there any Reason assigned, why his Grace has not been pleased to proceed in the ordinary Course. I hope, Sir, you will take Notice also, that this is, in truth, nothing but a Suit between Party and Party. 'Tis merely a Cause Matrimonial between Husband and Wife, began originally in the House of Peers ; and as hitherto the Beginning of Causes between Party and Party, in that House, hath been strongly opposed, so I hope it will be thought reasonable to do so always, because it deprives the Subject of that legal Defence due to him by the Law of the Land. If this was always complained of, when the Proceedings were in a Judicial Way, surely 'tis a great deal worse to begin there a private Cause between Party and Party in the Legislative Way. I can see no manner of Difference, with respect to the the Loſs of thoſe great Advantages the Party is intitled to, only this ſeems rather to be the moſt againſt Reaſon.

Sir, this is a ſummary Proceeding with a witneſs. It began but the 16th of February, and but a Week's Time given to the Party accuſed of ſo high a Crime, and of ſo great Conſequence to the Party accuſed, to be heard to it; and tho' perhaps we may with Reaſon enough find Fault with the tedious Proceedings in ſome Courts, where Appeals and Writs of Error are juſtly due, as where Property is well fixed, it muſt needs be reaſonable: I ſay, from various Cauſes, though Suits in the Ordinary Courts are very tedious; yet I am ſure a ſummary Way of Proceeding without due Warning, or any certain Way of making Defence by any known Rules, and without Oath, as here without Appeal, without any Poſſibility of retrieving the Matter again, with great Submiſſion; and if this muſt be for all that one has in the World, ſuch a ſummary Way is a very terrible Thing.

I would be glad any one would make it his own Caſe, and think with themſelves how they ſhould like it, if their Life, Eſtate, and all they had, were put upon ſuch a ſummary Way of Proceeding. 'Tis true, in ſome Kingdoms, where the Government is arbitrary, the Proceedings are ſummarily, and moſt commonly they go together; and if we were in a Place where the Judges were infallible, and there were no falſe Witneſſes, and Truth could be diſcovered at an inſtant, a ſummary Way would be beſt; but ſince Men are fallible, ſince there is Paſſion and Partiality in the World, ſince oftentimes there is notorious Detecions of Perjury, and ſeveral Things are difficult to be diſcovered, and require a reaſonable Time for examining into Facts; from thence it is that there are ſettled Courſes for determining all Queſtions in England between Party and Party; and there are known Rules and good Methods for the Relieving againſt any ill Judgment that is given.

Whatever you may think of this particular Caſe of the Dutcheſs of Norfolk; the Example is of mighty Conſequence to all Parents, that perhaps make hard ſhift to give their Daughters conſiderable Portions, and may think they have married them well, and made Proviſion for them and their Children: I ſay it will be hard, if their Daughters ſhould be ſent home to them upon a Fortnight's Warning, and that Witneſſes ſhould be examined againſt them without their having Notice ſo much as of the Places of their Abode; and a Thing ſhould be determined before the Witneſſes can be well known: And it muſt be agreed to be of great Conſequence to all collateral Heirs, if Marriages are ſo eaſily and ſuddenly ſet aſide for want of Iſſue; which I find to be one of the Cauſes aſſigned for this Bill, and that it might be in a ſummary Way, perhaps, before they can well hear of it. I am ſure, this is a Matter of too great Temptation to be put upon Men that may grow weary of their Wives, and deſire a better Fortune, or deſire Change, or may be moved by a thouſand Reaſons we can't think of, to revive old Quarrels, and think of Things long ſince paſſed, if you will ſee ſuch a Precedent of Divorcing in ſuch a ſummary Way.

This is ſure of infinite Concern to us in higher Matters. A Bill of Divorce of a Woman in Parliament, without a legal Trial, is juſt the ſame Thing as a Bill of Attainder againſt a Man for Treason; the one forfeits the Eſtate, corrupts the Blood, and takes away his Life, and the other does very little leſs: For I find, according to the Bill, 'tis to forfeit her Joynture, to defame her Perſon, corrupt her Reputation; and tho' it leave her Life, it is left with Infamy, which is worſe than Death; and in a Caſe of this high Moment, ſure you will be careful how you alter the Courſe of Trials. I beſeech you, Sir, will not the Reaſon be the ſame, that a Bill of Attainder may be brought againſt a Man, and that Witneſſes againſt him may be fetch'd from beyond Sea, which he had formerly diſcharged from, his Service, and put the other Side to prove what is always very difficult, the Negative, to make his Defence, which muſt needs require a reaſonable Time for the making out of Circumſtances, and laying Evidence together? Where will be the Difference between proceeding againſt a Man for his Life without a Trial, and proceeding againſt a Woman for her Joynture, where her Name, Family, and Reputation is concerned, and perhaps her Children, the Legitimacy of whom muſt come in queſtion; and in a Caſe, where the Perſon by no Behaviour of hers hath forfeited ſuch a Trial, nor the Perſon that proſecutes this Bill, can't ſhew, that he hath been obſtructed in his proceeding in the ordinary Way? I need not take notice of what every body knows, that we have a happy Conſtitution, if we can keep it; every Man can call his Wife his own, and his Eſtate his own, becauſe it can't be taken away, but by legal Trial; but if you will go into theſe extraordinary Reforts, when the Courts and the Law is open, without any previous Preparations for that Matter, by having a fair Examination, that the Party can't ſay there is a Surprize, I know not where it will end; and though in one Caſe it may be deſirable, that there ſhould be an extraordinary Relief: But will this go no further? Can any body ſay that?

That which we find in Magna Charta is not to be forgot, where there is ſo much Care in the ſeveral Inſtances of it for the preſerving of Property, and the Right of Trials, Quod nullus deſtruatur, nec ſuper eum ibimus, nec ſuper eum mittimus, niſi per legale judicium parium ſuorum vel per legem terræ.

Why, in this Caſe the Eccleſiaſtical Law is Lex Terræ. And if that be to be taken away without any Reaſon, why may not the Law in any other Caſe?

We have, perhaps, in Time of great Emergency and publick Difficulties, had ſome extraordinary Laws grounded on extraordinary Reaſons; but now we are in a Time of ſettled Peace, when there may be a juſt Determination according to the Law of the Land, I can't ſee any Reaſon for this Proceeding, no not in this particular Caſe.

I would, Sir, with your Favour, take Notice of thoſe few Inſtances of this kind, that have been in England by Act of Parliament, and in what manner they have proceeded.

There have not passed hardly six in six hundred Years; I think I may challenge them on the other Side to shew so great a Number, but those I have I shall quote: But they proceeded in another manner than this has done.

'Tis true, where Persons have had a fair Trial in a proper Court, and Witnesses have been examined, and Sentence final been pronounced, and where the Party as to the Fact hath been concluded according to the Law of the Land; when all this hath passed, some Instances there have been, that afterwards an Act of Parliament has passed to strengthen the Sentence, and to carry it farther than the Ecclesiastical Court will allow, even to the dissolving the Marriage, and enabling the innocent Person to marry again; but you will find all those Acts are founded and built upon the Sentence of those Courts, and recite those Sentences as a great Inducement to the passing of those Acts; and I crave Leave just to take Notice of those. The first we find, is that made in the Case of the Marquess of Northampton, which was in 5 E. 6. He was married to a Daughter of the Earl of Essex, and she eloped from him, and was prosecuted in the Ecclesiastical Courts, and there was Sentence against her of Divorce. The Marquess, from hence, took upon him to marry a Daughter of the Lord Cobham; and after four Years Marriage of her, he obtained an Act of Parliament to ratify the second Marriage; which Act recites a Settlement of Divorce in the Ecclesiastical Court.

This took its rise from Examination according to Law; and that Act of Parliament is grounded upon it, and recites it as a previous Matter necessary to induce that Act.

The next that follows was the famous Case of the Lord Ross, afterwards Earl of Rutland, tho' there perhaps was as great a Notoriety of Fact as can be pretended in this Case, and he did not stand impeached of any immodest Behaviour, but even in that Case the Divorce by the Act, followed a Divorce in the Ecclesiastical Court, and that passed with such Difficulty, that it was four Years in hand; it began in Sixty-six, and was not passed till Seventy: I have a Copy of it, and it says, that forasmuch as Manners, commonly call'd L. Ross.

And it proceeds thereupon to enable him to marry again; but this, Sir, could not be but by two Acts of Parliament, besides the Sentence in the Ecclesiastical Court; for he first got that Court to declare the Children illegitimate, and then in the Year (70) the Parliament passed this Act.

I know of no other, till we come to a Case that happened within our Memory; 'tis the Case of a Person of great Worth, and I hope it will give no Offence when I cite the Precedent.

It was the Case of Mr. Lukenor, who had been grossly abused by his Wife, by Elopement and open Adultery; but the Act he obtained went no farther than to disable the Children born while she lived in open Adultery; and that Act recites a Sentence of Divorce: I have a Copy of it, and I crave leave I may read a few Lines of it; it recites that Mr. Lukenor's Wife had eloped from her Husband.

There was indeed a famous Case not long ago, of a Lady that was taken away by Force, and pretended to be married, and an Act of Parliament came afterwards to declare that Marriage null and void; but even there was a Proceeding at Law with a witness. The Person that had been concerned, was actually indicted and executed; it was not there to make a Divorce, and so it had been a vain Thing to have gone into the Spiritual Court, where there was no Marriage, for it was only a Law after the Fact declaratory by way of Caution, to give the more Satisfaction that That Marriage was null and void.

Sir, the last I know of (and it may be proper for you to observe how quick these People come after it) was that of a noble Earl, that did obtain last Parliament, an Act for divorcing him and his Lady: It is the Case of the Earl of Maclesfield; but in that Case it will be proper to take Notice to you, that there were previous Proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court; there was a Libel exhibited against her, a Charge upon her, and Witnesses examined, and she had a fair Opportunity of making her Defence; there was a regular and a long Proceeding against her, and a Prosecution of her, in order to a Sentence of Excommunication; and then there came the Earl's Petition into the House of Peers, setting forth, that there had been such a Proceeding as this, and that she stood in Contempt, having been prosecuted as far as that Court could go: After an Examination of Witnesses, in all the Cases I have heard of a Divorce by Act of Parliament, there have been Proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court; this was the Way of former Time, but now we are beginning where the Matter ought to end.

And now the first Application is to that Place, wherein all these Instances (as I think it ought to be) was the last Resort. 'Tis true, this Method may not please the Duke, for we know his Grace is in haste for cutting the Knot asunder at once, by the Legislative Power; but I hope, upon these Precedents, you will think it more reasonable it should be at first untied, or at least loosened by a judicial Proceeding. If you will, I do not see how in Justice the Parliament can deny the like Remedy the next Sessions to any other that may be in the like Case; it may be in worse, for here is no Pretence of any spurious Issue. Can the Parliament of England, whence we take our Measures of Justice, deny the like Remedy in Justice to any others that are in the like Case? What is it that guards you from an infinite Application of this Nature, but requiring Persons to take the ordinary Course first, and to come round about to the Parliament, as the last Remedy, to carry the Sentence perhaps farther than the Ecclesiastical Court can do: But if Persons can come up directly hither, I am apt to think your Lobby will be crowded with Petitioners of this Nature the next Sessions, though the Sessions now are long and frequent, this single Business may be so great as to obstruct all other Business; I am sure a Committee for Adultery would have a full Employment.

Let it be consider'd how strange it would be, if some poor Man upon this Precedent, shall come and make Application, and tell you he stands in Need of such a Bill from the Condition of his Family; that his Wife plunders his House, sells his Goods, and lives in Adultery, and prays this Matter may be examined in a summary ſummary Way, becauſe he is not able to go through the coſtly Courſe of Eccleſiaſtical Courts, and be favoured with a Divorce; would not this poor Man's Caſe ſeem to have the like Juſtice, or poſſibly more; and yet if ſuch a mean Man ſhould come with ſuch a Petition, perhaps it would look ſtrange; but yet in Juſtice there is no Reſpect of Perſons; the Law in England is, unum pondus & una menſura; and if this ſhould be done in the Caſe of a great and rich Man, and not for a poor Man, they may ſay what has been ſaid by ſome, That our Laws are like the Spider's Web, which only hold the leſſer Inſects.

Shall thoſe that expect the beſt Fortunes and greateſt Advantage by Marriage, not undergo the bad Fortune of Marriage too? I am ſure if this be ſo, it's a Privilege of Peerage, never thought on before.

You may ſee, Sir, by this Bill, how Precedents grow upon you; at firſt in the Caſe of the Marqueſs of Northampton, it was hard to get an Act after a Divorce: So it was in the Caſe of my Lord Rofs; the laſt Sefſions in the Caſe of the Earl of Maccleſfield; it went farther there, becauſe there had been a previous Proceeding in the Eccleſiaſtical Court, and his Lady had obſtructed that Sentence, that Act paſſed before Sentence; but now we are come to have it done without ſo much as a Trial to get a Divorce in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts; to have all paſſed at once in a ſummary Way, it will be but to petition the Parliament, and all ſhall be determined without a Poſſibility of being re-heard.

I know nothing can be ſaid on the other Side with good Reaſon (unleſs that which I heard in another Place) why they ſhould not go to the Eccleſiaſtical Court, which is that thoſe Courts cannot divorce a Vinculo Matrimony; therefore it would have been a vain Thing: This may be a good Reaſon for them to come to you afterwards, but 'tis no Reaſon for them to come here at firſt, unleſs they would ſay at the ſame time, that every Thing ought to be begun in Parliament, becauſe 'tis poſſible every Thing may be brought to the Houſe of Peers at laſt: Will they ſay that all Ejections ought to be begun originally in the Houſe of Peers, becauſe after the Parties have been at great Charge and Trouble in the Courts below, they may be brought thither by Writ of Error at the laſt. This would have been a good Expedient, in a Cauſe lately where a Deed was tried over and over, if the Perſons concerned in ſo many Verdicts, had once thought of having begun in Parliament to have had it ſettled, whether it was a juſt Deed or no; if this be the Rule, it would be well it were known, and made to be the Law of the Kingdom; for that Law will be always reckoned hard which is made in one Caſe, if it may not be had in another; the Law of England does go throughout, and if it be Law for one, 'tis for another. I have but one Thing more to lay before you, and that ſeems worthy of your Conſideration, beſides all that I have ſaid.

You obſerve the Bill is general without Reſtraint, of Time and Place, or Deſcription, or Circumſtances relating to the Fact: Now, Sir, I muſt take leave to acquaint you, that ſo long ago as April 1694, his Grace the Duke, who complains of this Matter, as if ſome Miſfortune had befallen him, having made former Complaints and Attempts for obtaining what he now deſires, did at laſt in April 1694, not ſuddenly, but by Advice of Council, with his Friends about him, after a long Time of Agitation, come to Articles with his Wife the Dutcheſs; of which I crave leave only to read the Preamble.

The Articles are between his Grace the Duke of Norfolk and the Earl of Peterborough, and recites—

* It is therefore determin'd by the Parties, and agreed as followeth; and thereupon the Articles proceed to ſettle every Thing between the Duke and Dutcheſs to his own Satisfaction, and according to his own Deſire: His Grace hath reaped the Benefit of thoſe Articles, by having received a great Sum of Money; and the Dutcheſs parted with her Intereſt in that Great and Noble Manour of Sheffield; his Grace hath had all that he on his Part was to have, and hath executed abundance of Deeds, purſuant to his Agreement. Now if, after all this, there be a Proſpect of farther Advantage by another Marriage, that will not move you to give him a Liberty for a Departure from ſo ſolemn an Agreement, in what a Condition are People that have purchaſ'd their Peace as the Dutcheſs has, if they may have Liberty to go back beyond this, for the Bill has no ſtint; ſurely all Reconciliation between Men and their Wives, and all Acts towards them, and all Acts of Kindneſs, are to be favour'd; and Matters of a Divorce are of an odious Nature, and not to be encourag'd after ſuch Compoſure of Differences, and Reconciliation. We have Inſtances of ſome that have taken their Wives again, and lived comfortably afterwards; ſurely it ſhall not be in their Power to go back and ſay, Pray let us be divorced; 'tis contrary to the Uſe of all Acts of Pardon. What is the End of all Acts of Parliament of General Pardon, and all Statutes of Limitation, but to eaſe People in ſuch a Caſe? For 'tis impoſſible that any Perſon can be able to defend their Actions nine or ten Years ago; they can't keep their Witneſſes alive, and therefore the Law hath often limited a Time, beyond which Perſons ſhall not go back: And this, we think, the Duke hath done by Articles, and ſurely they are concluſive both before God and Man.

I ſhall ſay no more, but that I don't apprehend the Nation will be in any great Danger, if the Duke do, betwixt this and the next Sefſion, proceed in the ordinary Courſe, and prepare Matters againſt another Sefſion; I am ſure 'tis of great Conſequence: No Man can deny but we have a good Conſtitution; but if it is in the Caſe of a particular Perſon to be broken, ſuch a Breach in this Conſtitution may not be very eaſily recover'd.

I hope this Cauſe, that is precipitated here out of Time, and before thoſe Preparations were made that have been in all other Caſes, ſhall be remitted to its proper Place, where her Grace will give the Duke a meeting, if they be not before that Time reconcil'd.

Mr. Dodd. Mr. Speaker, I deſire the Favour of a Word of the ſame Side. Theſe Bills are not common; I think there are not above three Inſtances to be found in the Records of this Kingdom.

* Vide her printed Caſe ut infra.

This Bill is to dissolve a Marriage after Twenty-three Years Continuance, and that not upon so many Days Notice as there have been Years of the Marriage, for to serve the particular Purposes of one Person: 'Tis a Law after the supposed Fact committed; the Law should go first, and the Fact follow; it is not a General Law for all the People of England; as such, it would have another Consideration: There is no Occasion for a particular Law, 'tis a Bill from the Lords, and in a little time, for what I know, the Lords will prescribe to it. There is not one of these Bills for a Commoner, unless in my Lord Rofs's Case, who was of a Noble Family.

'Tis not pretended by this Bill, that the Dutchess hath had any spurious Issue, though that was the Circumstances of one of the Bills that did pass, and that was a material Circumstance in the Case; and that is not alledged here. These Bills are not to be made use of, but upon extraordinary Occasion, and the utmost Extremity, and till then I hope such Bills shall not be made use of, and we think the Proceeding upon this Bill, in this Case, will appear much harder; for 'tis the first Instance of this Nature, when there has been no Proceeding in any Court whatsoever, to convict the Dutchess of this Offence, no Citation all this while in the Ecclesiastical Courts, where the Dutchess might have an Opportunity to make her Defence.

If those Courts have Jurisdiction in any one Thing, 'tis in Case of Matrimony: If this was brought into those Courts, the Dutchess would be allowed to make her Defence, not only by way of Recrimination, but Examination of Witnesses; a Commission might be had to examine Witnesses beyond Sea, if she had any Witnesses there, or in the Country; she might appeal to a Superior Court, and thence to the Delegates: These are all proper Defences that the Law allows, that there may be no Surprise upon the Party; and if injured, he may be righted in another Place: These Proceedings, we think are necessary to go before a Bill of this Nature, for then the Fact would be plain; and if the Dutchess had been convicted in this manner, as to the Fact, we must not have opened our Mouths against it.

By the same Reason that a Bill is brought to dissolve this Marriage, in a little time you may have a Bill to marry People: Be it enacted for such and such Reasons, such Persons shall be married. This would be a much readier Way in Case of Contracts, than any Proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts. And though they may say the Law of England takes notice of Contracts of Matrimony, as well as any other Acts, that is no Answer; for the Fact is, whether there is any Contract of Matrimony, or no; and so 'tis here, whether my Lady is guilty of the Crimes charged here in the Bill; and for this she ought to have a proper Trial, and ought to be called to an Account in the ordinary Methods of the Law; and then it might be proper to carry the Sentence farther than those Courts can. I hope you will be very tender of making a new Precedent; and I do not know of any Bill before this, to convict a Woman of a supposed Crime; then this is the first Bill of this Nature, and you will consider, whether you will make a Precedent of it or no. Though this before you is the Case of a great and honourable Person, yet your Justice will be the same, if it should happen that any other Man in the Kingdom should be in the same Circumstances, and willing to slip over all Trials, whereby the Person accused might have an Opportunity of making her just Defence, as is the Case of this noble Lady, who is hurried on after twenty-three Years Marriage to a Determination in as many Days in this extraordinary manner.

I hope therefore you will not proceed in a Bill of this extraordinary Nature, of which there is not one Instance to be given, where you have begun to examine a supposed Crime, but you have always left it to the Determination of the Law in the ordinary Course; and we think it ought rather to be so in this Case, because 'tis not pretended by the Bill, that there is any Stop put to their Proceedings there; there is no Absence of Witnesses, no Incapacity, but his Grace may proceed there to convict this Lady of the Crime he supposes her guilty of, and she will then have her just Defence; and till then there is no Crime for you to judge upon, and I hope you will think fit to reject this Bill.

Dr. Pinfold. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak a few Words as to the Ecclesiastical Law, which is a Part of the Law of England as much as any other, for our Law does not receive Majus & Minus; and the Ecclesiastical Courts have been settled for several Ages, and are governed by such Rules which every Subject has a Right to. Sir, this Bill is to dissolve the Bond of Marriage, and to give Leave to marry again; and I crave Leave to shew the House what our Ecclesiastical Constitutions are in that Case, and how tender they have been in that Point, and how those Constitutions are grounded upon the Canons and Decrees of Councils.

The Cases where the Bond of Marriage is to be dissolv'd are but few, and they arise before Marriage; 'tis in the Case of the Precontract, or Nonage, or Consanguinity, and there the Bond is broken by the Sentence of the Judge, and the Person hath liberty to marry again; but for what comes afterwards, whether it be the Case of Adultery, or any thing else, the Law Ecclesiastical, which, as I said before, is part of the Law of England, hath been very careful not to dissolve the Marriage.

The 48th Canon says, If any Layman shall put away his Wife, and marry another, he shall be excommunicated: That was the Sense of those early Days; and sure, they did not think it an indifferent Matter, because they punished it with so heavy a Punishment. So 'twas in the Council of Arles, 314, and there it was decreed, That if a Man took his Wife in Adultery, he should be forbidden to marry. There what was to be done? Counsel should be given him not to marry while she lived, tho' she was an Adulteress.

And in the Council 402, the Neapolitan Evangelical, Apostolical Council, it was decreed, That if a Man was divorced from his Wife, or a Wife from her Husband, there they were not to marry, but should remain unmarried, or be reconciled.

And in the African Council, Canon 102, there it was provided, That they who were divorced, whether whether 'twas a Husband from his Wife, or a Wife from her Husband, they ſhould remain unmarried. This was the Senſe of the ancient Canons and Councils, and this is received into our Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution. In the 15th Year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, in the Chapter of Divorces, 'tis ſaid, That upon a Sentence of Divorce there muſt be an Admonition, and a Prohibition, that the Party ſhall not marry again.

And in the Year 1602, in the Beginning of King James's Reign, there was a farther Proviſion made to keep them from being married again; and that was this, That they ſhould give Bond and Security that they ſhould not marry again; this is certainly our Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution, and grounded on the Senſe of the ancient Canons.

Now it remains to ſhew ſome Advantage this would have had: If ſhe had had the Trial, which of common Right is due to the meaneſt Subject, ſhe would have had the Advantage of Challenges, which ſhe can't have here; for here the Evidence muſt drop from the Witneſſes Mouths, who are Foreigners, and have been long abſent; there they muſt give an Account of themſelves, which here hath not been done by any body. The Lady might have given her Exceptions to thoſe Witneſſes, and had a Commiſſion into Holland, to have examined how theſe Witneſſes behaved themſelves, and whether theſe Perſons were to be believed and credited: Here ſhe would likewiſe have Liberty to give an Account how this Deſign began. I do now ſpeak with reſpect to the Duke, but I do ſay it does ſeem to have begun a Year and a half ago. She would likewiſe have had the Advantage of a thorough Reconciliation: And here are ſome Deeds in (94) between the Duke and the Dutcheſs, which I hope, if the Houſe will take an Account of, will have its due Effect; ſhe would likewiſe have had the Advantage of an Appeal, the common Right of the Subject, and grounded upon good Reaſon; and in caſe there had been a Neglect in the firſt Inſtances, the Party may be righted in another Place.

By this Bill ſhe is debarr'd of the Advantage of Recrimination, to which ſhe hath a Right, for the Text Law is—

And the Text Law, De Divortii, were the Charge moſt true, which we do not admit; yet if ſhe can prove the ſame Thing againſt her Husband, the Fault of one muſt be ſet againſt the Fault of another, and he can't have the Advantage of his Prayer.

I ſhall repeat only one Thing more, and that is the Caſe quoted already of the Earl of Maccleſfield, but in that Caſe the Lady withdrew herſelf five or ſix Days before Sentence; yet there the Lord Maccleſfield had all her Defences, and even her Recrimination, and had a Time to prove it; there was Publication, and a Day ſet down for Sentence; but ſhe ſpun out the Time till the Parliament was ready to riſe, and then my Lord's Friends adviſed him to begin in Parliament; and when the Lords were acquainted of any Lady Maccleſfield's ſtanding in Contempt of the Court, and ſhe was proſecuted ſo far, that ſhe was almoſt ready to go to Priſon for her Contempt, then the Houſe of Lords did think fit to receive my Lord Maccleſfield's Bill, and not before; but before my Lord Maccleſfield brought his Bill in Parliament, there was nothing remained to be done in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts but Sentence: And I hope for all theſe Reaſons, you will not proceed upon this Bill.

Mr. Serj. Wright. Mr. Speaker, I am of Council for the Duke of Norfolk, who is your Suppliant for this Bill, for Redreſs againſt the higheſt Injury that can be offered; the Rights of his Marriage-Bed have been invaded, and he comes for that Relief here, which no other Court can afford him; for the learned Doctor on the other Side, tells you plainly, from the Canon Law, that there can be no Divorce a Vinculo Matrimonii in their Courts: Now to ſend us to a Court for Relief, that they tell us before-hand can give us none, is in Effect to tell us we ſhall have none at all.

The Bill is founded upon the Suggestions contained in the firſt three or four Lines of the Bill, that the Dutcheſs of Norfolk hath, for divers Years lived in Separation from the Duke her Husband, and hath had unlawful Familiarity, and adulterous Converſation with Sir John Germaine, and is guilty of Adultery on her Part, and hath broken the Bond of Matrimony: Theſe are the Reaſons for which the Duke deſires this Bill may paſs; 'tis for the adulterous Converſation of the Dutcheſs, not for one ſingle Act, but a continual Series of the like Acts for many Years; for we ſhall not give only one ſingle Act or Inſtance in Evidence, but prove this Converſation for ſeveral Years, beginning in Eighty-seven, and carried on to the latter End of Ninety-five.

It hath been objected, that this is the firſt Inſtance of a Divorce, the firſt Bill of this Kind, where there has been no Proceedings in the Spiritual Court: That 'tis the firſt Bill of this Kind we deny; but that there have been no Proceedings in the Spiritual Court, we own; for the Earl of Maccleſfield's was the ſame, to all Intents and Purpoſes, as this is; for though 'tis true, they had been in the Spiritual Court, yet 'tis as true, they came here into Parliament before any Sentence in the Spiritual Court: Now to what Purpoſe is it to go into the Spiritual Court, and not to ſtay for the Determination of that Court, if the Judgment of that Court is to have any Weight in the Caſe of the Earl of Maccleſfield? 'Tis true, they had been there and examined Witneſſes on one Side, with all Precipitation, yet would they not ſtay for a Sentence there, but quitted their own Proceedings, and came to the Parliament. Now I do take it, that they had better never been there, than to have come away before Sentence; for when they were in the Spiritual Court, and were proceeding there, to leave that Court, ſhewed rather a Miſtruſt of their own Caſe. But it was no Objection in that Caſe, that it was taking it away from the Jurisdiction of the Spiritual Court. We don't come to you for any Thing the Spiritual Court can grant us; for that Court goes no farther, if the Fact be proved, than to make a Separation à menſâ & thoro, but the Bonds of Marriage is to be continued ſtill: Now with Submission, this is to puniſh the Innocent inſtead of the Guilty: What would the Dutcheſs deſire more, than to be ſeparated from the Bed and Board of her Husband, and be left free to accompany company Sir John Germaine; but we go further, for we come to the Parliament to dissolve this Marriage for that, which is allowed by several learned Writers to be a justifiable Reason for so doing, for Adultery committed by the Wife; 'tis expressly, that a Man shall not put away his Wife, except in case of Fornication; this Text plainly allows, that in case of Fornication, a Man might put away his Wife; but the Popish Canons the Doctor has named, have put a Construction upon it: Say they, You shall put her away; but how? She shall be removed from your Bed and Table, but you shall not marry another. Then they say, there is no Precedent of a Bill of this kind, but there hath been a previous Prosecution in the Spiritual Courts. I agree the Marquis of Northampton's Case, that That Act does recite the Proceedings in the Spiritual Court: But that Case is stronger than this, for there the Marquis of Northampton had married even in the Teeth of their Canon Law, and comes afterwards an Act of Parliament to make this Marriage good, and there the Divorce was no Ingredient upon the passing of the Bill: But the Parliament enacted the Marriage to be lawful. In my Lord Rofs's Case, there is no mention of any Divorce.

I appeal to the Journals of your own Houses for that; but notwithstanding the Divorce, the whole Matter was examined over again, Witnesses were examined both in the House of Lords, and here upon the first Bill which was brought, which was to illegitimate and bastardize the Children; and the Witnesses proved, that my Lord Rofs and his Lady had not lain together for a long time, and that she had kept Company with others; so that the Parliament did not found the Bill upon what had been done upon the Divorce.

I appeal to your own Memory, that in the Earl of Macclesfield's Case, there was no Use at all on that Side; the Bill was brought, that there had been Proceedings in the Spiritual Court, nor is there any such Thing recited in the Bill, but only an express downright Charge of Adultery; nor was it proper for them to have mentioned any Proceedings in the Spiritual Court, since they waved that Prosecution; but we on the other side insisted on it, as a Reason why the Parliament should not proceed in it, it being to take upon them an original Jurisdiction; but we were then answered by a learned Gentleman against this Bill, that it was in vain to go there, for they could not give the Remedy that might reasonably be expected. I beg the Favour to mention a Case or two, where Divorces have been in Parliament, and there have been no Proceedings in the Spiritual Court; one of them was the Case of Mrs. Knight, who was married infra annos Nubiles to Mr. Goodwin. Every one knows, that a Marriage infra annos Nubiles, is a good Marriage; and if the Woman be above nine Years old, she shall be endowed; and yet notwithstanding, for some irregular Proceedings without going into the Spiritual Court, they came into Parliament; a Bill was passed, by which this Marriage was dissolv'd, and I think 'tis expressly enacted,

That she shall not marry till such an Age. This goes farther; for here I am sure the Doctor would have explained; and told you, if there had been Reason to dissolve the Marriage, they could have done as great a Feat in the Spiritual Court; that they could have examined Witnesses upon Oath, and could have told you whether there was proper Evidence; yet the Parliament, without any regard to what they could do, would assert their own Jurisdiction.

The Case of Mr. Wharton was mentioned on the other Side; and therefore I need not say any thing to it: There was nothing of Divorce, nor needed any.

They say this Bill begins where it is proper for Matters of this Nature to end; and that after we have taken a Turn into the Spiritual Court, and travelled three or four Years there, then it will be fit for the Judgment of Parliament. I would know if they had been seven Years in that Court (and perhaps if they come there, we shall not get out sooner;) to what Use the Examination of that Court would be. This House, I presume, would not let those Depositions be read here, especially if the Witnesses to their Facts were living.

They say this is a very summary Way of proceeding; it may be too quick for the Dutcheffs; but you may be pleased to consider, that there was a Bill brought into the other House some Years ago and rejected; upon what Terms, that will rest upon us to shew you by and by.

But the Matter was, the Witnesses that proved the Fact, was sent out of the Way by the Dutcheffs and Sir John Germaine, when Things were under an Examination; and we hope a Matter of this Nature, never shall be baffled by keeping the Evidence out of the Way.

We told them long ago, who the Witnesses were; they were the Dutcheffs's Servants, such as they thought fit to entrust.

They say this Bill deprives the Dutcheffs of her Trial; I hope no body thinks the Parliament will pass a Bill, without due Examination of Witnesses, and legal Proof of the Fact; if so, what matter is it, whether the Proof be made before the Parliament, or some inferior Court; if the Dutcheffs be guilty of this Crime, we come here for a Relief, which the Spiritual Court, the Doctors tell you, can't give us; since the Dutcheffs hath broke the Bond of Matrimony, we come to you to Dissolve that Marriage, and I hope we shall have it.

The Doctor hath insisted on one Thing, that I think is very extraordinary: He tells you, by the Rules of their Law, if the Woman can re-criminate, and prove her Husband guilty, in such a Case, they must set the Fault of one against the Fault of the other.

I wish the Doctor could have told you the Offence had been equal, that the Injury to Families had been equal; a Man by his Folly of this kind brings no spurious Issue to inherit the Lands of his Wife, but a Woman deprives her Husband of any legitimate Issue; for when she converses in this Manner with another Man, the Issue may be equally look'd upon to be that Man's,

Man's, if not more, and his Lady hath kept this Conversation ever ſince the Year Sixteen Hundred Eighty-Seven, and left the Duke.

One Thing is farther objected, and they inſiſt upon certain Articles of Agreement in Ninety-Four, and they read to you the Preamble of them: Why, Sir, the Articles, if they come to be read through, I am ſure it won't amount to what they pretend; it does not amount to this, that the Dutcheſs might uſe her Body as ſhe pleaſed; there is no Agreement, that ſhe ſhould live after her own Pleaſure. Indeed, ſhe was to have the uſe of her Houſhold Goods, and Servants, and live where ſhe pleaſed, but that will not juſtify her in her Way of Living.

Then to tell you, theſe are Matters of long ſtanding; they are ſo, and of a long continuance; for, if my Inſtructions prove true, we ſhall prove this Scene of Adultery for matter of eight Years ſucceſſively, and that by Servants that were privy to the Intrigues, who were ſent away to Holland; but no ſooner was the Bill baffled, but the Man was ſent for again, and the ſame Conversation continued that was between the Dutcheſs and Sir John Germaine before he left England.

The ſame was continued after he came back to his Service in (1691); only they were ſomething more cautious, and People were not admitted ſo familiarly to ſee them in Bed together in (1692); and ſo it continued till 1695.

They mentioned the Statute of Limitations, which was to put an End to frivolous and vexatious Actions: How they can apply it to this Caſe, I can't ſee; becauſe a Man ſhall not bring frivolous and vexatious Actions after a long diſtance of Time, therefore a Man ſhall not complain when he hath received the greateſt Injury that can be done to Mankind.

Sir, They are kind to us again, in recommending it to the Duke to go into the Spiritual Court till the next Sefſions: But we think we are in proper Method here, for that Relief which the Spiritual Court cannot grant; and ſince we have ſo good Reaſon to come here, if we prove the Fact, I hope this high Court will not ſend away a Complaint of this Nature, without ſuch Relief as ſuitable.

Mr. Northey. Sir, I am of the ſame Side: I would beg leave to ſay this: As to what the Council have ſaid in relation to the Evidence, that there were three Witneſſes examined upon Oath, in the Houſe of Peers, before the Bill did paſs there; and I believe they are aware of that, and that when you hear our Witneſſes, there will be no Answer to be given on their Side; and indeed the Witneſſes they brought, were ſo far from contradicting our Witneſſes, that they did really confirm them. But that is not the Caſe now, what our Evidence is, or whether it be fit for you to believe them, that will be when you have heard them; and for the Matter of the Time, that you can't take notice of neither, till you hear our Evidence. But this I may ſay, we ſhall bring a Man that will ſpeak to within four or five Years.

VOL V.

But the Matter they apply themſelves to, which is material, is, Whether it is proper for you to proceed on this Bill, that is, to give ſuch a Relief as we deſire, by diſſolving this Marriage? And in the next Place, Whether this be a proper Time to aſk this Favour?

For the firſt, the learned Doctor tells you 'tis not proper at any time to do it, for he would have the Canon Law govern here, as it does in their Courts. But the Council on the other Side have cited you ſeveral Precedents where it hath been done. In the Caſe of the Marquis of Northampton, the ſecond Marriage was contrary to the Canon Law, and yet that Marriage was confirmed according to God's Law. And this Bill is to relieve againſt the Canon Law.

Now, whether we are here in a proper Time; Sir Thomas Powys has ſaid a great many Things, which may be proper to many other Purpoſes. One Argument was, becauſe the Witneſſes can't be upon Oath; but that we know will not prevail in this Place. In the next Place they except, becauſe this Proceeding is in a ſummary Way. I would know of them, whether there is not the ſame Objection to all Proceedings before a Jury, that they have no Notice what Witneſſes will be produced?

Then in the next Place they bring a great Argument for the Recital of ſome of theſe Bills, That there have been a Sentence in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts. Now, 'tis true, they have been ſo in ſome of thoſe Caſes: But I beg leave to obſerve, That in the Caſe of the Marquis of Northampton, the Bill was not to confirm the Sentence, or to enable them to marry, but to deliver them out of the Hands of the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, who ſaid it was not lawful in that Caſe to marry, for they were married before.

I beg leave to ſay, That in the Caſe of my Lord Maccleſfield, there was no Notice in the Bill that came down to you of any Proceedings in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts: And I take this to be the Reaſon, becauſe there was no Sentence, though where there was a Sentence, they had good Reaſon to take notice of it. And I think there is as much Certainty, and as good Ground to proceed on this Bill, as in the other Caſe, for the Witneſſes have been already examined in the Houſe of Lords. In the Caſe of my Lord Rofs, there was no Regard to the Determination of the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, as a Guide to the Parliament; and it was looked upon as of no Conſequence, for the Witneſſes were examined again.

'Tis true, when we came before you without ſuch a Proceeding, we came under this Diſadvantage, you will be ſure to expect a plainer and fuller Proof; but for that we will undertake to make the Fact ſo plain, that they can't give the leaſt Pretence to answer to it.

O O

We

We are here asking that we can't have any where else: Their great Design is Delay, and that we have learnt from the Civilian, who tells you, their Methods are very grave and deliberate, and, that they may have a Commission to examine Witnesses beyond Sea; and that is to enquire how their own Servants have liv'd beyond Sea.

As to what Sir Thomas Powys would have, that is, that we should go into the Spiritual Court, and apply our selves here again next Sessions, I do not think the Legislature will send us back to ask that in the Spiritual Court which both have submitted to: For after the Duke had miscarried in the Relief he fought by another Bill, by the Dutcheß's sending the Witnesses out of the way; why truly, after that, to prevent any Prosecution in the Spiritual Court, the Dutcheß submitted to a Separation by Articles, and that was all the Duke could have pretended to by the Ecclesiastical Law: We follow her upon that, and come to enforce that Separation. And, to make it effectual, and for that which we humbly hope will be thought but Justice to the Duke, that is, to be deliver'd from this Wife, and to have Liberty to marry again; we think there is no Occasion for Delay, and that no body can be hurt by a Precedent that carries Relief in this nature, and deliver us from a Law, which in the Days of Popery was put upon us. Upon the whole Matter, I hope you will think that we are here very properly for Relief, and that we shall have the Favour to call our Witnesses.

Dr. Oldisb. Sir, the great Objection against the passing of this Bill was, because Witnesses had not been examin'd in the proper Court. 'Tis very true, generally speaking, in Cases it ought to be so; but here is a very great Exception to that Rule, and which, I think, can't admit of an Answer, and that is, the Notoriety of the Fact; and in that Case they begin with Execution. And if that be so, I think there never was a clearer Demonstration in the World; for when formerly the Dutcheß came to give in her Answer in the House of Lords, to the Charge against her, she did declare, That in the Year 83, or thereabouts, she went out of England, and tarried Three Years, and return'd about the Time of the Revolution. And it does plainly appear there, beyond all question, that she was at Lambeth, and went under the Name of the Lady Beckman, and was attended by one Keemer, who went then by the Name of Goodman. Besides this, there are Witnesses that speak to particular Facts. Now, I say, here is that which amounts to Demonstration; and where there is a Notoriety of Fact, that is an Exception out of the General Rule, and 'tis proper to begin with Execution.

There is an Exception to the General Councils and Canons that have been mention'd, That there shall not be a Divorce à Vinculo. Sir, I say, it was an Ecclesiastical Constitution, which was against the Law of God; and 'tis demonstrably so; for where our Saviour says, That a Man shall not put away his Wife, except in case of Fornication; it is plain, that in case of Fornication he may.

There is another Thing insisted on, and that is, That there was a Reconciliation between the Duke and his Dutcheß. 'Tis true, a Reconciliation should drown all Things before that Time; but when the Law takes notice in case of a Relapse, that does recrudesce, it rubs upon the old Sore, and then that which was before laid asleep is brought again upon the Stage, and will return with greater Vengeance. And we have plain Proof of her living in the same manner since, as before.

But they would insinuate to you, That in case there was a Trial in the Ecclesiastical Court, there might be a Recrimination; but there must be a Compensation, which can't be thought in this Case; for, I think, in this Case, under Favour, there is no Comparison. I don't think they are Paria, for 'tis impossible for the Husband to do that Injury as the Wife may; for she may bring a Bastard into the Family, and then the Estate does not go according to the Law of God and Nature, for every body desires his own Blood should succeed him.

Sir Tho. Powys. Sir, I shall say but very little. But Three or Four Things have been mention'd on the other Side, which they offer as if they conceiv'd them to have great Weight, and yet they seem to me as very capable of being answer'd; and I crave your Favour to do it.

They have gone much upon the Proofs that they are ready to make, and, I think, not very properly, because we speak against their Proceeding upon this Bill; but I am sure it turns upon them: For, according to their own shewing, they are very well prepar'd to proceed in a regular Course, for they have their Witnesses ready, and nothing does obstruct them.

Mr. Serj. Wright mention'd a Thing which, I must confess, I was surpriz'd in; for when I told him, he could not find any Precedent of such a Bill as this, without a previous Proceeding in the Spiritual Court; Mr. Serj. Wright said, It was quite otherwise; and, to shew you it was so, he cited two Cases where there was no Marriage. Now I always understood, a Divorce must be in any Case where there was a Marriage, for the Case of Mr. Knigh's, that was very lately: That was the Case of an Infant, who they pretended to have married infra annos nobiles; and therefore, says he, the declaring of that Marriage to be null and void by Act of Parliament, was a Divorce. The other was the Case of Mrs. Wharton, which was no Marriage neither, for Marriage must be by Consent, and that was a Force: And that he fancies to be a Case, where there was a Divorce too, without proceeding in the Spiritual Court; and yet, of his own shewing, it was no Marriage.

Another Thing I am much more surpriz'd at, we insisted, that they would not shew an Act for making a Divorce without giving the Party an Opportunity to make a Defence; and the Doctor says, in Common Cases it ought to be so: And they cited the Earl of Macclesfield we first mention'd, and the Doctor told you the Progress it had, and that there was a full and regular Proceeding, of great length of Time; and, that my Lady Macclesfield had all her Witnesses examin'd, and my Lord prosecuted her to an Excommunication, which is in effect a Sentence, for it is in our Law as in Cases of Outlawry. This he calls a Precedent wherein they proceeded to get an Act of Parliament, without a previous Proceeding in the Spiritual Court.

He

He tells you in the next place, That notwithstanding the Divorce in the Caſe of my Lord Rofs, the Parliament did examine Witneſſes; 'tis true, they did, for I don't think they will ſo entirely pin their Faith upon thoſe Proceedings, as to have no other Satisfaction. But will he therefore ſay they took no Notice of it, when 'tis the Foundation and Ground of the Bill?

He tells you in the next place, That the Crime does not ſeem equal between the one and the other; and ſo, in ſome fort, they ridicule the Doctor's Notion of Recrimination. But I apprehend the Doctor is right in it; for it would be hard if a Man ſhould marry a young Woman, and give her an ill Example in his own Family, (I do not ſay 'tis this Caſe) and bring her acquainted with looſe and ill Company, and by his Example or Provocation lead her into the ſame Offence; would that Man deſerve to be rewarded with a new Wife, and another Portion, becauſe his firſt Wife had only followed his Example?

They ſay, the Offence is not equal, becauſe the Man brings no Children into the Family.

I doubt it happens oftentimes to them that go abroad, that they bring home that to their Wives which ſticks longer by them than their Children.

Then to come and ſay, The Articles can't be of any Uſe to us at all; and to imagine that we uſe the Articles ſo, that the Dutcheſs might be at perfect liberty to live in Adultery; I wonder how that Conceit hath followed him hither, when we told him we had not ſuch a Thought as to live in Adultery, but they do direct her to live ſeparate; and ſo we uſed them, as an Answer to that Part. We uſed them likewiſe as an Act of total Oblivion and Remiſſion of any Thing beyond that Time; and, I hope, to ſuch Purpoſes they ſhall be thought ſacred.

Now I beſeech you, Sir, on the whole Matter, have they on the other Side ſaid one Thing but what does totally tend to bring all Caſes of Adultery immediately before you? Have they diſtinguiſh'd this Caſe from the Caſe of any other Perſon? And then, if they have not, I do not ſee from henceforward, that any but Fools will go to the Eccleſiaſtical Courts for Relief: For, ſays the Serjeant, they cannot give them a final Relief, and enable any Perſon to marry again, and therefore let no body think to go there again; but here is a Relief to be had worth a Man's having. But, I hope, we ſhall have the Benefit of the Law, as it is, till you think fit to alter it, and then you will erect ſome Judicature, where People may have their Trial. Now therefore the Argument goes too far, or it argues nothing at all, becauſe, if there be any thing in it, it goes to take away the Proceedings of thoſe Courts totally.

But tho' thoſe Courts cannot do all that theſe Gentlemen deſire, they can do what is very proper to be done; they can examine Witneſſes, and pronounce Sentence, and give the Party a full Opportunity of knowing the Accuſation and Accuſers; and then the Caſes we have mentioned have had the Aid of an Act of Parliament.

Sir, we have ſpent a great deal of your Time already; I hope, ſince you ſee what Uſe they make of the laſt Precedent of my Lord Maccleſ- field, where he did proceed to an Excommunication. Now from thence they argue, that you ſhould proceed Originally in this Caſe. When is the Time to make a Stand, but in the firſt Caſe? And then no Man can complain of any Injury. If you grant this to my Lord, I think in Juſtice you cannot deny it to any other that ſtands in need of it. I believe there never was the like before, and therefore, I hope, you will put a Stop to it here.

Mr. Dodd. The Gentlemen on the other Side have told you, that our Saviour hath ſaid, That no Man ſhould put away his Wife, except for Fornication. 'Tis true, the Text is ſo, but he cannot ſhew you any Text wherein our Saviour ſays, That the Man may marry again, tho' he might put his Wife away. Another Thing was ſaid, as to the Proceeding in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts: Dr. Oldiſh ſays, There is to be nothing but Execution where there is a Notoriety of Fact; and here the Fact is notorious, and therefore you may come up to order Execution; but that is a ſtrange Doctrine to our Engliſh Conſtitution. Would they hang one firſt, and try him afterwards? That would make Work. Let the Fact be never ſo notorious, yet 'tis the Right of all the People of England to have a legal Trial; and, I hope, you will not interpoſe till there hath been a regular Trial in another Place.

Then Sir Thomas Powys offer'd to produce the Articles, but they were not admitted.

Lunæ 25 Die Martii, 1700.

The Houſe reſolv'd themſelves into a Committee of the whole Houſe, to conſider of the Duke of Norfolk's Bill.

Sir Rowland Gwynne took the Chair of the Committee of the whole Houſe.

And the Council and Sollicitors were call'd in, and the Bill read to them; and then Mr. Northey, of Council with the Duke, open'd the Evidence thus:

Mr. Northey. I Am of Council for the Duke of Norfolk. I ſhall not trouble you now (becauſe I think it not fit) to ſay any thing for the Bill, for that you have approved of by Commitment of the Bill, and declar'd it to be a reaſonable and juſt Relief againſt the Dutcheſs, for the Adultery charg'd in the Bill. I ſhall not ſpend any of your Time in aggravating the Crime of Adultery.

But that which is incumbent on his Grace's Council now, is to lay before you the Proofs of the Fact ſuggeſted in the Bill; and the Facts to be prov'd are the Introduction of the Bill, That the Dutcheſs has liv'd, for divers Years, in Separation from the Duke, and had unlawful Familiarity and adulterous Converſation with Sir John Germaine; and for that Fact we will call our Witneſſes.

And our Evidence will make this out to you, as plain as 'tis poſſible to expect a Matter of this Nature to be prov'd.

However, I think they have manag'd Things in that manner, as we ſhall be able to give as plain a Proof of theſe Facts as might be expected of thoſe Acts which are in their own Nature moſt publick. However, in the Nature of the Thing, there were but a few Perſons to be entrufteſt with it, and thoſe were generally Servants, who had Attendance on the Dutchess's Person. We shall produce you Servants both of the Dutchess and Sir John Germaine; and, I hope, it cannot be an Objection, that they are Servants; for to object to them for that Reason, is to say, You shall prove the Fact, but you shall have no Witnesses; for these are Facts that cannot be prov'd but by such as were concerned with the Dutchess.

For our Evidence, it will fall out to be this: The Duke and Dutchess were married in the Year 1677, and they liv'd together till about the Year 1685: And then the Duke having some Account of her Conversation of this Nature, they did part, and afterwards she came to live openly with Sir John Germaine; for, in May, 1689, the Witnesses will give you an Account, that for two Months together she lodg'd with Sir John Germaine at the Cock-pit; and they liv'd there as Man and Wife, as the Witnesses phrase it. During the Time they liv'd there, there was a near Relation of Sir John Germaine's, Mr. Daniel Germaine his Brother, and Mrs. Briane his Sister, did frequently come to the House; and two of the Witnesses were frequently in the Room while they were a-bed together.

After two Months time, the Dutchess thought fit to be a little more private, and it was given out she was gone to France, but in truth she remov'd to Vaux-hall, to a House that was taken by Sir John Germaine's Brother, and went by the Name of my Lady Beckman; and she liv'd there two Years successively; and Sir John Germaine came there frequently, once or twice in a Week, and lay there a-Nights during that Time. We have two Witnesses that did attend the Dutchess, as well as at the Cock-pit; one of them is Ellena Vanesse, who was hired by Sir John Germaine's Sister, and liv'd with the Dutchess at the Cock-pit two Months. We have a second Witness, one Hosier, who was with Sir John Germaine at the Cock-pit fifteen Days before the Dutchess went to Vaux-hall; and afterwards he went to Vaux-hall when she removed there, and staid with her all the two Years.

These are both Foreigners, and Dutch People, and it was reasonable enough to expect foreign Witnesses, when an English Dutchess had a foreign Gallant: They are such as he thought fit to entrust about her.

After she had liv'd two Years at Vaux-hall (this brings her to the Year 1691) she removed home again to her House at Mill-Bank, and there Sir John and she were frequently together, and have been seen a-bed together.

This brings us to the Time when the Duke, having an Account that she had this Conversation with Sir John Germaine, brought a Bill into the House of Peers for a Divorce; but it happen'd that the Dutchess and Sir John Germaine, to avoid the Condemnation, kept the Witnesses out of the Way, and afterwards caused them to be sent into Holland.

The Woman staid abroad till about three Months ago, but the Man return'd before into Sir John Germaine's Service; and he will give you an Account of what Observations he made there, for the Familiarity continued between them then. He was admitted into the Room where they us'd to be, and he will give you an Account how he hath seen them frequently together; and he brings it down to within the Year 1695.

We have another Witness, one William Bayly, who likewise was a Servant to Sir John Germaine, and came into his Place when Hosier went beyond Sea. He is an unwilling Witness, because he hath been preferred by Sir John Germaine; but when he was upon his Oath in the other House, he did give an Account, That while he continued in Sir John Germaine's Service, notwithstanding this publick Reproach in 1695 and 1696, she frequently came to Sir John Germaine's House, with one Keemer, whom she had great Confidence in, and one Susannah Barrington, I think, yet in the Dutchess's Service. And this Mr. Bayly will give you an Account, that his Master was often from home; and when he was so, he us'd to carry his Linnen to this Keemer, who was the Dutchess's Servant, or this Keemer would come to him for it: And this will bring it down to 1696. There are several Witnesses to confirm this; but we think, with Submission, after the Dutchess had been so accused in the House of Lords of such a Familiarity, any Evidence of a Conversation between them afterwards, is as much as a Thousand Witnesses; for no Woman that valued her Reputation, having been accus'd as she was, would have had any Conversation with Sir John Germaine afterwards. But we don't want Circumstances to support the Evidence of Fact; we have as plain Evidence in this Case, as can be expected in a Case of this Nature. We will spend no more of your Time, but beg Leave to call our Witnesses.

Mr. Atwood. Sir Rowland Gwynne, please to favour me with a few Words on the same Side; I shall not mis-spence the Time of the Committee in repeating any thing said by Mr. Narthey; I shall only observe, that the Witnesses, Hosier and Vaness, say, That Susannah Barrington was privy to this adulterous Conversation: And this Susannah Barrington has withdrawn her self since the Bill was depending in the House of Lords.

'Tis further prov'd, That Mr. Daniel Germaine and Mr. Briane's Wife were in England lately, and that these were privy to the same Conversation.

Then the Witnesses were call'd in one by one, and Interpreters allow'd.

The Witnesses that were examined before the Committee of the Commons were Ellena Vanesse, Nicholas Hosier, William Bayly, and Ann Read.

But all, except Ann Read, were examined in the House of Lords, and their Evidence there being at large set forth, the Reader is referred to the same. The Evidence of Ann Read is as follows:

Ann Read being ask'd, Whether she had ever seen the Dutchess go to Sir John Germaine's House, and when? says, That about April 1692, (which was soon after the Duke's Bill had been rejected in the House of Lords) she saw the Dutchess of Norfolk go in a Chair to Sir John's House; that the Door was immediately opened upon her Chair's being set down, and she went into the House with her Mask off.

She being ask'd, Whether she had seen Sir John come to the Dutchess's House, and when? says, She, within a Twelve-month last past, or thereabouts, followed him to the Dutchess's House, about Three of the Clock in the Afternoon, and, that she did not see him come out.

After

After the Witneſſes were examined on the Part of the Duke of Norfolk for the Bill, Sir Thomas Powys of Council with the Dutcheſs of Norfolk, being call'd upon to make Defence, ſpoke to this Effect :

Sir Thomas Powys. I am at a Loſs, Sir, and under ſome kind of a Surprize, becauſe, as far as I apprehend, you call upon us to make our Defence. I hope, in a Caſe of ſuch Moment as this is (and it may be there cannot be greater) and ſince you are pleas'd to take this Caſe out of the uſual Way of Trials, and to try it in the firſt Inſtance, you will be pleas'd, that we ſhould be fairly and regularly heard. And ſince it was not allow'd us, upon our being heard againſt the Bill, that we ſhould have a Time to make our Defence; now we have heard what the Witneſſes ſwear, we ſhall deſire but a ſhort Time, no more than what is abſolutely neceſſary, to make our Defence. This hath ſpent us ſix Hours already; and I am ſure the Witneſſes that have been examin'd have given ſuch Variety of Answers, that it doth afford a great deal to be ſaid to it. We have likewiſe a good many Witneſſes to be examin'd, but I am far from propoſing any thing to delay it. We had a Week's Time allow'd us in the Houſe of Lords, but that is no Rule for you, and we don't expect it here: But, even while we are at this Bar, a Perſon from a very worthy Member gives us Intelligence, upon ſight of this Cook-maid, of a Matter that will defame her; and he will be ready to make it out, that ſhe was turn'd away for being a common Thief in Holland; and therefore, Sir, you ſee how Time is neceſſary in point of Accidents that do happen; and I cannot make our Defence now.

Thereupon the Council withdrew; and the Committee having conſider'd of the Deſire of the Council for the Dutcheſs to have Time allow'd them to make their Defence, were of Opinion, That the Council ſhould proceed then to make their Defence; and Candles were ordered to be brought in.

And the Council being call'd in again, Sir Rowland Gwynne being in the Chair of the Committee, acquainted them with the Determination of the Committee.

Then Sir Thomas Powys obſerv'd upon the Evidence that had been given, and inſiſted, that the Evidence given before the Committee of Commons did differ from the Evidence given by them upon Oath in the Houſe of Lords; and offered to produce the Examination of the ſaid Witneſſes upon Oath in the Houſe of Lords. And an Objection being made, That ſuch Examination ought not to be read in that Caſe, as Evidence before this Committee; the Council withdrew, and the Committee conſider'd of the ſaid Objection, and were of Opinion, that the ſaid Depoſitions ſhould not be read.

And the Council being call'd in again, were acquainted with it, and that if they had any Witneſſes, viva voce, to encounter their Evidence, they might produce them.

Sir Thomas Powys. Sir, by this Reſolution my Client is deprived of that Defence I thought I could have made for her; but I ſubmit to the Pleaſure of the Committee.

Mr. Atwood. The Examinations in the Houſe of Lords were ſo lately, that 'tis an eaſy thing for the Sollicitors, who were by, to give an Account of a Contrariety in the Evidence, if there were any.

A Member. Whether you have any other Evidence to offer, but as to this Point?

Sir Tho. Powys. All our Evidence would tend to contradict theſe Witneſſes; and if the reading of thoſe Depoſitions won't be allow'd, we muſt abide your Pleaſure, and ſubmit it to you.

Mr. Dodd. We muſt ſubmit it to you; our Witneſſes were in Concurrence with that ſort of Evidence.

Sir Rowland Gwynne. There are ſeveral Perſons named, who are Perſons of Credit, and good Reputation, Mr. Briane and his Lady, Mr. Daniel Germaine and his Siſter; theſe would be Witneſſes of Credit, againſt thoſe that are, you ſay, not of Credit.

Council. We have ſummon'd them, and Mrs. Pitts, and done all that we could on our Side to get them here; and I hope you won't prejudge our Caſe, to ſay they are in our Intereſt; that is to determine the Queſtion. We have likewiſe ſummon'd Mrs. Pitts and her two Maids; and whether they will appear, or not, that we cannot tell; but this we are ready to make out to you.

Mr. Atwood. Sufannah Barrington, the Dutcheſs's Woman, privy to the whole Converſation, is prov'd to have been with her ſince the Bill was brought into the Houſe of Lords.

A Member. Whether he has one living Witneſs to produce, that he can make good his Defence by?

Sir Tho. Powys. Sir, if you expect an Answer by me, I am aſſur'd that we have Witneſſes; but if I cannot bring thoſe People againſt themſelves, if I cannot bring Nichola againſt Nichola, I deſpair of doing any good, if I bring a thouſand other Witneſſes againſt him: And therefore I pray this Favour of you, That ſince 'tis your Pleaſure that this Evidence be not allow'd, you will not make a bad Conſtruction of it, that I do not proceed to make a Defence to this Bill; for I cannot truly do it, unleſs I had ſome other Inſtructions from my Client, but ſhall defeat her Expectation to proceed upon the other Part of the Caſe, ſince what we built upon with good Authority, as we thought, is not thought fit to be admitted.

Sir Rowland Gwynne. Sir, you are at liberty to go on, if you have any thing more to ſay, than that you cannot proceed without further Directions from your Client.

A Member. Whether they have any thing to offer in the Defence of the Dutcheſs, upon the Crime ſhe is charg'd with; for, I believe, 'tis a new Thing for the Council, when their Client is charg'd with a Crime, to ſay, They cannot defend her unleſs they go and aſk, whether they ſhall defend her, or no? If they have any thing to ſay in her Defence, we ſhall be ready to hear it.

Sir Rowland Gwynne. Sir Thomas Powys, have you any thing more to ſay?

Sir Tho. Powys. I cannot but repeat what I have already ſaid, That I would be glad to make the beſt Defence this Caſe may bear; and I may ſay, I have defended it twice with very good Succels, Success, and this is a third Time; and I would make the best Defence this Case would bear now. And I must own to you, that the Course of our Evidence, we did propose to our selves, is so far broke, by the first Determination you were pleased to make, that I cannot venture upon the rest of the Defence, if so be your Pleasure be not to admit of this Matter.

Sir Rowland Gwynne. You may, by any Solicitors or Agents, that were present when these Witnesses were examin'd in the House of Lords, prove what they swore there.

Mr. Dodd. We apprehend you have already determin'd the Matter, and we cannot now meddle with it; but if I apprehend it aright from the Chair, 'tis your Opinion, that we may produce the Solicitors and Agents, to give an Account of what was sworn in the House of Lords. Now we are under this Disability by your Determination, That we, relying upon what you have determined against us, are not prepar'd with our Solicitors, or others, to give Evidence of that Matter, but, in a little Time, they will be able to give you an Account of what was then sworn.

Mr. Atwood. It seems they want to be taught their Lesson.

And then the Council withdrew, and the Committee proceeded upon the Bill, Clause by Clause, and went thro' it, and order'd the same to be reported; which was done accordingly; upon which the Bill pass'd.

CLXIX. The Trial of Captain WILLIAM KIDD, at the Old-Baily, for Murder and Piracy upon the High-Seas ; and of Nicholas Churchill, James Howe, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loff, Hugh Parrot, Richard Barlicorn, Abel Owens, and Darby Mullins, for Piracy, May 8th and 9th, 1701, 13 Will III.

THE King's Commission for holding the Court being first read, they proceeded to call the Gentlemen summoned upon the Grand-Jury, and the Persons sworn were the Seventeen following, viz.

William Broughton,	{	Stephen Thompson,
Thomas Hanwell,		Thomas Cooper,
Daniel Borwell,		Robert Gorwer,
Humphry Bellamy,		Robert Clement,
Nath. Rolston, Sen.		Thomas Sesson,
Joshua Bolton,		William Goodwin,
Benjamin Pike,		Robert Callow,
Joseph Marlow,		Thomas Harvis.
Benjamin Travis,

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Grand-Jury, stand together, and hear the Charge.

The King's Majesty commands all Justices of the High Court of Admiralty, that have any Authority to take any Inquisitions, Recognizances, Examinations, or Informations of Offences committed within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, to deliver the Records of the same into this Court, &c. And all others are commanded to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then Dr. Oxenden gave the Charge to the Grand-Jury, explaining the Nature of the Commission, and the Crimes enquirable by Vertue of it by the Grand-Jury.

Then the Grand-Jury withdrew, and after some Time returned into Court, and found the Bill of Indictment against Captain Kidd for Murder, and another against him and Nicholas Churchill, James Howe, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loff, Hugh Parrot, Richard Barlicorn, Abel Owens, and Darby Mullins, for Piracy. Then Proclamation (as usual) being made, the aforesaid Prisoners were brought to the Bar, and Arraigned.

Cl. of Arr. William Kidd, hold up thy Hand,

Kidd. May it please your Lordships, I desire you to permit me to have Council.

Mr. * Recorder. What would you have Council for ?

Kidd. My Lord, I have some Matter of Law relating to the Indictment, and I desire I may have Council to speak to it.

Dr. Oxenden. What Matter of Law can you have ?

Cl. of Arr. How does he know what it is he is charged with ? I have not told him.

Mr. Recorder. You must let the Court know what those Matters of Law are, before you can have Council assigned you.

Kidd. They be Matters of Law, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Kidd, do you know what you mean by Matters of Law ?

Kidd. I know what I mean ; I desire to put off my Trial as long as I can, till I can get my Evidence ready.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Kidd, you had best mention the Matter of Law you would insist on.

Dr. Oxenden. It cannot be Matter of Law, to put off your Trial, but Matter of Fact.

Kidd. I desire your Lordship's Favour ; I desire Dr. Oldisb and Mr. Lemmon may be heard as to my Case.

Cl. of Arr. What can he have Council for, before he has pleaded ?

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Kidd, the Court tells you, you shall be heard what you have to say when you have pleaded to your Indictment. If you plead to it, if you will, you may assign Matter of Law, if you have any ; but then you must let the Court know what you would insist on.

Kidd. I beg your Lordship's Patience till I can procure my Papers. I had a Couple of French Passes, which I must make use of in order to my Justification.

Mr. Recorder. That is not Matter of Law. You have had long Notice of your Trial, and might have prepared for it. How long have you had Notice of your Trial ?

Kidd. A matter of a Fortnight.

Dr. Oxenden. Can you tell the Names of any Persons that you would make use of in your Defence ?

Kidd. I sent for them, but I could not have them.

Dr. Oxenden. Where were they then ?

Kidd. I brought them to my Lord Bellamont in New-England.

Mr. Recorder. What were their Names? You cannot tell without Book. Mr. Kidd, the Court see no Reason to put off your Trial, therefore you must plead.

Cl. of Arr. W. Kidd, hold up thy Hand.

Kidd. I beg your Lordships I may have Council admitted, and that my Trial may be put off; I am not really prepared for it.

Mr. Recorder. Nor never will, if you could help it.

Dr. Oxenden. Mr. Kidd, you have had reasonable Notice, and you knew you must be tried, and therefore you cannot plead you are not ready.

Kidd. If your Lordships permit those Papers to be read, they will justify me. I desire my Council may be heard.

Mr. Coniers. We admit of no Council for him.

Mr. Recorder. There is no Issue joined; and therefore there can be no Council assigned. Mr. Kidd, you must plead.

Kidd. I cannot plead till I have those Papers that I insisted upon.

Mr. Lemmon. He ought to have his Papers delivered to him, because they are very material for his Defence. He has endeavoured to have them, but could not get them.

Mr. Coniers. You are not to appear for any one till he pleads, and that the Court assigns you for his Council.

Mr. Recorder. They would only put off the Trial.

Mr. Coniers. He must plead to the Indictment.

Cl. of Arr. Make Silence.

Kidd. My Papers were all seized, and I cannot make my Defence without them. I desire my Trial may be put off till I can have them.

Mr. Recorder. The Court is of Opinion, they ought not to stay for all your Evidence; it may be they will never come. You must plead, and then if you can satisfy the Court, that there is a Reason to put off your Trial, you may.

Kidd. My Lord, I have Business in Law, and I desire Council.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Kidd, the Course of Courts is, when you have pleaded, the Matter of Trial is next: If you can then shew there is Cause to put off the Trial, you may; but now the Matter is to plead.

Kidd. It is a hard Case when all these Things shall be kept from me, and I be forced to plead.

Mr. Recorder. If he will not plead, there must be Judgment.

Kidd. My Lord, would you have me plead, and not have my Vindication by me?

Cl. of Arr. Will you plead to the Indictment?

Kidd. I would beg that I may have my Papers for my Vindication.

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Churchill, hold up thy Hand.

Churchill. My Lord, I desire I may have the Benefit of the Proclamation; I came in upon the King's Proclamation.

Mr. Recorder. If you do not plead, the Court must pass Judgment upon you. You can have no Benefit in what you say, till you have pleaded. If you were indicted for Felony, and you will not plead, the Law takes it in Nature of a Confession, and Judgment must pass, as if you were proved guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Churchill, hold up thy Hand.

James Howe, hold up thy Hand. Robert Lamley, hold up thy Hand. (Which they did.)

Mr. Recorder. W. Kidd has not held up his Hand.

Cl. of Arr. He does hold up his Hand. William Jenkins, hold up thy Hand. Gabriel Loff, hold up thy Hand. Hugh Parrot, hold up thy Hand. Richard Barlicorn, hold up thy Hand. Abel Owens, hold up thy Hand.

Owens. I came in upon the King's Proclamation, and entered my self into the King's Service.

Mr. Recorder. You must plead first, and then, if there be Occasion, you will have the Benefit of it. (Then he held up his Hand.)

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, hold up thy Hand. Mullins. May it please your Lordships, I came in voluntarily on the King's Proclamation.

Mr. Recorder. This is the same Case with Owens, you must speak to that afterwards.

Cl. of Arr. W. Kidd, you stand indicted by the Name of William Kidd, &c Art thou guilty or not guilty?

Kidd. I cannot plead to this Indictment, till my French Passes are deliver'd to me.

Cl. of Arr. Are you guilty or not guilty?

Kidd. My Lord, I insist upon my French Papers; pray let me have them.

Mr. Recorder. That must not be now, till you have put your self upon your Trial.

Kidd. That must justify me.

Mr. Recorder. You may plead it then, if the Court see Cause.

Kidd. My Justification depends on them.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Kidd, I must tell you, if you will not plead, you must have Judgment against you, as standing mute.

Kidd. I cannot plead till I have these Papers; and I have not my Witnesses here.

Mr. Recorder. You do not know your own Interest; if you will not plead, you must have Judgment against you.

Kidd. If I plead, I shall be accessory to my own Death, till I have Persons to plead for me.

Mr. Recorder. You are accessory to your own Death, if you do not plead. We cannot enter into the Evidence, unless you plead.

Cl. of Arr. Are you guilty or not guilty?

Mr. Recorder. He does not understand the Law; you must read the Statute to him.

Cl. of Arr. Mr. Kidd, are you guilty of this Piracy, or not guilty?

Kidd. If you will give me a little Time to find my Papers, I will plead.

Cl. of Arr. There is no Reason to give you Time; will you plead or not?

Mr. Coniers. Be pleased to acquaint him with the Danger he stands in by not pleading. What ever he says, nothing can avail him till he pleads.

Mr. Recorder. He has been told so, but does not believe us.

Mr. Coniers. If there be any Reason to put off his Trial, it must be made appear after Issue is joined.

Mr. Recorder. If you say guilty, there is an end of it; but if you say not guilty, the Court can examine into the Fact.

Officer. He says he will plead.

Cl. of Arr. W. Kidd, art thou guilty or not guilty?

Kidd. Not guilty.

Cl. of

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be tried?

Kidd. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God fend thee a good Deliverance.
(And so of all the rest.)

Kidd. My Lord, I beg I may have my Trial put off for three or four Days, till I have got my Papers.

Mr. Recorder. The Judges will be here by and by, and you may move the Court then; we are only to prepare for your Trial: We do not deny your Motion; but when the Court is full, they will consider of the Reasons you have to offer.

Then William Kidd was tried upon the Indictment for Murder.

Cl. of Arr. W. Kidd, Hold up thy Hand: Thou standest indicted by the Name of William Kidd, late of London, Mariner, &c.

The first Indictment for MURDER.

THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, do, upon their Oath, present, That William Kidd, late of London, Mariner, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the Thirtieth Day of October, in the Ninth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord, William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. by Force and Arms, &c. upon the High Sea, near the Coast of Malabar, in the East-Indies, and within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, in a certain Ship, called the Adventure-Galley (whereof the said William Kidd then was Commander) then and there being, feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought, then and there did make an Assault, in and upon one William Moore, in the Peace of God, and of our said Sovereign Lord the King, to wit, then and there being, and to the Ship afore-said, call'd the Adventure-Galley, then and there belonging; and that the afore-said William Kidd, with a certain Wooden Bucket, bound with Iron Hoops, of the Value of Eight-pence, which he the said William Kidd then and there had and held in his right Hand, did violently, feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought, beat and strike the afore-said William Moore, in and upon the right Part of the Head of him the said William Moore, a little above the right Ear of the said William Moore, then and there upon the High Sea, in the Ship afore-said, and within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England afore-said, giving the said William Moore, then and there with the Bucket afore-said, in and upon the afore-said right Part of the Head of him the said William Moore, a little above the right Ear of the said William Moore, one mortal Bruise; of which mortal Bruise the afore-said William Moore, from the said Thirtieth Day of October, in the Ninth Year afore-said, until the One and Thirtieth Day of the said Month of October, in the Year afore-said, upon the High Sea afore-said, in the Ship afore-said, and within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England afore-said, did languish, and languishing did live; upon which One and Thirtieth Day of October, in the Ninth Year afore-said, the afore-said William Moore upon the High Sea afore-said, near the afore-said Coast of Malabar, in the East-Indies afore-said, in the Ship afore-said, called the Adventure-Galley, and within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England afore-said, did die; and so the Jurors afore-said, upon their Oath afore-said, do say, That the afore-said William

Vol. V.

Kidd, feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought, did kill and murder the afore-said William Moore, upon the High Sea afore-said, and within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England afore-said, in manner and form afore-said, against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

How say'st thou, William Kidd, art thou guilty of this Murder, whereof thou standest indicted, or not guilty?

Kidd. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be tried?

Kidd. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God fend thee a good Deliverance. Nicholas Churchill, James Howe, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loff, Hugh Parrot, Richard Barlicorn, Abel Owens, Darby Mullins, hold up your Hands. You the Prisoners at the Bar, those Men that you shall hear called, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King, and you, upon Trial of your several Lives and Deaths. If therefore you, or any of you, will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to speak to them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Kidd. My Lord, I desire Council may be assigned me.

Mr. Recorder. Capt. Kidd, I told you it would be your Time, when the Jury was called, to offer what you had to offer; therefore, if you have any Thing now to say to the Court, you had best say it.

Kidd. I beg I may have Council, Dr. Oldish, and Mr. Lemmon, that they may be heard on my behalf.

Mr. J. Powel. If he desires it, you may be Council for him, provided there be any Matter of Law that he has to plead; otherwise he must be tried.

Dr. Oldish. My Lord, he moves that his Trial for Piracy may be put off for several Reasons; one is, there is one Davis, that is a necessary Witness for him; he was taken a Passenger into the Ship, and therefore could not be concerned in any Piracy: Now this Davis stands indicted, so that he is deprived of this Person, who is a necessary Witness for him in this Case.

Mr. Coniers. He is not indicted yet; he may call him if he thinks fit.

Mr. J. Powel. If he be indicted, yet he may be a Witness.

Dr. Oldish. My Lord, we desire he may be here.

Mr. J. Powel. Where is he?

Cl. of Arr. He is in Newgate.

Mr. J. Powel. Let him be sent for.

Dr. Oldish. My Lord, it is very fit his Trial should be delay'd for some time, because he wants some Papers very necessary for his Defence. It's very true, he is charged with Piracies in several Ships; but they had French Passes when the Seizure was made. Now if there were French Passes, it was a lawful Seizure.

Mr. J. Powel. Have you those Passes?

Kidd. They were taken from me by my Lord Bellamont; and these Passes would be my Defence.

Dr. Oxenden. Had you any other Passes when you took the Armenian Ship?

Dr. Oldish. If those Ships that he took had French Passes, there was just Cause of Seizure, and it will excuse him from Piracy.

P p

Kidd.

Kidd. The Passes were seized by my Lord Bellamont, that we will prove as clear as the Day.

Mr. Lemmon. My Lord, I desire one Word as to this Circumstance; he was doing his King and Country Service, instead of being a Pirate: For in this very Ship there was a French Pass, and it was shewn to Mr. Davis, and carried to my Lord Bellamont, and he made a Seizure of it. And there was a Letter writ to testify it, which was produced before the Parliament; and that Letter has been transmitted from Hand to Hand, so that we cannot at present come by it. There are several other Papers and Letters that we cannot get; and therefore we desire the Trial may be put off till we can procure them.

L. C. B. Ward. Where are they?

Mr. Lemmon. We cannot yet tell whether they are in the Admiralty-Office, or whether Mr. Jodrell hath them.

Mr. J. Powel. Let us see on what you go. You talk of French Passes; you should have been prepared to make Affidavit of it. What Ship was that which had the French Passes?

Mr. Lemmon. The same we were in, the same he is indicted for.

Mr. J. Powel. Make out this, Mr. Lemmon?

Mr. Lemmon. My Lord, we desire Mr. Davis may be sent; for he will prove it.

L. C. B. Ward. Send for Edward Davis.

Mr. Fell. My Lord, will you have him brought into Court?

L. C. B. Ward. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. They have had a Fortnight's Notice to prepare for the Trial.

Dr. Oldish. We petitioned for Money, and the Court ordered fifty Pounds; but the Person that received it went away, and we had none till last Night.

Dr. Oxenden. I ordered that the Money might be paid into his own Hands, that he might be sure to have it.

Mr. Crawley, Register, declar'd, That he paid the Fifty Pounds into his own Hands on Tuesday Morning.

L. C. B. Ward. You ought to make it out, that there is a reasonable Cause to put off the Trial, or else it cannot be allowed.

Mr. Lemmon. My Lord, we will be ready To-morrow Morning.

L. C. B. Ward. They ought to have had due Notice; what Notice have they had?

Mr. Soll. Gen. A Fortnight's Notice, this Day Fortnight.

Dr. Oldish. My Lord, he should have had his Money delivered to him.

Kidd. I had no Money nor Friends to prepare for my Trial till last Night.

L. C. B. Ward. Why did you not signify so much to the King's Officers?

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, this we will do; Let Davis be brought into Court; and if that be a just Excuse, we are contented. In the mean time, let him be tried for the Murder, wherein there is no Pretence of want of Witnesses or Papers.

Officer. Davis is here, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. Set all aside but Capt. Kidd. William Kidd, You are now to be tried on the Bill of Murder; the Jury is going to be sworn; if you have any Cause of Exception, you may speak to them as they come to the Book.

Will. Kidd. I shall challenge none; I know nothing to the contrary but they are honest Men.

The JURY sworn, were,

Nathaniel Long,	}	Henry Sherbrook,
Jo. Ewers,		Henry Dry,
Jo. Child,		Richard Greenaway,
Ed. Reeves,		Jo. Sherbrook,
Tho. Clark,		Tho. Emms,
Nath. Green,		Rog. Mott.

After Proclamation made (as usual) the Court proceeded to the Trial, as follows:

Cl. of Arr. W. Kidd,—hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of William Kidd, &c. as before in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment he has been arraigned, and thereunto has pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial has put himself on God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, Whether he be guilty of the Murder whereof he stands indicted, in Manner and Form as he stands indicted, or Not Guilty, &c.

Mr. Knap. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury.

This is an Indictment of Murder. The Indictment sets forth, That William Kidd, on the 30th of October, on the high Sea, on the Coast of Malabar, did assault one William Moore, on board a Ship called the Adventure, whereof William Kidd was Captain, struck him with a wooden Bucket, booped with Iron, on the Side of the Head, near the right Ear, and that of this Bruise he died the next Day, and so that he has murdered the same Person. To this Indictment he pleaded Not Guilty: If we prove him Guilty, you must find him so.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, we will prove this as particularly as can be, that William Kidd was Captain of the Ship, and that William Moore was under him in the Ship, and that without any Provocation he gave him this Blow whereof he died.

Mr. Coniers. My Lord, it will appear to be a most barbarous Fact, to murder a Man in this manner; for the Man gave him no manner of Provocation. This William Moore was a Gunner in the Ship, and this William Kidd abuses him, and calls him Loufy Dog; and, upon a civil Answer, he takes this Bucket and knocks him on the Head, whereof he died the next Day. Call Joseph Palmer, and Robert Bradinham. (Who appear'd, and were sworn.) Joseph Palmer, give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you saw done by William Kidd, on the Coast of Malabar, as to William Moore his Gunner.

Joseph Palmer. About a Fortnight before this Accident fell out, Capt. Kidd met with a Ship on that Coast, that was called the Loyal Captain. And about a Fortnight after this, the Gunner was grinding a Chissel aboard the Adventure, on the high Sea near the Coast of Malabar, in the East-Indies.

Mr. Coniers. What was the Gunner's Name?

Joseph Palmer. William Moore: And Capt. Kidd came and walked on the Deck, and walks by this Moore; and when he came to him, says, Which way could you have put me in a Way to take this Ship, and been clear? Sir, says William Moore, I never spoke such a Word, nor ever thought such a Thing. Upon which Capt. Kidd called him a Loufy Dog. And says William Moore, If I am a Loufy Dog, you have made me so; you have brought me to Ruin, and many more.

more. Upon his saying this, says Captain Kidd, Have I ruin'd you, ye Dog? and took a Bucket bound with Iron Hoops, and struck him on the right Side of the Head, of which he died the next Day.

Mr. Cowper. What was the Gunner doing at that Time that he gave him the Blow?

Joseph Palmer. He was grinding a Chissel at the Time that he struck him.

Mr. Cowper. Did he give him the Blow immediately after he gave him that Answer?

Joseph Palmer. He walk'd two or three times backward and forward upon the Deck before he struck the Blow.

Mr. J. Turton. What did Captain Kidd say first?

Joseph Palmer. Which way could you have put me in a Way of taking this Ship, and been clear? Says the Gunner, I never said so, nor thought any such Thing.

Mr. Cowper. Hark you, Friend, explain that Matter.

Mr. Baron Hatfell. What was the Occasion of those Words;

Palmer. It was concerning this Ship.

L. C. B. Ward. What Ship was it? Name the Ship.

Palmer. It was the Loyal Captain. Captain Kidd said to William Moore, Which way could you have put me in the Way to have taken this Ship, and been clear? Says William Moore, I never said such a Thing, nor thought it. Upon that he call'd him Lousy Dog.

L. C. B. Ward. Was that Ship taken?

Palmer. No, she was gone.

Mr. Coniers. You say he call'd him Lousy Dog?

Palmer. Yes.

Mr. Coniers. What did William Moore say to him then?

Palmer. He said, If I am a Lousy Dog, you have brought me to it; you have ruin'd me and many more. Upon this, says Captain Kidd, Have I brought you to Ruin, you Dog? Repeating it two or three times over, and took a turn or two upon the Deck, and then takes up the Bucket, and strikes him on the Head.

Mr. Cowper. You say he made a turn or two on the Deck, and then struck him.

Palmer. Yes.

Mr. Coniers. Tell my Lord what pass'd next after the Blow.

Palmer. He was let down the Gun-room, and the Gunner said, Farewel, farewell, Captain Kidd has given me my last. And Captain Kidd stood on the Deck, and said, You're a Villain.

Mr. Cowper. How near was Captain Kidd to him when he said he had given him his last?

Palmer. He was near him.

Mr. Cowper. Was he within hearing of what Moore said?

Palmer. Yes, he was within seven or eight Foot.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you apprehend that he died of that Blow?

Palmer. He was in perfect Health before that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did the Surgeon think of it?

Palmer. The Surgeon is here.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see him afterwards?

Palmer. No, I did not see him after till he was dead.

Mr. Cowper. How did the Wound appear when you saw him?

Palmer. After he was dead, the Surgeon was call'd to open his Head, and Captain Kidd said, You are damn'd busy without Orders.

VOL. V.

Mr. Cowper. Tho' we ask you Questions, you must turn your Face there, towards the Jury. Give the Jury an Account of what you saw.

Palmer. I felt on his Head, and I felt something give way, and about the Wound there was a Bruise.

Mr. Cowper. You say you saw him when he was carried off, after the Blow; How did his Head appear then? Was he bloody?

Palmer. There was not much Blood came from him.

L. C. B. Ward. Was you by when these Words were spoken?

Palmer. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you see the Prisoner give the Blow with the Bucket upon those Words?

Palmer. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. How long was it before he went down the Deck?

Palmer. Presently.

L. C. B. Ward. Did he complain of the Wound?

Palmer. He said, Farewel, farewell, Captain Kidd has given me my last.

L. C. B. Ward. Was this Moore in a good Condition of Health before this Blow was given him?

Palmer. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. And afterwards he complain'd?

Palmer. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. When he was dead, what Marks were on his Head?

Palmer. On the right Side of his Head, on this Place (pointing to his own Head) it was bruised a considerable breadth; and in one Place I could feel the Skull give way.

Mr. Cowper. How long after the Blow did he die?

Palmer. The next Day following.

Mr. Cowper. And you say you saw him dead then?

Palmer. Yes, Sir.

L. C. B. Ward. Captain Kidd, if you will ask him any Questions, you may.

Kidd. My Lord, I would ask this Man what this Moore was doing when this thing happen'd?

L. C. B. Ward. Mr. Palmer, you hear what he says; What was Moore doing?

Palmer. He was grinding a Chissel.

Kidd. What was the Occasion that I struck him?

Palmer. The Words that I told you before.

Kidd. Was there no other Ship?

Palmer. Yes.

Kidd. What was that Ship?

Palmer. A Dutch Ship.

Kidd. What were you doing with the Ship?

Palmer. She was becalm'd.

Kidd. This Ship was a League from us, and some of the Men would have taken her, and I would not consent to it; and this Moore said I always hinder'd them making their Fortunes: Was not that the Reason I struck him? Was there a Mutiny on board?

Palmer. No; you chased this Dutchman, and in the way took a Malabar Boat, and chased this Ship all the whole Night; and they shew'd their Colours, and you put up your Colours.

Kidd. This is nothing to the Point: Was there no Mutiny aboard?

Palmer. There was no Mutiny, all was quiet.

Kidd. Was there not a Mutiny, because they would go and take that Dutchman?

Palmer. No, none at all.

Mr. Coniers. Call Robert Bradinbam.

Jury. What was the Cause that he struck him?

P p 2

Palmer.

Palmer. A Fortnight before this was done, we met with this Loyal Captain, of which Capt. Hoar was Commander, and he came on board Captain Kidd's Ship, and Captain Kidd went on board his, and then Captain Kidd let this Ship go. About a Fortnight after this, the Gunner was grinding his Chissel on the Deck, and Captain Kidd said to him, Which way could you have put me in a Way to take this Ship, and been clear? To which he reply'd, I never said such a Thing, nor thought of such a Thing. Whereupon Captain Kidd call'd the Gunner Loufy Dog; and, says Moore, If I am a Loufy Dog, you have made me so; you have brought me to Ruin, and a great many more. And says Captain Kidd, Have I brought you to Ruin, you Dog? and after struck him with the Bucket. These were all the Words that pass'd.

Mr. J. Powel. Was Captain Kidd aboard that Ship?

Palmer. Yes, and Captain Hoar was aboard him.

Mr. J. Powel. Was there any body nigh at that Time?

Palmer. Yes; there were eight or nine Men, that had Musquets and other Arms, and they were for taking the Ship, and Captain Kidd was against it, and so it was not done.

Kidd. My Lord, I was in the Cabin, and heard a Noise, and came out; and William Moore said, You ruin us, because you will not consent to take Captain Hoar's Ship. Says a Dutchman, I will put Captain Kidd in a Way to take this Ship, and come off fairly.

L. C. B. Ward. You may ask him any Questions you have a mind to, but you must reserve what you have to say for your self till you come to make your Defence.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Palmer, do you know of any other Provocation to strike him besides those Words?

Palmer. I know of no other Provocation.

Mr. Coniers. Set up Robert Bradinbam. (Who appear'd.) Mr. Bradinbam, in what Office was you in the Ship?

Bradinbam. I was Surgeon of the Ship.

Mr. Coniers. Of what Ship?

Bradinbam. The Adventure Galley, whereof Captain Kidd was Master.

Mr. Coniers. Was you there when the Blow was given?

Bradinbam. No.

Mr. Coniers. Was you sent for when Captain Kidd had given the Gunner the Wound upon the Head?

Bradinbam. I was sent for to his Assistance after he was wounded, and I came to him, and ask'd him how he did? he said, He was a dead Man, Captain Kidd had given him his last Blow. And I was by the Gun-room, and Captain Kidd was walking there, and I heard Moore say, Farewel, farewell, Captain Kidd has given me my last Blow; and Captain Kidd, when he heard it, said, Damn him, he is a Villain.

Mr. Coniers. Did you hear him say so?

Bradinbam. I did hear it.

Mr. Cowper. Was it in a way of Answer to what he said?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. How long did he live after the Blow?

Bradinbam. He died the next Day. The Wound was but small, the Skull was fractur'd.

Mr. Cowper. Do you believe he died of the Wound?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Had you any Discourse with Captain Kidd after this about this Man's Death.

Bradinbam. Some Time after this about two Months, by the Coast of Malabar, Captain Kidd said, I do not care so much for the Death of my Gunner as for other Passages of my Voyage; for I have good Friends in England, that will bring me off for that.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr. Kidd, will you ask him any Questions?

Kidd. I ask him, Whether he knew of any Difference between this Gunner and me before this happen'd?

Bradinbam. I knew of no Difference between them at all.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Kidd, Have you any Thing more to ask him?

Kidd. No.

Mr. Coniers. Then we have done for the King.

L. C. B. Ward. Then you may make your Defence. You are charg'd with Murder, and you have heard the Evidence that has been given, What have you to say for your self?

Kidd. I have Evidence to prove it is no such thing, if they may be admitted to come hither. My Lord, I will tell you what the Case was: I was coming up within a League of the Dutchman, and some of my Men were making a Mutiny about taking her, and my Gunner told the People he could put the Captain in a Way to take the Ship, and be safe. Says I, How will you do that? The Gunner answer'd, We will get the Captain and Men aboard. And what then? We will go aboard the Ship, and plunder her, and we will have it under their Hands that we did not take her. Says I, this is Judas like, I dare not do such a Thing. Says he, We may do it, we are Beggars already. Why, says I, may we take this Ship because we are Poor? Upon that a Mutiny arose: So I took up a Bucket, and just throw'd it at him, and said, You are a Rogue to make such a Motion. This I can prove, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. Call your Evidence.

Mr. Cowper. Mr. Palmer, was there any Mutiny in the Ship when this Man was killed?

Palmer. There was none.

L. C. B. Ward. Captain Kidd, call what Evidence you will.

Kidd. They are Prisoners; I desire they may be call'd up.

L. C. B. Ward. Whatever other Crimes they may be guilty of, they may be Witnesses for him in this Case.

Mr. Baron. Hatsell. Mr. Palmer, did he throw the Bucket at him, or strike him with it?

Palmer. He held it by the Strap in his Hand.

Kidd. Call Abel Owens. (Who appear'd.) Can you tell which Way this Bucket was thrown?

Mr. J. Powel. What was the Provocation of throwing this Bucket?

Owens. I was in the Cook-room, and hearing some Difference on the Deck, I came out, and the Gunner was grinding a Chissel on the Grindstone, and the Captain and he had some Words, and the Gunner said to the Captain, You have brought us to Ruin, and we are Desolate. And, says he, Have I brought you to Ruin? I have not brought you to Ruin, I have not done an ill Thing to ruin you; you are a sawcy Fellow to give me these Words. And then he took up the Bucket, and did give him the Blow.

Kidd. Was there not a Mutiny among the Men?

Owens. Yes, and the bigger part was for taking the the Ship; and the Captain said, You that will take the Dutch-man, you are the strongest, you may do what you please; if you will take her, you may take her; but if you go from aboard, you shall never come aboard again.

L. C. B. Ward. When was this Mutiny you speak off?

Abel Owens. When we were at Sea.

L. C. B. Ward. How long was it before this Man's Death?

Owens. About a Month.

Mr. J. Powel. At this Time when the Blow was given, did Moore the Gunner endeavour to make any Mutiny?

Owens. No.

Mr. J. Powel. Was there any Mutiny then?

Owens. None at all.

Kidd. Did not he say, He could put me in a Way to take the Dutchman, and be clear?

Owens. I know there were several of them would have done it, but you would not give Consent to it.

Kidd. No, but this was the Reason I threw the Bucket at him.

L. C. B. Ward. Captain Kidd, he tells you this was a Month before you struck him.

Jury. My Lord, we desire he may be asked, Whether he did throw the Bucket, or strike him with it?

L. C. B. Ward. Answer the Jury to that Question.

Owens. He took it with the Strap, and struck him with it.

Kidd. Did not I throw it at him?

Owens. No, I was near you when you did it.

Mr. Coniers. Did you see the Stroke given?

Owens. I did see the Stroke given.

L. C. B. Ward. Captain Kidd, Will you call any more?

Kidd. Yes, my Lord. Call Richard Barlicorn.

Mr. J. Powel. What Questions would you have him ask'd?

Kidd. R. Barlicorn, what was the Reason that Blow was given to the Gunner?

Barlicorn. At first when you met with the Ship, there was a Mutiny, and Two or Three of the Dutchmen came aboard; and some said, she was a rich Vessel, and they would take her: And the Captain said, No, I will not take her. And there was a Mutiny in the Ship, and the Men said, If you will not, we will. And he said, If you have a mind, you may; but they that will not, come along with me.

Kidd. Do you think William Moore was one of those that was for taking her.

Barlicorn. Yes.

L. C. B. Ward. How long was that before Moore died, do you know?

Barlicorn. No, I did not keep a Journal.

L. C. B. Ward. Was it after Moore died.

Barlicorn. No Sir, it was before Moore died.

Mr. Coniers. How long before?

Barlicorn. I believe it was about a Month or Three Weeks, I cannot tell which.

L. C. B. Ward. You say there was a Mutiny in the Ship, what was the Mutiny about?

Barlicorn. About taking the Ship.

L. C. B. Ward. What was the Ship's Name?

Barlicorn. The Loyal Captain. And the Captain said, If they take the Ship, they should never come aboard again.

L. C. B. Ward. Was you by when Moore received this Blow?

Barlicorn. No, I was not by then.

Kidd. Do you know of any Quarrel between this Moore and I before that Accident?

Barlicorn. No, I did not.

Mr. J. Powel. Was there any Mutiny in the Ship when this Moore died?

Barlicorn. They were talking of it.

Kidd. Was there not a Dutchman close by us, when this Blow was given?

Barlicorn. Yes, Sir.

Kidd. He was going to make another Mutiny, and I prevented him.

Mr. J. Powel. Did Moore endeavour to make any Mutiny at that Time?

Barlicorn. The Ship was gone at that Time.

Mr. J. Powel. How long had she been gone?

Barlicorn. About a Week.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Was there any Mutiny about the Dutch Ship you saw?

Barlicorn. The Dutch Ship? Not that I know of; but there was a Mutiny aboard the Loyal Captain.

Kidd. Do you not know of another Mutiny?

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Do you know of any other Mutiny?

Barlicorn. No.

Kidd. At that very time they were going to make a Mutiny?

L. C. B. Ward. Will you ask him any more Questions?

Kidd. What Discourse had I with Moore at that Time?

Barlicorn. I was aboard our Ship, but did not see the Blow given.

Kidd. They were saying they would take her, and he said, he could put me in a Way to take her, without coming to any harm.

L. C. B. Ward. What occasion could those Words be of a Mutiny?

Barlicorn. There were many of the Men would have gone with Arms, and taken that Ship without the Captain's Consent.

L. C. B. Ward. At that Time when this Moore was killed, was there any Mutiny?

Barlicorn. No.

L. C. B. Ward. When was it that Moore said, they might have taken this Ship?

Barlicorn. At the same Time when the Ship was in Company with us.

L. C. B. Ward. That was a Week or Fortnight before?

Barlicorn. No, Sir, the Loyal Captain was with in sight of us.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. What, when Moore was killed?

Barlicorn. No, not then. William Moore lay sick a great while before this Blow was given; and the Doctor said, when he visited him, This Blow was not the Cause of his Death.

L. C. B. Ward. Then they must be confronted. Do you hear, Bradinbam, what he says? He says you said, That Blow was not the Cause of his Death. Did you ever say so?

Bradinbam. My Lord, I never said so.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you see that young Man there?

Bradinbam. Yes, he was aboard the Ship.

L. C. B. Ward. Was Moore sick before that Blow?

Bradinbam.

Bradinbam. He was not sick at all before.

Barlicorn. He was sick sometime before, and this Blow did but just touch him; and the Doctor said, he did not die on the Occasion of this Blow.

Mr. J. Gold. Did you ever say so, Mr. Bradinbam?

Bradinbam. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say he did but just touch him; Were you present when the Blow was given?

Barlicorn. No, but I saw him after he was dead, and I was by when the Doctor said, he did not die of that Blow.

Mr. Cowper. What did he die of?

Barlicorn. I cannot tell, he had been sick before, we had many sick Men aboard.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did he lie after this Blow, before he died?

Barlicorn. I cannot tell justly how long it was.

L. C. B. Ward. How long do you think? You took notice of the Blow, how long did he live after that?

Barlicorn. I believe about a Week.

L. C. B. Ward. And the two Witnesses swore he died the next Day.

Barlicorn. I cannot tell justly how long he lived afterwards.

Jury. We desire to know whether he knew what was the Occasion of this Blow?

Barlicorn. All the Reason I can give is, because it was thought he was going to breed a Mutiny in the Vessel.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you hear of that by any body?

Kidd. Was Bradinbam in the Mutiny? Declare that.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr. Kidd, why do you ask that Question?

Kidd. I ask him whether Bradinbam was not in any Mutiny in the Ship.

L. C. B. Ward. Why do you ask that?

Barlicorn. If any Thing was to be, he was as forward as any one.

L. C. B. Ward. You say he was as forward as any; but it does not appear any one made a Mutiny at this time.

Barlicorn. I do not know, Sir.

L. C. B. Ward. Have you any more to call?

Kidd. My Lord, here is another Witness.

L. C. B. Ward. What is your Name?

Hugh Parrot. Hugh Parrot.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr. Kidd, what do you ask him?

Kidd. I ask you whether Bradinbam was in a Mutiny in my Ship.

Hugh Parrot. I cannot say whether he was or no.

L. C. B. Ward. Captain Kidd, you are tried for the Death of this Moore; now why do you ask this Question? What do you infer from hence? You will not infer, that if he was a Mutineer, it was lawful for you to kill Moore.

Kidd. Do you know the Reason why I struck Moore?

Hugh Parrot. Yes, because you did not take the Loyal Captain, whereof Captain Hoar was Commander.

L. C. B. Ward. Was that the Reason he struck Moore, because the Ship was not taken?

Hugh Parrot. I Shall tell you how it happen'd, according to the best of my Knowledge. My Commander fortun'd to come up with this Captain Hoar's Ship, and some were for taking her, and some not; and afterwards there was a little sort of Mutiny, and some rose in Arms, the greatest Part, and they said they would take this Ship, and the Commander was not for it; and so they resolv'd to go away in the Boat, and take her. Captain Kidd said, If you desert my Ship, you shall never come aboard again, and I will force you into Bombay, and I will carry you before some of the Council there: Infomuch as my Commander stilled them again, and they remained on Board. And about a Fortnight afterward there pass'd some Words between this William Moore and my Commander; and then says he, Captain, I could have put you in a Way to have taken this Ship, and been never the worse for it. He says, Would you have me take this Ship? I cannot answer it, they are our Friends; and my Commander was in a Passion; and with that I went off the Deck, and I understood afterwards the Blow was given, but how I cannot tell.

Mr. J. Powel. Captain Kidd, have you any more to ask him, or have you any more Witnesses to call?

Kidd. I could call all of them to testify the same thing, but I will not trouble you to call any more.

L. C. B. Ward. Have you any more to say for your self?

Kidd. I have no more to say, but I had all the Provocation in the World given me; I had no design to kill him, I had no Malice or Spleen against him.

L. C. B. Ward. That must be left to the Jury to consider the Evidence that has been given; you make out no such matter.

Jury-man. My Lord, I desire the Petitioner may give an Account, whether he did do any Thing in order to his Cure.

L. C. B. Ward. He is to be tried according to Law; the King's Evidence hath been heard, and he has the Liberty to produce what Evidence he can for himself; Will you put him to produce more Evidence than he can? If he has any more to say, it will be his Interest to say what he can; the Court is willing to hear him as long as he hath any Thing to offer for himself, either upon that Account or any Thing else.

Kidd. It was not designedly done, but in my Passion, for which I am heartily sorry.

L. C. B. Ward. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar, William Kidd, is Indicted for the Murder of William Moore, and whether he be guilty of this Murder, or not guilty, it is your part to determine on the Evidence that has been given. The Fact charged against him is this, That the Prisoner at the Bar, William Kidd, being the Commander of the Ship, called the Adventure-Galley, and the deceased William Moore the Gunner in that Ship; That upon the High Sea, near the Coast of Malabar, in the East-Indies, and within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, in October, in the Ninth Year of his Majesty's Reign, 1697, the Prisoner, William Kidd, out of his Malice fore-thought, did strike the Deceased, William Moore, with a Bucket hooped with Iron, on the right Side of the Head, and that that Blow was the Occasion of the Death of the said William Moore; that this was done on the 30th of October, and that his Death ensued on the 31st of October, being the next Day. This is the Fact charged upon him.

Now

Now you have heard the Evidence that has been given on the King's Part, and you will weigh it well. You hear the first Witness that has been produc'd on behalf of the King, is Joseph Palmer. He tells you he was present on board this Ship, at the Time when the Blow was given: And he says, there had been some Discourse between the Prisoner William Kidd, and the Deceased Moore, concerning taking a Ship, that was called the Loyal Captain, and that Captain Kidd said to him, How could you have put me in a Way to take that Ship, and be clear? No, says Moore, I said no such Thing. The Reply Captain Kidd made to him was, He was a Lousy Rogue. The Answer of the Deceased was this, If I am so, you have made me so; you have ruined me and a great many others. With that, says Captain Kidd, Have I ruined you, you Dog? And up he took a Bucket hoop'd with Iron, and gave him a Blow on the right Side of his Head. And thereupon he complained and said, You have given me my last Blow. And then Moore went down below Deck, and he saw him no more till the next Day, and then he was dead; and he felt upon his Head, and perceived a Bruise in one Part of it, as broad as a Shilling, and he felt the Skull was broke; and he does take on him to say, that he believes that Blow was the Occasion of his Death. Being ask'd, Whether he knew in what State of Health he was before? he says, He was in a healthy Condition; he was grinding a Chissel at that Time when the Blow was given; and that Blow he believes was the Occasion of his Death. And being asked, Whether he heard any other Words, or saw or knew any Thing that could be any Cause of Provocation? he says, He knew no more than the Reply of the Party deceased; If I am a lousy Dog, you have made me so, and have been my Ruin: And then having taken two or three Turns upon the Deck, he gave him the Blow; and then Moore went down the Deck, and used these Words, You have given me my last Blow, or to that Effect.

Gentlemen, You have heard the Surgeon also, Robert Bradinham; and he tells you, He did not see the Blow given, but he was sent for after, and the Deceased said, Captain Kidd had given him his last Blow: And thereupon he did examine him as a Surgeon, and does believe that Blow on the Head was the Occasion of his Death; and he did observe it as well as he could.

Juryman. My Lord, I think Bradinham said, He was not then by when the Prisoner gave the Blow.

L. B. C. Ward. I did not say he was: He says He was sent for after the Blow; and when he came, the Deceased said, he gave it him, and what would be the Consequence.

Now these two being cross-examined by the Prisoner, William Kidd, whether they did not know of some Mutiny in the Ship, that might be the Occasion of his giving this Blow; they have told both their Stories, of what Discourse there was of taking this Ship, the Loyal Captain, and of what Design there was upon the Dutch Ship after. Now the first of these was a Fortnight before this happen'd, and the other a Week; so that there was then no Occasion of Mutiny, nor do they know of any Mutiny at that Time.

Now, Gentlemen, he has produced for himself three Witnesses. The first that he calls is Abel Owens; and this Witness has not in his Testimony made for the Prisoner, but in effect confirmed what the other Witnesses for the King said: For he tells you he was by when the Blow was given, and gives you an Account how this Thing was; That there was some Discourse between them, much what to the Effect aforesaid, both as to what Capt. Kidd said to Moore, and what Moore replied; and that Capt. Kidd should say to Moore, You are a saucy Fellow, or to that Purpose; and Moore said, You have ruined me, and a great many others; and with that the Prisoner took up the Bucket, and struck him with it. And he being asked, If there were any Provocation or Occasion why this Blow was given, and whether there was any Mutiny at that Time, as he pretended? he says, He knew of none, only he speaks of one about a Month before.

They have call'd two other Witnesses; one is Richard Barlicorn; he is the Prisoner's Servant; and though he be his Servant, yet the Law allows him to be a Witness for him, and the Credit of his Testimony is left to you. Now what has he said? He has told you something different Stories. He thinks there was a Mutiny in the Ship. And being ask'd about what Time? he thinks it was about a Month or three Weeks before; and, upon further Examination, faith, there was no Mutiny when Moore was killed. He is willing to say what he can for his Master, and believes Mr. Kidd did not design to do any Harm to that Man; for he heard the Surgeon say, that Blow was not the Occasion of his Death. Now, in Contradiction to that, Bradinham, the Surgeon, says, he never did say so, but believes that this Blow was the Occasion of his Death. You have heard what Objections the young Man's Testimony is liable to, and you will consider his whole Evidence.

The last Witness the Prisoner has called, is Hugh Parrot. He says, there was something of these Words, and that the Deceased did say, he could have put the Captain in a Way to have taken the Ship; and hereupon Words arose, and the Captain was in a Passion; and that then he went away, and understood afterwards the Blow was given, but how he could not tell.

Now, Gentlemen, this being the Matter of Fact, the Prisoner is indicted upon it for Murder. Now to make the killing of a Man to be Murder, there must be Malice prepenſe, either express or implied: The Law implies Malice, when one Man, without any reasonable Cause or Provocation, kills another. You have had this Fact opened to you. What Mutiny or Discourse might be a Fortnight or Month before, will not be any Reason or Cause for so long Continuance of a Passion. But what did arise at that Time, the Witnesses tell you. The first Witness tells you, the first Words that were spoken, were by Mr. Kidd; and upon his Answer, Mr. Kidd calls him Lousy Dog. The Reply was, If I am so, you have made me so; you have ruined me, and a great many more. Now, Gentlemen, I leave it to you to consider whether that could be a reasonable Occasion or Provocation for him to take a Bucket, and knock him on the Head and kill him. You have heard the Witnesses have made it out that he was a healthy Man, and they are of Opinion that the Blow was the Occasion of his Death. Now for the Prisoner, or

on such a Saying, and without any other Provocation, to take a Bucket and knock the Deceased on the Head, and kill him, must be esteem'd an unjustifiable Act: For, as I said, if one Man kill another without Provocation, or reasonable Cause, the Law presumes and implies Malice; and then such killing will be Murder, in the Sense of the Law, as being done out of Malice prepenſe. If there be a sudden falling out, and fighting, and one is killed in heat of Blood, then our Law calls it Manſlaughter: But in such a Case as this, that happens on slight Words, the Prisoner called the Deceased a Louſy Dog; and the Deceased said, If I be ſo, you have made me ſo; Can this be a reasonable Cause to kill him? And if you believe them to be no reasonable Cause of Provocation, and that this Blow was given by the Prisoner, and was the Occaſion of Moore's Death, as the Witneſſes alledge, I cannot ſee what Diſtinction can be made, but that the Prisoner is guilty of Murder. Indeed, if there had been a Mutiny at that Time, and he had ſtruck him at the Time of the Mutiny, there might have been a reaſonable Cause for him to plead in his Defence, and it ought to have been taken into Conſideration; but it appears, that what Mutiny there was, was a Fortnight at leaſt before: Therefore, Gentlemen, I muſt leave it to you: If you believe the King's Witneſſes, and one of the Prisoner's own, that this Blow was given by the Prisoner in manner aforeſaid, and are ſatisfied that it was done without reaſonable Cause or Provocation, then he will be guilty of Murder: And if you do believe him guilty of Murder, upon this Evidence, you muſt find him ſo: If not, you muſt acquit him.

Kidd. My Lord, I have Witneſſes to produce for my Reputation.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr. Kidd, we gave you Time to make your Defence? Why did not you produce them? You were aſked more than once, if you had any more to ſay; and you ſaid, you would call no more Witneſſes.

Kidd. I can prove what Service I have done for the King.

L. C. B. Ward. You ſhould have ſpoken ſooner: But what would that help in this Caſe of Murder? You ſaid you had no more to ſay before I began.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury, and about an Hour after the Jury returned, and gave in their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, answer to your Names. Nath. Long.

Nath. Long. Here, &c.

Cl. of Arr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict? Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. William Kidd, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner. Is he guilty of the Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Look to him, Keeper.

The

The Trial of William Kidd, Nicholas Churchill, James Howe, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loffe, Hugh Parrot, Richard Barlicorn, Abel Owens, and Darby Mullins, for Piracy and Robbery, on a Ship called the Quedagh Merchant.

THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, do, upon their Oath, present, That William Kidd, late of London, Mariner; Nicholas Churchill, late of London, Mariner; James Howe, late of London, Mariner; Robert Lamley, late of London, Mariner; William Jenkins, late of London, Mariner; Gabriel Loffe, late of London, Mariner; Hugh Parrot, late of London, Mariner; Richard Barlicorn, late of London, Mariner; Abel Owens, late of London, Mariner; and Darby Mullins, late of London, Mariner; The 30th Day of January, in the Ninth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord, William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. by Force and Arms, &c. upon the High Sea, in a certain Place distant about ten Leagues from Cuttween, in the East-Indies, and within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, did piratically and feloniously set upon, board, break, and enter a certain Merchant Ship, called the Quedagh Merchant, then being a Ship of certain Persons (to the Jurors aforesaid unknown); and then and there piratically and feloniously, did make an Assault in and upon certain Mariners (whose Names to the Jurors aforesaid are unknown) in the same Ship, in the Peace of God, and of our said now Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being, piratically and feloniously did put the aforesaid Mariners of the same Ship, in the Ship aforesaid, upon the High Sea, in the Place aforesaid, distant about ten Leagues from Cuttween aforesaid, in the East-Indies aforesaid, and within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, piratically and feloniously, did steal, take, and carry away the said Merchant Ship, called the Quedagh Merchant, and the Apparel and Tackle of the same Ship, of the Value of 400 l. of lawful Money of England; seventy Chests of Opium, of the Value of 1400 l. of lawful Money of England; two Hundred and fifty Bags of Sugar, of the Value of 100 l. of lawful Money of England; twenty Bales of raw Silk, of the Value of 400 l. of lawful Money of England; an hundred Bales of Callicoes, of the Value of 200 l. of lawful Money of England; two hundred Bales of Muslins, of the Value of 1000 l. of lawful Money of England; and three Bales of Romels, of the Value of 30 l. of lawful Money of England; the Goods and Chattels of certain Persons (to the Jurors aforesaid unknown) then and there, upon the High Sea aforesaid, in the aforesaid Place, distant about ten Leagues from Cuttween aforesaid, in the East-Indies aforesaid, and within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, being found in the aforesaid Ship, in the Custody and Possession of the said Mariners in the same Ship, from the said Mariners of the said Ship, and from their Custody and Possession, then and there, upon the High Sea aforesaid, in the Place aforesaid, distant about ten Leagues from Cuttween aforesaid, in the East-Indies aforesaid, and within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, against the Peace of our said now Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

VOL. V.

Cl. of Arr. SET William Kidd, Nicholas Churchill, &c. to the Bar. (And so of the rest.) Will. Kidd, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did, and so the rest.)

You the Prisoners at the Bar, those Men that you shall hear call'd, and that personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your several Lives and Deaths. If therefore you, or any of you, will challenge any of them, your Time is to speak to them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

And there being no Challenges, the Twelve that were sworn on the Jury were as follow:

John Cooper,	}	P. Walker,
Jo. Hall,		William Hunt,
Jo. James,		John Micklethwait,
Peter Parker,		Richard Chiswell,
Caleb Hook,		Abraham Hickman,
R. Rider,		George Grove.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer. Count these: John Cooper. Cryer. One, &c. Twelve good Men and true, stand together, and hear your Evidence.

Then the usual Proclamation for Information was made; and the Prisoners being bid to hold up their Hands, the Clerk of Arraignments charg'd the Jury with them thus:

Cl. of Arr. You of the Jury, look upon the Prisoners, and hearken to their Cause. They stand indicted by the Names of William Kidd, &c. (as before in the Indictment.) Upon this Indictment they have been Arraign'd, and thereunto have severally pleaded, Not Guilty; and for their Trial put themselves on God and their Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is, to enquire whether they be guilty of the Piracy and Robbery whereof they stand indicted in Manner and Form as they stand indicted, or not guilty, &c.

Nic. Churchill. My Lord, I beg your Opinion, whether I may not plead the King's Pardon?

L. C. B. Ward. Let us see your Pretences: You shall have all legal Defences and Advantages allowed to you.

Nic. Churchill. I came in upon his Majesty's Proclamation.

L. C. B. Ward. Have you the King's Proclamation? If you have, let us see it.

Churchill. We had Notice of it at Guiana, and we deliver'd up our selves to Col. Bafs, Governor of East-Jersey, and I have it under his Hand. I beg your Lordship would appoint me Council to plead my Case.

The Paper was shewn, and read.

Mr. Crawley. I know not when it was.

Churchill. I had Notice of it at Guiana: I have been two Years in Custody.

Q q

L. C. B. Ward.

L. C. B. Ward. How long have you been a Prisoner?

Churchill. Almost two Years; two Years next July.

L. C. B. Ward, and the rest of the Judges. The Proclamation (for what you say your self) does not reach your Case.

Howe, Churchill, Mullins. We came in, upon the Proclamation, all the same Day.

Mr. J. Powel. How can you make it appear you surrender'd?

Prisoners. Here is an Affidavit made of it by the Governor's Secretary; and there's the Gentleman himself, Col. Baſs.

Mr. J. Powel. You must make it out, that you have come in within the Conditions of that Proclamation, if you have any Benefit by it.

L. C. B. Ward. Let the Proclamation be read. (Which was done accordingly; and it here follows:

By the KING, a Proclamation.

William R.

*W*hereas We being informed, by the frequent Complaints of our good Subjects trading to the East-Indies, of several wicked Practices committed on those Seas, as well upon our own Subjects as those of our Allies, have therefore thought fit (for the Security of the Trade of those Countries, by an utter Extirpation of the Pirates in all Parts Eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, as well beyond Cape Comorin as on this side of it, unless they shall forthwith surrender themselves, as is herein after directed) to send out a Squadron of Men of War, under the Command of Captain Thomas Warren. Now We, to the Intent that such who have been guilty of any Acts of Piracy in those Seas, may have Notice of our most gracious Intention, of extending our Royal Mercy to such of them as shall surrender themselves, and to cause the severest Punishment according to Law to be inflicted upon those who shall continue obstinate, have thought fit, by the Advice of our Privy Council, to issue this Proclamation; hereby Requiring and Commanding all Persons who have been guilty of any Act of Piracy, or any ways Aiding or Assisting therein, in any Place Eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, to surrender themselves within the several respective Times herein after limited, unto the said Captain Thomas Warren, and the Commander in chief of the said Squadron for the Time being, and to Israel Hayes, Peter Dellanoye, and Christopher Pollard, Esquires, Commissioners appointed by Us for the said Expedition, or to any Three of them, or, in case of Death, to the major Part of the Survivors of them. And We do hereby declare, That We have been graciously pleas'd to empower the said Captain Thomas Warren, and the Commander in chief of the said Squadron for the Time being, Israel Hayes, Peter Dellanoye, and Christopher Pollard, Esquires, Commissioners aforesaid, or any Three of them, or, in case of Death, to the major Part of the Survivors of them, to give Assurance of our most gracious Pardon unto all such Pirates in the East-Indies, viz. all Eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, who shall surrender themselves for Piracies or Robberies committed by them upon the Sea or Land; Except nevertheless such as they shall commit in any Place whatsoever after Notice of our Grace and Favour hereby declared; And also excepting all such Piracies and Robberies as shall be committed from the Cape of Good Hope Eastward, to the Longitude or Meridian of Socatora, after the last Day of April, 1699, and in any Place from the Longitude or Meridian of Socatora Eastward, to the Longitude or Meridian of Cape Comorin, after the last Day of June, 1699, and in any Place whatsoever Eastward of Cape Comorin after the last Day of July, 1699; And also excepting Henry Every alias Bridgman, and William Kidd.

Given at our Court at Kenſington, the Eighth Day of December, 1698, in the Tenth Year of our Reign.

GOD save the KING.

Clerk. There is no Day mention'd in this Paper when they surrender'd themselves.

Mr. Moxon. My Lord, about the Year 1698, there was a Special Commission given to four Persons, and they were to proceed in their Voyage to the Indies, and they carried a great Number of Proclamations, That all the Pirates in such and such Places should surrender themselves: Now they came to St. Helena with them, and Captain Warren was sent to St. Mary's, and he was to deliver some of these Proclamations there, and the Commissioner had then the Ambassador to the Great Mogul on board, and this Captain Warren these Proclamations. Warren comes and delivers the Proclamations out, and, among the rest, the Prisoner at the Bar having Notice of this, he goes to the Governor, and confesses he had been a Pirate, and desired them to take Notice that he surrendered himself; and we have the Governor here, to give an Account of this Matter.

L. C. B. Ward. The Proclamation says, They must surrender themselves to such and such Persons by Name: See if it be not so. (Then the Proclamation was read again.) Here are several Qualifications mentioned; you must bring your selves under them, if you would have the Benefit of it.

Dr. Newton. Let them shew that they surrender'd themselves to the Persons they were to surrender to.

Mr. Moxon. My Lord, we will prove we gave Notice within the Time, by this Paper.

Mr. Soll. Gen. There is no Time mention'd in it. (The Affidavit was read.) Charles Hally, Gent. maketh Oath, That in the Year 98, there being Notice of his Majesty's Gracious Pardon to such Pirates as should surrender themselves, James Howe, Nicholas Churchill, and Darby Mullins, in May, 1699, did surrender themselves to Jeremiah Baſs, and he did admit them to Bail.

L. C. B. Ward. There are Four Commissioners named in the Proclamation: There is no Governor mention'd that is to receive them, only those Four Commissioners.

Mr. Moxon. But, my Lord, consider the Nature of this Proclamation, and what was the Design of it, which was, to invite Pirates to come in.

Mr. Coniers. We must keep you to the Proclamation: Here is not enough to put off the Trial.

L. C. B. Ward. If you had brought your selves within the Case of the Proclamation, we should be very glad: You that offer it, must consider it is a Special Proclamation, with divers Limitations; tions; and if you would have the Benefit of it, you must bring your selves under the Conditions of it. Now there are Four Commissioners named, that you ought to surrender to; but you have not surrendered to any one of these, but to Colonel Bass, and there is no such Man mentioned in this Proclamation.

Mr. Knapp. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, the Indictment sets forth, That the Prisoners at the Bar, on the Thirtieth of January, in the Ninth Year of his Majesty's Reign, ten Leagues distant from Cutbeem, did Piratically seize and rob a certain Ship call'd, The Quedagh Merchant, and put the Men in fear of their Lives; and the said Ship, with her Apparel, Tackle, and Goods, did then and there, upon the High Sea, take and carry away, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity: To this Indictment they have pleaded, Not guilty: If we prove it upon them, you must find them guilty.

Dr. Newton, Advocate for the Admiralty. My Lord, and Gentlemen, the Prisoners at the Bar, Captain William Kidd, late Commander of the Adventure Galley, and Nine other Mariners in the same Vessel, stand indicted for feloniously and piratically assaulting and taking a Ship, call'd The Quedagh Merchant, on the High Sea near Cutbeem, in the East-Indies, about the Thirtieth of January, in the Ninth Year of his Majesty's Reign: The Ship was considerable for its Force and Bulk, being about four hundred Tun; and more considerable for its Lading, having on board to the Value of many Thousand Pounds.

This Captain Kidd, who thus acted the Pirate himself, went from England in April, 1699, with a Commission, dated the 26th of January preceeding, to take and seize Pirates in the Indian Seas, which were then very much and very dangerously infested by them, to the great Hazard, and Loss, and Ruin of the Merchant.

The Ship carry'd thirty Guns, and there were on board about eighty Men; but the Captain being come to New-York, in July 96, pretending, as indeed it was design'd he should, and he had undertaken to make that Design good, that he was going to Madagascar (which was the known and common Receptacle of the Pirates in those Seas) to take Pirates, and free the Seas from those Disturbers of the Commerce of Mankind; so many came in to him, being invited by Articles publickly set up by him in that Place, that his Number quickly encreas'd to one hundred and fifty-five Men; a Force sufficient, if he had meant well, to have made him useful to the Publick; and to prove as mischievous, if his Designs were otherwise: And what those were, will quickly appear.

After calling in at several Places for Provisions, and, among others, at Madagascar, in July 97, he sail'd to Bobs-Key, a small Island at the Entrance of the Red-Sea, and a convenient Station for the observing what Vessels went from thence to the Indies; and now, instead of taking Pirates, he becomes one himself, and the greatest and the worst of all. Here he staid three Weeks, in expectation of the Mocca Fleet, to make his Benefit and his Fortune out of it; for, whatever he had before pretended, this was his real Design, and now so possess'd his Mind, that he could not refrain from declaring, and that often, to his

VOL. V.

Men; That now he should make his Voyage, and ballast his Ship with Gold and Silver. After long Expectation, the Fleet, on the 14th of August, to the Number of Fourteen, came by; he fell in with the middle of them, fir'd several Guns at 'em; but finding they had an English and Dutch Convoy, that Design happily fail'd of the wish'd-for Success.

This Disappointment however did not discourage him, but that he proceeded on for the Coast of Malabar, where he knew the Trade was considerable, and hoped his Advantage would be proportionable in the disturbing it; and there accordingly, for several Months, he committed many great Piracies and Robberies, taking the Ships and Goods of the Indians and others at Sea, Moors and Christians, and torturing cruelly their Persons, to discover if any Thing had escaped his Hands; burning their Houses, and killing, after a barbarous manner, the Natives on the Shore; equally cruel, dreaded and hated both on the Land and at Sea.

These Criminal Attempts and Actions had rendered his Name (to the Disgrace and the Prejudice of the English Nation) too well known, and deservedly detested, in those remote Parts of the World; and he was now look'd upon as an Arch-Pirate, and the common Enemy of Mankind; and accordingly two Portuguese Men of War went out in pursuit of him, and one met with him and fought him for several Hours; but Kidd's Fortune then reserv'd him for another manner of Trial.

Amongst the great Number of Vessels he took on that Coast, was the Ship he stands indicted for, The Quedagh Merchant, being then on a trading Voyage from Bengal to Surat, the Commander English, Captain Wright, the Owners Armenian Merchants, and others. He had taken Moors before, but Moors and Christians ate all alike to Pirates, they distinguish not Nations and Religions.

Those on board the Vessel offer'd Thirty thousand Rupees for her Ransom, but the Ship was too considerable to be parted with, even for so great a Sum; so Kidd sold Goods out of her, on the neighbouring Coast, to the Value of Ten or Twelve thousand Pounds, out of which he took whatever he could pretend to for Ammunition and Provisions, with forty Shares for himself, and the Remainder was disposed of amongst the Crew, and particularly those who are here indicted with him, who accompanied him, who assisted him throughout in all his Piracies, and who now too share the Spoils and the Guilt with him.

With this Ship and another, and the Remainder of the Goods not sold on the Coast, he sail'd once more for Madagascar, where he arrived in the Beginning of May 98, and there again what was left on board was divided according to the same Proportions, and amongst the same Persons as before, each Mariner having about three Bales to his Share.

Then the Jury brought in their Verdict against William Kidd, for Murder: And Dr. Newton proceeded.

It is not to be omitted, That at his Return to Madagascar, there came on board him some Persons from the Ship The Resolution, formerly the

Qq 2

Mocca

Mocca Frigate (for the piratical seizing of which Vessel there have been formerly Trials and Convictions in this Place) of which Captain Culliford, a notorious Pirate, now in Custody, and against whom two Bills have been found for Piracy, by the Grand-Jury, was the Commander. They at first seem'd to be afraid of Kidd, but without any Ground; as his former Actions had demonstrated, and the Sequel shewed: They, who were harden'd Pirates, and long inured to Villanies, could scarce think that any Man could so betray the Trust and Confidence the Publick had placed in him, and said, They heard he was come to take and hang them; but Captain Kidd assur'd them, that he had no such Design, and that he had rather his Soul should broil in Hell, than do them any Harm; bid them not be afraid, and swore he would be true to them; and here, indeed, he did not break his Word. This was his Way of being true to his Trust, and making good the Ends of his Commission, in acting with the greatest Treachery, and the greatest Falseness, that ever Man did: And, to make all that has been represented of him true, Captain Kidd and Captain Culliford went on board, treated, and presented each other; and, instead of taking Culliford, as it was his Duty to have done, and his Force was sufficient to have perform'd it, he gave him Money and Ammunition, two Great Guns and Shot, and other Necessaries to fit him out to Sea, that he might be in a Condition the better to take and seize other innocent Persons.

His own Ship he now left, and went on board the Quedagh Merchant; several of his Men then went from him, but not the Prisoners, they were all along Well-wishers and Assistants to him, fought for him, divided the Plunder with him, and are now come to be try'd with him.

This, Gentlemen, is the Crime he is indicted for, Piracy; the growing Trouble, Disturbance, and Mischief of the Trading World, and the peaceable Part of Mankind, the Scandal and Reproach of the European Nations, and the Christian Name (I wish I could not say, that the Kidds and the Averys had not made it more particularly so of the English) amongst Mahometans and Pagans, in the extremest Parts of the Earth; which turns not only to the Disadvantage of the immediate Sufferers, but of all such as traffick in those Countries, whether Companies or single Merchants, who are to suffer for the Misfortunes of others, with whom, it may be, they have no Dealings, and for the Villainies of such, whom they and all Mankind equally and justly detest and abhor.

This is the Person that stands indicted at that Bar, than whom no one in this Age has done more Mischief, in this worst kind of Mischief; or has occasioned greater Confusion and Disorder, attended with all the Circumstances of Cruelty and Falshood, and a Complication of all manner of Ill.

If therefore these Facts shall be prov'd upon him, you will then, Gentlemen, in finding him guilty, do Justice to the injured World, the English Nation (our common Country) whose Interest and Welfare so much depend on the Increase and Security of Trade; and, lastly, to your selves, whom the Law has made Judges of the Fact.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council for the King, against the Prisoners at the Bar, in this Case, with the Doctor that has open'd the Matter from the Beginning. These Prisoners at the Bar went out with Commissions for good Purposes, tho' they made use of them to very bad ones. Gentlemen of the Jury, I must tell you, The Charge upon which you are to enquire, is only upon a certain Ship, call'd The Quedagh Merchant, and to that we shall apply our Evidence. What was taken in her has been open'd already: All we will do now, is to call our Witnesses, and make out, to your Satisfaction, the Things charg'd upon them.

Mr. Coniers. My Lord, we shall prove this Charge by the Persons that were Evidence before, Robert Bradinbam, and Joseph Palmer: They went out with Captain Kidd in his Voyage, and he began it in April, 1696. I believe 'twill be necessary, that they give some Account before this Piracy was committed, which was not, in Time, till February, 1697. They will give you an Account of some Plunders that happen'd before this, and then of the taking of this Ship, and the dividing it amongst them.

Mr. J. Powel. When went they out?

Mr. Coniers. They began their Voyage in April, 1696, and took this Ship in February, 1697. They did, all along that Voyage, commit several Plunders on several Ships they thought a Prey: Their Design was, not to take Pirates, but to take what they could get out of any Ships, Friends or Enemies; for in this Ship, The Quedagh Merchant, which was a Moorish Ship, there were several Armenians; and they offered them a great Sum of Money to redeem the Ship, but they refus'd it; and they disposed of the Goods, and divided the Money; and for the Proof of that, we will call Mr. Bradinbam.

Mr. J. Powel. I understand, that he had a Commission; therefore if any one has a Commission, and he acts according to it, he is not a Pirate; but if he take a Commission for a Colour, that he may be a Pirate, it will be bad indeed: And therefore, if you can prove, that he was a Pirate all along, this will be a great Evidence against him.

Mr. Coniers. My Lord, we will prove that; so that the Commission was but a Colour. Mr. Bradinbam, pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account when you began your Voyage, and your Proceedings afterwards.

Bradinbam. Some time in the Year 1696, about the Beginning of May, I and others were with Captain Kidd; and we sail'd from Plymouth, designing for New-York; and in the Way we met with a French Banker, and took her.

Mr. Coniers. Tell the Court what Ship it was you went in, and with whom.

Bradinbam. We went with Captain Kidd, in the Adventure Galley.

Mr. Coniers. What Number of Men had you when you went first out?

Bradinbam. About seventy or eighty Men.

Mr. Coniers. What Force of Guns had you?

Bradinbam. We had thirty Guns.

Mr. Coniers. In what Office was Captain Kidd in the Ship?

Bradinbam. He was the Commander of her.

Mr. Coniers. Now tell my Lord and the Jury what Time you left England, and how you proceeded.

Bradinbam.

Bradinbam. In May, 1696, we left Plymouth, and went to New-York, and in the Way met with a French Ship, and took her: And when we came to New-York, Captain Kidd put up Articles, That if any Men would enter themselves on board his Ship, they should have their Shares of what should be taken; and he himself was to have Forty Shares.

Mr. Coniers. What Number of Men did he get after these Articles were publish'd?

Bradinbam. He carried from New-York an Hundred and fifty-five Men.

Mr. Coniers. Whither did he sail then?

Bradinbam. To the Madera's, from thence to Bonavis, from thence to St. Jago, from thence to Madagascar, from thence to Joanna, from thence to Mabala, from Mabala to Joanna again, and from thence to the Red-Sea; and there we waited for the Mocca Fleet: They passed us one Night, and we pursued them, and went among them, but he found they were too strong for him, and was fain to leave them.

Mr. Cowper. How long did you lie in wait for that Fleet?

Bradinbam. A Fortnight or three Weeks.

Mr. Cowper. Did he express himself so, That he did lie in wait for that Fleet?

Bradinbam. Yes; he said, that he did design to make a Voyage out of them.

Mr. Cowper. Did he not lie in wait for any French Effects in that Fleet?

Bradinbam. No, only for the Moorish Fleet.

Mr. Cowper. What do you mean by the Moorish Fleet?

Bradinbam. The Natives of India, the Mabometans.

Mr. Cowper. Where did you lie in wait for that Fleet?

Bradinbam. In the Red-Sea.

Mr. Cowper. In the Mouth of it?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Is it a fit Place for that Purpose?

Bradinbam. Several Sail of Ships may lie there.

Mr. Cowper. Did you expect them?

Bradinbam. Yes; Captain Kidd waited for them.

Mr. Coniers. How long did you stay there?

Bradinbam. About a Fortnight.

Mr. Coniers. Did you do any thing in that time to get Intelligence?

Bradinbam. Captain Kidd sent his Boat three times to Mocca, to see if they could make any Discovery; and the two first times they could make none; but the third time they brought word the Ships were ready to sail; and accordingly they came, and we failed after them, and fell in with them, and Captain Kidd fired at them.

Mr. Cowper. You say, he sent his Boat three times for Intelligence: Can you remember what Answer they brought?

Bradinbam. The two first times they brought no Intelligence; but the third time they brought Word, that fourteen or fifteen Ships were ready to sail.

Mr. Coniers. What Colours did they say they had?

Bradinbam. I cannot tell that. When Captain Kidd had fetched them up, he found they were under Convoy, and so he left them: And then he was going to the Coast of Malabar, and by the Way met with Capt. Parker.

Mr. J. Powel. Did they fire any Guns at the Mocca Fleet?

Bradinbam. Yes; Capt. Kidd fired divers Guns at them.

Mr. Coniers. After such time as you left the Mocca Fleet, what happen'd after that? Recollect your self.

Bradinbam. We took a Ship, that Capt. Parker was Commander of, between Carawar and the Red-Sea.

Mr. Coniers. What Ship was this that Captain Parker was Commander of?

Bradinbam. A Moorish Ship, she came from Bombay, and Capt. Parker was the Master.

Mr. Coniers. What did you take from this Ship?

Bradinbam. Capt. Kidd took out Parker, and a Portuguese for a Linguister.

Mr. Coniers. A Linguister, What do you mean by that?

Bradinbam. An Interpreter; he took out of her a Bale of Coffee, a Bale of Pepper, about twenty Pieces of Arabian Gold, and ordered some Men to be taken and hoisted up by their Arms, and drub'd with a naked Cutlace.

Mr. Coniers. Why did he do that?

Bradinbam. That they might confess what Moneey they had.

Mr. Coniers. Were those Frenchmen that were thus used?

Bradinbam. No, they were Moors.

Mr. Coniers. Was there any Demand made of those Men, Capt. Parker, and the Portuguese?

Bradinbam. Yes; the English Factory sent for this Parker and the Portuguese, and he deny'd that he had any such Persons on board, for he kept them in a Hole.

Mr. Coniers. Do you know any Thing more?

Bradinbam. Then he went to Sea, and that Night he met with a Portuguese Man of War; the next Morning he came up with her, and the Portuguese first fired at Captain Kidd, and he at him again; they fought four or five Hours. Capt. Kidd had ten Men wounded.

Mr. Coniers. So that there was nothing more than Fighting?

Bradinbam. No.

Mr. Coniers. Go on. What did you do next?

Bradinbam. We went to the Coast of Malabar.

Mr. Coniers. What did you go thither for?

Bradinbam. We went to one of the Malabar Islands for Wood and Water, and Captain Kidd went a-shore, and several of his Men, and plundered several Boats, and burnt several Houses, and ordered one of the Natives to be ty'd to a Tree, and one of his Men to shoot him.

Mr. Coniers. Pray go on: What was the Reason of his shooting this Indian?

Bradinbam. One of his Men, that was his Cooper, had been a-shore, and some of the Natives had cut this Man's Throat, and that was the Reason he ordered his Men to serve this Man so.

Mr. Coniers. Pray go on, and give an Account of what afterwards.

Bradinbam. Then we came back again to the Malabar Coast, and cruised; and in October he killed his Gunner, William Moore.

Mr.

Mr. Coniers. Tell what happened next after that.

Mr. Cowper. Was this the October next after he left England, or the Year following?

Bradinbam. It was in October, 1697.

Mr. Coniers. Well, go on.

Bradinbam. Some time in November he took a Moorish Ship belonging to Surat; there were two Dutchmen belonging to her, the rest were Moors. Captain Kidd chased this Ship under French Colours; and when the Dutchman saw that, he put out French Colours too. And Captain Kidd came up with them, and commanded them on board; and he ordered a Frenchman to come upon Deck, and to pretend himself Captain: And so this Commander comes aboard, and comes to this Monsieur Le Roy that was to pass for the Captain, and he shews him a Paper, and said it was a French Pass. And Captain Kidd said, By God, Have I catch'd you? You are a free Prize to England. We took two Horses, some Quilts, &c. and the Ship he carried to Madagascar. In December he took a Moorish Ketch; she was taken by the Boat; we had one Man wounded in taking of her.

Mr. Coniers. When was this done?

Bradinbam. In December, 1697.

Mr. Coniers. What, did you plunder then?

Bradinbam. Our People took the Vessel ashore, and Captain Kidd took out of her thirty Tubs of Sugar, a Bale of Coffee, &c. and then he order'd the Vessel to be turned a-drift.

Mr. Coniers. What followed in January?

Bradinbam. January the 20th, Captain Kidd took a Portuguese that came from Bengal: He took out of her two Chests of Opium, some East-India Goods, and Bags of Rice, &c.

Mr. Coniers. How long did you keep this Ship?

Bradinbam. He kept this Portuguese Ship about seven Days; he took out of her some Butter, Wax, and East-India Goods: He kept her till he was chased by seven or eight Sail of Dutch, and then he left her.

Mr. Coniers. My Lord, now we are come to that on which the Indictment is founded. Mr. Bradinbam, give a particular Account of that.

Bradinbam. Some time in January, Captain Kidd took the Quedagh Merchant; he gave her chase under French Colours: He came up with her, and commanded the Master aboard; and there came an old Frenchman in the Boat; and after he had been aboard awhile, he told Captain Kidd he was not the Captain, but the Gunner; and Captain Kidd sent for his Captain on board his Ship.

Mr. Coniers. Who was that?

Bradinbam. Mr. Wright.

Mr. Coniers. What Countryman was he?

Bradinbam. An Englishman. He was sent for aboard, and he came; and Captain Kidd told him, he was his Prisoner; and he ordered his Men to go aboard, and take Possession of the Ship, and disposed of the Goods on that Coast, to the Value of Seven or Eight thousand Pounds.

Mr. Coniers. What Persons were aboard her?

Bradinbam. There was Captain Wright, and two Dutchmen, and a Frenchman, and some Armenians, and the rest Moors.

Mr. Coniers. Did these Armenians make any Offer of any Money for their Ransom?

Bradinbam. Captain Kidd told them, they should be ransomed, if they made an Offer that he liked of; so they offered him Twenty thousand Rupees. He told them, that was but a small Parcel of Money, and the Cargo was worth a great deal more.

Mr. Coniers. Who did the Cargo belong to?

Bradinbam. To those Armenians, as I was inform'd by Captain Wright.

Mr. Coniers. What did he do with them?

Bradinbam. He disposed of some of them on the Coast of India.

Mr. Coniers. What did he do with the Proceed of the Goods he sold?

Bradinbam. He shared the Money.

Mr. Coniers. Had these Men (the other Prisoners) any of the Shares?

Bradinbam. Yes, all of them. You were a Half-share Man, and you a Half-share Man, (pointing at two of them)

Mr. Coniers. Mr. Bradinbam, you say Captain Wright came aboard Kidd's Ship.

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. Coniers. Did he discourse with him?

Bradinbam. I was not with him, for he kept his Cabin to himself.

Mr. Coniers. But you are sure he came aboard?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. Coniers. And he was an Englishman?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. Coniers. How did Captain Kidd behave himself to the Ships or Boats there?

Bradinbam. He boarded several Ships, and took out of them what was for his Turn.

Mr. Coniers. How did he use those that he traded with?

Bradinbam. Some of them came aboard several times, and he traded with them: But some of them came aboard when he was going away, and he plundered them, and sent them ashore without any Goods.

Mr. Coniers. What Countrymen were those he served thus?

Bradinbam. Mabometans: They had dealt with him before considerably.

Mr. Coniers. How much did he take from them?

Bradinbam. About Five Hundred Pieces of Eight.

Mr. Coniers. How do you know that?

Bradinbam. I saw it told afterwards. We went to Madagascar afterwards, and by the Way met with a Moorish Ship, and took out of her several Casks of Butter, and other Things.

Mr. Cowper. What were the Crew of this Ship?

Mr. J. Powel. They are indicted for the Quedagh Merchant. Were all the Prisoners in that Action? You have given an Historical Account from the Beginning, that he was a meer Plunderer: But now you are to come to the Quedagh, for which they are indicted; go not beyond it.

Mr. Coniers. Look on the several Prisoners at the Bar, and tell whether any of the Prisoners were at the Taking of the Quedagh Merchant.

Cl. of Arr. Was William Kidd there at the Time the Ship was taken?

Bradinbam.

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Was Nicholas Churchill there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Do you know James Howe? Was he there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had he a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Robert Lamley a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes: He was a Servant, and had but half a Share of the Money, and a whole Share of the Goods.

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, was he there, and had a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, did you know what he had?

Bradinbam. He had half a Share of the Money, and a whole Share of the Goods.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, what had he?

Bradinbam. Half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Richard Barlicorn a Share?

Bradinbam. He had half a Share of Money, and a whole Share of Goods.

Cl. of Arr. Had Abel Owens any?

Bradinbam. He had half a Share.

Abel Owens. Had I any of it?

Bradinbam. You had it: You took it.

Cl. of Arr. What had Darby Mullins?

Bradinbam. He had half a Share of the Money, and a whole Share of the Goods.

Mr. Coniers. Now we have fully proved this as to the Quedagh Merchant.

Dr. Newton. When you came to Madagascar, what was done there?

Bradinbam. There came a Canoo to us with some English Men in her; they were formerly acquainted with Captain Kidd, and they told him, they had heard that he was come to take them, and hang them.

Dr. Newton. Who were they?

Bradinbam. They belong'd to the Moco Frigate.

Mr. Coniers. Give a particular Account of that Matter.

Bradinbam. When we came to Madagascar, there came a Canoo off to us.

Mr. Coniers. From whom?

Bradinbam. From the Moco Frigate, Captain Culliford was the Commander; and there were some white Men in her, that had formerly been acquainted with Captain Kidd; they heard that he was come to take them, and hang them. He told them it was no such thing, for he was as bad as they.

Mr. Coniers. Were they thought to be Pirates?

Bradinbam. They were so.

Mr. Coniers. What was it that Captain Kidd said?

Bradinbam. He assured them it was no such thing; and afterwards went aboard with them, and swore to be true to them; and he took a Cup of Bombae, and swore to be true to them, and assist them; and he assisted this Captain Culliford with Guns, and an Anchor, to fit him to Sea again.

L. C. B. Ward. How came you to know all this? Was you aboard then?

Bradinbam. I was aboard then, and I heard the Words.

Dr. Newton. Were any of the Goods divided at Madagascar?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. Coniers. Now look on the Prisoners again: You say, after he met with this Captain Culliford, you went and had a Division made; pray give an Account of it.

Bradinbam. When we came to Madagascar, Captain Kidd ordered the Goods to be carried ashore, and shared; and he had forty Shares himself.

Cl. of Arr. Had Nicholas Churchill a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had James Howe a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Robert Lamley a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had William Jenkins a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Gabriel Loffe a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Hugh Parrot a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Richard Barlicorn a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Abel Owens a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Darby Mullins a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. So that you say, every one of the Prisoners at the Bar had a Share.

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. Coniers. What became afterwards of the Adventure Galley?

Bradinbam. She was so leaky, that she had two Pumps going; and when she came to shore, they left her, because she was not fit to go to Sea again: And so Captain Kidd went aboard the Scuddee Merchant, and designed to make a Man of War of her.

Mr. Coniers. What is that Scuddee Merchant? Do you mean the Quedagh Merchant?

Bradinbam. Yes.

L. C. B. Ward. What became of that Ship afterwards?

Bradinbam. I left him at Madagascar, after the Money and Goods were divided; and can give no Account afterwards.

Dr. Newton. But you say, Capt. Kidd went aboard the Quedagh.

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. Coniers. My Lord, we have done as to this Witness; if they will ask any Thing they may.

Cl. of Arr. Will any of you ask him any Questions?

Kidd. He says, when he went out first from England, he went out of Plymouth in May, which he did not; for we went in April, therefore this is a Contradiction.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr. Kidd, if you will ask him any Questions, you may. Do you desire he should be positive when you went from Plymouth?

Bradinbam. It was about the First of May, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. What Year?

Bradinbam. In the Year 1696.

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Churchill, will you ask him any Questions?

Churchill. I would have went ashore at Cara-war, but the Captain would not let me.

L. C. B. Ward. It is proved, that you was at the the taking of the Quedagh Merchant, and dividing the Goods.

Churchill. Yes, my Lord; but I could not help it; I was forced to do what the Captain ordered me.

Cl. of Arr. James Howe, will you ask him any Questions?

James Howe. Have not I obeyed my Captain in all his Commands?

L. C. B. Ward. There is no doubt made of that. If any of you will ask him any Questions, you may.

Kidd. Did you not see any French Passes aboard the Quedagh Merchant?

Bradinbam. You told me you had French Passes; I never did see them.

Kidd. Did you never declare this to any body, that you saw these French Passes?

Bradinbam. No, I never did see any; but I only said, I heard you say you had them.

Churchill. Had I any Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Churchill. How will you prove that?

Jenkins. My Lord, I ask him, Whether I was not a Servant?

L. C. B. Ward. Ask the Witness what Questions you will.

Bradinbam. My Lord, he was a Servant.

L. C. B. Ward. Who was he Servant to?

Bradinbam. To George Bullen.

Jenkins. My Lord, I beg you will examine my Indenture, for I have it in my Pocket; I had nothing aboard that Ship, but what my Master had.

Bradinbam. But you had a Share of the Goods: I cannot tell whether your Master had it afterwards.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, have you any Question to ask him?

Gab. Loffe. I have nothing to say to him, but to ask him, Whether I did ever disobey my Captain's Commands, or was any ways mutinous on board the Ship?

Bradinbam. No, I cannot say you did.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, do you ask him any Questions?

Parrot. No.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, do you ask him any more Questions?

Barlicorn. I ask him, Whether I was not the Captain's Servant?

L. C. B. Ward. Yes, he says you was.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, will you ask him any Questions?

Owens. I have nothing to say; but depend upon the King's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, have you any Questions to ask him?

Mullins. My Lord, he knows I had nothing but what Captain Kidd was pleased to give me.

L. C. B. Ward. Was he a Servant to Captain Kidd, or no?

Bradinbam. He had a half Share of Money, and a whole Share of Goods.

Mr. J. Powel. What was the Reason some had whole Shares, and some half Shares?

Bradinbam. Some were able Seamen, and some Landmen or Servants. There were in all one hundred and sixty Shares, whereof Capt. Kidd had forty; and some of the Men had whole Shares, and some only half Shares.

Mr. Cowper. You told us at first, that in your Passage to New-York, you took a French Banker, and that he condemned her at New-York.

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Did he offer to carry any other Ships he took, to be condemned?

Bradinbam. No, Sir, never.

Mr. Coniers. Call Joseph Palmer. (Who appeared.) Mr. Palmer, give my Lord, and the Jury, an Account, whether you were one of the Men that went with Capt. Kidd in the Adventure-Galley.

Palmer. Yes, I was.

Mr. Coniers. Then give an Account when you left England; and of your Proceedings in your Voyage.

Palmer. About the Last of April, or the Beginning of May, 1696, we went out of Phymouth to New-York, and by the Way took a French Banker. And in July we came to New-York. About the 6th of February we went to Maderas.

Mr. Coniers. When you were at New-York, was there any Publication of any Thing, to invite Men to come in to Captain Kidd?

Palmer. Yes, there were Articles set up for Men to come aboard Captain Kidd's Ship: He was to have forty Shares for his Ship, and every Man was to have a Share; and they were to give him six Pounds a Man for their Arms.

Mr. Coniers. How many Men was his Complement?

Palmer. When we came from New-York, he had between one hundred and fifty and one hundred and sixty Men.

Mr. Coniers. Give an Account what you did after this: Whither did you go then?

Palmer. We went from New-York to Maderas, and from thence to Bonavist, and there we took in Salt; and from thence we went to St. Jago, and there we bought Provisions; and from thence we went to Madagascar. When we were not far from the Cape of Good Hope, he met with Capt. Warren, with three Sail of Men of War beside himself; there was the Tyger, and the King fisher, and another Ship; and Capt. Kidd kept them Company about three or four Days, and after that went to Madagascar, and some time in February arrived there; and there we watered and victualled. We came to Malabar about the First of June. Then we went to Joanna, and from thence to Mabala; and from thence to Joanna again: And then we met with some Indian Merchants; so we watered the Ship there, and did them no Harm: And from thence we went to Mabala, where Captain Kidd graved his Ship. We had a great Sickness in the Ship, and sometimes we lost four or five Men in a Day. And afterwards we went to Joanna again, and there came aboard several French Men and several English Men that had lost their Ship. Those French Men lent Captain Kidd some Money to mend his Ship. And after this, we came to a Place called Mab-bee, in the Red-Sea, and took in Water, and Guinea Corn, that he took from the Natives: And from thence we went to Babs-Key.

Mr. Coniers. What Time was it that you came to that Babs-Key?

Palmer. In July, 1697.

Mr. Coniers. Now pray tell us what passed there?

Palmer. When Capt. Kidd came to Babs-Key, he stay'd there about three Weeks.

Mr. Coniers. Why did you stay there? Tell us the Reason of it.

Palmer.

Palmer. I heard him say, Come Boys, I will make Money enough out of that Fleet.

Mr. Coniers. Out of what Fleet?

Palmer. The Mocca Fleet. When we came to the Key, he ordered some of his Men to look out as Spies. He sent his Boat three times to make a Discovery, and he gave them Orders, either to take a Prisoner, or to get an Account what Ships lay there. And the Boat went twice, and brought no News; but the third time they brought Word, that there were fourteen or fifteen Ships lying there ready to sail; some of them had English Colours, some Dutch Colours, and some Moorish Colours; and there was a great Ship with red Colours, with her Fore-top-sail loose, ready to sail. And Captain Kidd ordered his Men to take Care these Ships did not pass by in the Night.

Mr. Coniers. You say, he order'd his Men to watch this Fleet: How did he order them?

Palmer. He order'd them by a List in their Turns, to look out for the coming of this Fleet: And so after four or five Days the Fleet came down in an Evening, about the 14th or 15th of August: The next Morning Captain Kidd went after them, and he fell into the Midst of the Fleet, and there was a Dutch Convoy, and an English one among them. He went into the Midst of the Fleet, and fired a Gun after a Moorish Ship, and the two Men of War fired at us, but did no Harm, for they did not reach us. So we left the Fleet, and from thence went to Carawar.

Mr. Coniers. Tell what passed there.

Palmer. Then we met with a small Vessel belonging to Aden.

Mr. Coniers. What Country did it belong to?

Palmer. Black People, only there was one Thomas Parker, and a Portuguese, Don Antonio, on Board.

Mr. Coniers. Was he the Commander of the Ship?

Palmer. I cannot tell.

Mr. Coniers. What did Captain Kidd do with this Ship?

Palmer. He took this Parker for a Pilot, and the Portuguese for Linguister.

Mr. Coniers. What do you mean by that Word Linguister?

Palmer. An Interpreter, to speak Spanish and Portuguese.

Mr. Coniers. Did he take any Thing out of the Ship besides the Men?

Palmer. He took a Bale of Pepper, and a Bale of Coffee, and let the Ship go. But after this we went to Carawar.

Mr. Coniers. Before you let the Ship go, how were the Men used by him?

Palmer. He ordered some of the Men to be hoisted up by their Arms, and drubb'd with a naked Cutlafs: They were laid with their Hands backward.

Mr. Coniers. When they were hoisted up, give an Account how they were used, and for what Reason.

Palmer. They were beat with a naked Cutlafs, to make them discover what Money was aboard.

Mr. Coniers. What was the next Thing?

Palmer. He took out this Parker for a Pilot, and Antonio, the Portuguese, for a Linguister. I heard there was Money taken, but I did not see it.

VOL V.

Mr. Coniers. What did he do with those Men?

Palmer. He kept them as the other Men were kept.

Mr. Coniers. Was there any Demand made of these Men?

Palmer. When we came to Carawar, the Factory demanded them, and he denied them.

Mr. Coniers. What Factory is this?

Palmer. An English Factory. There were one Harvey and Mason came to demand these Men.

Mr. Coniers. And what said Captain Kidd to them?

Palmer. He deny'd that he had any such Men; and he kept them in the Hold, I believe, a Week. Several of his Men would have left him if they could.

Mr. Coniers. What did he do after this?

Palmer. He put to Sea, and met with a Portuguese Man of War, and fought her: He engaged her five or six Hours, and afterwards left her; and then he bought some Hogs of the Natives. After he went from this Carawar, he went to Porto, and took in some Hogs there. And then went to the Island of Malabar, and watered his Ship; and his Cooper went ashore, and the Natives cut his Throat. And after this Capt. Kidd sent some Men ashore, and order'd them, that if they should meet any of the Natives, they should kill 'em, and plunder 'em.

Mr. Coniers. Go on, Sir.

Palmer. After that they went to the Coast of Malabar again, and in November met with a Ship, and took her: One Schipper Mitchel was the Commander; she was a Moorish Ship.

Mr. Coniers. What became of her?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd carried her to Madagaskar.

Mr. Coniers. What Goods were in her?

Palmer. There were two Horses, and ten Bales of Cotton, that he sold to the Natives.

Mr. Coniers. Did he send for any aboard at this Time?

Palmer. There was a Frenchman that was to pretend himself the Captain. He took her under French Colours, and haled her in French; and this Monsieur le Roy was to pass for Captain, and he shewed his French Pass, and—

Mr. Coniers. Give an Account of his personating the Captain. Who order'd him so to do?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd order'd him so to do; and they haled him in French, and he came aboard, and he had a French Pass. And then Capt. Kidd told him, he was Captain.

Mr. Coniers. And he took the Ship?

Palmer. Yes, the Cotton and Horses, and sold them afterwards.

Mr. Coniers. Whither went you next?

Palmer. We coasted about the Coast of Malabar.

Mr. Coniers. Did you meet with any Boats there?

Palmer. Yes, several.

Mr. Coniers. What did you do with them?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd robb'd and plunder'd them, and turned them adrift again.

Mr. Coniers. What was the next Thing you did?

Palmer. About the First of January we met with a Portuguese Ship.

Mr. Coniers. Where?

Palmer. On the same Coast we took her.

Mr. Coniers. What did you do with that Ship?

R r

Palmer.

Palmer. He kept her a Week, and took out two Chests of Indian Goods, and thirty Jars of Butter, and a Tun of Wax, and half a Tun of Iron, and an hundred Bags of Rice.

Mr. Coniers. Did you take those Goods you mentioned?

Palmer. Yes, and carried them aboard the Adventure Galley.

Mr. Coniers. What was the next Ship you met with?

Palmer. The Quedagh Merchant.

L. C. B. Ward. Be very plain and particular in this, and how she was taken; for this is the Ship in the Indictment, and for taking which the Prisoners are tried.

Palmer. About the Last of January she was taken: I was not then aboard the Galley, for then I was aboard the November, and was ordered to get Water. After three or four Days I went aboard; but I was not aboard at the Time she was taken. About three or four Days after, I saw her, and Capt. Kidd was aboard; and I believe there were taken out of her Goods to the Value of ten or twelve Thousand Pounds; which were sold, some before they were put ashore, and some after.

Mr. Coniers. To whom were they sold?

Palmer. To the Banians. Capt. Kidd kept the Seamen to help to sail the Ships.

L. C. B. Ward. What became of the Money the Goods were sold for?

Palmer. It was shared.

L. C. B. Ward. What Share had the Captain?

Palmer. He had forty Shares.

Cl. of Arr. What Share had William Kidd?

Palmer. He had forty Shares.

Cl. of Arr. In Goods, or Money?

Palmer. In both Goods and Money.

Cl. of Arr. Look upon Nich. Churchill; what had he?

Palmer. He had near two Hundred Pounds of each, which was a Man's Share.

Cl. of Arr. Look upon James Howe; Had he any Share?

Palmer. Yes, a whole Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Robert Lamley any Share?

Palmer. He had half a Share of the Money, and a whole Share of the Goods.

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, Had he any Share?

Palmer. He had half a Share of the Money, and a whole Share of the Goods.

Cl. of Arr. Had Gabriel Loffe any Share?

Palmer. He had half a Share of the Money, and a whole Share of the Goods.

Mr. Coniers. Why had they no more?

Palmer. They were Land-men.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, Had he any?

Palmer. He had a whole Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Richard Barlicorn any Share?

Palmer. He had half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Abel Owens any?

Palmer. He had a whole Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Darby Mullins any Share?

Palmer. He had a whole Share.

Mr. Coniers. What became of the rest of the Goods.

Palmer. They were carried to Madagascar.

Mr. Coniers. Who ordered the Goods to be hoisted out and shared? Who ordered that?

Palmer. At the Beginning I was not there.

Mr. Coniers. Who ordered it?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd: And most of the Goods were ashore before I came back; and before I came back, he had his Share, and most of the rest.

Mr. Coniers. How many of the Prisoners at the Bar had their Share of the Goods?

Palmer. All these Men.

Cl. of Arr. Whose Shares were divided to them before you went away?

Palmer. None; but only they were prepared in order to be divided.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you hear any of them say, they had any Shares.

Palmer. Yes, Hugh Parrot, and Gabriel Loffe.

Cl. of Arr. What say you to William Kidd? Did he own he had any Share?

Palmer. No.

Cl. of Arr. Did you hear Nicholas Churchill say he had any?

Palmer. No, I did not; I cannot say, I heard them say so.

Cl. of Arr. Did you hear Gabriel Loffe and Hugh Parrot say, they had any Shares?

Palmer. Yes, I heard them say so.

Mr. Coniers. Whither did you proceed next?

Palmer. We left Capt. Kidd there; I went no further with him.

Mr. Coniers. I ask you, Whether you met with any Ships besides what you mentioned?

Palmer. When we came to Madagascar, in the latter end of April, or beginning of May, 1696, there was a Ship call'd, The Resolution, which was formerly call'd The Moco Frigate; several of the Men came off to Capt. Kidd, and told him, they heard he came to take, and hang them. He said, that it was no such Thing, and that he would do them all the Good he could. And Captain Culliford came aboard of Capt. Kidd, and Capt. Kidd went aboard of Culliford.

Mr. Coniers. Who was that Culliford?

Palmer. The Captain of the Ship. And on the Quarter-deck they made some Bomboo, and drank together; and Capt. Kidd said, Before I would do you any Harm, I would have my Soul fry in Hell-fire; and wished Damnation to himself several times, if he did. And he took the Cup, and wished that might be his last, if he did not do them all the Good he could.

Mr. Powel. Did you take these Men to be Pirates?

Palmer. They were reckoned so.

Dr. Newton. Did Captain Kidd make Culliford any Presents?

Palmer. Yes, he had four Guns of him.

Dr. Newton. Of whom?

Palmer. Of Captain Kidd; he presented him with them.

Mr. Powel. Was there not a Present on the other Side?

Palmer. I believe there was, I have heard so; I heard Culliford say, I have presented Captain Kidd to the Value of four or five Hundred Pounds.

Mr. Cowper. Were these Kindnesses done to Culliford, after Culliford's Men said, they heard Capt. Kidd came to hang them?

Palmer. Yes.

Mr. Cow-

Mr. Cowper. What did Captain Kidd do after that?

Palmer. He went aboard the Quedagh Merchant.

Mr. Cowper. What did he do with his own Ship?

Palmer. She was leaky, and he left her.

Mr. Cowper. Did he carry, or attempt to carry, any of the Ships he took, in order to condemn them, besides that French Banker?

Palmer. He never did, nor talked of any such thing.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr. Kidd, Will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Kidd. I ask him, Whether I had no French Passes?

Palmer. Indeed, Captain Kidd, I cannot tell. I did hear him say, that he had French Passes, but I never saw them.

L. C. B. Ward. Those Goods that were taken out of the Quedagh Merchant, whose Goods were they supposed to be?

Palmer. The Armenian Merchants. I have heard Capt. Kidd say several times, he had French Passes.

Kidd. And did you hear no Body else so so?

Palmer. No.

Cl. of Arr. Churchill, Will you ask any Questions?

Churchill. My Lord, I have no Questions to ask him.

Cl. of Arr. James Howe, Will you ask him any Questions?

J. Howe. No.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, Will you ask him any Questions?

R. Lamley. No.

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, Will you ask him any Questions?

William Jenkins. Had I half a Share?

Palmer. You received half a Share of Money, and a whole Share of Goods.

Will. Jenkins. You know that I was a Servant, and had nothing in this Voyage but what my Master had.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, Will you ask him any Questions?

Gabriel Loffe. No.

Cl. of Arr. Hugb Parrot, Will you ask him any Questions?

Hugb Parrot. No.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, Will you ask him any thing?

Richard Barlicorn. No.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, Will you ask him any thing?

Abel Owens. No.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, Will you ask him any thing?

Darby Mullins. No.

Kidd. It is in vain to ask any Questions.

L. C. B. Ward. Then you may make your own Defence. Come, Mr. Kidd, what have you to say in your own Defence?

Kidd. I had a Commission to take the French, and Pirates; and in order to that, I came up with two Ships, that had French Passes both of them. I called you all a Deck to consult; And did not a great many of the Men go aboard? Did not you go? You know, Mr. Palmer, I would have given these Ships to them again, but you would not; you all voted against it.

Palmer. This Man (pointing to the Armenian, that was in Court) offered you twenty thousand Rupees for the Ship, and you refused it.

Kidd. Did not I ask, Where will you carry this Ship? And you said, we will make a Prize of her; we will carry her to Madagascar.

Palmer. Says Captain Kidd to his Men, These Armenians make such a Noise for the Ship, that I must say, my Men will not part with her; but there was not a quarter Part of the Men concerned in it. The Armenians came crying and wringing their Hands: Upon which, says Capt. Kidd, I must say, my Men will not give them the Ship. And so some of the Men went on the Fore-castle, and pretended, they would not give them the Ship; but there was not a quarter Part of the Men concerned in it.

L. C. B. Ward. Did those Goods belong to Frenchmen, or Armenians?

Palmer. To Armenians.

L. C. B. Ward. What was that Pretence of a French Pass that was on Board the Quedagh Merchant?

Palmer. I saw none.

Kidd. But you have heard of it.

Palmer. I have heard of it, but never saw it.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr. Kidd, have you any more to say? You speak of a Commission that you had; you may have it read if you please.

Kidd. I desire to have them both read.

L. C. B. Ward. Yes, they shall.

Then his Commission of Reprisals upon the French was read.

WILLIAM the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Whereas We have taken into Our Consideration the Injuries, Spoils, and Acts of Hostility committed by the French King and his Subjects, unto, and upon the Ships, Goods, and Persons of our Subjects extending to their grievous Damages, and amounting to great Sums; and that notwithstanding the many and frequent Demands made for Redress and Reparation, yet none could ever be obtain'd: We did therefore, with the Advice of our Privy Council, think fit, and ordered, That general Reprisals be granted against the Ships, Goods, and Subjects of the French King; so that as well Our Fleets and Ships, as also all other Ships and Vessels, that shall be Commissioned by Letters of Marque, or general Reprisals, or otherwise, shall or may lawfully seize, and take all Ships, Vessels, and Goods belonging to the French King, or his Subjects, or Inhabitants within any of the Territories of the French King: And such other Ships, Vessels, and Goods, as are, or shall be liable to Confiscation, and bring the same to Judgment in our High Court of Admiralty of England, or such other Court of Admiralty as shall be lawfully Authorized in that behalf, according to the usual Course and Laws of Nations. And whereas William Kidd is thought fitly qualified, and hath Equipped, Furnished, and Victualled a Ship called, The Adventure Galley, of the Burthen of about Two hundred eighty-seven Tuns, whereof the said William Kidd is Commander. And whereas he the said William Kidd hath given Security with Sureties by Bond to Us, in Our said High Court of Admiralty, according to the Effect and Form set down in certain Instructions made the second Day of May, One thousand Six hundred Ninety-three, and in the Fifth Year of our Reign, a Copy whereof is given to the said Captain William Kidd. Know ye therefore that We, by these Presents, grant Commission to, and do License and Authorize the said William Kidd to set forth in warlike Manner the said Ship call'd, The Adventure Galley, under his own Command, and therewith by Force of Arms to Apprehend, Seize, and Take the Ships, Vessels, and Goods belonging to the French King and his Subjects, or Inhabitants within the Dominions of the said French King, and such other Ships, Vessels, and Goods, as are, or shall be liable to Confiscation, and to bring the same to such Port as shall be most convenient, in order to have them legally adjudged in Our High Court of Admiralty, or such other Court of Admiralty as shall be lawfully Authorized in that behalf; which being Condemned, it shall and may be lawful for the said William Kidd, to sell and dispose of such Ships, Vessels, and Goods, so adjudged and condemned, in such sort and manner as by the Course of Admiralty hath been accustomed (except in such Cases where it is otherwise directed by the said Instructions and the Act of Parliament thereunto annexed.) Provided always, that the said William Kidd keep an exact Journal of his Proceedings, and therein particularly take Notice of all Prizes which shall be taken by him, the Nature of such Prizes, the Times and Places of their being taken, and the Values of them, as near as he can judge; as also of the Station, Motion and Strength of the Enemy, as well as he or his Mariners can discover by the best Intelligence he can get; and also whatsoever else shall come unto him, or any of his Officers, or Mariners, or be discovered or declared unto him or them, or found out by Examination, or Conference with any Mariners or Passengers of, or in any of the Ships or Vessels taken, or by any other Person, or Persons, or by any other Ways or Means whatsoever touching or concerning the Designs of the Enemy, or any of their Fleets, Vessels, or Parties, and of their Stations, Ports, and Places, and of their Intents therein; and of what Merchant Ships or Vessels of the Enemy's bound out, or home, or to any other Place, as he, or his Officers, or Mariners shall hear of, and what else material in those Cases may arrive to his, or their Knowledge; of all which he shall from Time to Time, as he shall, or may have Opportunity, transmit an Account to our Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High-Admiral of England, or their Secretaries; and to keep a Correspondence with them by all Opportunities that shall present. And further Provided, That nothing be done by the said William Kidd, or any of his Officers, Mariners, or Company, contrary the true Meaning of Our aforesaid Instructions; but that the said Instructions shall be by them, and each and every of them, as far as they, or any of them are therein concern'd, in all Particulars well and duly perform'd and observed. And we pray and desire all Kings, Princes, Potentates, Estates, and Republicks, being our Friends and Allies, and all others to whom it shall appertain, to give the said William Kidd all Aid, Assistance and Succour in their Ports with his said Ship, Company and Prizes, without doing, or suffering to be done, to him any Wrong, Trouble or Hindrance; We offering to do the like, when We shall be by them thereunto desired. And We will and require all Our own Officers whatsoever, to give him Succour and Assistance as Occasion shall require. This Our Commission to continue in force till farther Order to the contrary from Us, or Our Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High-Admiral of England. In Witness whereof We have caused the Great-Seal of Our High Court of Admiralty of England to be hereunto affixed. Given at London the Eleventh Day of December, in the Year of Our Lord, One thousand Six hundred Ninety-five, and in the Seventh Year of Our Reign.

ORLANDO GEE, Reg.

Mr. J. Powel. Capt. Kidd, Can you make it appear there was a French Pass aboard the Quedagh Merchant.

Will. Kidd My Lord, these Men say, They heard several say so.

Mr. Coniers. But all came from you.

L. C. B. Ward. If there was a French Pass in the Ship, you ought to have condemned her as Prize.

Then his other Commission was read for Cruising against the Pirates.

WILLIAM R.

WILLIAM III. By the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To Our trusty and well-beloved Captain William Kidd, Commander of the Ship Adventure Galley, or to any other, the Commander for the Time being, Greeting. Whereas We are informed, That Captain Thomas Too, John Ireland, Captain Thomas Wake, and Captain William Maze, or Mace, and other Our Subjects, Natives, or Inhabitants of New-England, New-York, and elsewhere, in Our Plantations in America, have associated themselves with divers other wicked and ill-disposed Persons, and do, against the Law of Nations, daily commit many and great Piracies, Robberies, and Depredations upon the Seas in the Parts of America, and in other Parts, to the great Hindrance and Discouragement of Trade and Navigation, and to the Danger and Hurt of Our loving Subjects, Our Allies, and all others Navigating the Seas upon their lawful Occasions: Now Know Ye, That We being desirous to prevent the aforesaid Mischiefs, and, as far as in Us lies, to bring the said Pirates, Free-Booters, and Sea-Rovers to Justice, have thought fit, and do hereby Give and Grant unto you the said Captain William Kidd (to whom Our Commissioners for Exercising the Office of Our Lord High-Admiral of England, have Granted a Commission as a private Man of War, bearing Date the Eleventh Day of December, One thousand Six Six hundred and Ninety-five) and unto the Commander of the said Ship, for the Time being, and unto the Officers, Mariners, and others, who shall be under your Command, full Power and Authority, to Apprehend, Seize, and Take into your Custody, as well the said Captain Thomas Too, John Ireland, Captain Thomas Wake, and Captain William Maze, or Mace, as all such Pirates, Free-Booters, and Sea-Rovers, being either Our own Subjects, or of any other Nations associated with them, which you shall meet upon the Coast or Seas of America, or in any other Seas, or Ports, with their Ships and Vessels, and also such Merchandizes, Money, Goods, and Wares, as shall be found on Board, or with them, in case they shall willingly yield themselves: But if they will not submit without Fighting, then you are by Force to compel them to yield. And We do also require you to bring, or cause to be brought, such Pirates, Free-Booters, and Sea-Rovers, as you shall seize, to a legal Trial, to the End they may be proceeded against according to Law in such Cases. And We do hereby charge, and command all Our Officers, Ministers, and other Our loving Subjects whatsoever, to be Aiding and Assisting to you in the Premises. And we do hereby enjoin you to keep an exact Journal of your Proceeding in the Execution of the Premises, and therein to set down the Names of such Pirates, and of their Officers and Company, and the Names of such Ships and Vessels as you shall by virtue of these Presents seize and take, and the Quantities of Arms, Ammunition, Provision, and Loading of such Ships, and the true Value of the same, as near as you can judge. And we do hereby strictly charge, and command you, as you shall answer the same at your utmost Peril, That you do not in any manner offend, or molest any of Our Friends or Allies, their Ships, or Subjects, by Colour or Pretence of these Presents, or the Authority thereby Granted. In Witness whereof, We have caused Our Great-Seal of England to be affixed to these Presents. Given at Our Court at Kensington, the Twenty-sixth Day of January, One thousand Six hundred Ninety-five, in the Seventh Year of Our Reign.

L. C. B. Ward. Now you have had the Commissions read, What do you excuse your self by? What Use do you make of them to justify or defend your self?

Will. Kidd. About this Quedagh Merchant.

L. C. B. Ward. What, would you have her a French Ship?

Kidd. Under a French Commission. The Master was a Tavern-keeper at Suratt: Do not you know that, Mr. Palmer?

Palmer. I was not on board when this Pass came; I never saw it.

L. C. B. Ward. But then you should have condemned this Ship, if she had been a French Ship, or had a French Pass.

Kidd. The Evidence says, It was by my Order that the Goods were taken out; I was not at the sharing of the Goods, I knew nothing of it.

L. C. B. Ward. Out of the Goods that were taken, some were sold in the Country there, and the Produce of them was so much Money; it is proved, That that Money was divided; and pursuant to the Articles set up, you were to have forty Shares, and the rest of the Men whole, or half Shares, as they deserved. Now this Money both these Men swear it was taken by you: And the first swears, That the Goods not sold then, that remained in the Ship, were also divided, and that you had forty Shares of them: And the other says, He did not see the Goods divided, but two of the Men acknowledged it.

Kidd. My Lord, this Frenchman was aboard five or six Days before I understood there was any Englishmen aboard. Well, said I, What are you? An Englishman, I am Master. What have you to shew for it? Nothing says he. When they see a French Pass, they will not let the Ship go.

Mr. J. Powel. You have produced Letters Patents that impowered you to take Pirates; Why did you not take Culliford?

Kidd. A great many of the Men were gone ashore.

Mr. J. Powel. But you presented him with Great Guns, and swore you would not meddle with them.

L. C. B. Ward. When the Question was put, Are you come to take us, and hang us? You answered, I will fry in Hell before I will do you any Harm.

Kidd. That is only what these Witnesses say.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you not go aboard Culliford?

Kidd. I was not aboard Culliford.

L. C. B. Ward. These Things prefs very hard upon you. We ought to let you know what is observed, that you may make your Defence as well as you can.

Kidd. I desire Mr. Davis may be called. (He was called accordingly, and appeared.) Mr. Davis, pray give an account whether you did not see a French Pass?

L. C. B. Ward. You are his Witness; you must answer what he asks you.

Mr. Davis. I came a Passenger from Madagascar, and from thence to Amboyna, and there he sent his Boat ashore, and this Man was ashore; and there was one said, Capt. Kidd was published a Pirate in England; and he gave those Passes to him to read. The Captain said, they were French.

L. C. B. Ward. Who gave them?

Mr. Davis. Capt. Kidd gave them.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you know any Thing of taking the Quedagh Merchant?

Mr. Davis. No, no.

L. C. B. Ward. Then you cannot say, they have any relation to the Quedagh Merchant.

Mr. Davis. No, not I.

Kidd. You heard Capt. Elms say, They were French Passes.

Mr. Davis. Yes, I heard Capt. Elms say, They were French Passes. Says he, if you will, I can turn them into Latin.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. Have you any more to say, Capt. Kidd.

Kidd. I have some Papers, but my Lord Bellamont keeps them from me, that I cannot bring them before the Court.

Cl. of Arr. Have you any more to say?

Kidd. I have some to call, that will bear Testimony to my Reputation.

L. C. B. Ward. Call whom you please, we will not abridge you.

Kidd.

Kidd. Call Mr. Bradinbam. I desire this of him, whether he never saw the French Passes, and whether he did not tell Col. Bafs so?

Bradinbam. I never saw a French Pass; I only heard so.

Col. Bafs. I have heard Mr. Bradinbam say, He heard Capt. Kidd say, he had French Passes on Board; but I never heard him say, he saw them Passes.

Kidd. He just now denied that he ever saw the French Passes, or heard of them.

L. C. B. Ward. He says so now, that he never saw them, only he heard you say so. Col. Bafs, have you heard him say the Passes related to the Quedagh Merchant?

Col. Bafs. He has often said, he heard Kidd say the French Passes were aboard.

Cl. of Arr. Have you any more Witnesses to call?

Kidd. I desire Mr. Say may be called: He is in the Prison, I desire he may be sent for.

L. C. B. Ward. We will give you all the liberty you can expect. If you have any more, you were best call them all together. In the mean time, what say you, Churchill?

Churchill. I desire Col. Bafs may be called, and that this Affidavit may be read.

L. C. B. Ward. Col. Bafs, what have you to say for N. Churchill?

Col. Bafs. My Lord, I only wait for his Question.

L. C. B. Ward. Churchill, What will you ask Col. Bafs?

Churchill. Whether I did not surrender my self to him.

L. C. B. Ward. If you can make your Case come within the Proclamation, you must make it appear, that you surrendered according to the Directions of it.

Churchill. My Lord, we came in, in the Year 1699, and surrendered our selves to Col. Bafs.

L. C. B. Ward. If you can make it appear that you surrendered your selves in pursuance of that, to the Persons appointed to receive your Surrender, that will be somewhat to the Point; but Col. Bafs had not Power by that Proclamation to receive your Surrender; and therefore you cannot have any Benefit by it, unless you bring your Case within it. But you may call Col. Bafs, if you will.

Churchill. My Lord, we came in upon that Proclamation, and might have gone away any Day if we would; we but stay'd in the Country, and we never offered to go away till it was my Lord Bellamont's Pleasure to send for us.

L. C. B. Ward. You may call Col. Bafs, and hear what he says.

Churchill. Col. Bafs, will you be pleased to tell my Lord, whether we did not surrender our selves to you in pursuance of the King's Proclamation.

Col. Bafs. My Lord, about the 29th of May, 1699, I had an Account of some Persons, that were supposed Pirates, that were come to surrender themselves; and on my Landing, these two Persons came to me, and surrendered to me the 4th of June, 1699. And I told them, I must refer their Case to his Majesty at home,

L. C. B. Ward. Who were they that surrendered to you?

Col. Bafs. Nicholas Churchill, and James Howe. L. C. B. Ward. Where were you Governour?

Col. Bafs. At the Province of West-Jersey. Dr. Oxenden. How came they here?

Col. Bafs. I left them under Bail. L. C. B. Ward. Did you send them over?

Col. Bafs. No, my Lord, I came to England before: I left them in Custody. They were sent over Prisoners by my Successor.

L. C. B. Ward. What did they say to you when they surrendered themselves to you?

Col. Bafs. They said they had been in the Indies, and that they had committed several Piracies, and desired they might have the Benefit of his Majesty's Proclamation.

L. C. B. Ward. What Pirates did they mention to you?

Col. Bafs. They mentioned the Moca Frigate, and Capt. Kidd.

Dr. Oxenden. Had you the Proclamation? Col. Bafs. No; but I had seen one of them.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you take your self allowed to receive their Surrender?

Col. Bafs. No, my Lord, I did not.

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Churchill, have you quite done?

N. Churchill and James Howe. Yes, Sir, we came in upon his Majesty's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, what have you to say?

Robert Lamley. My Lord, I was but a Servant. L. C. B. Ward. Who was you a Servant to?

Robert Lamley. To Mr. Owens. L. C. B. Ward. How does that appear?

Robert Lamley. The Surgeon knows it.

Bradinbam. My Lord, he was concern'd with the Cook.

Robert Lamley. My Lord, here is my Indenture. (Which was read.)

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, what have you to say?

William Jenkins. I have nothing to say, but I was a Servant to Mr. Bullen.

L. C. B. Ward. Where is your Witness to prove it?

Jenkins. Both the King's Witnesses know it. Bradinbam and Palmer. My Lord, he was his Servant.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, what say you for your self?

Loffe. My Lord, about the Year 1696, I entered my self on Board Capt. Kidd, and went out with him, and I never disobeyed his Command in any Thing.

L. C. B. Ward. Did he go out under the first Commission?

Palmer. He came aboard at New-York.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you take him in before, or after the Articles were set up?

Palmer. After the Articles were set up.

L. C. B. Ward. Did Capt. Kidd take any Notice of his Commission in the Articles?

Palmer. Yes, my Lord, he did mention them. I have a Copy of the Articles.

Mr. Crawley. Mr. Palmer, Are these Articles the Copy of the Articles set up by Capt. Kidd at New-York?

Palmer. Yes.

Mr.

Mr. J. Gould. Did you examine them?

Palmer. To the best of my Knowledge they were a true Copy.

Mr. J. Tourton. Did you compare them with the Original?

Palmer. No, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, Have you any more to say?

Loffe. Yes, a great deal more to ask the Evidence.

Cl. of Arr. What will you ask them?

Loffe. Whether I did not obey the Captain.

Mr. J. Tourton. There is no Scruple to be made of that.

Loffe. I went out to serve his Majesty under his Commission.

L. C. B. Ward. But how came you to take part of the Money?

Loffe. I had what they pleased to give me.

L. C. B. Ward. You must needs imagine, that when Capt. Kidd did these extravagant Things, and divided the Money and Goods, that he did not act according to his Commission. What could you think of it?

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, what have you to say for your self?

Parrot. My Lord, in the Year 1695, in the Month of October, I sailed out of Plymouth in a Merchant-man, bound for Cork in Ireland, there to take in Provisions; thence to the Island of Barbados; and in sight of the Island of Barbados, I was taken by a French Privateer, and carried to Martinico; and thence coming in a Transport-ship, I was brought to Barbados; there I ship'd my self in a Vessel bound to Newfoundland, and thence to Maderas: And then I went to Madagascar, and there I stay'd some short time after, and came in Company with Capt. Kidd; and then the Commander and I had a falling out, and so I went ashore at that Island: And understanding that Capt. Kidd had a Commission from the King, I came aboard Capt. Kidd's Ship, and ever since have been with him.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you come in after he had been at New-York?

Parrot. This was in the Year 1697.

L. C. B. Ward. You have acted with him, and shared with him. Could you imagine he was acting according to his Commission, when he was doing these Things?

Parrot. I thought I was safe where the King's Commission was.

L. C. B. Ward. The Commission was to take Pirates, and not to turn Pirates.

Parrot. Mr. Palmer, did you ever see me guilty of an ill Thing? Did I ever disobey my Captain?

Palmer. You were always obedient to your Commander.

Parrot. Then I came to Madagascar with Captain Kidd, where I might have gone aboard a known Pirate, but I refused it, and kept close to my Captain: And when I came to New-England, I might have gone away as others did; but I had my Liberty at Boston for about a Week, and went up and down, and I surrender'd my self.

L. C. B. Ward. You did not surrender your self, but only you had a Liberty to go away, and did not.

Parrot. I thought there was no need of it. My Lord, I desire you would ask the Witnesses whether I ever disobeyed the Captain's Commands.

L. C. B. Ward. They say no otherwise, but that you went willingly.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, what have you to say?

Barlicorn. My Lord, I beg leave that I may produce some Evidence for my Reputation. Here is a Certificate from the Parish where I was born.

L. C. B. Ward. That will signify nothing; we cannot read Certificates; they must speak Viva Voce.

Barlicorn. Call Benjamin Bond, Daniel Phillips, and James Newton.

L. C. B. Ward. What do you call these Witnesses for?

Barlicorn. To give an Account of my Reputation, what they know of me.

Benj. Bond. I knew him when he was a Child, and he was very civil and honest; I lived near him till he was 13 or 14 Years old: And he came of honest Parents, and behaved himself very civilly all that Time.

L. C. B. Ward. Have you known any Thing of him since?

Bond. No, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. What have you to say further?

Barlicorn. My Lord, I was a Servant to Capt. Kidd, and have been with him six Years; and I have a Certificate from several of my Relations that will testify it.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, have you any Thing more to say?

Barlicorn. I am a Servant to Captain Kidd.

L. C. B. Ward. How long have you been so? Where was it that you came first to be his Servant?

Barlicorn. At Carolina.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, what say you for your self?

Owens. My Lord, I desire the Privilege of the Proclamation. I entered my self into the King's Service. I have been in the King's Service, according to his Majesty's Proclamation. I desire it may be read. (Which was done.)

L. C. B. Ward. You desire the Benefit of this Proclamation; but you must bring your self under the Qualifications it requires, if you would have any Benefit of it.

Mr. Crawley. He has a Certificate of it.

L. C. B. Ward. Is it within the Proclamation?

Mr. Crawley. The Certificate is dated the 15th of March, 1700, from Mr. Riches, a Justice of the Peace in Southwark.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr. Riches, I suppose, did believe he was within this Proclamation.

Mr. J. Gould. The Pardon extends to all Persons for Piracies committed before that Time, if they surrender themselves to such and such, and enter themselves on board one of his Majesty's Ships.

Mr. Coniers. A Justice of the Peace is not within the Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. Have you any more to say?

Owens. Only to desire the Benefit of that Proclamation.

L. C. B. Ward. He surrender'd himself to Justice Riches, and then entered himself aboard one of his Majesty's Ships; and then there was Evidence dence against him when on board, and he was seized: This may be fit to recommend him to the King's Mercy, but it is not a Defence against the Accusation.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, What do you say for your self?

Mullins. I came in upon the King's Act of Grace; I came ashore with the rest of the People.

L. C. B. Ward. What have you to shew, to entitle you to the Benefit of the Proclamation.

Mullins. I was ready to die of the Bloody-Flux, and not able to go my self, but I sent my Name in to the Governour.

L. C. B. Ward. Where was you when you was so sick?

Mullins. In West-Jersey. I came ashore in Cape May. I was sick like to die all the Way from Madagascar, expecting every Minute to die with the Bloody-Flux.

Dr. Oxenden. How came you to leave Captain Kidd?

Mullins. He used me very hardly, and therefore I left him.

L. C. B. Ward. You had a Dividend of the Money and Goods.

Mullins. He gave it me, and afterwards took it from me.

L. C. B. Ward. Was he your Master?

Mullins. I had no Master.

Dr. Oxenden. How did you come to Jersey?

Mullins. I came there with Capt. Shelley; he is in Court.

Dr. Oxenden. You were aboard Capt. Culliford.

Mullins. I came home, in hopes to get the King's Pardon.

L. C. B. Ward. That which you say is very odd; though you quitted Capt. Kidd's Ship, you went into Culliford's.

L. C. B. Ward. Capt. Kidd, you said you had more to say just now; if you have, let us hear it.

Kidd. I desire this Man may be heard two or three Words.

L. C. B. Ward. What is his Name?

Kidd. Mr. Say.

Mr. Say. I happened to be at the Treasury-Office in Broad-street to receive some Money, and Mr. White was there; and he asked me, Will you go along with me, and see one Elbury, that is in the Marshalsea for Debt? Says I, I am a Stranger to him, I do not care to go. Says he, Bear me Company. So I went with him, and when I came there, I saw Capt. Kidd's Men. And this Mr. Elbury was in Company with Capt. Kidd's Surgeon. Says I, I am a Brother of the Quill, I should be glad to drink a Glass with you. We stay'd there but a little while, and asked what that Man was? says he, He his Capt. Kidd's Surgeon. Upon this I said, Here is a mighty Noise about Capt. Kidd; says he, I believe he has done but what he can answer, or that can do him any hurt. Says I, Where have you been with him? He said, at Madagascar.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr. Bradinbam was with them, there is no doubt of that. It is not to be questioned, that he would not say any Thing ill of them then. Capt. Kidd, have you any Thing more to say.

Kidd. Call Capt. Humphrys. (Who appeared.)

L. C. B. Ward. What Questions would you ask him?

Kidd. What do you know of me?

Humphrys. I knew you, Sir, in the West-Indies in the beginning of the late War; and I know you had the Applause of the General, as I can shew by the General's Letter. I know nothing further of you.

Kidd. Did you know any Thing that I was guilty of any Piracies?

Humphrys. No; but you had a general Applause for what you had done from time to time.

L. C. B. Ward. How long was this ago?

Humphrys. Twelve Years ago.

L. C. B. Ward. That was before he was turned Pirate.

Kidd. Call Capt. Bond. (Who appeared)

L. C. B. Ward. What do you call him for?

Kidd. Capt. Bond, Pray will you give an Account what you know of me.

Bond. I know you was very useful at the beginning of the War in the West-Indies.

Mr. B. Hatfell. To be sure they had a good Opinion of him in 1695, when they granted him the Commission.

Kidd. There is nothing in the World can make it appear I was guilty of Piracy; I kept Company with Capt. Warren for six Days.

Mr. Coniers. I believe you kept Company more with Captain Culliford, than with Captain Warren.

Kidd. I never design'd to do any such Thing.

Mr. Coniers. My Lord, we will say nothing at all, but leave it to your Lordship to direct the Jury.

Kidd. I have many Papers for my Defence, if I could have had them.

L. C. B. Ward. What Papers were they?

Kidd. My French Passes.

L. C. B. Ward. Where are they?

Kidd. My Lord Bellamont had them.

L. C. B. Ward. If you had had the French Passes, you should have condemned Ships.

Kidd. I could not, because of the Mutiny in my Ship.

L. C. B. Ward. If you had any Thing of Disability upon you, to make your Defence, you should have objected it at the beginning of your Trial; what you mean by it now I cannot tell. If you have any Thing more to say, you may say it, the Court is ready to hear you.

L. C. B. Ward. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoners at the Bar, W. Kidd, N. Churchill, J. Howe, R. Lamley, W. Jenkins, Gab. Loffe, Hugh Parrot, Rich. Barlicorn, Abel Owens, and Darby Mullins, in Number Ten, stand all here Indicted for the Crime of Piracy, charged to be committed by them. And the Instance of the Crime, is for Feloniously and Piratically Seizing and Taking the Ship called The Quedagh-Merchant, with the Apparel and Tackling thereof, to the value of 400*l.* and divers Goods mentioned in the Indictment, to the Value of 4500*l.* the Goods of several Persons unknown, from the Mariners of the said Ship, and this at High Sea, within the Jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty, about ten Leagues from Cut-teen in the East-Indies the 30th of January, 1697, and in the 8th Year of his Majesty's Reign. Now whether all, or any, and which of these Prisoners, are guilty of this Crime of Piracy laid in this this Indictment, or not guilty, it is your Part to determine according to the Evidence that has been given on both Sides. The Crime charged on them is Piracy, that is, Seizing and Taking this Ship and Goods in it, piratically and feloniously: The Time and Place is laid also in the Indictment. To make good this Accusation, the King's Council have produced their Evidence; and two Witnesses have been examined in this Case, each of them were in the Ship which took the Quedagh Merchant, and very well acquainted with all the Proceedings; that is, Robert Bradinbam, and Joseph Palmer. The first has given you an historical Account of the whole Proceedings of Capt. Kidd, from his first going out of England in the Adventure-Galley, to the Time of this Fact charged on them. They tell you, That about May, 1696, the King intrusted this Capt. Kidd with two Commissions, and they were both read to you: By one of them, under the Admiralty-Seal, he was authorized to set out as a Privateer the Adventure-Galley, and therewith to take and seize the Ships and Goods belonging to the French King, or his Subjects, and such other as were liable to Confiscation. And by the other Commission, under the Broad-Seal of England, Authority was given for the Taking of some Pirates by Name, and all other Pirates in the several Places therein mentioned; but in no sort to offend or molest any of the King's Friends or Allies, their Ships or Subjects, by Colour thereof. And by both Commissions, Command was given to bring all such Ships and Goods, as should be taken, to legal Trials and Condemnations. They tell us, That this Ship set out from Phymouth about May, 1696, and that in their Passage, they did take a French Ship, and they did condemn that Ship. Now, Gentlemen, you must bear this in your Minds, that to make it Piracy, it must be the taking piratically and feloniously upon the High Sea, within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, the Goods of a Friend, that is, such as are in Amity with the King. Now you see what Way they went to work, and what Measures they took. Captain Kidd goes out, and goes to New-York; and when he was there, he has a Project in his Head, of setting up Articles between himself and the People that were willing to be concerned with him: For now, whether it seems more probable from what followed, that Captain Kidd designed to manage himself according to the Measures given him, and the Powers of his Commissions, or any other Way, you must consider; for it is told you, That between one hundred and fifty and one hundred and sixty Men came in under these Articles, whereof the other Prisoners were part and concerned in them. And as to those Articles, the Import of them was, That whatever should be taken by these People in their Expeditions, should be divided into one hundred and sixty Parts, whereof Capt. Kidd was to have forty Shares for his Part, and the rest were to have according to the Merit of each Party, some whole Shares, and some half Shares.

Now after these Articles, you perceive what Progress they made, and what Course they took; they went from one Place to another, and used a pretty deal of Severity wherever they came. A Design they had to go into the Red-Sea, and they had Expectations of the Mocca Fleet that lay at Mocca, and they sent their Spies three times to get Intelligence: The two first times they could make no Discovery; but the third time they made an effectual Discovery, that the Fleet was ready to sail; and in the mean time Capt. Kidd lay there in Expectation of this Fleet; and, as the first Witness tells you, Capt. Kidd said, He intended to make a Voyage out of this Fleet. Well, he had a Discovery of this Fleet, and they came accordingly; and they tell you, that he and his Men in the Ship did attack one of the Ships: But these Ships being guarded by two Men of War, he could make nothing of them; however, he shewed what his Intention and Design was. Could he have proved, that what he did was in pursuance of his Commissions, it had been something: But, what had he to do to make any Attack on these Ships, the Owners and Freighters whereof were in Amity with the King? This does not appear to be an Action suitable to his Commission. After he had done this, he came to Land, and there, and afterwards at Sea, pursued strange Methods, as you have heard. The seeming Justification he depends on, is his Commissions. Now it must be observ'd how he acted with relation to them, and what Irregularities he went by. He came to a Place in the Indies, and sent his Cooper ashore, and that Cooper was killed by the Natives; and he uses Barbarity, and ties an Indian to a Tree, and shoots him to Death. Now he went from Place to Place, and committed Hostilities upon several Ships, dealing very severely with the People.

But this being something foreign to the Indictment, and not the Facts for which the Prisoners at Bar are indicted, we are confined to the Quedagh Merchant; but what he did before, shews his Mind and Intention not to act by his Commissions, which warrant no such Things. Gentlemen, you have an Account, that he met with this Ship, The Quedagh Merchant, at Sea, and took her; that this Ship belonged to People in Amity with the King of England; that he seized this Ship, and divers Goods were taken out of her and sold, and the Money divided pursuant to the Heads contained in those Articles set up at New-York. The Witnesses that speak to that, come home to every one of the Prisoners: They tell you, that this Dividend was made; that Captain Kidd had forty Shares of the Money, and the rest of the Prisoners had their Proportions according to the Articles, some whole Shares, and some a half Share of that Money. After they had seized on the Ship, you hear of a certain Sort of Project, that a Frenchman should come and pretend himself the Master, and produce, or pretend to produce, a French Pass, under a Colour that these People's Ship and Goods, who were Moors, should be Frenchmens Ship and Goods, or sailed under a French Pass, and so justify what he did under the Colour of his Commission from the King. Now no Man knows the Mind and Intention of another, but as it may be discovered by his Actions. If he would have this to be understood to be his Intention, or that it was a Reality, that he took this as a French Ship, or under a French Pass, then he ought to have had the Ship and Goods inventoried, and condemned according to Law, that he might have had what Proportion belonged to him, and that the King might have had what belonged to him, as his Commissions directed: But here was nothing of that done, but the Money and Goods that were taken were shared; and you have an Account likewise how some of the Goods were sold, and the Money disposed of, and how the remaining Goods were disposed of; and one Witness speaks positively of the Distribution of the Goods that remain'd unfold, that they were divided according to the same Proportions as the Articles mentioned, and every one of the Prisoners had his Share: There belong'd Forty Shares to Capt. Kidd, and Shares and half Shares to the rest.

Now this is the great Case that is before you, on which the Indictment turns: The Ship and Goods, as you have heard, are said by the Witnesses, to be the Goods of the Armenians, and other People that were in Amity with the King; and Captain Kidd would have them to be the Goods of Frenchmen, or at least, that the Ship was sailed under French Passes. Now if it were so, as Capt. Kidd says, it was a lawful Prize, and liable to Confiscation; but if they were the Goods of Persons in Amity with the King, and the Ship was not navigated under French Passes, it is very plain it was a piratical taking of them. Gentlemen, it is to be considered what Evidence Capt. Kidd hath given to prove that Ship and Goods to belong to the French King, or his Subjects, or that the Ship was sailed under a French Pass, or, indeed, that there ever was a French Pass shewn or seen. He appeals indeed to the Witnesses over and over again, Did you never see it? No, say they: Nor did not you, saith he, say you saw it? No, saith the Witness, I said, that Capt. Kidd said, he had a French Pass, but I never saw it. Now after all, the taking the Quedagh Merchant is brought down to Mr. Kidd, and the Prisoners with others, and the Distribution of the Money produced by the Sale of the Goods, among Mr. Kidd and his Crew, whereof every one of these Prisoners were present at the same time, and had Proportions.

Now, Gentlemen, this must be observed; If this was a Capture on the High Sea, and these were the Goods of Persons in Amity with the King, and had no French Pass, then it is a plain Piracy. And if you believe the Witnesses, here is a taking of the Goods and Ships of Persons in Amity, and converting them to their own Use: Such a taking at Land as this would be Felony, and being at Sea it will be Piracy; for this is a taking the Ship from the right Owners, and turning it to their own Use. So that you have Evidence as to the seizing of the Ship, and dividing the Money rising from the Goods sold, and sharing the Remainder according to the Articles.

Now, what does Captain Kidd say to all this? He has told you, he acted pursuant to his Commission; but that cannot be, unless he gives you Satisfaction, that the Ship and Goods belonged to the French King, or his Subjects, or that the Ship had a French Pass; otherwise neither of them will excuse him from being a Pirate; for if he takes the Goods of Friends, he is a Pirate; he had no Authority for that; there is no Colour from either of his Commissions for him to take them: And as to the French Passes, there is nothing of that appears by any Proof, and, for ought I can see, none saw them but himself, if there were ever any. It is proved, That the People that were Owners of the Goods made him very large Offers to redeem the Ship (Twenty thousand Rupees, as I remember); but he would not accept their Proposal, but said, That is a small Sum, the Cargoe is worth *a great deal more, or to that effect: And further said, He must answer these People, that his Men will not part with it: And a French Man was to be set up for a mock Business, as you have heard; and if the Witnesses say true, they were said by the Captain of the Ship to be, and were reputed to be, the Ship and Goods of Friends, and not of Enemies; and if they were so, and had no French Pass, then is he, and those that were concerned with him, guilty of piratically taking this Ship, and of piratically seizing the Goods in the Ship; and neither of his Commissions will justify such an Action as this. If he had acted pursuant to his Commission, he ought to have condemned the Ship and Goods, if they were a French Interest, or sailed under a French Pass; but by his not condemning them, he seems to shew his Aim, Mind, and Intention, that he did not act in that Case by virtue of his Commission, but quite contrary to it; for he takes the Ship, and shares the Money and Goods, and is taken in that very Ship by my Lord Bellamont, and he had continued in that Ship till that Time; so there is no Colour or Pretence appears, that he intended to bring this Ship to England, to be condemned, or to have condemned it in any of the English Plantations, having disposed of the whole Cargoe as aforesaid. Here I must leave it to you, to consider whether, according to the Evidence that appears, there is any Ground for him to say, he has acted by his Commission in taking the Quedagh Merchant and Goods in her, or whether he has not acted contrary thereunto.*

Now, for himself, he has called some Persons here, to give an Account of his Reputation, and of his Services done in the West-Indies; and one of them says, about ten or twelve Years he did good Service there. Why so he might, and might have, and 'tis very like he had, such Reputation when the King trusted him with these Commissions, else I believe he had never had them; so that whatever he might be so many Years ago, that is not a Matter to be insisted on now, but what he hath been since, and how he hath acted in this Matter charged against him: So that, Gentlemen, as to Mr. Kidd, I must leave to you, whether he is guilty of Piracy or no; and if you believe him guilty upon the Evidence, you will find him so; if not, you will acquit him.

Now for the other Prisoners, it is proved they were all concerned in taking and sharing the Ship and Goods in the Indictment; yet their Circumstances differ pretty much among themselves. There are three of them, that it has been made out to you, and owned by the King's Witnesses, that they were Servants. Robert Lamley, Will. Jenkins, Richard Barlicorn. All these are made out to be Servants, and you have had the Indentures of two of them produced, and the King's Witnesses prove them so, and they were admitted to be Servants. Now, Gentlemen, there must go an Intention of the Mind, and a Freedom of the Will, to the committing a Felony or Piracy. A Pirate is not to be understood to be under Constraint, but a free Agent; for in this Case, the bare Act will not make him guilty, unless the Will make it so. Now a Servant, it is true, if he go voluntarily, and have his Proposition, he must be accounted a Pirate; for then he acts upon his own Account, and not by Compulsion. And these Persons, according to the Evidence, received their

Part,

Part, but whether they accounted to their Masters for their Shares afterwards, yea or no, as they pretend, but make no Proof of it, I must leave that to you; and therefore there is a Consideration to be had of them: For if these Men did go under the Compulsion of their Masters, to whom they were Servants, and not voluntarily, and upon their own Accounts, it may difference their Case from others, who went and acted willingly in this Matter, and upon their own Accounts. So that as to those that were Servants under the Command of their Masters, that were present with them, I must leave it to you, whether you will distinguish between them and the others, that were not Servants, but free Agents. It is true, a Servant is not bound to obey his Master, but in lawful Things, which they say they thought this was, and that they knew not to the contrary, but that their Masters acted according to the King's Commission; and therefore their Case must be left to your Consideration, whether you think them upon the whole Matter Guilty or no. If you believe them Guilty, you will find them so, otherwise you will acquit them.

For the other Persons, some of them pretend they came in on his Majesty's Proclamation, and for that you must consider the Evidence, and take it all together, and consider whether you are satisfied by what they have said or prov'd, that they have brought themselves within the Benefit of the King's Favour by that Proclamation. You have heard it read, and observ'd the Qualifications and Directions by it, and the Terms upon which the Pardon was promised, which are not made out to you, to be complied with by them; they may apply another way for the King's Mercy; this Court must proceed according to the Rules of Law and Justice: But then all of them hold on this; We were, say they, under the Captain, and acted under him as their Commander: And, Gentlemen, so far as they acted under his lawful Commands, and by Virtue, and in Pursuance of his Commissions, it must be admitted they were justifiable, and ought to be justify'd: But how far forth that hath been, the Actions of the Captain and their own, will best make it appear. It is not contested, but that these Men knew, and were sensible of what was done and acted, and did take Part in it, and had the Benefit of what was taken shared amongst them: And if the taking of this Ship and Goods was unlawful, then these Men can claim no Advantage by these Commissions, because they had no Authority by them to do what they did, but acted quite contrary to them. What had they to do to enter into such Articles, and to act as they did? You must consider the Evidence given here, according to the Rules of the Law; and if you are satisfied, that they have knowingly and wilfully been concerned or partaken with Capt. Kidd, in taking this Ship, and dividing the Goods, and that Piratically and Feloniously, then they will be Guilty within this Indictment. It is worthy of Consideration what appears upon the Evidence, that they met with one reputed to be a notorious Pirate, call'd Culliford; he was esteemed an Arch-Pirate, and known to be so; yet this Capt. Kidd, that was commission'd to take Pirates, instead of taking him, grows to such an Intimacy with him, that he said he would have his Soul fry in Hell, before he would hurt him, or to that Effect; and so they made Presents one to another; and Capt. Kidd left three of his Men with him. Whilst Men pursue their Commissions they must be justify'd; but when they do Things not authorized, or never acted by them, it is as if there had been no Commission at all. I have distinguished the Evidence as well as my Memory serves me, and must leave it to you to determine upon the whole Matter, who are Guilty, and who not; and such as you are satisfied to be Guilty, you will find so, and such as you are not satisfied to be Guilty, you will acquit.

VOL V.

[Then the Jury withdrew, and after Half an Hour's Stay, brought in their Verdict.]

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, answer to your Names, John Cowper, &c.

J. Cowper. Here, &c.

[Then the Court adjourn'd till To-morrow Morning Eight a-Clock.]

The further Proceedings against William Kidd, and the other Nine Prisoners, on the four Indictments, May the Ninth, 1701.

Cl. of Arr. CALL William Kidd, Nicholas Churchill, James Howe, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loffe, Hugh Parrot, R. Barlicorn, Abel Owens, and Darby Mullins to the Bar. You the Prisoners at the Bar, William Kidd, &c. those Men that you shall hear call'd, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your several Lives and Deaths: If therefore you, or any of you, will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn. Call William Smith. (Who appear'd; and there being no Challenges, the Twelve that were sworn are as follows.)

The JURY.

Will. Smith,	}	Peter Gray,
Benj. Hooper,		Rob. Comfort,
Jo. Hibbert,		Tho. Hollis,
Jo. Pettit,		Will. Ford,
Will. Hatch,		Tho. Stephens,
Jos. Chaplain,		J. Dodson.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, count these: William Smith. Cryer. One, &c.

Cl. of Arr. Benjamin Hooper.

Cryer. Two, &c. Twelve good Men and true, stand together and hear your Evidence.

[Then the usual Proclamation for Information was made; and the Prisoners being bid to hold up their Hands, the Clerk of Arraignments charg'd the Jury with them thus.]

Cl. of Arr. "You of the Jury, look upon the Prisoners, and hearken to their Cause. They stand indicted by the Names of William Kidd, &c. (as before in the Indictment.) Upon this Indictment they have been arraign'd, and thereunto have severally pleaded, Not guilty; and for their Trial put themselves on God and their Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, Whether they be guilty of the Piracy and Robbery whereof they stand indicted, or not guilty, &c."

Nich. Churchill. May it please you, my Lord, I came in upon his Majesty's Proclamation; and if that do not do, I throw my self upon the Mercy of the Honourable Bench.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. If they will withdraw their Plea, and confess the Indictment, they may.

Nich. Churchill and James Howe. We refer our selves to the King's Proclamation.

Dr. Oxenden. But do you confess the Matter of the Indictment? You may do that if you will, and then you need not be try'd.

Abel Owens. My Lord, I came in upon the King's Proclamation, and enter'd my self aboard one of the King's Ships.

Dr. Oxenden. You must answer first, and come to your Defence afterward.

Abel Owens. I hope your Honours will grant it me as well as the rest, I enter'd my self into the King's Service.

Cl. of Arr. You of the Jury, look on the Prisoners, and hearken to their Cause. They stand indicted by the Name of William Kidd, &c.

Mr. J. Turton. You may try all the Indictments together, if they are the same Persons concern'd.

Cl. of Arr. They are the same that are concern'd in the two first Indictments.

Mr. J. Turton. Then proceed upon these two together.

Cl. of Arr. They stand a second time indicted by the Name of William Kidd, late of London, Mariner. (And so of the rest.) Upon these two Indictments they have been arraign'd, and thereto have severally pleaded, Not guilty; and for their Trials have put themselves on God and their Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, Whether they are guilty of the said Piracies and Robberies whereof they stand indicted, or not guilty, &c.

Mr. Knapp. May it please your Lordship, and Gentlemen of the Jury, these are two several Indictments against William Kidd, &c. and they are both for Piracy. One sets forth, That the Prisoners at the Bar, on the Twentieth of September, in the Ninth Year of his Majesty's Reign, fifteen Leagues from Carrawar, did piratically invade and take a Ship call'd The Moorish Ketch, and put the Mariners in fear of their Lives. The other Indictment sets forth, That on the 27th of November, in the Ninth Year of his Majesty's Reign, four Leagues from Callicut, the Prisoners at the Bar did seize and take another Moorish Ship; to both which Indictments they have pleaded, Not guilty. If we prove the Fact, you must find them guilty. We will call Witnesses. The Witnesses are the same. The whole Story you have heard before, and we will apply our selves now to these Facts mention'd in these two Indictments.

Mr. J. Turton. You must open your Matter first, because there is a new Jury.

Mr. Knapp. Then, my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, This Capt. Kidd went out of England in a Ship call'd The Adventure-Galley. He first went to New-York, and there he set out Articles to procure Men, and promis'd them that would come in to him a Share in the Adventures they should get. From thence he goes to Babs-Key, and lies about three Weeks there, watching for the Mocca Fleet: He sent his Boat out three times to see in what condition the Ships were. He could get no Intelligence the two first times, but the third time he did; they brought him Word, they were fourteen or fifteen Ships ready to sail, and that their Colours were English and Dutch, and Moorish. He lay in wait for these Ships, and watch'd them; and when they came down, he fell in with them, and fired at them; but he found they were under an English and Dutch Convoy, and so away he went and left them. And then he came to cruise on the Coast of Malabar, and there he met with his first Prize, and that is the Moorish Ship mention'd in the first Indictment: They seiz'd and took this

Moorish

Moorish Ship, and entered her, and took several Goods out of her, and then let the Ship go away. We will call our Witnesses as to this Ship first. Call Robert Bradinbam and Joseph Palmer. (Who appeared and were sworn.) Mr. Bradinbam, what have you to say as to this Matter.

Mr. Bar. Hatfield. Tell it from the Beginning; from the Time you went out of England, to the Time of taking this Ship, because there is a new Jury.

Bradinbam. About the Beginning of May, 1696, we went out of England, and went to New-York, in the Adventure-Galley, whereof Capt. Kidd was Commander.

Mr. Knapp. Whither did you go?

Bradinbam. To New-York. We took a Ship by the Way, and carried her to New-York, where we condemn'd her.

Mr. Knapp. What Ship was that?

Bradinbam. A French Banker. At New-York Capt. Kidd put up his Articles, That if any would come aboard his Ship, they should be welcome, no Purchase no Pay, mentioning that he had the King's Commission: From thence we went to St. Janger, then to Maderas, then to Madagascar, then to Bonavis, then to Joanna, and then to the Red-Sea, and then to Babs-Key; there he lay three Weeks looking for the Mocca Fleet.

Mr. Knapp. Where?

Bradinbam. In Babs-Key.

Mr. Knapp. You say he lay there about a Fortnight or three Weeks: How did he behave himself there?

Bradinbam. He sent out his Boat three Times; and the two first Times they could get no Intelligence.

Mr. J. Turton. Tell whose the Mocca Fleet was.

Bradinbam. They belong'd to the Moors; they were Merchant-men belonging to the Moors.

Mr. Knapp. What News did they bring the third Time?

Bradinbam. The third Time they brought Word, that there were fourteen or fifteen Ships in the Harbour ready to sail.

Dr. Newton. What did he say then?

Bradinbam. That he would take as many of them as he could; and did not doubt but to make a Voyage out of them.

Mr. J. Turton. What Account did the two first Boats bring?

Bradinbam. No Account at all, my Lord.

Mr. J. Turton. What Notice did they bring the third Time?

Bradinbam. They brought Word, that there were about fourteen or fifteen Ships in the Harbour ready to sail.

Mr. J. Turton. Which Time was it that they brought that Word?

Bradinbam. The third Time. Then the Fleet came down, and Capt. Kidd followed them.

Mr. Knapp. Were there any on Shore to watch this Fleet?

Bradinbam. There were some sent to the high Land of the Island, to see if the Fleet came; and when they saw it, they were to give a Sign with a Half-pike and Flag, and then the Boat was to fetch them off. At last the Fleet came down, and Capt. Kidd went among them, and fired at them; but finding they were under a Convoy, and too strong for him, he was forced to leave them.

Mr. Knapp. Whither did you go then?

Bradinbam. From thence we went to Carawar, and by the Way we met with a Moorish Ship, of which Capt. Parker was Commander.

Mr. Knapp. My Lord, that is the Ship that they are indicted for. Where was it that you met with that Ship?

Bradinbam. About fifty Leagues from Carawar.

Mr. Knapp. Pray, what did they do with that Ship?

Bradinbam. We took Capt. Parker's Ship, and took him aboard, and the Portuguese for a Linguister; and he took out some of the Men, and bound their Hands behind them, and ordered them to be drubb'd with a naked Cutlafs; and he took out of her some Pepper and Coffee, and Arabian Gold, and wearing Apparel, and several other Things.

Mr. Knapp. What did he do with these Men, after he had plundered the Ship?

Bradinbam. He let the Ship go, and kept Parker and the Portuguese aboard.

Dr. Newton. How many Men were there aboard the Ship?

Bradinbam. About thirty.

Dr. Oxenden. What Countryman was this Parker?

Bradinbam. He was an Englishman.

Dr. Oxenden. How do you know that?

Bradinbam. He told me so.

Mr. Knapp. What Ship was it?

Bradinbam. A Moorish Ship.

Mr. Knapp. What Time was this done?

Bradinbam. In September, 1697.

Mr. Knapp. What did he do with the two Men he took out of this Ship?

Bradinbam. He kept them aboard this Vessel.

Mr. Knapp. What Ship was Captain Kidd in then?

Bradinbam. He was in the Adventure-Galley.

Mr. Knapp. Tell us whether any other of these Prisoners at the Bar were in that Ship when this was done?

Bradinbam. Every one of them.

Cl. of Arr. Was Capt. Kidd himself there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Was Nicholas Churchill there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Was James Howe there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Was Robert Lamley there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Was William Jenkins there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Was Gabriel Loffe there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Was Hugh Parrot there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Was Richard Barlicorn there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Was Abel Owens there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Was Darby Mullins there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. You say, you are sure they were all there?

Bradinbam. Yes, I am sure they were.

Mr. J. Turton. What Goods did they take out of that Ship?

Bradinbam. Several Bales of Pepper, several Bales of Coffee, and some Myrrh, which is a Gum.

Mr. Soll.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did they do with it?
Bradinbam. Capt. Kidd made use of the Myrrh to make Pitch of.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was the Value of the Myrrh?

Bradinbam. About fifteen Pounds.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where did they go after the taking of this Ship?

Bradinbam. To Carrawar.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did they do there?

Bradinbam. There the Captain wooded and watered his Ship.

Dr. Oxenden. What is Carrawar? Tell the Court.

Bradinbam. There is an English Factory; they sent some Men aboard, and demanded this Parker, and the Portuguese; and the Captain denied them, and kept them in the Hold, and would not let them know he had them on board.

Dr. Oxenden. Had they any notice of Parker's being on board Capt. Kidd's Ship?

Bradinbam. I suppose they had Information from Bombay, by the Mariners that went away; for Capt. Parker's Vessel belonged to that Place.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How far is that Carrawar from Bombay?

Bradinbam. About forty Leagues.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where did you go after that?

Bradinbam. They cruised on that Coast, and they went to one of the Malabar Islands.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was done there?

Bradinbam. We wooded and watered our Ship.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did they take any Ships there?

Bradinbam. Capt. Kidd went ashore there, and burnt some Houses, and plundered several Boats.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was there any Ship taken there?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Ship?

Bradinbam. Some time in November, (about the 17th of November) they took a Moorish Ship, Skipper Mitchel was the Commander.

Mr. B. Hatfell. You need go no further now.

Mr. Knapp. We will call the other Evidence, if you please, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We will give our Evidence upon both Indictments together.

Mr. Knapp. They stand charged with taking another Ship. You have heard how far we have carry'd it. Now they went and took another Ship about the 17th of November.

Bradingham. They took a Moorish Ship four Leagues from Callicut.

Mr. J. Turton. Now go on.

Bradingham. Capt. Kidd took this Moorish Ship on the Coast of Malabar, Skipper Mitchel was the Commander; she was a Moorish Ship: He took out of her two Horses, some Bales of Cotton, and some Quilts.

Mr. B. Hatfell. What Countryman was this Skipper Mitchel?

Bradinbam. A Dutchman.

Mr. B. Hatfell. What Ship was it?

Bradinbam. A Moorish Ship; she belong'd to Suratt.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Burthen was she?

Bradinbam. About 150 Tun.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was found in her?

Bradinbam. Two Horses, and about eleven or twelve Bales of Cotton.

Mr. J. Turton. Was this on the Coast of Callicut?

Bradinbam. It was on the Coast of Malabar.

Mr. Knapp. How far from Malabar?

Bradinbam. Seven or eight Leagues.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did they do after this with the Ship, and Goods, and People?

Bradinbam. The People they set ashore, and kept the Ship, and carry'd her to Madagascar.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was the Value of the Horses taken out of her?

Bradinbam. The Horses were worth about 40 l.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What the Cotton?

Bradinbam. About an Hundred Pounds.

Mr. B. Hatfell. How do you know this Skipper Mitchel was a Dutchman?

Bradinbam. He told me so; he came afterwards aboard Capt. Kidd, and took Arms under him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Were all these Persons aboard this Ship when she was taken?

Bradinbam. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. B. Hatfell. You say, this Ship was about 150 Tun; What might she be worth?

Bradinbam. About 500 l.

Mr. B. Hatfell. To whom did she belong?

Bradinbam. To the Moors.

Mr. B. Hatfell. What Moors?

Bradinbam. The Moors that belong'd to Suratt, as I was inform'd by the Moors.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did he do with the Ship afterwards?

Bradinbam. She was carried to Madagascar.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did they do with the Ship?

Bradinbam. They sunk her.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know why they sunk her?

Bradinbam. She was sunk voluntarily.

Kidd. This Man contradicts himself in an hundred Places.

Bradinbam. The Ship was sunk purposely.

Dr. Newton. What was done when you came to Madagascar?

Bradinbam. When we came to Madagascar, there came off a Canoo with white Men aboard, that belong'd to the Mocco Frigate: Some of these Men belong'd formerly to Capt. Kidd. She was suppos'd to be a Pirate Ship.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was the Reason of sinking that Ship?

Bradinbam. They sunk her in the Harbour, that she might be convenient for Vessels to career by. Some Men came off in this Canoo, and they told him, they heard he was come to take them, and hang them. He said, it was no such Thing.

Dr. Newton. Who was the Captain of the Mocco Frigate?

Bradinbam. Captain Culliford.

Dr. Newton. Was he a Pirate?

Bradinbam. Yes, he was reputed so.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Well, go on.

Bradinbam. Capt. Kidd swore he would be true to them, and that he would do them no Harm.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you hear all this?

Bradinbam. Yes, he swore to be true to them.

Mr. Knapp. Was there any thing said about Captain Kidd's taking her?

Bradinbam. Nothing.

Dr. Newton. What passed afterwards between Captain Kidd and Culliford?

Bradinbam. They were very friendly together, and they made Presents to one another.

Dr. Newton. What Presents were there made?

Bradinbam.

Bradinbam. Culliford gave to Capt. Kidd some Pieces of China Silk, and Kidd bid Culliford take any thing he had.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did Capt. Kidd give Culliford any Guns?

Bradinbam. He supply'd him with two Guns.

Dr. Newton. Was there any Division of Goods or Money?

Bradinbam. After we came to Madagascar, Capt. Kidd ordered the Goods to be hoisted out, and shared, and Capt. Kidd had forty Shares for himself.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What became of the Goods of those Ships?

Bradinbam. They were fold.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was done with the Product of the Goods?

Bradinbam. Capt. Kidd kept it; and when there was something worth sharing, he shared it, and he had forty Shares for himself.

Cl. of Arr. Had N. Churchill any Share?

Bradinbam. He had a whole Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had James Howe any Share?

Bradinbam. He had a whole Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had R. Lamley any Share?

Bradinbam. He had half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had W. Jenkins any Share?

Bradinbam. He had half a Share.

Jenkins. How can you attest these wicked Lies? I had nothing.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. Who shared it?

Bradinbam. The Captain.

Kidd. He tells a thousand Lies.

Cl. of Arr. Look on Hugh Parrot; Had he any Share?

Bradinbam. Yes, half a Share of Money, and a whole Share of Goods.

Cl. of Arr. Had R. Barlicorn any Share?

Bradinbam. He had half a Share?

Cl. of Arr. Had Abel Owens any Share?

Bradinbam. He had a whole Share?

Cl. of Arr. Had Darby Mullins any Share?

Bradinbam. He had half a Share.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Now if any of you will ask him any Questions you may?

Kidd. Mr. Bradinbam, Pray what Share had you?

Bradinbam. If my Lord ask me, I will answer him.

Kidd. Had you any Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Kidd. Did not you come aboard my Ship, and rob the Surgeon's Chest?

Bradinbam. No, I did not.

Kidd. Did not I come to you, when you went away, and met you on the Deck, and said, Why do you take the Chest away?

Bradinbam. No, I did not do it.

Kidd. You are a Rogue.

Mr. J. Turton. It were the same thing for him to confels it, as to deny it, if he had done it.

Kidd. He did certainly do it.

Mr. B. Hatfell. But he says he did not.

Mr. J. Turton. Would any of you ask him any Questions?

Cl. of Arr. Nich. Churchill. Will you ask him any Questions?

Churchill. I came in on the King's Proclamation, and depend wholly on it.

Kidd. Were there not any French Passes aboard that Ship?

Bradinbam. I heard say there were, I did never see them.

VOL V.

Kidd. I did not divide the Things, but the Men did what they pleased, and you took your Share, and saw the French Passes.

Mr. B. Hatfell. What Ship is that you mean; that taken in September, or that in November?

Bradinbam. The Moorish Ship, that Parker was Commander of.

Mr. B. Hatfell. There were two mentioned.

Kidd. Just now he told you of two in November; now he says one in November, another in September.

Mr. B. Hatfell. He says, that in September, that Parker was Commander of.

Kidd. There was no such Thing in November; he knows no more of these Things than you do. This Fellow used to sleep 5 or 6 Months together in the Hold.

Mr. J. Turton. I assure you, he gives a very good Account of the Matter.

Mr. B. Hatfell. Why did you give him a Share then?

Kidd. Because he was Surgeon. As for the Goods, they took it amongst them, and did what they pleased, I was never near them. They I wait for me to kill me. They took away what they pleased, and went to the Island; and I, with about 40 Men, was left in the Ship, and we might go whither we pleased.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Kidd, Will you ask him any Questions?

Kidd. No, no, so long as he swears it, our Words or Oaths cannot be taken.

Cl. of Arr. Will you ask him any more Questions?

Kidd. No, no, it signifies nothing.

Cl. of Arr. N. Churchill. Will you ask him any Questions?

Churchill. I came in upon his Majesty's Proclamation, and rely upon that.

Cl. of Arr. J. Howe. Will you ask him any Questions?

Howe. I surrendered my self upon the King's Proclamation, and plead Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. R. Lamley. Will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Lamley. Do you say, I had half a Share of Money?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Lamley. No, I had none.

Cl. of Arr. It was your Share, and you must make it appear, if you accounted for it to your Master.

Lamley. If your Lordship please, I was an Apprentice.

Mr. B. Hatfell. To whom was you a Servant?

Lamley. I was an Apprentice to A. Owens.

Mr. J. Turton. Was Lamley an Apprentice to Owens?

Bradinbam. My Lord, he was a Servant to Owens, who was aboard them.

Mr. J. Turton. He had half a Share, but perhaps he might account for it to his Master afterward.

Cl. of Arr. W. Jenkins. Will you ask the Witness any Questions?

Jenkins. My Lord, I beg he may speak the Truth, whether I was a Servant.

Bradinbam. My Lord, he was a Servant to George Bullen.

Mr. J. Turton. Was this Bullen aboard then?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. J. Turton. When both Ships were taken?

T t

Bra-

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Will you ask the Witnesses any Questions, G. Loffe?

Loffe. My Lord, when I came aboard, the Captain open'd his Commission there: Did I ever disobey his Commands?

Bradinbam. Not, that I know of.

Loffe. Did you see me receive any Share?

Bradinbam. Yes, half a Share of Money, and a whole Share of Goods.

Loffe. Where?

Bradinbam. In the great Cabin.

Cl. of Arr. What Questions will you ask him, Hugh Parrot?

Parrot. May it please your Lordship, I will give you an exact Account from the Time of my going out of England, in the Month of October, 1695.

Cl. of Arr. You may make your Defence afterwards; in the mean time will you ask him any Questions now?

Parrot. I appeal to him, Whether he ever saw me do any such Cruelty as he mentions?

Mr. J. Turton. You hear what he says, answer him.

Bradinbam. I cannot say you were the very Man that did it, but those Men were used so; they were hoisted up, and drubb'd with a naked Cutlafs.

Parrot. And then I ask him, Whether I ever went any further than my Commander order'd me, or against the King's Commission, as I thought?

Bradinbam. I cannot say you did any thing contrary to your Commander's Orders.

Parrot. I ask him, Whether, when I might have went aboard this Pirate, I did not stick close to my Captain, and come home with him? and Whether I had any Inclination to leave him?

Mr. J. Turton. He knows not your Inclination. Where did you leave Capt. Kidd? Will you ask him that?

Parrot. I came home to Boston with Capt. Kidd. Doctor, Did I go away with them that left Capt. Kidd?

Bradinbam. You went with Capt. Kidd to Madagascar.

Parrot. I came home with Capt. Kidd, and surrender'd my self to my Lord Bellamont.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, will you ask the Witnesses any Questions?

Owens. I ask the Witnesses, Whether I did not surrender my self?

Bradinbam. I cannot say any thing to that.

Cl. of Arr. Will you ask him any more Questions?

Owens. No, I stand to his Majesty's Proclamation, and the Mercy of the Honourable Bench.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, will you ask the King's Witnesses any Questions?

Mullins. No: May it please you, my Lord, I came in upon the King's gracious Proclamation, as the King's Evidence knows. Do you not know I came ashore with you about the 28th of May?

Bradinbam. I know he went ashore.

Mullins. I went ashore. I came home upon the King's Proclamation. We went ashore at Cape May. I was very sick of the Bloody-Flux, and not able to travel, and was like to die every Day.

Bradinbam. My Lord, I know this Man was very sick in the Passage.

Mullins. I was a Passenger aboard Capt. Shelby's Ship.

Mr. J. Turton. How came he to come aboard Capt. Shelby? Where did he leave Capt. Kidd?

Bradinbam. He left Capt. Kidd at Madagascar, and took his Passage with Capt. Shelby afterwards, after these were taken.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How came he to leave Captain Kidd at Madagascar?

Bradinbam. He went aboard Capt. Culliford's Ship. There was about 60 or 70 Men went aboard Culliford.

Mr. Knapp. Call Joseph Palmer.

Dr. Oxenden. He says, he came in upon the King's Proclamation to Cape May: Do you know any thing of that?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Dr. Oxenden. Where is that Cape May?

Bradinbam. Off of Maryland, where Capt. Shelby's Ship was at Anchor; and Capt. Gravenport came on board Capt. Shelby's Ship, and said, He heard his Majesty's Proclamation was out to receive Pirates that would come in; and the Men rejoic'd that there was such a Thing, and they went ashore, and surrender'd themselves.

Dr. Oxenden. Where?

Bradinbam. At Cape May.

Dr. Oxenden. Did he go to the Governor?

Bradinbam. I did not see him go ashore.

Cl. of Arr. D. Mullins, Will you ask him any more Questions?

Mullins. You was aboard when I went ashore.

Bradinbam. I did not see you go ashore.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was he sick when he went ashore?

Bradinbam. He was sick.

Mullins. I was sick, and expected to die every Moment.

Cl. of Arr. All was done before that Time.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did he rejoice when he heard the King's Proclamation was out.

Bradinbam. I heard him say the King's Proclamation was out, and he rejoic'd with others.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did he surrender himself to the Governor?

Bradinbam. I cannot say that; he went ashore.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. Now set up Joseph Palmer.

Mr. J. Turton. Gentlemen, I would not have you under any Mistake, that surrendering himself comes not under your Consideration; it was after all the Facts were done that the Prisoner is charg'd with.

Mr. Knapp. Mr. Palmer, give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know concerning Capt. Kidd's Voyage from England in the Adventure Galley, when he went out of England, and his Proceedings afterwards.

Palmer. About the last of April, or beginning of May, he went from Plymouth to New-York, and in the Way took a French Banker, and carried her to New-York, and condemn'd her there: And at New-York he set up Articles to invite Men to come aboard his Ship; That if any would come aboard, they should have a Share of such Treasure as he should take: He was to have forty Shares himself, and every Man a half or whole Share. And about the first of September following, he went from New-York to Maderas, from thence to Bonavis, from thence to St. Jauger, then to Madagascar, then to Malabar, then to Joanna, then to Mahala, then to Joanna again, then to the Red-Sea.

Mr. Knapp. Pray give an Account of what was done there.

Palmer. There he water'd, and took Guinea Corn to Victual his Ship; and then to Babs-Key, near the Red-Sea.

Mr. Knapp. Give an Account of what he did there.

Palmer. He sent out his Boat three times, to discover the Fleet, and likewise some Spies on the high Land, to look out on both Sides, to see that the Ships did not pass by.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Ships?

Palmer. Moorish Ships from Mocca.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Whose Ships were those Moorish Ships?

Palmer. They were Turks and Moors together.

Mr. Knapp. What did he do then?

Palmer. He call'd the Men by Lot to look out, and he sent his Boat out twice, and they return'd without bringing any Tidings. And he sent the Boat the third time, with Orders to take a Prisoner, or to see what Ships lay there. And the third time Word was brought, that there were about 14 or 15 Ships lay in the Road ready to sail, with Dutch, English, and Moorish Colours: And when this News came, Capt. Kidd order'd the Men to go on the other Side, on the high Lands, to see that the Ships did not pass by in the Night; and in 4 or 5 Days the Ships came down, about the 14th of August. The Fleet came down in the Evening, and Capt. Kidd went after them: And some of the Men said, We will go among them To-night: No, says Capt. Kidd, we will go in the Morning, and then we will take our Choice.

Kidd. Did you hear me say so?

Palmer. I heard you say so.

Kidd. I am sure you never heard me say such a Word to such a Loggerhead as you.

Palmer. These are the Words I heard him say. And the next Morning he fell in with this Fleet, and went through them; and there was a Dutch and English Convoy; and they fired at one another.

Kidd. Hear me—

Mr. Knapp. You shall ask him what Questions you will presently.

Mr. J. Turton. Who fired first?

Palmer. The Dutch and English fired first. When we lay between the English and Dutch, a Moorish Ship came by, and he fired several Shot after her: And the English Ship flung a Shot almost home, and then he made sail, and went out of the Fleet: And from thence he went to Carrawar, and in the Way met with a Ship, whereof Parker was Commander, and there was one Antonio, a Portuguese.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where was this done?

Palmer. About fifty Leagues from Carrawar.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Time of the Year was it?

Palmer. It was about September.

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. The Witness is now come to speak to the Ship for which the Prisoners are indicted.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Go on; What did they do with that Ship?

Palmer. He fought the Ship, and took her, and took out of her several Bales of Coffee, and he retain'd only one Bale, and sent the rest back again: And he took a Bale of Pepper, and some Myrrh to use instead of Pitch.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Quantity of Pepper was there?

Palmer. About sixty Pound Weight.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Myrrh?

Palmer. About thirty Pound Weight.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Value was it of?

Palmer. I cannot tell that.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Arabian Gold?

Palmer. I did not see it: I did not see any taken out then; but a pretty while afterwards, when Capt. Kidd came to Carrawar, he gave every Mefs two Pieces of Arabian Gold.

Mr. Knapp. How long was this after the Ship was taken?

Palmer. Ten or twelve Days.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How was the Pepper dispos'd of?

Palmer. It was divided among the Messes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Had these Prisoners their Part?

Palmer. Yes.

Mr. Knapp. How did they use the Men of this Ship?

Palmer. There were several hoisted up, and drubb'd with a naked Cutlafs.

Kidd. Where was this done?

Palmer. In your Ship.

Kidd. What Ship?

Palmer. The Adventure Galley.

Kidd. Did not a Parcel of Rogues go aboard their Ship, and do it?

Mr. Knapp. For what Purpose was this done?

Palmer. Because they thought they had more Money in the Ship.

Mr. Knapp. What Country-man was Parker?

Palmer. An English-man, born in the North of England. He said so.

Mr. J. Turton. Who else was detain'd besides Parker?

Palmer. One Antonio, a Portuguese. Parker was detain'd for a Pilot; the other for a Linguifter.

Mr. J. Turton. What do you mean by a Linguifter?

Palmer. To speak Moorish and Portuguese.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where did they go then?

Palmer. From thence we went to Carrawar, and water'd and wooded the Ship; and a great many of his Men left him there: And when he saw his Men leave him, he went to Sea; he would not trust any more to go ashore. And the next Evening he met a Portuguese Man of War, and fought her, but did not take her.

Mr. J. Turton. Did you know any that left him?

Palmer. Peter Lehair and Churchill, and others; they went to the English Factory, to know whether they would entertain them, or no.

Mr. J. Turton. Who went?

Palmer. Mr. Lehair, Nicholas Churchill, and another; they went to know whether they should be entertain'd, and they told them, They were loth to entertain them, for fear Capt. Kidd should know of it, and do them an Injury.

Kidd. My Lord, a Parcel of these Men went ashore to run away with this Ship.

Mr. J. Turton. Were there any more of these Prisoners at the Bar, that would have gone off, besides Churchill?

Palmer. No, but he would have gone off.

Mr. J. Turton. How do you know that?

Palmer. He told me so.

Mr. Bar. Gould. Had they an Opportunity to go off?

Palmer. Some more were taken going afterwards, and had got a Boat for that Purpose, but they they were taken, and Capt. Kidd order'd them to be brought aboard, and whipp'd at the Gun.

Kidd. Certainly you have not the Impudence to say that !

Palmer. I say, you order'd them to be whipp'd, for attempting to go ashore.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Whither did you go then ?

Palmer. That Evening we went and met with a Portuguese Man of War.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You may go on from that. Whither did you go then ?

Palmer. To the Malabar Islands.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What to do ?

Palmer. To take in Water. His Cooper went ashore, and the Natives cut his Throat: And Capt Kidd sent his Men ashore, and order'd them to divide themselves into Squadrons, and to burn all the Houses they came near, except the Houses that had white Flags upon them.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Why not them ?

Palmer. Because they help'd us to water the Ship.

Mr. Knapp. And were there any Houses burnt ?

Palmer. Yes, a great many.

Mr. Knapp. What did he more ?

Palmer. I heard what he did ; I did not see it.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. What do you know of any other Ship ?

Palmer. About the 27th of November he took the Ship Maiden, near Calicut. We spy'd a Ship in the Night, and chased her all Night, and the next Morning he took her.

Mr. J. Turton. What Ship was that ?

Palmer. Skipper Mitchel was Commander ; it was a Moorish Ship, she belong'd to Suratt ; she was taken in November, and after that she was called the November.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How was she taken ?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd chased her under French Colours, and this Ship had French Colours ; and when he haled her, it was in French, and this Skipper Mitchel answer'd in French.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Had the Moorish Ship French Colours before Capt. Kidd put up French Colours, or after ?

Palmer. After.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Colour had she when she was chased at first ?

Palmer. It was in the Night : In the Morning Capt. Kidd hoisted up French Colours, and then the Moorish Ship likewise hoisted up French Colours.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What follow'd ?

Kidd. Speak true.

Palmer. I will. He fired three or four Shot at the Ship, and commanded them aboard ; and Mitchel did so, and some of his Men with him ; and he order'd Monsieur Le Roy to be as Captain ; and he came from below Deck, and receiv'd him as Captain.

Kidd. Did you see that ?

Palmer. I did not see that ; but I know he was order'd to do so, and he receiv'd him as Captain ; I was not in the Cabin at that time. Monsieur Le Roy receiv'd him as Captain, and carried him aft. They haled this Ship in French, and bid him come aboard in French, and this Frenchman receiv'd him as Captain ; and I heard him say, That he brought a French Pass along with him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who did you hear say so ?

Palmer. I heard People on board say so.

Kidd. Palmer, Did you see that Pass ?

Palmer. Indeed, Captain, I did not.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did you do with the Ship ?

Palmer. There were two Horses on board, and ten or twelve Bales of Cotton, and some Quilts, and Capt Kidd sold them at Malabar.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Goods were there ?

Palmer. Two Horses.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What besides ?

Palmer. Ten or twelve Bales of Cotton, and some Quilts.

Mr. J. Turton. What Country man was Skipper Mitchel the Captain ?

Palmer. A Dutch-man.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was the Ship worth ?

Palmer. I cannot tell the Value of her.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Burden was she ?

Palmer. About 150 Tun.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did they do with those Horses, and the Cotton ?

Palmer. They sold them to the Banians.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did they do with the Produce of those Goods ?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd kept it till they had a pretty deal of Money together, and then they shared it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Had the Prisoners at the Barany Shares of it ?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Capt. Kidd himself any Share ?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Nicholas Churchill any Share ?

Palmer. Yes, he had a whole Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had James Howe any Share ?

Palmer. Yes, a whole Share.

Mr. J. Turton. Where did they share it ?

Palmer. On the Coast of Malabar.

Cl. of the Arr. Had Robert Lamley any ?

Palmer. Yes, half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had William Jenkins any Share ?

Palmer. He had half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Gabriel Loffe any ?

Palmer. He had half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Hugh Parrot any ?

Palmer. He had a whole Share.

H. Parrot. Did you see me have any Share ? Can you speak that to my Face now ? Did you see any of us have any ?

Palmer. When Capt. Kidd shared this Money, I did not actually see him pay their Shares ; but he call'd every Man by the List, and they came with their Hats in their Hands, and he gave them their Money, and they swept it up, and went away.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Were these Men call'd by the List ?

Palmer. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And did they miss none ?

Palmer. Not, that I know of.

Cl. of Arr. What say you to Richard Barlicorn ? Had he any ?

Palmer. He had half a Share : Whether his Master had it or no afterwards, I know not.

Cl. of Arr. Had Abel Owens any Share ?

Palmer. He had a whole Share.

Cl. of Arr. What had Darby Mullins ?

Palmer. He had a half Share.

Mr. Knapp. I think you were speaking of Arabian Gold, that they had in Messes : Had these Prisoners their Share of that ?

Palmer. Yes, there was no Difference ; they had all their Shares.

Mr. Knapp. Now, if you will ask this Witness any Question, you may.

Kidd.

Kidd. What signifies it to ask him any Questions? We have no Witnesses, and what we say signifies nothing.

Cl. of Arr. N. Churchill, Will you ask him any Questions?

Churchill. No, I have acknowledged all these Crimes, and surrender'd my self, and rely on the King's Mercy.

Cl. of Arr. J. Howe, Will you ask him any Thing?

Howe. No.

Cl. of Arr. R. Lamley, Will you ask him any Thing?

Lamley. Mr. Palmer, How can you tell I had a half Share?

Palmer. There was a half Share directed for you.

Lamley. I had not a Farthing.

Mr. J. Turton. Was he an Apprentice?

Palmer. Yes, he was Servant to Mr. Owens.

Jenkins. Can you say, I had any Share?

Palmer. I know there was a half Share appointed for you; I know not whether your Master had it.

Mr. J. Turton. Was his Master aboard then?

Palmer. Yes, his Master was aboard then.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, have you any Questions to ask him?

Loffe. Had I any Share?

Palmer. You had a half Share; I did not see you take it, but you were in the List.

Cl. of Arr. H. Parrot, Have you any Questions to ask him?

Jury-man. Did you see them come out with the Money in their Hats?

Palmer. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did Gabriel Loffe come out as contented as the rest?

Palmer. No, because he had but half a Share.

Loffe. Did you see me come out with my Money?

Palmer. I saw you come out with Money in your Hat; and I heard you say, you had half a Share.

Loffe. As I live, I had no Hat then.

Cl. of Arr. Have you any Questions to ask him, H. Parrot?

Parrot. Did you see me have any Share?

Palmer. I did not see you receive any Share, but you was called among the rest.

Mr. J. Turton. He says, they were all called, Man by Man, to take their Shares.

Cl. of Arr. R. Barlicorn, Have you any Thing to ask him?

Barlicorn. I desire of him, Whether he saw me have any Goods, or take any Share?

Palmer. My Lord, when the Goods were shared at Madagascar, I was at Bonavis; I was not present, but I heard of it afterwards.

Barlicorn. I hope the Jury will take notice of this.

Mr. B. Hatfell. Mr. Bradinbam, Did any of these Men complain, that they had not their Share.

Bradinbam. No, no, I heard nothing of that.

Mr. J. Turton. Were these Shares such as were agreed on in the Articles at New-York.

Palmer. Yes, Capt. Kidd ordered the Goods to be hoisted out?

Kidd. Did I order the Goods to be hoisted out?

Palmer. Yes, you did.

Kidd. It was the Mutinous Men that did it.

Parrot. How do you know that I had any Share? You did not see me in a Year after.

Palmer. I do not say, I saw it given you.

Kidd. My Lord, there were 95 Men that deserted my Ship, and took away what they pleased; we could not stand in Defence of any Thing.

Barlicorn. Was not I an Apprentice to Capt. Kidd, and waited on him continually in the Ship?

Palmer. Yes, you were.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Had he a Share allotted him?

Palmer. Yes; but I am apt to think his Master had it.

Mr. J. Turton. Who was his Master?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd.

Cl. of Arr. A. Owens, Have you any Thing to say for your self?

Owens. I refer my self to the King's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, Have you any Thing to say for your self?

Mullins. I came to Cape May, where I heard of the King's Proclamation. Did not you and I come ashore together?

Palmer. Yes, we did, the same Day.

Mullins. Did not we come ashore on the King's Proclamation;

Palmer. We did hear of it.

Mullins. Did not you hear, that all the Men were glad at the News, when they heard of the Proclamation?

Dr. Oxenden. What did these Men say then?

Palmer. They all rejoiced to hear of such a Thing.

Mullins. From the Time I came from Madagascar I was sick of the Bloody-Flux; I could not walk a Mile in a Day.

Palmer. I know you was sick.

Mullins. I have no more to say: I stand to your Lordship's Mercy, and the King's gracious Proclamation.

Mr. J. Turton. If you have any Witnesses to call for your selves, you may call them. Capt. Kidd, what have you to say for your self? You may make your Defence, first for that Ship taken in September; then, for that in November.

Kidd. What is it the near for me to speak? I have no Witnesses for these Things.

Mr. B. Hatfell. Yesterday you produced your Commissions; if you will, they may be read now.

Kidd. It availed nothing then. Here is all these Men saw the French Pass:

Palmer. Indeed, Captain, I never saw it.

Kidd. You left my Ship, with 95 Men more, and you went a roguing afterwards.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Why did you go aboard that Pirate.

Kidd. My Lord, I had a Design to take that Frigate, and then I designed to come for England. I would not go with such a Roguish Crew as you were. Was not I threatened to be shot in the Cabbin by such Villains as you, if I would not go along with you? This was the Reason I could not come home. Did not you, with others, set fire to the Boat, to destroy my Ship?

Palmer.

Palmer. I know nothing of that; but I am sure I saved your Life on the Malabar Island, when you burnt the Boat.

Kidd. My Lord, they took what they pleased out of this Ship, and I was forced to stay by my self, and pick up here a Man, and there a Man, to carry her home.

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Churchill, What have you to say for your self?

Churchill. My Lord, I plead Guilty, and rely on the King's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. James Howe, have you any Thing to say for your self?

Howe. I plead Guilty, my Lord.

Kidd. Here are some Gentlemen here, I desire they may be heard as to my Reputation. Here is Col. Hewson.

Mr. J. Turton. What do you ask Col. Hewson?

Kidd. I ask him what he knows as to my Reputation in the West-Indies?

Col. Hewson. My Lord, he was a mighty Man there. He served under my Command. He was sent to me by the Order of Col. Codrington.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long was this ago?

Col. Hewson. About nine Years ago. He was with me in two Engagements against the French, and fought as well as any Man I ever saw, according to the Proportion of his Men. We had six Frenchmen to deal with, and we had only mine and his Ship.

Kidd. Do you think I was a Pirate?

Col. Hewson. I know his Men would have gone a Pirateering, and he refused it, and his Men seized upon his Ship. And when he went this Voyage, he consulted me, and told me they had engaged him in such an Expedition; and I told him he had enough already, and might be contented with what he had: And he said, it was his own Inclination; but my Lord Bellamont told him, if he did not go the Voyage, that there were Great Men, and they would stop his Brigantine in the River, if he did not go.

Mr. J. Turton. Who told you so? Did he?

Col. Hewson. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. J. Turton. If he had kept to the honest Design of that Expedition, he had done very well. Did you apprehend that his Intention in that Undertaking was to be a Pirate?

Col. Hewson. No, my Lord. He told me his Business was to go a Cruising, and surprize Pirates.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did he tell you he had no such Design.

Col. Hewson. Yes, he said he would be shot to Death before he would do any such Thing. I know he was very serviceable in the West-Indies.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, Have you any Thing more to say?

Lamley. I can say nothing, for I have none of my Friends here.

Kidd. Call Thomas Cooper. (Who appeared.)

Mr. J. Turton. What Questions do you ask him?

Kidd. Sir, pray tell my Lord what you knew of me in the Indies.

Thomas Cooper. I was aboard the Lyon, and this Capt. Kidd brought his Ship from a Place that belonged to the Dutch, and brought her into the King's Service at the Beginning of the War, about Ten Years ago; and he took Service under the Colonel; and we fought Monsieur Du Cass a whole Day, and, I thank God, we got the better of it; and Capt. Kidd behaved himself very well in the Face of his Enemies.

Jury-man. How many Years ago was this?

Tho. Cooper. About Ten Years ago.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, Have you any Thing more to say?

Lamley. I have no Friends here, I am a 'Pren-tice, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, Have you any more to say?

Jenkins. I was an Apprentice, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, Have you any Thing to say for your self?

Loffe. My Lord, I was a Servant under Capt. Kidd, and always obeyed his Commands, and had no Share. I came home with Capt. Kidd, to Boston, and went to my Lord Bellamont, and the Men came and told us he had discharged us, and I went about my Business. And some Days after, we were committed to Prison, and I was sick, and my Lord let me be in the Keeper's House, and I was trusted by him four or five Months with the Keys to look after the Prisoners. Mr. Davis can testify this. If I had had a mind to have done any ill Thing, I might have done it then. (Then Mr. Davis appeared.) Pray, Mr. Davis, declare what you know of me when I came to Boston, and how the Keeper intrusted me with the Prisoners.

Mr. Davis. I remember when we came there to the Road-Island, Capt. Kidd sent him home: And when he came to Boston, he was trusted with the Keys, and had liberty to go where he pleased not out of the Yard.

Mr. J. Turton. Was this after he was a Prisoner?

Mr. Davis. Yes, my Lord.

Gabriel Loffe. I hope the Jury will take notice of this.

Kidd. Mr. Davis, Did you not hear of any French Passes that I had?

Mr. Davis. I heard of them, and I saw them.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How do you know they were French Passes?

Mr. Davis. He told me they were French Passes; I did not know it, I could not read them.

Mr. J. Turton. They shewed you the Papers; Did you know what Ship they belonged to?

Mr. Davis. No, my Lord, not I.

Kidd. I desire Capt. Hunt may be called, to know what my Lord Bellamont said of me.

Mr. B. Hatsell. That will signify nothing.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, Have you any Thing to say for your self?

Parrot. My Lord, I had no Share of the Goods.

Kidd. My Lord, I desire this Commission may be read.

Mr. B. Hatsell. Is it under the Broad-Seal?

Mr. Crawley. It is a Letter of Mart and Reprials, my Lord.

[Then the Commission was read, dated the 11th of December, 1695.]

William Kidd. Now, my Lord, in pursuance of this Commission, I went and took these Ships, which had French Passes on board, and my Lord Bellamont took them by force from me.

Mr. J. Turton. You took one French Ship, and acted in a regular manner to condemn her; but, Did you do so with the rest?

Kidd. I could not carry these Ships home, by reason my Men had left me.

Mr. J. Turton. Mr. Bradinbam, with what number of Men did you go out of England?

Bradinbam. With about seventy Men.

Mr. J. Turton. What number had you when you went from New-York?

Bradinbam. About 155.

Mr. J. Turton. So that your Number was encreas'd.

Bradinbam. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. J. Turton. Was there any other Ship condemn'd, besides the French Banker?

Bradinbam. No, my Lord.

Kidd. These Men were some of them that left me, and took the Goods; what was left I carried with me.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, have you any more to say?

Parrot. The Evidence cannot prove that I had any Share: I came with my Commander from Madagascar, and he paid me an hundred Pieces of Eight, and my Lord Bellamont seiz'd all: And I had Opportunity enough to have gone a pirating with Capt. Culliford, but I told them I would not: And I came to my Lord Bellamont, and surrender'd my self.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Barlicorn, have you any thing to say in your own Defence?

Barlicorn. I desire Witnesses may be call'd, to know whether I was not a Servant aboard?

Mr. J. Turton. The King's Evidence say you were.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, what have you to say?

Owens. I own my self Guilty; I came in upon the King's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, what have you to say?

Mullins. I did what I did under the King's Commission; I obey'd my Captain, and came home with him; I durst not for my Life do otherwise. Examine the Witnesses, and they will not say otherwise. Mr. Bradinbam, did I do any Thing against the Captain's Command?

Bradinbam. I cannot say but he did always obey the Captain's Commands.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did he not go aboard Capt. Culliford afterwards?

Bradinbam. Yes, my Lord.

Mullins. I went for Want.

Cl. of Arr. Have any of you any more to say?

Parrot. My Lord, I did not go out of England with Capt. Kidd, but I shipp'd my self on board a Merchant-man bound for Newfoundland, and I was taken by a French Privateer; and afterwards coming to Madagascar, Capt. Kidd was there, and he took a Pistol to shoot me, but I avoided it: But hearing afterwards that Capt. Kidd had the King's Commission, I went aboard him.

Mr. J. Turton. Had he any Commission to take any Goods from the King's Subjects?

Mr. Bar. Hatsell. Capt. Kidd says, the Seamen forced him from the Ship, and you shared the Goods your selves.

Parrot. He does not say so of us. My Lord, with Submission, be pleas'd to ask my Commander, whether I ever disobey'd his Commands, or was forward to attempt any ill Thing, or did any Thing of that which is alledg'd against me?

Kidd. Mr. Bradinbam, are not you promis'd your Life, to take away mine?

Mr. J. Turton. He is not bound to answer that Question: He is very fit to be made an Evidence for the King; perhaps there can be no other in this Case, than such who are in his Circumstances.

Parrot. With Submission, I ask the Evidence, whether I ever disobey'd the Captain's Orders?

Mr. J. Turton. The Captain's Orders will excuse you in honest Things, but not in unlawful Actions.

Parrot. As for the Ships that were taken, I had no Hand in it.

Mr. Knapp. But you receiv'd your Share, and knew of the robbing of the Ships.

Mr. J. Turton. Gentlemen of the Jury, here is William Kidd, Nicholas Churchbill, James Howe, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loffe, Hugh Parrot, Richard Barlicorn, Abel Owens, and Darby Mullins, the Prisoners at the Bar, who are all indicted for Piracy, or piratical and felonious taking a Moorish Ship, on the High Seas, about fifty Leagues from Carrawar in the East-Indies, and seizing the Goods that were in that Ship, to a considerable Value. And they are also indicted for the piratical and felonious taking another Ship, which was likewise a Moorish Ship, with the Tackle and Apparel thereof, to the Value of an Hundred and Five Pounds, four Leagues from Callicut in the East-Indies. Now to these Indictments they have pleaded, Not guilty: And whether they are guilty or no, you are to determine, on the Evidence you have heard.

I need not tell you the Heinousness of this Offence wherewith they are charg'd, and of what ill Consequence it is to all Trading Nations. Pirates are call'd Hostes humani generis, the Enemies to all Mankind; but they are especially so to those that depend upon Trade: And these Things that they stand charg'd with, are the most mischievous and prejudicial to Trade that can happen. But as it is not my Business to aggravate the Offence, so it is yours to consider, whether they, or any of them, are guilty or not.

Two Witnesses have been produced for the King, and both of them were concern'd in all the Transactions relating to the Prisoners; and by their Evidence it appears, That in the Year 1696, about the beginning of May, Capt. Kidd, who was Captain of The Adventure-Galley, was fitted out on a very good Design; for he was to take Pirates, and to seize the Ships and Effects of the King's Enemies: That was the End of this Expedition. He went out from Plymouth with about Seventy Men from England; they sail'd to New-York, and in their Passage they seiz'd a French Vessel, and that Vessel was condemn'd in a due Manner, and that was pursuant to their Commission.

When they came to New-York, there were other Things in Contemplation. Then he made a Proclamation, to give Notice, That if any would come aboard him, he propos'd Terms for their Encouragement; That they should be Share ers in all they could acquire; he himself would have Forty Shares, because the Ship, Arms, Ammunition, and Provisions were his, and the rest should be divided proportionable to those that should be aboard him. And whereas they went out with seventy Men, there their Number was increas'd to 155, for with that Number he sail'd from New-York.

Gentlemen, The Witnesses tell you whither they went afterwards; I will not mention all the particular Places, but only such where any Thing remarkable was done. They say, they came to a Place call'd Babs-Key; and there, it seems, they had an Intention to observe a Fleet, call'd The Mocca-Fleet: There they stay'd about Three Weeks, and in that Time Capt. Kidd sent his Boat three times to Mocca, where this Fleet was: The two first times they brought no certain Account; but the last Boat that was sent brought Intelligence, that there were fourteen or fifteen Ships lay in the River or Harbour there, and were ready to sail; and, that they had Dutch Colours, English Colours, and Moorish Colours. And Capt. Kidd said then, He expected to make a considerable Advantage of them. And after this Advertisement, he sent some Men to the high Lands, to observe the Motion of this Fleet; who, after some Time, gave Notice that the Fleet was coming; and then he went out with his Vessel; and, as they tell you, he went into this Fleet, and discharg'd some Guns at them; but, they having a Convoy, he found he was not a Match for them, and that it would be in vain to attempt any thing further on so great a Disadvantage; and so that Design was frustrated. But it must be observ'd, That these Ships were all English, Dutch, and Moorish, and none of them French; which shews Capt. Kidd's Inclination to take such Ships, for which he had no Authority by any Commission.

But they tell you, after this, when he had met with this Disappointment, then he sail'd towards the Coast of Carrawar, and there they met with the first Moorish Ship, that he is now charg'd with; and this Ship they seiz'd, and took one Parker, who was the Captain: They seiz'd him, and also a Portuguese, whom they made use of as an Interpreter; and some of the Men, whom they treated in a barbarous manner. They tell you, That there happening to be an English Factory near that Place; they of that Factory understanding that this Parker and the Portuguese were on board the Ship, they sent to demand them, and Capt. Kidd deny'd them, and said, There were no such Men on board, and yet he had hid them under the Deck. You are also told by the Witnesses what they found and seiz'd on board this Ship, viz. Pepper, Coffee, Myrrh, and some Gold. They have told you, the Gold was shar'd amongst them, and in Specie, as I remember; every Man had two Pieces, and the rest of the Goods were divided amongst them in proportion, according to their Original Agreement, or they had their Shares of the Money for which they were sold. This was the first Ship that he stands charg'd with the piratical taking of; and this Ship was a Moorish Ship, and did belong to the Natives of that Place.

And then it appears they went to the Coast of Malabar, and there they took the other Ship that he is charg'd with by the other Indictment; the first was taken in September, and this in November. There was on board that Ship two Horses, and several Bales of Cotton, and some other Goods; and this also belong'd to the Moors, and one Skipper Mitchell, a Dutchman, was Captain of her. When they had taken this Ship, they went to Madagascar, and there, it is told you, they sunk this Vessel: And they having several other Goods that they had taken out of another Vessel, the Goods were sold, and divided between the Captain and the rest of the Men, according to their several Proportions. And it is prov'd to you, that every one of these Prisoners had some Share of the Product of those Goods. And now, to shew what Captain Kidd was, and that he was a Favourer of those he ought to have oppos'd, there was another Pirate there, one Capt. Culliford, who had a Vessel that he us'd to the same Purpose, call'd The Great Mahomet; and he having heard of Kidd's Commission, had a Jealousie that Capt. Kidd had a Design to take him and his Company; but he told them, he had no such Design; he was so far from that, that he assur'd them, nay swore, he would be true to them: And there were great Appearances of Friendship between Capt. Kidd and Capt. Culliford; they made mutual Visits to each other; and Capt. Kidd did accommodate Culliford with some Guns, and gave him liberty to take any Thing he had; and Capt. Culliford likewise presented him with China Silks. Now this also is given in Evidence, to shew that Capt. Kidd had a Piratical Design in all this, and that he did assist those that were engag'd in the like Design with him, instead of endeavouring to suppress them.

Now, Gentlemen, the first Witness, Robert Bradinham, has declar'd all this to you; and likewise Joseph Palmer has spoken to the same Purpose, tho' something more than the other; and he tells you, how they went ashore on one of the Malabar Islands, and how they burnt some Houses, and did other very barbarous Things; but that concerns not this Matter for which they are now indicted. He tells you also, That when they took one of these Ships, whereof Capt. Parker was Commander, they took two of the Men on board that Ship, and hoisted them up, and us'd them severely; which they did, to cause them to discover what Things of Value they had on board; but it seems they had nothing of any considerable Worth on board: However, this shews, that Capt. Kidd had a Design to act Piratically. The Witness gives you an Account of all the Transactions in taking the two Ships, and disposing of the Goods, and dividing of the Money: Indeed he says, when the Distribution was made, he was not in the Cabin, but tells you, he heard the List call'd over, and all the other Prisoners severally went in, and brought out their Shares in their Hats, or otherwise, and did not hear any one complain that he had not his Share.

Gentlemen, there are three Persons that were Servants, that is, Robert Lamley, he was Servant to Owens the Cook; William Jenkins, he was Servant to the Mate; and Richard Barlicorn, who was Servant to Captain Kidd: Now, tho' these might have their Shares deliver'd them, yet it is to be presum'd that they were to be accountable to their Masters: And they being

Servants,

Servants, I suppose you will think to distinguish them from the rest.

Gentlemen, this is the Sum of the Evidence given for the King; and, indeed, this seems to be as strong an Evidence against the Prisoners at the Bar as can be: They did endeavour to take the Mocca Fleet, but they were too strong for them: And they could have no Suspicion that they were French, for they had English, Dutch, and Moorish Colours; so that Capt. Kidd could have no Pretence from his Commission to look after these Ships: There were no French among them, and yet there he lay three Weeks waiting for them; but they did actually take these two Ships mention'd in the Indictments, and dispos'd of the Goods, and shared the Product among themselves. Here is all the Evidence that can be given of Piracy.

Now Capt. Kidd, when he comes to make his Defence, tells you, He had a Commission, and it was produced (and that is no more than what is common in Time of War) whereby he is authoriz'd to take the Ships and Goods of any of the Subjects of the French King; but it is penn'd with great Caution; he is to take none but the Goods and Ships of the French King, or his Subjects; and he is to keep an exact Account of all that he takes, and to procure them to be condemn'd in the Admiralty. Now, if he had pursued this Commission, and gone no further, it had been well; he had done justly, and answered the End on which he was sent out. And it does appear, that the first Vessel that he took in his Passage to New-York was thus condemn'd: But afterwards I do not find that he had any Regard to his Commission, but waited for that great Mocca Fleet a considerable time, I think about three Weeks; and being disappointed there, he afterwards did take these two Ships mention'd in the Indictment; and it does not appear that they were French Ships, neither were there any French Passes on board. One of the Witnesses indeed says, He heard of French Passes; but neither he, or any other Person that has been produced, has seen one of them. Now I do not observe that his Commission does any manner of way tend to excuse the Captain in taking both, or either of these Ships: One of them was under an English Commander, which was Parker, the other under a Dutch-man; there were no French men aboard, only Le Roy, who was made a kind of a Mock-Captain by Kidd, to serve a present Turn. But what Capt. Kidd has said from his Commission, is so far from justifying him, that it seems rather an Aggravation of his Crime: For he that will go out with the King's Commission on a just and laudable Design, to take the Ships and Effects of the French King in War, and also to destroy Pirates (which were the principal Ends of his being fitted out to Sea) and instead thereof will turn Pirate himself, make use of the Force with which he was intrusted, for the promoting his Piratical Purposes, and for the felonious taking the Ships and Goods of those that were in Amity with the King of England, appears to be guilty of a manifest Breach and Violation of his Trust, attended with very aggravating Circumstances.

Now, for those Three that were Servants, I must leave it to you, whether they did act otherwise than they might do. A Servant is to obey his Master, but it must be in Things lawful and honest; if they did any Thing else, you, who have heard the Evidence, will consider of their Guilt; and whether their Cases differ from the rest: But there is some Probability, that their Shares might be accounted for to their respective Masters.

Now, as to the rest, there are some of them that do pretend they did surrender themselves; one of them to Mr. Riches, a Justice of Peace in Surrey; others, to Colonel Bass, who was a Commander in East-Jersey; and it does appear, that they did surrender themselves accordingly: But that does not come under your Consideration; you are to consider only, whether they are Guilty of the Facts they are charg'd with, or no. As to what Effect their surrendring themselves may have with his Majesty, must be left to the King's Royal Pleasure, but we are to consider the Evidence. Now they generally say, They did obey the Captain, and, that they understood he had the King's Commission. Truly, so far as he pursued the King's Commission, they were to obey him; but when he acts contrary to the King's Commission, in Acts of Piracy upon the Ships, Goods and Effects of the King's Friends, and those in Amity with the Crown of England, they should have been so far from obeying and assisting him, that they should have obstructed him, and seiz'd him, that he might have been brought to Justice, and that would have been a greater Vindication of their Innocencies. But, as the Matter now appears, I do not see that any thing they have said tends to their Defence, and therefore I must leave it to your Consideration.

Indeed, there are some Witnesses appear for Capt. Kidd. Colonel Hewson gives you this Account of Capt. Kidd, That he was under his Command in the beginning of the War, and, that he fought, and behav'd himself very well, and was serviceable in the West-Indies; and he says, he discours'd him about his going out on the Expedition he was sent; and, that Kidd said he had no Inclination to go. And Mr. Cooper likewise tells you, That about ten or twelve Years ago he knew him, and, that he fought the French, and behav'd himself very well at that Time; and, that several of his Men ran away with his Ship when he was at Antegoa.

Then there is Gabriel Loffe, he has produced a Witness for himself, one Davis; and Davis tells you, He was a Prisoner in New-York, by Order from my Lord Bellamont; and at first they were some Days there before they were taken into Custody; and there was so little Apprehension of his being a dangerous Man, that he had some Favour allow'd him, and had a great deal of Liberty. This is that he says. I find not that any of the rest have produced any Evidence, only they say they were under the Commander, and were to observe him; but if that would excuse them, then all Pirates would be excus'd. Now, as to Capt. Kidd, it seems he has wofully transgress'd the Business of his Commission, and acted contrary to the End and Design of his being sent out, and in the piratical taking the Ships and Goods mention'd in the Indictments, in which the other Prisoners at the Bar have join'd with him; and they were so far from from being the Ship and Goods of the French King, or his Subjects, or Pirates, that they were the Ships and Goods of Persons of other Nations in Amity with the King of England. Now if you believe these Witnesses, that Capt. Kidd has taken these Ships in a piratical Manner, and, that the other Persons assisted him in it, and had their Shares of the Money and Goods, which is an Evidence of their consenting to, and spontaneous acting, I believe you will think fit to find them Guilty; but I leave it to you. And as to these three Persons that were Servants, I must leave their Case to your Consideration, whether you will think fit to distinguish them from the rest, or not.

Then an Officer was sworn to keep the Jury.

And after about Half an Hour the Jury return'd, and brought in their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, answer to your Names: William Smith.

William Smith. Here, &c.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. William Kidd, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner: How say you? Is he Guilty of the Piracy and Robbery whereof he stands indicted by the first Indictment, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Nicholas Churchill Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty?

Cl. of Arr. Is James Howe Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Robert Lamley Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is William Jenkins Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Gabriel Loffe Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Hugh Parrot Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Richard Barlicorn Guilty, or not Guilty?

Cl. of Arr. Is Darby Mullins Guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

In like manner Kidd, and Six more, were found Guilty on the other Indictment, and the Three Servants Acquitted.

The Trial of William Kidd, and the other Nine Persons, upon Two more Indictments of Piracy:

One committed on a Moorish Ship, four Leagues from Callicut; the other, on a Portuguese Ship, twelve Leagues from Callicut.

THE Prisoners being call'd to the Bar, and the Jury call'd, and Capt. Kidd challenging those that had Try'd him for the Murther, the Twelve that were sworn are as followeth; viz.

JURY.

Jos. Watson,	}	Tho. Plaisted,
Jos. Villers,		Sam. Rown,
Geo. Ashby,		Marm. Bludder,
Ed. Fenwick,		Jo. Scot,
Gilbert East,		Jo. Reynolds,
Tho. Humfrevil,		Rich. Drew.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, count these: Jo. Watson.

Cryer. One, &c. Twelve Good Men and True, stand together, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. J. Turton. With what will you proceed on now?

Cl. of Arr. With the two other Ships.

Then the usual Proclamation for Information was made; and the Prisoners being bid to hold up their Hands, the Cl. of Arr. charg'd the Jury with them thus:

Cl. of Arr. You of the Jury, look upon the Prisoners, and hearken to their Cause. They stand Indicted by the Names of William Kidd, late of London, Mariner, &c. (As before in the Indictment.) Upon this Indictment they have been arraign'd, and thereunto have severally pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Trial have put themselves on God and their Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is, to enquire, whether they be Guilty of the Piracy and Robbery whereof they stand indicted, or not Guilty, &c.

Churchill. I plead Guilty, my Lord, I submit my self to the King's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. James Howe, Do you stand to your Plea?

Howe Guilty, my Lord, I submit to his Majesty's gracious Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, what do you say? Lamley. Not Guilty.

Mr. J. Turton. You may enter their retracting their Pleas in Court.

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, what say you? Do you stand to your Plea?

Jenkins. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, what say you?

Loffe. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, what say you?

Parrot. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, what say you? Barlicorn. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, what say you?

Owens.

Owens. Guilty. I came upon the King's Proclamation.

Mr. Knapp. The Jury is not to be charged with them three then.

Cl. of Arr. Here is a second Indictment against them, wherein they stand indicted by the Name of William Kidd, late of London, Mariner, &c. (as in the former Charge.) What must I say now?

Mr. J. Turton. Ask them three, Whether they stand to their Plea to this Indictment, or retract it?

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Churchill, Do you confess this Indictment?

Churchill. Yes, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. James Howe, What say you?

Howe. Guilty of that, and all the other.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, What do you say?

Owens. Guilty of that, and all the other.

Cl. of Arr. Set them three by. Gentlemen of the Jury, Here is one William Kidd, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loffe, Hugh Parrot, Richard Barlicorn, and Darby Mullins, have been indicted upon two several Indictments that have been read; and for Trial have put themselves on God and their Country, which Country you are.

Mr. Knapp. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury; these are two several Indictments of Piracy, against William Kidd, and the Six other Prisoners at the Bar. The First sets forth, That these Prisoners, the 28th of December, in the Eighth Year of his Majesty's Reign, about four Leagues from Callicut, did piratically enter a certain Ship, called a Moorish Ship, and that they took her, with the Apparel and Tackle, and took out of her several Goods that have been read to you in this Indictment. To this Indictment they have pleaded, Not Guilty. If we prove them guilty, you must Find them so. The other Indictment sets forth, That on the 9th of January, &c. they took another Ship, a Portuguese Ship; and to this also they have pleaded, Not Guilty. If we prove them guilty, you must Find accordingly. Call Robert Bradinham, and Joseph Palmer. (Who appeared, and were sworn.)

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Council for the King against the Prisoners at the Bar: They stand indicted for several Piracies committed on two Ships; and our Evidence against them will be to this Purpose: Capt. Kidd had two Commissions, one was to take Pirates, the other was to take French Ships. William Kidd, in his Ship, The Adventure-Galley, went out of England in the Year 1696: He afterwards went to New-York, and there he increased the Number of his Men: And from thence went away with a Resolution to commit the Piracies, some of which he has been convicted of already: Then he went to Babs-Key, and laid in wait to intercept the Mocca Fleet; but was disappointed of that, they being well guarded: He went afterwards to other Places, and took two Ships, which were not the Ships here mentioned. After that, he seized a Ship, called a Moorish Ship, ten Leagues from Callicut, and there seizes one of the Ships for which he is now indicted, a Moorish Ship, and takes out of her Sugar-Candy, and other Goods, to the Value of about Five and Twenty Pounds. In January following, he meets another Ship, and seizes her too, and takes out of her to the Value of Sixty Pounds. These Goods he disposes of, and divides the Proceed of it between himself and the Crew of the Ship. And this is the Piracy for which he is now indicted. The Matter you are to enquire into, is, Whether they be guilty of Piracy on these two Ships, or no. We will call our Witnesses; and, if we prove them guilty, I doubt not but you will do Right to your Country and them. Mr. Bradinham, these Gentlemen have not been upon the Jury before; therefore you must give an Account of the whole Matter from the Beginning, from your going out of Plymouth.

Bradinham. In the Year 1696, the Beginning of May, we went from Plymouth to New-York.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Ship did you go in?

Bradinham. The Adventure-Galley: And by the Way he took a French Ship, which he condemned when he came to New-York. At New-York he put up his Articles, to get Men aboard his Ship, and they were to have a Share of what was taken. About the Sixth of September we sailed.

Mr. J. Gould. What Number of Men had you when you went from England?

Bradinham. About seventy Men.

Mr. J. Gould. How many had you when you went from New-York?

Bradinham. About an hundred and fifty. The Sixth of September we sailed from New-York, and went to Maderas, then to Bonavis, then to St. Jauger, then to Madagascar, then to Joanna, then to Mabala, then to Joanna again, then to Meta in the Red-Sea, and then to Babs-Key.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did you do there?

Bradinham. He lay there about a Fortnight or three Weeks, to wait for the Mocca Fleet, and sent out his Boat three times to make a Discovery; the two first times they made no Discovery; but the third time they brought Information, that they were ready to sail.

Mr. B. Hatsell. What was the Mocca Fleet?

Bradinham. They were Moorish Ships.

Mr. B. Hatsell. To what End did he wait for them?

Bradinham. He said, he would make a Voyage out of them.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What happened on that?

Bradinham. He ordered some Men to look out for them on the high Lands; and when they saw them coming, they were to give Notice, and he was to fetch them off in the Boat. This Fleet came, and he fell in with them, and fired at them; but they being under Convoy, he was forced to quit them: And then going to Carrawar, he met with one Parker's Ship; he took this Parker's Ship, and took him for a Pilot, and the Portuguese for a Linguister.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How did he use the Men there?

Bradinham. Two of them were brought on board the Adventure-Galley, and they were hoisted up, and drubb'd with a naked Cutlafs.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Why did he do that?

Bradinham. That they might make Discovery of their Riches.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did they take out of that Ship?

Bradinham. Some Coffee, Pepper, &c.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did he do with the two Men?

Bradinham. He carried them with him to Carrawar; and when he came there, they were demanded manded by the English Factory there, and he denied them, and said, He had no such Men aboard.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where had he put them?

Bradinbam. He confined them aboard in the Hold.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where did he go then?

Bradinbam. He put to Sea, and the next Day he met with a Portuguese Man of War, and fought her.

Kidd. He tells nothing but meer Lies.

Bradinbam. Then he went to the Malabar Islands, and watered and wooded, and caused his Men to burn several Houses, and plunder several Boats, and afterwards burnt them.

Mr. J. Turton. Did you see them burnt?

Bradinbam. I was not ashore, but I saw the Smoke.

Kidd. It is a fine Trade, that you must take away so many of the King's Subjects Lives, and know nothing at all of the Matter!

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did you do with that Ship?

Bradinbam. He took her, and disposed of the Goods, and carried her to Madagascar.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did he do after that?

Bradinbam. We went to the Malabar Islands some time in December, and he took a Moorish Ketch.

Kidd. How came you to keep this Account, when for five or six Months together you were under Deck?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Go on, Mr. Bradinbam, and give an Account of your further Proceedings.

Kidd. I hope the King's Council will not put him in the Way. It is hard, that a couple of Rascals should take away the King's Subjects Lives: They are a Couple of Rogues and Rascals.

Bradinbam. This Ketch was taken by the Ship's Crew, about December, 1697. and one of the Boat's Crew was wounded at the Taking of this Ketch.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was there in this Ship?

Bradinbam. Some Tubs of Sugar-Candy, Tobacco, &c.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did he do with these Goods?

Bradinbam. They were carried aboard, and shared into Messes, two Tubs and a half of Sugar-Candy to a Mess.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Had the Prisoners at the Bar any Shares?

Bradinbam. Yes; and then he set the Ship on Fire.

Cl. of Arr. Had Capt. Kidd himself any Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. How much had he?

Bradinbam. He had forty Shares.

Mr. B. Hatsell. You should tell this Jury how many Shares the Whole was divided into.

Bradinbam. It was divided into one hundred and sixty Shares, and Capt. Kidd was to have forty Shares, let them be as many as they would, and the rest were to be divided among the Men.

Cl. of Arr. Had Robert Lamley any Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had William Jenkins a Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Gabriel Loffe any Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Hugh Parrot any Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Richard Barlicorn any Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Darby Mullins any Share?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was done afterwards?

Bradinbam. After they had done these things, they burnt the Ketch.

Knapp. What did they do then?

Bradinbam. The Moors were driven ashore by the Ship's Crew.

Kidd. How did you know they were Moors?

Bradinbam. By Information of the Ship's Crew.

Kidd. He was not within five Leagues of the Place.

Knapp. What did you meet with afterwards?

Bradinbam. A Portuguese Ship. Some time in January, 1697, we met with a Portuguese Ship on the Coast of Malabar, and he took her; and he took out of her some Opium, some East-India Goods, some Powder, and sixty or seventy Bags of Rice.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, this is the other Ship for which they are indicted. What was the Value of these Goods?

Bradinbam. There were some East-India Goods, Opium, Powder, and Rice.

Kidd. Did you see them brought aboard?

Bradinbam. I am answering the Bench.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Were there any other Goods?

Bradinbam. Yes, there was Bees-Wax, and thirty Jarrs of Butter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was the Value of these Goods?

Bradinbam. About Four or Five Hundred Pounds.

Kidd. It is a fine Trade indeed, that he must be instructed what to say!

Bradinbam. After he had plunder'd this Ship, he was pursued by some Dutch Ships; several Ships gave him chase, and he was forced to leave this Ship.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did they do with the Goods?

Bradinbam. He sold the Opium on the Coast, and the rest he kept for Provision.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What became of the Money?

Bradinbam. Captain Kidd shared it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who had their Shares? Give an Account of that.

Bradinbam. The Prisoners at the Bar.

Cl. of Arr. Had Capt. Kidd any Shares?

Bradinbam. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Robert Lamley any Share?

Bradinbam. He had half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had William Jenkins any Share?

Bradinbam. He had half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Gabriel Loffe any Share?

Bradinbam. He had half a Share.

Loffe. How do you know that? Did you see me bring it out?

Bradinbam. I did not see you take it; but you brought it out, and acknowledged it.

Kidd. Before, you swore, I paid them first, and now you say they paid me first.

Bradinbam. They had a Share as before.

Mr. Knapp. Now proceed in your Voyage. What did you do after this?

Bradinbam. After this, we went a Cruizing on that Coast, and we met with the Quedagh Merchant, and took her; and afterwards, about fifty Leagues from the Cape, we met with a Moorish Vessel; and and Capt. Kidd sent his Men on board that Vessel, and they took out of her ten Jars of Butter, and a Main fail; and he took out two of the Men (that he carried to Madagascar) because he wanted Men.

Mr. Knapp. Can you tell of any Thing else?

Bradinbam. He took about a Dozen Malabar Boats, and plunder'd 'em, and then let 'em go.

Mr. Knapp. Go on.

Bradinbam. Then we came to Madagascar.

Mr. Knapp. What happen'd there?

Bradinbam. There came a Canoo off; some of the Men in this Canoo belonged to the Mocca Frigate; they came off to Capt. Kidd, and they told him, They heard he was come to take them, and hang 'em.

Mr. Knapp. What were those Men?

Bradinbam. They were suppos'd to be Pirates.

Mr. Knapp. Who was the Commander of that Ship?

Bradinbam. Capt. Culliford.

Kidd. How came you to know this? He says any thing.

Mr. Knapp. Go on with this Story, and give an Account what pass'd between them.

Bradinbam. This Canoo came aboard Captain Kidd, and they told him, they heard he was come to take them, and hang 'em; but he assur'd them it was no such thing: And he went aboard the Frigate, and swore to be true to them, and, that he would aid them in any thing he had: And Capt. Culliford came aboard him, and they made Presents to one another.

Mr. Knapp. What Presents did Captain Kidd make Culliford?

Bradinbam. He gave him some Shirting-stuff.

Kidd. What! Did I give him Shirting-stuff?

Bradinbam. Yes; and he gave him two Great Guns.

Kidd. Did I go aboard him, you Rascal?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Kidd, ask him what Questions you will.

Mr. J. Turton. Captain Kidd, will you ask this Witnests any Questions?

Kidd. My Lord, what signifies it? Were there not Ninety of the Men that mutinied? I said, Let us take this Ship; and, Did they not all consult and say, Where there is One that will fire against the Pirate, there are Ten that will fire against you. And so they went and took the Goods, and left me. I ask you, whether this be not true?

Bradinbam. My Lord, he never spoke any thing like it, that he would take Culliford; but he swore to be true to them.

Kidd. Did not I propose to my Men to take Capt. Culliford? Did you never hear any body say so?

Bradinbam. No.

Kidd. Did you not say Yesterday, that I was come to take them?

Bradinbam. I said, they came and told you they heard so; and you assur'd them, you intended no such thing.

Kidd. You swore I gave them four Guns Yesterday, and now you say but two.

Mr. Soll. Gen. It was Palmer that said Four.

Bradinbam. I said but Two, and no more.

Cl. of Arr. Captain Kidd, have you any thing more to ask him?

Kidd. It signifies nothing to ask him any thing.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, will you ask this Witnests any thing?

Lamley. I only ask him, whether I was not an Apprentice?

Mr. J. Turton. Answer that Question.

Bradinbam. My Lord, he was a Servant.

Mr. J. Turton. To whom?

Bradinbam. To Mr. Owens.

Mr. J. Turton. Was his Master aboard then?

Bradinbam. Yes, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, will you ask the Witnests any thing?

Jenkins. I desire him to say, whether I was a Servant, or not?

Bradinbam. Yes, my Lord, he was Servant to the Mate?

Mr. J. Turton. Was his Master aboard then?

Bradinbam. He was aboard then.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, will you ask him any Questions?

Loffe. No, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, will you ask him any thing?

Parrot. No.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, will you ask this Witnests any thing?

Barlicorn. I have nothing to ask him, but desire him to speak the Truth, whether I was not the Captain's Servant?

Bradinbam. He was, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, will you ask him any thing?

Mullins. I have nothing to say but what I said before. I submit my self to the King's gracious Proclamation.

Kidd. He has perjur'd himself in many Things.

Mr. J. Turton. In what? Give an Instance.

Kidd. In a great many Instances: About the Guns, that is one Thing: And then he says, the Ship went from Plymouth the Beginning of May, and before he said, it was in April, that is another Thing: And, my Lord, the Mariners came and took Anchors, and Cables, and what they would, and, he says, I gave them to them, and this is false. And now he says contrary to what he did before; for then he said, we went out in April, and now in the Beginning of May.

Mr. J. Turton. He did not confine himself to a Day; he said, about the Beginning of May.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Call Joseph Palmer. (Who appear'd.) Mr. Palmer, Pray, give my Lord and the Jury an Account of Capt. Kidd and his Crew, where they went, and what they did.

Palmer. We went from Plymouth to New-York, in the Year 1696, and in the Way took a French Ship, and carried her to New-York, and sold her; and there he put up Articles, to invite Men aboard his Ship, and what they took was to be divided into so many Shares, whereof Captain Kidd was to have Forty, the rest to be divided among the Men; and in September following we went from thence, and we had then about one hundred and sixty Men: From thence we went to Maderas, from thence to Bonavis, then to St. Jauger, then to Joanna, then to Mahala, then to Joanna again, and then to Meta in the Red-Sea, where he watered and wooded his Ship, and then to Babs-Key, a small Island in the Red-Sea; and when he came there, there, he ordered his Men to look out on the high Lands for the Mocca Fleet, and expected the Fleet to come that Way; and he sent some Men in his Boat, with Orders either to take a Prisoner, or to bring word what Ships were there. He sent his Boat twice, and they made no Discovery; but the third time they went, they came within sight of the Ships, and brought word, that there were fourteen or fifteen Sail lying there with Dutch, and English, and Moorish Colours, and a great Ship with red Colours, ready to sail: And then Captain Kidd order'd his Men to look out on the other Side the high Lands, for fear the Ships should pass him: And at last the Ships came down.

Kidd. There is no great Occasion for this.

Palmer. There were Moors and Turks belonging to these Ships. And about the 15th of August the Fleet came down, and Captain Kidd fell in with them: His Quarter-master, and some of his Men, were saying, Let us go aboard 'em To-night: No, says he, we will take our Choice of them in the Morning; and in the Morning he went among them, and fired at them, but took none of 'em; he found they were too strong for him, and went away: And, after this, going to Carrawar, he took a Ship, call'd The Maiden; it was between Carrawar and this Place; they reckon'd they were not far from the Island of St. John: He took this Ship, and took out of her some Pepper, a Bale of Coffee; and some more Bales of Coffee came on board, but he retained only one Bale, and the Pepper, and said, He would not cumber his Ship with such Stuff: And Parker and a Portuguese he took out, one for a Pilot, the other for a Linguister; and two of the Men he order'd to be hoisted up, and whipp'd with a naked Cutlace.

Kidd. I ask this one Thing; Did the Mocca Fleet fire first at me, or I at them?

Palmer. No, they fired first.

Kidd. And just now the other said, I fired first: Is not he perjured?

Mr. J. Turton. Mr. Bradinbam, did he fire first, or no?

Bradinbam. He fired at them. I only said, you fired at them; I did not say first or last.

Palmer. After this, he went to Carrawar, to an English Factory, and wooded and water'd his Ship, and one Harvey came and demanded these two Men; and Capt. Kidd denied that he had any such Men on board, and kept them in the Hold.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Is that an English Factory?

Palmer. Yes: Several of Capt. Kidd's Men left him there, and several more would have left him, if they could have conveniently gone ashore: And the same Evening he put to Sea, he met a Portuguese Ship, and fought her.

Kidd. Who fired there first?

Palmer. The Portuguese fired first.

Kidd. You do not tell that Story right.

Palmer. After he left this Portuguese Ship, he went to the Island of Malabar, and robb'd the Natives, and set their Houses on Fire, and took one of the Natives, and bound him to a Tree, and shot him to Death.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you see the Houses on Fire?

Palmer. Yes; and afterwards we went to Callicut, and met with a Moorish Ship in November, Skipper Mitchel was Commander; and there were taken out of her two Horses, and Cotton, and Quilts; and this Ship he carried to Madagascar. Some time in December following we came to the Coast of Malabar.

Mr. Knapp. Can you tell what Year it was?

Palmer. It was in December, 1697.

Mr. Knapp. Where was this?

Palmer. About twelve Leagues from Callicut.

Mr. Knapp. What sort of Ship was it?

Palmer. A Moorish Ketch.

Mr. Knapp. What Burthen was she?

Palmer. About fifty Tun.

Mr. Knapp. What did you do there?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd was lying at Anchor, and this Ketch came between him and the Shore, and he sent the Boat, and they brought the Ketch to the Ship, and took out of her thirty Bales of Sugar-Candy, Tobacco, Sugar, and Myrrh.

Mr. Knapp. What did they do with these Goods?

Palmer. When they had taken them out, they were shared between the Men in Messes, seven Men to a Mess, for their own spending.

Mr. Knapp. Had the Prisoners at the Bar any Share?

Palmer. All the Men had.

Mr. Knapp. What Share had Capt. Kidd?

Palmer. I cannot tell whether he had his forty Shares of that, or no.

Mr. Knapp. What did they do with the Ship?

Palmer. They burnt her.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray now go on. What did they do next?

Palmer. Some time in January they met with a Portuguese Ship.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where?

Palmer. Off of Anjingo, an English Factory: It was a pretty way off Shore.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Ship was it?

Palmer. A Portuguese Ship.

Kidd. You said, it was just by Callicut Yesterday.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Whereabouts was it?

Palmer. On the Coast of Malabar; it might be about ten or twelve Leagues from Callicut.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Goods were in the Ship when she was taken?

Palmer. There were two Chests of Indian Goods, two Chests of Opium, some Rice, Butter, Wax, and Iron.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What was the Value of those Goods?

Palmer. Truly I cannot tell the Value of them.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did they do with those Goods?

Palmer. The Wax and Iron he put on board The November, and some on board his own Ship.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did he sell any of these Goods?

Palmer. No, but he sold the Opium on the Coast.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did he keep the Ship?

Palmer. No, but seven or eight Days, and then he quitted her; there were some Dutchmen coming, and he sunk that Ship. The Produce of the Ship was shared.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Had the Prisoners at the Bar any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had William Kidd any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Robert Lamley any Share?

Palmer.

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had William Jenkins any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Gabriel Loffe any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Hugh Parrot any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Richard Barlicorn any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Darby Mullins any Share?

Palmer. Yes; these Goods were shared, and we bought Provision with them.

Kidd. You say, this Ship was taken off of Anjingo, and that it was twelve Leagues from Callicut, and this Anjingo is fifty Leagues from Callicut.

Palmer. It is all upon one Coast.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Give an Account of your coming to Madagascar, and what followed.

Palmer. They found a Ship, called The Resolution, Capt. Culliford was Commander; and several of the Men came off to Capt. Kidd, that were formerly acquainted with him; and they said, We hear you are come to hang us: says he, It is no such Thing: And afterwards they went aboard each other, and Capt. Kidd made Protestations to be true to them. There were four Guns in the Ship, and he presented these Guns to Culliford.

Kidd. Did I present him with my Guns? Because I would not turn Pirate, you Rogues, you would make me one.

Mr. Bar. Hatfell. What did Capt. Kidd say to Culliford, when they were drinking together?

Palmer. They made a Tub of Bomboo, as they call it, (it is made of Water, and Limes, and Sugar) and there they drank to one another; and, says Capt. Kidd, before I would do you any Damage, I had rather my Soul should broil in Hell-fire.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was you there then?

Palmer. This was on the Quarter-deck of the Mecca Frigate.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What were those Men in that Ship? What did you apprehend them to be?

Palmer. They were Pirates.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did Capt. Kidd or his Men offer to take them.

Palmer. He did never propose any such Thing.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Now you may ask him what Questions you will.

Kidd. There were twenty of them on board, and left me.

Palmer. Capt. Kidd and Culliford were as great Friends as could be.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Ask him what Questions you please.

Kidd. It signifies nothing to ask any Questions; a couple of Rogues will swear any Thing.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Will you ask him any Questions?

Kidd. No.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, Will you ask him any Questions?

Lamley. No.

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, Will you ask him any Questions?

Jenkins. No; I have no more to say, but what I said before.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, Have you any Thing to ask him?

Loffe. No.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, Will you ask the Witnesses any Questions?

Parrot. No.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, Will you ask him any Thing.

Barlicorn. No.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, Will you ask him any Thing?

Mullins. No; but only I say, I came home upon his Majesty's Proclamation; I came voluntarily, expecting to have the Benefit of it with the Evidence.

Mr. J. Turton. That does not fall under the Jury's Consideration.

Cl. of Arr. You, the Prisoners at the Bar, Will you say any Thing for your selves upon these two Indictments?

Kidd. I will not trouble the Court any more, for it is a Folly.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, What have you to say for your self?

Lamley. Nothing, but that I was a Servant.

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, What have you to say?

Jenkins. I was a Servant, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, Have you any Thing to say?

Loffe. My Lord, I ask him, Whether I ever acted any Thing in taking these Ships, but only under my Captain's Command.

Palmer. He acted as other Men did.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, Have you any Thing to say?

Parrot. I can say no more than I have said.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, Have you any Thing to say?

Barlicorn. My Lord, I am a Servant.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, What have you to say?

Mullins. Did not Capt. Kidd often say, his Commission would bear him out in what he did?

Palmer. Yes; I have heard him often say that.

Mr. J. Turton. But how came you to go aboard Culliford?

Mullins. For Want, my Lord.

Mr. J. Turton. Gentlemen of the Jury, Here are several Persons, viz. William Kidd, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loffe, Hugh Parrot, Richard Barlicorn, and Darby Mullins, they all stand Indicted for Piracy: Indeed there are three more Indicted with them, viz. Nicholas Churchill, James Howe, and Abel Owens; but they have confessed themselves Guilty, and you are now eased of any Enquiry concerning them, and are only to consider of the other Seven, who are Indicted upon two several Indictments; One is, for the piratical and felonious taking away a Moorish Ketch, to the Value of Fifty Pounds, and the Goods therein to the Value of One hundred Pounds; this was in December, 1697. And the Other is, for piratically seizing and taking away Goods to the Value of Seventy Pounds from the Portugal Ship, twelve Leagues from Callicut in the East-Indies. Now to these two Indictments these Prisoners at the Bar
